It is tragic that so many parents and guardians are unaware of the vital nature of play in children's lives, believing it is a frivolous activity, a waste of time, or even a dangerous activity that puts children in contact with potentially harmful objects and people. In the effort to protect our children and prepare them for a demanding educational and future professional environment, too often we harm those we most cherish.

In order to bring attention to the importance of play, an international coalition of organisations including BRAC has come together to successfully convince the United Nations to make June 11 the International Day of Play.

As the organisers of the International Day of Play point out, play is (or should be) a fundamental right for all children. And yet too many children can't play because they lack the time or the opportunity, busy helping their families, studying, or unable to go outdoors due to horrific traffic.

Children need to play, and to ensure that they can, we need policies, training, and funding so that play can become integrated into our educational institutions and communities. Those policies must ensure that all children have the ability to play, including those with disabilities, refugees, and other vulnerable children.

While virtually all children understand that play is important, one in three children in the world do not get to play. Children involved in the International Day of Play are calling on decision-makers and other adults to provide children with time and opportunity to play in diverse and inclusive ways, including in school, to listen to children's needs, and to support children in developing needed social and other skills through play.

Understanding the vital nature of play, and seeing how neglected it is at least in the cities of Bangladesh, I can only encourage my readers to learn more about the issue and join in the #InternationalDayofPlay. Our children will be healthier, happier, more resilient, more confident, and more able to take on the many challenges they will face in life. What's not to like?

How to not handle a crisis communication:

A LESSON FROM COCA-COLA

The current controversy around Coca-Cola is a perfect example of what can go wrong when communication is not handled well. The company, in this case, had to eat at least some humble pie after it fostered bad publicity by its handling of the situation around its bottling firm in the Gaza strip. This link has led to calls for its boycott in several countries, while in Bangladesh, consumers are increasingly turning to local alternatives.

ZARIF FAIAZ

To douse the fire, Coca-Cola Bangladesh rolled out an ad dealing with the matter at hand. Yet the campaign has not only failed to silence its audience, it has made things worse.

The advertisement: a case study in poor execution

The recent advertisement by Coca-Cola Bangladesh was just a textbook case of how not to handle a crisis. The starting frame is a disaster, lacking any knowledge of the issue at hand and why people are upset. The copywriting and dialogues are subpar, failing to be up to the mark for such a delicate subject, which needed a lot of finesse and sensitivity. Instead of making reasonable arguments or even accepting the consumers' concerns, it just offers obscure, non-committal comments against a backdrop that leads to a conclusion of a statement that "Coca-Cola even has a factory in Palestine."

The hurriedly done, poorly researched narrative did not serve the cause but signaled exactly a tone-deaf crisis approach. These are clear indications that the campaign's creators did no homework to try to understand the socio-political context or the depth of feeling on the matter among the public.

Coca-Cola's iconic advertisements: a stark contrast

Coca-Cola has a storied history of producing iconic advertisements that have not only resonated with audiences but have also become case studies in effective marketing. From the "I'd Like to Buy the World a Coke" campaign in the 1970s, which promoted a message of unity and harmony, to the "Share a Coke" campaign that personalised the brand experience, Coca-Cola has consistently set high standards in advertising.

The campaigns worked because they were the result of significant research and insight, carefully and thoughtfully designed, resonant with deep values and emotions, and culturally intelligent. They showed a great understanding of the intended audience, and were carried out in a way that is oddly missing from the most recent Bangladeshi ad.

The fundamentals of effective crisis communication

Crisis communication is an art and a science. It requires a nuanced approach that balances transparency, empathy, and strategic messaging. Here are some best practices that Coca-Cola's advertising team should have adhered to:

Understanding the audience

Before crafting any message, it is crucial to understand the audience's concerns and perspectives. This involves thorough research and genuine engagement with the affected communities. In Coca-Cola's case, acknowledging the historical and political sensitivities surrounding the Gaza Strip would have been a prudent starting point.

Transparent and empathetic communication

In times of crisis, transparency and empathy are paramount. Brands must acknowledge the issue at hand, express genuine concern, and provide clear, factual information. Coca-Cola's ad failed to demonstrate empathy or offer any substantial information that could alleviate the public's concerns.

Strategic messaging

Effective crisis communication requires strategic messaging that is coherent, consistent, and aligned with the brand's values. The messaging should aim to rebuild trust and demonstrate a commitment to resolving the issue.

Engaging with stakeholders

Engaging with key stakeholders, including customers, employees, and community leaders, is essential in managing a crisis. This engagement should be ongoing and not limited to a one-off advertisement. Coca-Cola could have benefited from a more inclusive approach that involved dialogue with its Bangladeshi consumers and other relevant parties.

The recent advertisement from Coca-Cola in Bangladesh is a good example of how a lack of adept crisis communication can significantly hurt a brand's reputation. It is not the first company to screw up when trying to be sensitive, and likely won't be the last, but it serves as a perfect example of why we need to take a critical, empathetic, and transparent approach to delicate situations if we want polarized communities to trust us.

PACERS DELIGHT
but Tigers suffer New York heartbreak

ASHFAQ-UL-ALAM

Before Bangladesh fans got their hearts shattered to a million pieces with an agonising four-run defeat to South Africa, they were treated with the sight of their pace trio making the opposition batters dance to their tunes on an unpredictable pitch at the Nassau Country Cricket Stadium in New York yesterday.

Although the Group D fixture of the ICC T20 World Cup ended in a gut-wrenching defeat for the Tigers, they had plenty to take from the game, especially from the bowling front as their pacers returned to the basics to torment the batters on another testing pitch.

The Tigers pace trio of Tanzim Sakib, Taskin Ahmed and Mustafizur Rahman dominated the Proteas and restricted them to 113 for four, which in the end proved four runs too many.

Tanzim was the star performer of the lot, finishing with a career-best of 3-18, while Taskin took 2-19. Mustafizur went wicketless but conceded a miserly 18 off his four overs, including a four-run final over.

The three pacers collectively conceded just 4.59 runs per over in the 12 overs they bowled, six of which occurred in the Powerplay.

The irony was, in a format where bowlers usually have to depend on their bag of tricks to contain the onslaught of batters, the Bangladesh pacers found all their success by sticking to the basics and letting the erratic pitch do the rest.

"We saw all matches have been low-scoring in New York. Tried to stick to the basics and that worked," Tanzim said after the conclusion of the first innings.

There was a deliberate attempt from the pacers of both teams to pitch the ball on a good length or maybe just a little behind to extract variable bounce from the pitch.

South Africa, who had played their previous two group-stage matches at the same venue, were well versed about the conditions and expectedly bowled well.

Bangladesh pacers, on the other hand, didn't have the height advantage of the Proteas pacers but it didn't matter as they made up for it with determination.

In the end, though, it all boiled down to Mahmudullah Riyad, who was presented with the perfect chance to complete a historic win -- a full toss from Keshav Maharaj with just six needed off two balls.

The batter had hit a six off a full toss in the previous match against Sri Lanka at a crucial stage but failed to deliver this time, getting caught right at the edge of the boundary.

Skipper Najmul Hossain Shanto was proud of his bowlers but rued the defeat, feeling that it was a match they should have won.

"Tanzim really worked hard last couple of games, we needed new-ball wickets and he showed his character. This is a match we should have won, we nearly did but the last couple of overs they bowled well. It can happen in cricket," Shanto said after the match.

One team scoring 113 for six in 20 overs and the other team falling agonisingly short of it, is not something that usually happens in modern cricket, where flat pitches and dynamic batters often make the bowlers seem replaceable by bowling machines.

Cricket fans will remember the stadium in New York as the place where the game momentarily returned to its retro days. The Bangladesh fans will remember it as a place where the Tigers almost slayed the Proteas.

SCORES IN BRIEF

South Africa: 113-6 in 20 overs (Quinton de Kock 18, Klaasen 46, Miller 29; Sakib 3-18, Taskin 2-19, Rishad 1-32)
Bangladesh: 109-7 in 20 overs (Shanto 14, Hridoy 37, Mahmudullah 20; Rabada 2-19, Maharaj 3-27, Nortje 2-17)
Result: South Africa won by four runs.
Player-of-the-match: Heinrich Klaasen

Bangladesh players look dejected after falling short by four runs in their T20 World Cup fixture against South Africa in New York on Monday. Pacer Tanzim Hasan Sakib's (R) sizzling effort - in which he returned three wickets for 18 runs to help restrict South Africa to 113 for six – went in vain as the batters failed to capitalise on a golden opportunity to snap their losing streak in T20Is against the Proteas. Bangladesh dreaming of humbling Lebanon

SPORTS REPORTER

With the curtain falling down on Group I fixtures of the second round of FIFA World Cup Qualifiers today, Bangladesh are looking forward to securing all three points against superior Lebanon, an outcome which will give the men in red and green a better draw in the upcoming Asian Cup Qualifiers.

The game is set to kick off at 10:00pm(Bangladesh Standard time) at the Khalifa International Stadium in Al-Rayyan City, Qatar.

Bangladesh are dwelling in the bottom of the four-team group, with only one point in five matches, two points less than third-placed Lebanon. This means a win will enable Bangladesh in surpassing Lebanon, following a 1-1 draw at Bashundhara Kings Arena in Dhaka last year where Sheikh Morsalin cancelled out a 67-minute Osman strike in the 72nd minute.

Nevertheless, securing a victory over Lebanon is going to be an uphill task for the charges of head coach Javier Cabrera, who, however, are thinking of pulling an upset against a side Bangladesh had beaten 2-0 in Dhaka in 2011, during the pre-qualifying match of 2018 World Cup Qualifiers. In the remaining meets between the two teams, Lebanon have been victorious.

Lebanon, on the other hand, will surely hope to end their campaign on a high, but Bangladesh captain Jamal Bhuiyan wants to capitalise against a reconstructing team under a new coach in Mirodrag Radulovic.

"Our goal is to secure three points against Lebanon, which is a big challenge. We will be trying to give our best because everyone believes we can collect three points," Jamal said in a video message sent by Bangladesh Football Federation.

"Lebanon changed three coaches in a year. If the coach is often changed, the structure falls down, and we discussed this thing. We also discussed their strong and weak points. So, if we can exploit those areas, then it's going to be a positive result for us."

Bangladesh coach Javier Cabrera said, "We expect to be very competitive tomorrow [today], we came from a good effort and performance against Australia. We know that to complete a good window and quite a good group stage, we want to get a positive result. Our objective is to fight for everything, fight for three points and hopefully achieve at least one point in the last game.

"The motivation is not only to produce good results but also it will have an important impact on the ranking, that will also be decisive for the draw for upcoming Asian Cup Qualifiers. It is also important to get points, also for the 2025 SAFF Championship," the Spaniard added.

A typical Pakistan conundrum

NABID YEASIN

As it so often happens in major ICC events, Pakistan have very little in their hands regarding the prospect of advancing in the ongoing T20 World Cup in the USA and the West Indies.

And, as always, it is mostly a making of their own.

Even till the 14th over of the second innings during the Pakistan-India blockbuster clash in New York on Sunday, the broadcaster's win predictor accorded over a 90 percent chance for Babar Azam and Co in their chase of a meagre yet tricky 120-run target -- and it was only understandable as Pakistan needed 40 off the final six overs with seven wickets in hand.

However, Pakistan did what Pakistan usually do with their long-earned 'unpredictable' tag -- given due to their nature of flipping an imminent outcome on its head -- kicking in as they went on to lose the game by six runs.

Pakistan's Super Over loss to co-hosts USA in their tournament opener was definitely a major upset in the tournament. However, none can claim it was an absolute shocker -- especially for the way the USA have been playing in recent games and also due to Pakistan's pedigree of being at the wrong end of upsets on big occasions.

For Pakistan to progress, on top of winning against Canada today, at the same ground where they had let India snatch the game away from their grasp, and then against Ireland in their final group game on June 16, Babar and Co will have to hope for either India or the USA to lose their final two group fixtures.

Then again, if the clash between India and the USA -- both of whom have won both their matches so far and lead the points table -- gets washed out in New York on June 12, that would also end Pakistan's chances of progressing with both India and USA making it to Super Eight.

Meanwhile, if Canada manage to pull off an unlikely upset over India and the USA go on to lose their remaining games then it would bring the net run rate into the equation in determining whether Pakistan, Canada, or the USA would progress.

However, among teams that are usually touted as title contenders before the mega T20 event, Pakistan may be the only side to be familiar with such complex scenarios. Having lost their first two matches against India and Zimbabwe in the 2022 T20 World Cup, Pakistan were backed into such a corner that needed them to win their final group game and the materialisation of the unlikely event of the Netherlands beating South Africa in the group phase -- and that's what exactly happened.

Despite their see-saw nature in such events, Pakistan are one of the most successful sides in the T20 World Cup -- with them playing the semifinals six times in eight previous editions, ending as runners-up in 2022 and 2007, and lifting their solitary trophy in 2009.

The odds may be stacked heavily against Pakistan, but they will hope for a typical Pakistan solution for the typical Pakistan conundrum that they are faced with.

Two former champions in opposite arcs

STAR SPORTS DESK

Two former champions, Australia and Sri Lanka, are faced with completely polarising scenarios of advancing in the ongoing ICC Men's T20 World Cup ahead of their third group-stage fixtures on Wednesday.

Australia, with two wins in two matches so far, are overwhelming favourites to seal an early-bird entry into the Super Eight phase as the 2021 champions take on Namibia, while Sri Lanka will aim to blow away Nepal in Antigua to avoid an embarrassing early exit from the main event – one that has been no short of horrendous for the 2014 champions so far.

The men in yellow could not have started their campaign in a better fashion, taking down eternal rivals England by 36 runs after shrugging off Oman in their tournament opener. Despite the rich vein of form, the Pat Cummins-led side will not be complacent since an upset could set the stage for them in a potential must-win game against Group B leaders Scotland -- whereas a win has additional incentives since it will leave holders England's campaign hanging by the thinnest of threads.

Sri Lanka, meanwhile, having lost to South Africa and Bangladesh, not only need to win but win big -- so that the islanders could somehow stay mathematically alive before taking on another Super Eight-aspirants from Group D in Netherlands in the teams' final group-stage clash.

On the other hand, as far as the associates are concerned, results in their favour will mean a world to them and their fans. Nepal are yet to win a T20 World Cup match after four outings while Namibia, who stunned Sri Lanka in the 2022 edition and have hard-earned a victory over Oman this time, will have another taste of humbling a Test-playing nation and, more importantly, an unforeseen shot at the Super Eight.

Afghanistan chase football milestone

AFP, Hong Kong

Afghanistan hope to achieve a footballing milestone on Tuesday by snatching a spot in the third and final phase of Asian qualifying for the 2026 World Cup.

The team ranked 151 in the world are on the brink of history and a place at the 2027 Asian Cup under their English coach Ashley Westwood.

Once on the books of Manchester United, he took over the Afghan team seven months ago and has masterminded a significant upturn in fortunes for the footballing minnows.

They play away at Kuwait on Tuesday in the final round of games in the second qualifying stage knowing they need to better India's result at Qatar to progress further. Afghanistan held already qualified Qatar, the Asian champions, to a precious 0-0 draw on Thursday in a "home" game for the Afghans that was played in Saudi Arabia.

"When we took over in November just before the first game against Qatar, which we lost 8-1, (if) you told us that we'll be giving ourselves a chance of qualifying with one game to go, we wouldn't have believed it," Westwood said afterwards.

India are also trying to reach the final stage of World Cup qualifying for the first time.

Igor Stimac's side currently occupy the second qualifying berth from Group A on goal difference from the Afghans.

Just to complicate things, Kuwait are also in with a shot of progressing, with the group going right down to the wire.

BAT violating tobacco control law

The tobacco company running promotional campaigns in top restaurants, hotels

SAJJAD HOSSAIN

British American Tobacco Company (BAT) has been promoting sales of cigarette, a controlled product, in upscale restaurants and hotels in big cities in a clear violation of tobacco control laws, The Daily Star has found.

The largest tobacco company in Bangladesh has also been secretly partnering with luxury hotels and restaurants in major cities like Dhaka, Chattogram and Cox's Bazar, supplying them with cigarettes and promotional materials.

In some cases, BAT, as part of the deal,hosts events at some of these restaurants, which leads to increased food and cigarette sales in those eateries. BAT also has financial arrangements with the restaurant owners to display the tobacco company's promotional materials, six restaurant owners in Dhaka and Chattogram told The Daily Star.

The Daily Star is not naming the restaurants and hotels as they all spoke on condition of anonymity.

The findings by this newspaper are consistent with a study report by an NGO, Voice Bangladesh, published last year.

Based on a survey of 102 restaurants in Dhaka,

Three of a family killed as mudslide buries house

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Moulvibazar

Tragedy struck Sylhet city yesterday morning when a mudslide in Majortila claimed the lives of a young family after their tin-roofed house caved in beneath the debris.

Aga Karim Uddin, 31, his wife Shammi Akhter Ruji, 25, and their two-year-old son Nafji Tanim lived at the foot of a hill in Majortila's Chamelibagh residential area under the city corporation's Ward 35.

Pounded by heavy downpours for the past several days, the saturated hillside gave way and collapsed onto a small cluster of houses at the foot of the hill, burying Karim's house completely, roof and walls, under a large chunk of mud around 7:00am.

Around six hours later, their bodies were recovered and sent to Sylhet

The Anti-Corruption Commission is not providing any special privilege to former inspector general of police Benazir Ahmed, said ACC Chairman Moinuddin Abdullah.

He said the media reports, which suggested the ACC facilitated Benazir going abroad and withdrawing money from his bank accounts, were false.

Moinuddin said this yesterday at the award ceremony for the ACC Media Award 2020-2021, during a discussion with Reporters Against Corruption.

"On the day the news about Benazir Ahmed was published in a national newspaper, our commissioner [investigations] was abroad for medical treatment. During this time, allegations of corruption against Benazir Ahmed were submitted. Since one commissioner was out of the country, we couldn't hold a commission meeting. Blinken in Middle East to push Gaza ceasefire

Hamas sticks to its conditions for accepting any proposal for truce; 40 more Palestinians killed

REUTERS, Cairo

US Secretary of State Antony Blinken arrived in the Middle East yesterday hoping to deliver the ceasefire that President Joe Biden proposed last month, in an all-out push by Washington to secure an end to the Gaza offensive.

Ahead of his arrival, both sides doubled down on hardline positions that have scuppered all previous attempts to end the fighting, while Israel pressed on with assaults in central and southern Gaza, among the bloodiest of the offensive.

"We are committed to total victory," Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said in a statement released by his office, quoting remarks he made on Sunday to relatives of Israelis killed in Gaza.

- UNSC to vote on Biden's plan for ceasefire
- Tanks thrust deeper towards the north in Rafah
- Gaza death toll rises to 37,124

Hamas, for its part, said Washington must push its ally Israel to halt the fighting.

Speaking after meeting Egypt's President Abdel Fattah al-Sisi in Cairo on the first stop on his trip yesterday, Blinken said Hamas was the only side that had yet to agree to Biden's ceasefire proposal, which Washington says Israel has already accepted.

"My message to governments throughout the region, to people throughout the region, is if you want a ceasefire, press Hamas to say yes," Blinken told reporters before departing Egypt to visit Israel.

The Hamas and Islamic Jihad movements, however, yesterday said that they were sticking to their conditions for accepting any proposal for a ceasefire in Gaza.

Meanwhile, the United Nations Security Council was scheduled to vote later yesterday on the US-drafted resolution backing a proposal for a ceasefire between Israel and Hamas.

The Israeli offensive in Gaza has now entered its ninth month. At least 37,124 Palestinians have been killed and 84,712 have been injured in Israel's military offensive on Gaza since October 7, the Gaza health ministry said in a statement yesterday. Some 40 Palestinians were killed and 218 injured in the previous 24 hours, the ministry added.

In Rafah, the city on the southern edge of Gaza where Israel launched an offensive last month in defiance of White House pleas, residents said yesterday tanks thrust deeper towards the north in the early hours of the morning. They were on the edge of Shaboura, one of the most densely populated neighbourhoods at the heart of the city, a Hamas stronghold.

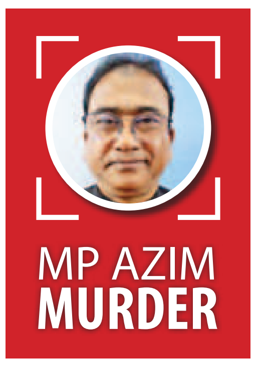
Investigators say after interrogating Jhenaidah ruling party leader Babu

MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN



At least one other top leader of Jhenaidah Awami League may have been involved in the murder of MP Anwarul Azim Anar's at a New Town flat in Kolkata, investigators said.

They claimed to have gotten the clue while interrogating Kazi Kamal Ahmed Babu, relief and social welfare affairs secretary of Jhenaidah AL, who is now on a seven-day police remand.

Amanullah alias Shimul Bhuiyan, the coordinator of the killing, in his confession had also mentioned the involvement of a top ruling party leader of the district.

Sources in the Detective Branch of the Dhaka Metropolitan Police confirmed the development to The Daily Star.

Ashraful Alam, mayor of the Kaliganj Municipality, admitted that rival ruling party men, who stood strongly against slain lawmaker Azim during the last election, might have links with the murder.

"Many already started internal campaigns to run for Jhenaidah-4 even though Azim's death has not been officially confirmed," he said.

A source in the investigating agency said they are already making a list of suspected AL leaders, who had communicated with Babu and were against Azim.

Speaking to reporters at the secretariat yesterday, Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan said, "Let the investigation finish. Many may be arrested. We don't Finance, telecom ministers slated in JS for 'failure'

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A Jatiya Party and two independent lawmakers in parliament yesterday came down heavily on the ministries of finance and information technology for widespread corruption.

Speaking on cut motion during passage of supplementary budget for fiscal year 2023-24, JP MP Mujibul Haque Chunnu and independent MPs Pankaj Nath (Barishal-4) and Hamidul Haque Khandker (Kurigram-2) blasted Finance Minister Abul Hasan Mahmood Ali and State Minister for Posts, Telecommunications, and Information Technology Zunaid Ahmed Palak.

In the budget, 66 cut motions have been proposed on the demands for grants of 20 ministries and departments, but the discussion was held only on the finance and information technology ministries.

A cut motion is a veto used by members of a legislature against a specific allocation in budget proposals.

The rest of the proposals were put to the vote by Speaker Shirin Sharmin Chaudhury without discussion.

Fear forced Hindus to sell their land to ex-IGP Benazir

SHARIFUL ISLAM and EMRUL HASAN BAPPI, back from Gopalganj

A cluster of shanty-like homes belonging to Hindus are accessible only by a makeshift bamboo bridge over a roadside canal at Patikelbari village of Gopalganj Sadar upazila. The rickety structures declare the financial constraint of the 100 or so Maitra family.

The current generations of the Mitras were never rich, but they were never this destitute either. They had over 27.5 acres of farmland, enough to support them "fairly well."

All that changed about four years ago – they were forced to sell all but five acres of their farmland to former police chief Benazir Ahmed.

"If I begin to tell my story, I would not be able to fight back my tears," said Swarup Maitra, 55, one of the Mitras who had to give in to Benazir's extraordinary power and great appetite for poor people's land.

The former top cop, now said to have left the country although there is no official confirmation, is currently being investigated by the Anti-Corruption Commission for amassing huge wealth while in office.

Benazir, who faces a US sanction for his alleged involvement in extrajudicial killings when he was Rab chief, allegedly employed two tactics to acquire land: direct intimidation and indirect pressure.

The ACC has so far found that he and his family bought at least 613.41 bighas of land in different districts, including 605.77 bighas in Gopalganj and Madaripur that once belonged to Hindus, a religious minority.

He built most of his assets, including an eye-catching resort called Savanna Eco Resort and Natural Park in his hometown of Gopalganj, when he headed Rab (January 2015 to April 2020) and police force (April 2020 to September 2022).

In Gopalganj, Benazir engaged Taimur Islam, an inspector of a police station, to acquire the vast swath of over 600 bighas of farmland.

PM likely to visit India in September

PARTHA PRATIM BHATTACHARJEE

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina, who returned from New Delhi on Monday after attending the oath-taking ceremony of her Indian counterpart Narendra Modi, is likely to visit India again in September, according to sources.

According to sources in the Bangladesh High Commission in New Delhi, Hasina's trip to Delhi on June 21-22 was being talked about, but since she just returned from India, her next visit Delhi would be delayed.

Hasina had a meeting with Modi at the Rashtrapati Bhaban after his swearing in on June 9. She also invited Modi to visit Bangladesh.

Some Indian media indicated that Modi may visit Bangladesh by the end of this month. But sources in the Bangladesh High Commission said they were not aware of this.

Hasina is likely to visit Beijing on July 9-12.

COMPLEX, TEDIOUS ADMISSION PROCESS

Gruelling 3 days for DU freshers

SIRAJUL ISLAM RUBEL

An excited Imran Hossain reached Dhaka University from Chattogram earlier this week to secure his admission to the prestigious institution.

But he had no idea about the tedious admission process he would have to go through. He said the guidance he received from the university authorities was inadequate and he spent two days waiting in queues and going from one building to another in the scorching heat.

"The process is very complex and takes a lot of time and energy. I am exhausted," Imran told The Daily Star.

On June 9, he paid online the admission fee of Tk 7,830. The next day, he went to the business faculty around 10:30am with a printed copy of the receipt and started waiting for his turn.

When he submitted the receipt two hours later, the officials handed him a pay slip to deposit a development fee of Tk 5,000 to How could an IGP possess so much wealth?

Questions HC about Benazir

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A High Court bench yesterday expressed astonishment at the amassing of huge wealth by former IGP Benazir Ahmed.

"Irregularities and corruption of a government official are being discussed and criticised at home and abroad. How could an inspector general of police become the owner of so much wealth? We are stunned," the HC bench of Justice KM Kamrul Kader and Justice Khizir Hayat Lizu said during the hearing on a writ petition regarding the construction of eight bridges in Jashore.

Three government engineers, including the chief engineer of the Local Government and Engineering Department (LGED), appeared before the HC bench yesterday to explain their positions on the construction of the bridges as per its previous directive.

The HC told the engineers that they must work in the interest of the country and that the court would look into the irregularities if they committed any.

It also directed the authorities concerned to complete the construction of the bridges in next six months maintaining the appropriate height clearance in accordance with relevant rules, petitioner's lawyer M Shamsul Haque told The Daily Star.

Iqbal Kabir Zahid, an adviser to Bhairab River Reform Movement, filed the writ petition with the HC following a report run by Bangla daily Prothom Alo on June 11 last year under the headline "River Killing" due to low-height bridges in Jashore.

Following the petition, the HC on November 27 last year directed the officials concerned to maintain appropriate height clearance of the bridges as per the Inland Waterway and Embankment Construction Control Rules, and to submit a report to this court through an affidavit.

Hunter Biden found guilty on gun charges

REUTERS, Wilmington

US President Joe Biden's son Hunter Biden was convicted by a jury yesterday of lying about his drug use to illegally buy a gun, a verdict Democrats may seize upon to counter Donald Trump's claim of a justice system weaponized against him.

A jury in Wilmington, Delaware, federal court found him guilty on all three counts against him, making Hunter Biden the first child of a sitting US president to be convicted of a crime.

A verdict of the 12-member jury must be unanimous on each count.

The trial followed the May 30 criminal conviction of Trump, the first former US president to be found guilty of a felony and the Republican challenger to Joe Biden, a Democrat, in the November 5 election.

1 dies, 40 fall ill after inhaling toxic gas

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A man was killed and at least 40 others became sick after being exposed to toxic gas in the capital's Adabar Beribadh area early yesterday.

The gas quickly spread across the neighbourhood after workers at a scrap metal shop broke open an old and discarded cylinder around 3:00am, police said.

According to victims, around 200 residents of 30 homes at Shyamoli Housing (2nd Project) rushed out onto the street after experiencing severe breathing difficulties during their sleep. Many were seen vomiting.

During a visit to the spot yesterday afternoon, this correspondent noticed partially burnt and dried-up tree leaves near the shop.

A senior fire service official said it was ammonia gas. Ammonia is a colourless highly irritating gas with a sharp odor.

The victims were taken to Shaheed Suhrawardy Medical College and Hospital (SSMCH) and Dhaka Medical College Hospital (DMCH) for treatment.

One of them, Kabir Hossain, 45, from Lakshmipur's Ramganj upazila, died at the DMCH.

According to the emergency unit staff at SSMCH, the first victim with breathing difficulties and eye irritation came in at 4:00am and within 15 minutes, over a hundred people with similar complaints arrived.

"Most of them needed oxygen support. Initially, we

Govt approves price for 40MW power import from Nepal

REJAUL KARIM BYRON

Bangladesh has agreed to buy 40 megawatts of electricity from Nepal at Tk 8.17 per unit, including transmission cost, under a five-year agreement.

The Cabinet Committee on Government Purchase yesterday approved the price, ending a long negotiation over hydropower import from the Himalayan nation via India.

Mahmudul Hossain Khan, secretary (coordination and reforms) of Cabinet Division, said Nepal will get $0.640 per unit while India will receive 0.0595 rupee as trade margin.

He said the transmission cost that India would get has not been mentioned in the summary of the meeting.

However, a Power Division official said Bangladesh will pay $0.697 per unit (Tk 8.17), including power price, transmission charge, and trade margin.

He said the transmission charge would vary from time to time.

Two teachers of St Scholastica's Girls' School sued for sexual abuse

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Chattogram

Two teachers of St Scholastica's Girls' School and College in Chattogram city's Patharghata area have been sued for sexually abusing a fifth-grade schoolgirl for over a year.

The accused are Rakib Uddin, 35, who teaches fourth grade, and Surjit Pal, 33, who teaches fifth grade.

Of the duo, Rakib was detained last night for interrogation, confirmed Obaidul Haque, officer-in-charge of Kotwali Police Station.

Earlier in the day, the 11-year-old victim's mother filed the case with Kotwali Police Station, said Atanu Chakraborty, assistant commissioner (Kotwali Zone) of Chattogram Metropolitan Police.

"We've accepted the case and received some screenshots of messages sent by the teachers to the victim as supporting evidence. We've launched an investigation into the allegations of sexual abuse brought against the teachers."

According to the case statement, the 11-year-old had been sexually abused by both teachers for more than a year.

Since 2023, the two teachers have sexually harassed and molested the girl on several occasions. Whenever she tried to resist them, they reprimanded her in class and threatened to fail her in exams.

Sonali Bank's branch on campus.

Imran went to the branch at the administrative building around 12:30pm, only to find a queue of over 300 people. He could not pay the fee until four hours later.

"I did not even have lunch for fear of failing to make the payment," he said.

Imran then went to his department to submit the pay slip and other documents, but was told to come back the next day "because the documents that I submitted require signatures from the department chair."

Around 9:30am yesterday, he went to the department and collected the papers. He was then asked to submit the papers to the dormitory office. Upon submitting the papers at the Muktijoddha Ziaur Rahman Hall, he got another pay slip for depositing Tk 2,500 to Janata Bank.

Imran went to the bank's TSC branch around 10:30am and saw a queue stretching to the Bangla Academy gate, around 300 metres from the bank.

After several hours, he deposited the money and rushed back to his dorm and submitted the payment slip, but hundreds of others were still in the queue.

"The dorm office told me to leave the slip and other papers and come back the next day. I spent two days shuttling between the dorm, faculty, and bank, and hopefully, the process will end tomorrow.

Imran is one of around 6,000 freshers who have been suffering because of the lack of coordination among different offices on campus.

Besides, the mere three-day window, starting Monday, for the admission of such a large number of students is causing the long queue.

The admission committee had earlier requested the department heads to make sure students could pay the dorm and development fees online, but the department heads did not show interest, said a member of the committee.

But three department heads from the social sciences and arts faculties said they were not informed of the matter.

This correspondent talked to at least 50 freshers and their guardians, and all of them expressed disappointment that the payments could not be made online.

A man who came to the campus from Rajshahi for the admission of his daughter said he had been staying at a relative's home for the last few days and spending hours on campus.

"Almost everything is done online these days. But we are having to queue under the sun. The process is slow, complex and bureaucratic and it is because the officials involved are not too eager to make it simple and fast," said the father who works at a government department and is not willing to disclose his identity.

Nur Jahan, who was in a queue near the administrative building in the afternoon, said it was difficult for her and her daughter to spend hours under the glaring sun. "I let her stand in line and went to get some water for her. We could become sick from this ordeal."

Prof Mohammad Tanzimuddin Khan, who teaches international relations, said, "When we got admitted in the early 90s, we faced such hassles. But it's 2024, and the admission process has not changed much. It means the university has not progressed institutionally."

Moreover, the administrative officers and employees do not behave well with the students, he said.

Contacted, DU Vice Chancellor Prof ASM Maksud Kamal said there is a lack of coordination between the admission authorities and heads of departments and institutes.

"The university has started making the process online, but I am not sure why the entire system is not online. I took charge a few months ago and I hope that this problem will not be there next year," he said.

Trump, convicted on 34 felony counts of falsifying business records to cover up a sex scandal, accuses Democrats of pursuing that case and three other criminal prosecutions to prevent him from regaining power in his rematch with Joe Biden.

Congressional Democrats have pointed to cases including the Hunter Biden prosecution as evidence that Joe Biden is not using the justice system for political or personal ends, having said last week he would not pardon his son if convicted.

The Hunter Biden case was brought by US Department of Justice Special Counsel David Weiss, a Trump appointee.

Weiss has also charged Hunter Biden with three felony and six misdemeanor tax offenses in California, alleging he failed to pay $1.4 million in taxes between 2016 and 2019 while spending millions on drugs, escorts, exotic cars and other high-ticket items.

Hunter Biden has pleaded not guilty to those charges. A trial is scheduled for September 5 in Los Angeles.

The Delaware trial included prosecution testimony by Hunter Biden's ex-wife, former girlfriend and sister-in-law, who gave firsthand accounts of his spiraling addiction in the weeks before and after he bought the gun in October 2018.

Prosecutors also showed text messages, photos and bank records that they said showed Biden was deep in the throes of addiction when he bought the gun and knowingly broke the law by answering "no" to being a drug user on a government screening form.

Biden's lawyers sought to show he was not using drugs when he bought the gun and did not intend to deceive because he didn't consider himself a drug user when he filled out the form.

The defense called Hunter Biden's daughter, Naomi Biden, who testified that her father seemed to be doing well when she saw him shortly before and after he bought the gun.

The sentencing guidelines for the gun-related charges against Biden are 15 to 21 months, but legal experts say defendants in similar cases often get shorter sentences and are less likely to be incarcerated if they abide by the terms of their pretrial release.

Not all is lost for Tigers event came 17 years ago when they beat hosts West Indies in their tournament opener – the only time they beat a Test-playing nation before the Sri Lanka win in this edition -- in the inaugural edition of the T20 World Cup in 2007.

However, things are looking positive for the Tigers this time around. The Najmul Hossain Shanto-led Bangladesh, who were rocked just ahead of the T20 World Cup as they hit the nadir in the shortest format following a shocking 2-1 series defeat against the USA, have made a commendable turnaround result-wise.

Thanks to a two-wicket win over Sri Lanka in their tournament opener and a closely-fought game against the Proteas, Bangladesh are now second in the five-team group. With two points in two matches, Bangladesh remain just behind group leaders South Africa, who have all but confirmed their spot in the Super Eight with six points from three wins in as many games.

Bangladesh, who also have a positive net run-rate of 0.075, will now need to do what is expected of them in the final two group games -- beat associate nations the Netherlands and Nepal.

Meanwhile, things could get a bit tricky for Bangladesh if they go on to lose any one of their last two group-stage games as then the Tigers will have to depend on the results of some other fixtures going in their favour.

Shrugging off the close defeat they suffered against the Proteas, the Tigers will now need to grind harder and adapt to the different conditions in the Caribbean in order to avert any upset in their upcoming matches and have a smooth sailing into the Super Eight.

struggled to tackle the situation. We gave first aid to many while some were admitted. Four are still undergoing treatment at the hospital," said a hospital staff.

Imran Ali, manager of Shyamoli Housing (2nd Project), said, "My wife, two children and I were sleeping in our tin-roofed home when suddenly, we started having difficulty breathing and our eyes started burning.

"We rushed to the lane in front of our home where many people had already gathered. Many were vomiting while some complained of palpitations," said Imran, who along with his family, had treatment at SSMCH.

Abdur Rahman Tuhin, deputy manager of Smart Technology BD Ltd, said all 20 staff members of their firm lived near the scrap shop, and they all fell ill.

"Deceased Kabir is a cousin of one of the staffer. Kabir stayed with him on Monday night. He fell seriously ill and later died," Tuhin added.

Adabar Police Station Officer-in-Charge Mahbubur Rahman, said Kalu, the owner of the metal scrap shop, had fled the area after the incident, but police detained him in the morning.

"Kalu told police that he bought a very old gas cylinder a few days ago. When workers were trying to break open the cylinder at the shop early yesterday, it leaked, causing the gas inside to spread to the surrounding area."

The OC said experts at the Criminal Investigation Department (CID) were examining the cylinder to determine the type of gas.

Meanwhile, Mohammad Fakhruddin, senior station officer at the Mohammadpur Fire Service and Civil Defence, said they reached the spot around 4:00am when the gas was still leaking from the 25-30kg cylinder.

"It was ammonia gas," said the officer, who has training and experience in working with toxic gases.

Fear forced Hindus to sell their land to ex-IGP

"About four years ago, Taimur asked us to sell the land. As we refused, he said that Benazir had already acquired all the surrounding land and would make sure that we cannot access our land," Swarup told The Daily Star.

Eventually, they had to sell their three bighas of land for Tk 3.8 lakh per bigha, nearly half the market price. With the little money shared among his three brothers, there was no way they could buy any farmland elsewhere.

Another victim of Benazir's allegedly forceful land acquisition is Swarasati Roy, 60, from Borokhola village in Rajoir of Madaripur. Having forced to give up her 31 decimals of land, her only livelihood means, she now works at other people's homes to earn a living.

Two to three years ago, Taimur said she was not the real owner of the land and threatened that Benazir would take it anyway. Eventually, she caved, and had to accept only Tk 2 lakh for the land she bought 20 years ago with loan money and the proceeds from the sale of a cow.

She and her day labourer son now live on a five-decimal homestead, their last remaining piece of land.

Others, including Apurba Maitra of Patikelbari village of Gopalganj, were targeted with clever tactics.

The man had 10 kathas of farmland in two plots, growing rice on one plot and watermelon on the other.

Suddenly one day, Benazir's men laid large pipes through his land to sand-fill the ex-IGP's Savanna Eco Resort and Natural Park project site. The plot that fell within Benazir's project was automatically filled with sand.

"We failed to grow anything for two years. At one point, we were compelled to sell the land to Benazir," said Apurba, who now works as a day labourer.

Like them, several hundred people in Gopalganj Sadar and Madaripur's Rajoir upazilas were forced to sell their family land.

During a two-day visit to Machkandi, Bairagitol and Patikelbari villages of Gopalganj Sadar and Borokhola village in Rajoir, The Daily Star spoke to at least 40 people. They all said they would not have sold their land if it were not for the terror induced in their hearts by the very thought of Benazir.

CLEVER TACTICS

According to locals, Benazir first bought a piece of land in the area in 2016-2017. The floodgate had since opened as the mighty cop went on a land acquisition spree, with Inspector Taimur Islam intimidating the poor and mostly Hindu villagers to sell their land.

Benazir's men would fly drones and make a map, marking various plots in white and red, presumably to determine which land to target, said Tarun Baul of Bairagitol village.

He recalled that Taimur would eventually approach the targeted land owners and say, "You know Benazir and how powerful he is. If you decline to sell your land, he would surely take it anyway. You will lose both your land and the money. If you agree to sell, I will help you get a handsome price."

When someone refused to sell their land, Benazir would buy the surrounding land and block the entry to the land in the middle. This would ultimately force people to give in, said Sanjay Baul of Bairagitol village whose 30 bighas of family land were "forcefully acquired" by Benazir in 2018-2019.

"Two locals left for India with their families after selling their land to Benazir," said Biplob Baul.

One of them is Pranshanta Baul, 40, who left the country along with his wife and four children about a year ago.

"I was compelled to sell my 51 decimals of agricultural land at Tk 2 lakh after Benazir's men filled it up with sand. What would I do back home? So I came to India," he told The Daily Star by phone from Thakurnagar, West Bengal.

RAB-POLICE MEMBERS AT RESORT

Benazir engaged members of the police and Rab for his personal project as well. Locals said that until he went into retirement in 2022, several police and Rab officials were tasked with supervising the construction work of the resort.

Two sub-inspectors -- Bachchu Miah and Shahjalal -- were seen at the site most of the time by locals.

Benazir's then staff officer Masud Alam, who later became Madaripur police super, also visited the site frequently, sometimes even negotiating the land purchase, locals said.

Rab Additional SP Shaheda Sultana would also visit the site.

NO ENVIRONMENTAL CLEARANCE

Savanna Eco Resort and Natural Park was built on a portion of the purchased land at Machkandi and Bairagitol villages. There are several upscale cottages having architecture replicating the Masai houses of the African Savanna.

For land development at the site, Benazir's men dug up a huge pond spanning about 30 bighas of land in Bairagitol and brought the sand and soil from there, locals said.

According to its website, there is a farm within the resort, several ponds, a swimming pool, boat ride facilities, play zones for children, a country club, a helipad and other facilities.

Until June 3, people could visit it for an entrance fee of Tk 100. The government has since taken over the resort.

Mahfuzur Rahman, assistant director of Gopalganj environment office, said the resort was built with a temporary site clearance, but it does not have the final environmental clearance.

A few years ago, the LGED built a road there to facilitate local people's transport. But locals cannot use it anymore, as the resort authorities set up a huge iron gate, allowing only the resort-goers to use it.

"We learned that locals cannot use the road. Our job is to build roads. The local administration can take steps so that people can use the road," said SM Jahidul Islam, engineer of LGED in Gopalganj Sadar.

'OBEYED THE ORDER'

Taimur Islam, officer-in-charge at a highway police station, denied that he intimidated anyone to sell their land.

"Benazir Shaheb went into retirement two years ago. The villagers did not lodge any complaint to the local MP, union parishad chairmen and members. I do not know why they are bringing such allegations now."

Victims said they never had the heart to seek legal redress against Benazir.

Taimur said Benazir's staff officer sometimes called him, asking him to verify the land document, and he simply obliged.

"I was tasked with planting some trees. During the time, IGP's staff officer occasionally called me and I used to visit him. Masud Shaheb can tell everything as he was later made the SP of Madaripur to look after the project. He did everything. They are senior officers, they know everything," Taimur told The Daily Star by phone.

Sub-inspectors Bachchu and Shahjalal did not pick up the calls or respond to the text messages.

Earlier, Bachchu admitted to daily Prothom Alo that he supervised the construction work at the resort site on instructions of senior officials. He defended his action, saying he only "obeyed the orders" of his supervisors.

Masud Alam denied his involvement in the project.

"Never in my life did I commit any misdemeanor. After joining as the SP of Madaripur, I never visited the area where Benazir sir's project is located. I did not go there even if it was necessary," he said.

Rab Additional SP Shaheda did not respond to our calls and text messages over the last one week.

AN OFFENCE

Former IGP Nur Mohammad said senior police officials cannot engage members of the police for their personal or business work.

"That would be an offence," he told The Daily Star.

Government officials can buy land, but in keeping with the regulations and with legitimate income. In Benazir's case, it must be seen whether this was followed and what is the source of the money, said Nur, who was an Awami League lawmaker in the previous term.

Benazir did not respond to our calls and text messages on WhatsApp.

In a Facebook live on April 20, Benazir refuted the allegations of buying land through intimidation.

"Purchasing land through coercion and intimidation is impractical as it is Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's home district and the project area is adjacent to her constituency," he said.

In addition to his land, the ACC has so far discovered that Benazir and his family have shares in 19 companies, two savings certificates, 22 bank accounts and 10 BO accounts.

All his bank accounts have since been frozen, although ACC investigators say a large sum of money has been withdrawn by the time the freeze order could take effect.

RISING MEDICAL EXPENSES

The poor sink deeper into poverty: speakers

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The poor are getting poorer due to increasing out-of-pocket healthcare expenses, said speakers at a roundtable yesterday.

An overhaul is needed in the health sector, they added, demanding a strong political will to make health services more responsive to the public's needs.

They made the remarks at the roundtable titled "Health Expenditure: A Critical Challenge in Ensuring Health Care in Bangladesh", jointly organised by The Daily Star and Civil Society Forum (CSO) at The Daily Star Centre in the capital.

In a keynote presentation, Sayed Rubayet, convener of the CSO Forum, said Bangladesh has the highest out-of-pocket health expenditure -- 73 percent -- among neighbouring countries.

He added that over 8.61 million people in the country were pushed below the national poverty line due to out-of-pocket payments in 2016.

Due to the sorry state of country's healthcare, Bangladeshis accounted for 57.5 percent of medical tourists in 2019 alone, said Rubayet, also the country director of Ipas Bangladesh.

Number of Bangladeshi medical tourists surged by 83 percent from 2017 to 2019, he added.

Echoing Rubayet, Mohammad Mainul Islam, professor of Population Science Department at Dhaka University, said education and health are fundamental sectors requiring increased investments.

Syed Ashfaqul Haque gets bail

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court yesterday granted bail to Syed Ashfaqul Haque, former executive editor of The Daily Star, and his wife Tania Khondoker in a case filed over the death of Preeti Urang, a teenage domestic worker who fell from their flat in Dhaka's Mohammadpur in February this year.

Ashfaqul has been in jail since his arrest on February 6, the day Preeti fell and died. He and his wife were previously denied bail three times by the lower court.

The HC bench of Justice Md Rezaul Hasan and Justice Fahmida Quader delivered the bail order after holding a hearing on a High Court rule on the matter.

The HC also observed that remand should not be used as a tool by the police. It also said the court should not grant police remand just because they ask for it.

Besides, the court said the petitioners (Ashfaqul and Tania) were taken on remand twice but the police could not get any additional information from them.

Ashfaqul's lawyer Khurshid Alam Khan told The Daily Star that Ashfaqul will come out of jail once the jail authorities receive the written copy of the verdict.

On April 22, the HC bench issued a rule asking the state to explain in

Eid journey may not be hassle free

TUHIN SHUBHRA ADHIKARY

Roadside cattle markets and unfinished road expansion work, alongside closing all the garment factories on the same day, are likely to cause suffering to Eid holidaymakers, particularly the north-bound people.

Unfit vehicles breaking down and road crashes on highways, which usually see a rise during Eid rush, may intensify their sufferings.

Eid-ul-Azha will be celebrated on June 17. Highway Police identified 118 congestion-prone stops on different highways; of them, 35 lead to the north.

Meanwhile, trains heading for northern destinations are likely to be delayed due to ongoing works on the east and west sides of Bangabandhu Bridge.

The situation will worsen once pressure of passengers increases manifold following closure of offices and factories.

During an Eid preparatory meeting on May 30 at BRTA headquarters, officials said there are over 200 roadside cattle markets across the country, which often cause traffic congestion.

Besides, the speed of vehicles that carry sacrificial animals is relatively slow, which causes traffic congestion, officials told the meeting headed by Road Transport and Bridges Minister Obaidul Quader.

Md Shahabuddin Khan, additional inspector general of highway police, said there are 202 cattle markets beside the highways, of which 60 are very important.

They have already talked to district police and the market authorities to keep the nearby roads congestion-free, he added.

Mosharref Hossain, general manager of Hanif Paribahan, said they are expecting a huge passenger pressure from June 13 to 15.

He said it's almost certain that the highway from Nabinagar to Chandra will see huge traffic congestion on Saturday, the day all garment factories will be closed.

A huge number of garment workers will add to the chaos, he said. Besides, many city buses will hit the streets to serve the passengers, intensifying the problem, he added.

Shahabuddin Khan said they always request garment authorities to close factories in phases but more than 80 percent of factories will close on the same day.

"This time, we have asked the factory owners, particularly BGMEA, to arrange transport at their factories so that workers can get into home-bound vehicles from there," he said.

Mosharref Hossain said the expansion work of Dhaka-Rangpur Highway from Elenga to Hatikumrul is still underway, which may cause traffic congestion, he told The Daily Star yesterday.

Waliur Rahman, project director of the road expansion works, said vehicles breaking down near Bangabandhu Bridge was the main reason behind the congestion in the last Eid rush.

REASONS FOR TRAFFIC CONGESTION ON ROADS

- 200 roadside cattle markets
- Garment factories closing all in one day
- Unfinished road expansion works
- Unfit vehicles breaking down on roads

REASONS FOR SUFFERING ON RAILWAYS

- Ongoing dev work on Bangabandhu Bridge east and west stations
- Lack of capacity of single line on Joydebpur-Ishwardi route
- Speed, weight restrictions on the bridge

At least 83 events of vehicle breakdowns, road crashes, and similar incidents took place near Bangabandhu Bridge in six days during the Eid rush, he said.

The road from Elenga to Bangabandhu Bridge will be used as a one-way road once the pressure of vehicles intensifies and in that case, a nearby road will be used as a bypass road for the vehicles heading for Dhaka, he added.

No market at Anwara Park

Atiqul tells rally

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Dhaka North City Corporation Mayor Atiqul Islam has assured that no market will be built on Anwara Park in the capital's Farmgate area, following Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's instructions.

"At a meeting with the prime minister, she was informed about the plan to build a market on park. She instructed that no market will be built on the park. The Prime Minister's decision is final," Mayor Atiqul said at a rally held in front of the DNCC building, organised by the park protection committee yesterday.

"The prime minister emphasised that the Dhaka Mass Transit Company Limited (DMTCL) do not need income from the market; they are already earning income from passengers," he added.

The mayor expressed his support for the movement and announced that authorities had already been informed of the prime minister's direction.

The Public Works Department owns the park, while DNCC maintains it. Since 2018, a section of the park has been used by DMTCL as a project office and storage for metro rail construction materials. DMTCL reportedly aims to construct a commercial plaza on the park grounds now.

The rally saw solidarity from at least 30 organisations.

Every village will be under civic amenities: PM

Hasina provides 18,566 more houses to homeless as Eid gift

UNB, Dhaka

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday said the government is working to ensure civic amenities for all the rural people.

"We'll bring every village under the coverage of civic amenities and the people of every village will enjoy those," she said.

The premier said this while handing over 18,566 more houses among the homeless and landless families across the country under Ashrayan-2 project.

She opened the distribution of the houses along with ownership documents through a videoconference from her official residence Gono Bhaban, connecting to Kaliganj upazila of Lalmonirhat, Eidgaon upazila of Cox's Bazar, and Char Fashion upazila of Bhola.

Talking about the cyclone Remal-hit people, Hasina said thousands were affected by the cyclone. The government has already prepared area-wise lists of the houses which were completely or partially damaged, she said.

She said the government will construct new homes in case of completely damaged houses, and will extend support to reconstruct the partially damaged houses.

VOTER LIST

HC asks for list of Rohingyas included in it

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court yesterday sought a list of Rohingyas, who have been made Bangladeshi voters illegally across the country.

The officials concerned including chief election commissioner; LGRD secretary; secretary at the EC and registrar general of birth and death registration have been asked to submit the voter list of Rohingyas by August 8 to the court.

The HC bench of Justice Naima Haider and Justice Kazi Zinat Hoque passed the order during hearing of a writ petition filed by a local voter of Cox's Bazar.

Petitioner's lawyer Mohammad Siddique Ullah Miah told reporters that the Rohingays fleeing from Myanmar have no right to become voters in Bangladesh. But many of them have illegally become Bangladeshi voters, which is a threat to security, he said.

DNCC issues birth certificates to 49 Rohingyas

Registrar general seeks answer; mayor refutes allegation

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Forty-nine Rohingyas have recently been issued birth certificates by the health department of Dhaka North City Corporation.

It was informed in a letter given on June 5 to DNCC's chief executive officer from the Office of the Registrar General of the Birth and Death Registration Branch of the Local Government Department.

The Special Branch (SB) of Bangladesh Police has informed about the birth registration of 49 Rohingya citizens, said the letter.

These illegally registered birth certificates have been suspended from the BDRIS system.

The letter also says the registrars and registration assistants who were in charge while issuing those birth certificates, should appear at the registrar general's office within five working days and give an explanation. If not, action will be taken against them as per law.

The secretary of the organisation, Mohammad Masud Alam Siddique, wrote a letter to the chief health officer of DNCC on Sunday in this regard.

When asked about this, DNCC Mayor Md Atiqul Islam said birth registration numbers given by the registrar general's office have been verified and not a single one was issued by DNCC.

He said those who were involved in the illegal

'Exam results don't determine life's outcome'

Speakers stress overhaul of education system

STAR REPORT

Outcomes of exams are determined not only by students' preparation, but also by family, society, schools, the education system, and management, said speakers at an event yesterday. They also stressed the need to address existing issues in the education system concurrently, while attending a conference held at the Krishibid Institution Bangladesh (KIB) in Dhaka for students who did not pass their Secondary School Certificate examinations.

Titled "Challenged Students Convention", the event was organised by Campaign for Popular Education (CAMPE), which brought together 200 students who faced challenges in passing their exams, along with their parents and teachers.

Addressing students, author Muhammed Zafar Iqbal said, "You are not a liability, you are the asset of this country. Maybe you failed today, but one-day you'll outshine others."

Author Anisul Hoque said, "Exam results don't determine life's outcome. I hope that everyone here today will take their failure as a new challenge and move forward."

Economist Qazi Kholiquzzaman Ahmad said the primary reason many students drop out is the lack of opportunity to study at home.

"If we cannot improve the quality of education, it will be impossible to achieve any national goals," he added.

Nurul Islam Nahid, former education minister, said, "We need to take initiatives to increase stipends for students, especially for those facing economic hardships."

"Besides, we must ensure adequate compensation to attract talented individuals to the teaching profession to ensure quality education," he said.

Former Education Secretary Nazrul Islam Khan proposed nationalising schools to ensure uniform standards and adequate resources. He also urged authorities to provide teachers with a conducive working environment and better benefits like pensions.

Eminent artiste Nasiruddin Yousuff Bachchu urged authorities to initiate dialogues among students, parents and teachers to pinpoint reasons for student's failure.

Other recommendations included bolstering teacher recruitment, providing education for minorities in mother tongue, raising awareness on child labour and preventing child marriage, implementing mid-day meal programmes, and strengthening school monitoring mechanisms.

These initiatives, implemented through the Directorate of Public Health and Engineering, aim to establish 10,65,000 arsenic-free water sources by 2025.

Solutions include deep tube wells, piped water supply systems, rainwater storage, and solar-powered pond sand filters. These efforts are expected to reduce the arsenic contamination risk by 5-6 percent by 2025.

Besides, in response to a question from Faridunnahar Laili, a lawmaker from the reserved women's seats, the minister discussed plans to expand the Dhaka Mosquito Control Department.

The government has revised the department's organisational structure and is planning to establish a full-fledged Dhaka Mosquito Control Directorate.

This expansion will include the creation of new manpower, the purchase of machinery and standard insecticides, and the establishment of a permanent lab for mosquito pest testing, he said.

The poor sink deeper

Prof Syed Abdul Hamid of Institute of Health Economics at DU said the country needs a health budget of 12-15 percent, but it is currently receiving only five percent.

Yet, the allocated amount is mostly not spent. He identified three reasons why the allocated budget could not be spent. "One is bureaucratic, the second is our weakness at the facility level and inefficient administration, and the third is the lack of training for our service providers," he said.

Mentioning the manpower crisis within the health sector, he said the process of appointing such a large number of personnel is critical, bureaucratically complex, and lengthy.

"We need to reconstruct our existing facilities and appoint more personnel to justify an increased budget," he said.

He also sought to reform the existing procurement and auditing policies, stating that they were faulty and corrupt.

Prof Farhana Dewan, co-convener at CSO Forum and president of Obstetrical and Gynaecological Society of Bangladesh, said, "Most doctors do not want to work at the community level. We need to introduce a system where those who do not want to work at the community level are removed from their jobs."

Makduma Nargis, vice-president of Bangladesh Mahila Parishad, said, "We have faults in our medical system, and due to these faults, the health sector could not see a reform."

She called for a strong monitoring system to ensure that budget allocations are spent properly and that health services are provided according to standards.

Advocating for an urgent need in the health sector, Shams EI Arifeen, senior scientist at icddr,b, said, "We need to understand the need for reform first, and it should be implemented at the policy level. The reform should be carried out politically, not bureaucratically," he added.

Kishwar Imdad, country director of Marie Stopes, suggested the introduction of health insurance for all to reduce out-of-pocket expenditures and ensure proper utilisation of the budget.

Ahmed Ehsanur Rahman, a scientist at icddr'b, recommended bringing private medical services under regulation to reduce such expenditures.

Shishir Moral, a special correspondent at the Bangla daily Prothom Alo, said usually over 20 percent of health budget allocation are embezzled.

Mentioning that most out-of-pocket expenditures occur when buying medicines, he advocated for strengthening Essential Drugs Company Limited and asked CSO organisations to negotiate with the government to prevent further increases in medicine prices.

Esrat Jahan, a regional inclusive health specialist in South Asia, said the budget does not address the health issues of physically challenged people, even though 42 percent of them are suffering from chronic illness.

She called for an inclusive and multidisciplinary approach to address the needs of these people.

While delivering a welcome speech, Golam Mortaza, editor at The Daily Star Bangla, said the country's healthcare service will reach an acceptable standard only when the country's ministers and high-level government officials receive treatment at government hospitals.

The event was moderated by Tanjim Ferdous of The Daily Star.

activities mentioned the addresses of the DNCC areas like Mirpur and Mohammadpur.

"We will reply to the letter with our explanation shortly," he said.

"If we find the involvement of any DNCC official or employee, we will definitely take action against them," he said.

On May 26, a letter was given to the Registrar General of Births and Deaths from the Special Branch of Bangladesh Police.

In that letter, it is said 102 individuals obtained Bangladeshi passports with birth certificates from different parts of the country illegally. The permanent addresses mentioned in those passports were found to be incorrect during investigation.

The letter also mentioned that those persons collected the birth certificates with the help of syndicates of brokers, dishonest officials and employees, local public representatives, and so on.

Those who got the birth certificate are Rohingyas, citizens of Myanmar.

The letter requested to take action against those involved in these activities.

"Over the years, hundreds of hills have been completely or partially destroyed across the division. The issue of hill conservation has long been in talks, but no initiative has been taken," she added.

Dr Narayan Saha, former head of the forestry and environmental science department at Shahjalal University of Science and Technology, said unsustainable use of land and rampant hill-cutting are two major reasons behind the landslide vulnerability in Sylhet.

AKM Rafiqul Islam, director of DoE, Sylhet Divisional Office, said, "We have adopted zero tolerance against those razing hills illegally. We will take necessary action against the accused after investigation."

RAILWAYS

BR will launch its special train service from today for people who bought advance tickets since June 2.

Delays in schedules of trains connecting the capital with the north-western regions have been common over the last few years due to a lack of capacity on the single line, alongside speed and weight restrictions on the existing railway at Bangabandhu Bridge.

The situation deteriorates when the pressure of passengers intensifies before Eid day, and this situation may recur this year too.

Contacted, Asim Kumar Talukder, general manager (west) of BR, said development works are ongoing at two stations on both sides of Bangabandhu Bridge.

So, they have to operate trains through two lines instead of four lines, which causes delays of more than half an hour for every train heading for northern destinations.

At least 54 trains, including 42 intercity trains, operate between Dhaka and northern districts, showed BR documents.

Landslide risk looms large

Illegal hill razing continues unabated in Sylhet

MINTU DESHWARA, from Sylhet

Threat of landslides during monsoon looms large in Sylhet as illegal razing of the district's hills continues unabated.

On June 10, three of a family were killed in Sylhet as a mudslide buried their house, raising concerns about such incidents recurring in the coming days.

Environmentalists alleged that culprits have long been cutting down hills illegally in the region, while the Department of Environment continues to remain largely silent.

Visiting different areas in Sylhet recently, this correspondent observed that numerous hills were razed to pave way for construction of houses.

"Over 30 percent of Sylhet's hills have been razed in the last two and half decades. At present, there are 1,875 hills in the four districts under Sylhet division, encompassing an area of 4,811 acres," said Md Badrul Huda, assistant director of DoE in the district.

"In the last six months, 19 individuals and institutions were fined a total of Tk 1,13,77,313 during nine drives against illegal hill cutting in Sylhet. Also, 11 cases were filed against 39 accused," he added.

However, Abdul Karim Kim, general secretary of Bangladesh Poribesh Andolon's Sylhet unit, alleged that at least 50 percent of the hills in Sylhet have been destroyed, far higher than the DoE's figure.

A section of government officials and local influential people have been abetting the hill destroyers in exchange for bribes, he alleged.

Thousands of low-income families are living amid risk across different hills in Howladarpara, Akhalia, Peermahalla Brahmanshmashan Jahangirnagar, Tarapur Tea Garden, Baluchar, Airport Road, Khadimpara, Khadimnagar, Jonaki, Islampur Majortila, and Monglirpar areas of Sylhet city, and also in different areas of Habiganj and Moulvibazar districts, he added.

"The hill area in Majortila is now a bustling hub of soil trade. Hills are continuously being razed to extract soil, while the loose earth gets washed away in rain and runs off to waterbodies, causing siltation. This must be stopped," said AH Arif, a Sylhet city resident.

Saheda Akhter, coordinator of Bangladesh Environmental Lawyers Association's Sylhet unit, said, "According to the land survey data in 1956, there were 1,025 hills in six upazilas of Sylhet district, and hundreds of others in three other upazilas. Also, in different places it was claimed that there were a total of 1,900 hills across Sylhet division. However, there is no exact information in this regard."

Noor requested the finance minister to reconsider the proposed 25 percent tax on imported cars for MPs, particularly for new MPs.

Meanwhile, Nilufar Anjum, a lawmaker from Mymensingh-3, highlighted the high unemployment rate among educated youth and requested a temporary allowance for them before they secure jobs or start businesses.

Apu aces as antagonist this Eid

SHAH ALAM SHAZU

> In 'Writer', I play the role of a dangerous murderer, who is the overseer of a crocodile conservation project, but is actually a killer. I tried to bring a different look and feel to this character.

Rashed Mamun Apu has carved a niche for himself in Bangladesh's entertainment industry with his compelling portrayals of negative characters in films like Poran, Damal, and Prohelika. Known for his strong presence on both cinema and OTT platforms, Apu is set to captivate audiences once again with his upcoming web-series Golam Mamun, premiering on June 13.

With several projects lined up for release after Eid-ul-Azha, including M Raahim's directorial Jongli, his career shows no signs of slowing down. Fresh from an enriching trip to Bulgaria for the screening of his film Kath Golap, Apu sat down with The Daily Star for an exclusive interview to discuss his recent experiences, upcoming projects, and future aspirations in the world of showbiz.

You recently visited Bulgaria. How was the experience?

I went to Bulgaria for a film festival, which featured my film Kath Golap. It was an incredible experience– meeting directors, producers, and artistes from around the world. I received a lot of positive feedback about the film, which was very gratifying. I also had discussions about future projects with several directors. Overall, it was a fruitful trip.

PHOTOS: COLLECTED

You travelled to several European countries as well. How was the response from the Bangladeshi diaspora there?

I received an overwhelming amount of love from the expats. It was an unforgettable experience, and the affection from people is truly a treasured memory.

What are your expectations regarding your upcoming web-series 'Golam Mamun'?

I'm quite optimistic about the Shihab Shaheen directorial web-series. The director needs no introduction here. I play a negative character in this series as well. It was a challenging role that provided me with a lot of new experiences. We shot in various locations during an intense heatwave.

How frightening is your character in 'Golam Mamun'?

It's quite terrifying. Everyone in the cast performed exceptionally well, and my character, though appearing intermittently, is very menacing. There are moments where my expressions alone will scare the audience. I've had to portray various terrifying expressions throughout the series.

Is it true that your film 'Jongli' won't be released during Eid?

Yes, initially, I was told it would be released during the Eid festivities. However, now, it is slated for release a month after Eid. Jongli is a highly engaging film with a gripping plot. Viewers will see me in a very different role, and there is a big surprise in store for them.

Tell us more about your other upcoming film 'Writer'. When is the premiere?

In Writer, I play the role of a dangerous murderer who is the overseer of a crocodile conservation project but is actually a killer. I tried to bring a different look and feel to this character. I always strive to immerse myself deeply in each role so that it leaves a lasting impression on the audience. Initially, Writer was scheduled for release during Eid, but apparently, it has been postponed as well.

What are your plans for this Eid?

I will be in Dhaka for this Eid. Having just returned from Europe, I haven't made any specific plans yet. Honestly, the joy of Eid is something I associate with my childhood. Nevertheless, I still look forward to it. I wish all my fans and everyone else a joyous Eid in advance. May the happiness of Eid bless everyone.

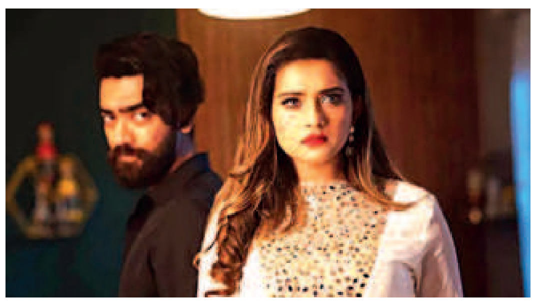
Daniel Craig stuns with long hair in 'Knives Out 3' teaser

The knives are out, but the scissors are sheathed as Daniel Craig debuts a long hairdo in a first look from Rian Johnson's next mystery movie.

Rian Johnson shared a photo marking the first day of shooting for Wake Up Dead Man, the third film in his Knives Out series, set for 2025. The image features Daniel Craig as Detective Benoit Blanc in a three-piece suit.

Wake Up Dead Man will be distributed by Netflix as part of Johnson's USD 450 million two-sequel deal. The possibility of a thorough theatrical release for the film, by the streamer, is still uncertain.

Tanjin Tisha makes web-film debut with 'Poison'



Actress Tanjin Tisha makes her debut in a web-film with Poison, directed by Sanjay Samaddar. The film, which premiered on June 10 on Deep Play, follows the tumultuous journey of a heroine named Rupa Mirza, played by Tisha.

Director Samaddar skillfully portrays a complex narrative, offering a raw look at a heroine's struggle for success in a ruthless industry.

Initially hesitant about taking on the lead role, Tisha confessed, "Becoming Rupa Mirza required thorough dedication. I hope the audience appreciates my performance and isn't disappointed."

The film also stars actor Abu Hurayra Tanvir as a struggling hero, marking his first collaboration with Samaddar and Tisha.

Poison is now available for streaming on DeeptoPlay.

No competitive politics left in Bangladesh

by providing tiny loans of sums less than $100 to the rural poor, angered Hasina with a 2007 plan to set up a political party.

The 2006 Nobel laureate accused the ruling Awami League of being involved in corruption, saying Bangladesh lacked a genuine political opposition.

"Bangladesh doesn't have any politics left," Prof Yunus, 83, said last week in his office in Dhaka. "There's only one party which is active and occupies everything, does everything, gets to the elections in their way.

"They get their people elected in many different forms -- proper candidates, dummy candidates, independent candidates -- but all from the same party," he added.

However, Law Minister Anisul Huq said he completely disagreed with Prof Yunus' comments.

"It's not only I who disagree, but the people of the country will also disagree," he told Reuters by telephone, calling the remarks an "insult" to the people of the country.

"Democracy is fully functional in this country," he added.

Prof Yunus, an economist who won the Nobel for his work on microcredit, was forced out of Grameen Bank in 2011 by Hasina's government, which said he had stayed on past the legal retirement age of 60.

As Bangladesh's longest-serving prime minister, Hasina has been credited with turning around the economy, though critics have also accused her of human rights violations and suppression of dissent.

The US State Department said January's elections were not free and fair while the British government's foreign office also condemned acts of "intimidation and violence".

At the time, the main opposition BNP denounced the exercise as a "sham" election, calling for its cancellation, Hasina's resignation and the formation of a non-party neutral government to hold a fresh one.

Just before the election, a court in Bangladesh had sentenced Prof Yunus to six months in prison for violations of labour law, which he denied.

Although he is not in prison after securing bail in that case, Prof Yunus faces more than 100 cases regarding the violations and graft accusations, which he dismissed as "very flimsy, made-up stories".

Huq denied the accusations against Prof Yunus were false, however, adding, "He has gone to the highest court of the country, which found there was a case against him."

As an example, Huq cited taxes paid by Prof Yunus after the Supreme Court ruled against him in a tax-evasion case, but declined comment on others as being sub-judice.

Prof Yunus' supporters say Hasina's government has sought to discredit him because he once considered setting up the political party, called "Citizens' Power".

Hasina, who denies the contention, called Prof Yunus a "bloodsucker" of the poor in 2011.

"Is it a crime for a citizen to try to make a political party?" Prof Yunus asked, saying he dropped the idea of such a party after just 10 weeks, on realising that he was not suited to politics.

Reviving a competitive political landscape in Bangladesh will be difficult, Prof Yunus said.

"Restarting will be very painful because we have brought it to a point where it has completely disappeared."

Govt approves price for 40MW power import

Nepal had asked $0.700 per unit while Bangladesh wanted to pay $0.500 during the negation on "40MW power import for five years under the tripartite agreement among Nepal Electricity Authority, NTPC Vidyut Vyapar Nigam Limited, and Bangladesh Power Development Board".

The agreed power import price from Nepal is lower than the price the BPDP has been paying for power from India's Adani Power Plant and the country's private power plants.

The unit power price of Adani's coal-fired Godda Power Plant was Tk 14.02, independent power plants Tk 14.62 and rental power plants Tk 12.52, according to BPDP's annual report of fiscal year 2022-23.

The Power Division official said purchasing price of power has increased over the last one year mainly due to devaluation of taka.

He said import of power from Nepal for the first time would boost Bangladesh's commitment to increase the share of green energy in the gas and coal-fired energy mix for power production.

Bangladesh has been interested in purchasing 500MW from Nepal.

Power from the Himalayan nation will be transmitted via the Nepal-India Dhalkebar-Muzaffarpur Cross Border Transmission Line and the India-Bangladesh Barampur-Bheramara Cross Border Transmission Line, reports the Kathmandu Post.

On December 6 last year, the government approved the purchase of 40MW of power from Nepal using the power grid of India.

Mahmudul Hossain said the import of hydropower from Napal would start after the final agreement involving the three parties.

Hamas accepts

Israeli Army Radio said the soldiers died in an explosion in a building in Rafah's Shaboura neighbourhood. Hamas said it had ambushed troops by detonating explosives previously planted in the building.

At least 37,164 Palestinians have been killed and 84,832 have been injured in the offensive that began on October 7, the Gaza health ministry said in a statement yesterday. Some 40 Palestinians were killed and 218 injured in the previous 24 hours, the ministry added.

In Jordan, King Abdullah told a conference on the humanitarian response for Gaza that access for aid to its 2.3 million population, most of whom are now homeless, could not wait for a ceasefire or be subject to a political agenda.

Egyptian President Abdel Fattah al-Sisi told the gathering on the Dead Sea that nations should force Israel to stop what he called the use of hunger as a weapon and remove obstacles to the distribution of humanitarian aid in Gaza.

Police detain Jhenaidah AL general secy

He will be arrested if any involvement is found during interrogation, they said.

Harun Or Rashid, additional commissioner (DB) of the DMP, yesterday said, "The killing took place in India. But the criminals are Bangladeshis. They came back after the murder. We are investigating whether they shared pictures of the murder after their return."

He also said, "We are also probing whether they [killers] got financial benefits from anyone by sharing the pictures."

Meanwhile, detectives have sent mobile phones of arrestees Amanullah alias Shimul Bhuiyan, his nephew Tanvir Bhuiyan, Celesty Rahman, and Babu for forensic examination following a court order.

In the application to the court, detectives mentioned that Shimul, Babu, Tanvir, and Celesty exchanged various information among themselves through WhatsApp after killing Azim.

Apart from this, it is necessary to know whether any information related to abduction and murder, including photos and videos, has been deleted, it said.

According to detectives, lawmaker Azim was killed in a flat in New Town of Kolkata on May 13.

On May 18, his daughter informed the detectives about the lawmaker missing.

In response to a query about Azim's involvement in smuggling, Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan yesterday said, "We have always been saying that the MP's constituency is a crime-prone area. We need to know what happened there. We are investigating, we will tell you everything after the probe."

In another development, the preliminary forensic report has confirmed that the body parts recovered from the septic tank of Kolkata's flat on May 28 and the bones recovered near a canal in South 24 Parganas district are those of a man.

Akhilesh Chaturvedi, inspector general of West Bengal CID, told media yesterday that they will now deaths and disappearances along the migration route since 2014, including 480 due to drowning.

The latest "tragedy is another reminder of the urgent need to work together to address urgent migration challenges and ensure the safety and security of migrants along migration routes," said agency spokesperson Mohammedali Abunajela.

Those migrants who successfully reach Yemen often encounter further threats to their safety. The Arabian Peninsula's poorest country has been mired in civil war for a decade.

It's service charge, not extortion

In response, the home minister said the scope for extortion was widespread.

Extortion is taking place in many places, he said, adding, "We have repeatedly asked you [transport leaders] for a list of places from where you take the service charge, we will not allow any charge outside those places."

He said, "We have taken measures regarding the operation of Nasimon-Karimon on highways. We don't want any illegal vehicles to run on highways. We are working to make the highways safe. Our Highway Police is working."

Talking to reporters after the discussion, the minister claimed that police "do not stop vehicles to extort".

"Our police personnel stop vehicles at different times to check their fitness. If they find a vehicle has mechanical issues or is carrying something illegal, they stop it. It is not extortion; it's part of their regular duty."

Additional Inspector General of Police Md Shahabuddin Khan, also the chief of Highway Police, said their goal is to ensure safety on roads. "Discipline on the highways should be ensured by enforcing the law."

Inspector General of Police Chowdhury Abdullah Al Mamun, who presided over the discussion, said police will perform their duties to make this year's Eid journey safe and smooth. No vehicles carrying sacrificial animals would be stopped on roads without specific information.

Meanwhile, a police team on Monday night collected Kawsar's prescriptions and medicines from his village home in Doulatpur, Kushtia.

Contacted, his wife Nilufar Yasmin Sathi said, "He was supposed to come home on Eid. That's why I bought his medicines. Policemen came at night and took all the medicines."

Nilufar said she took some photos of the medicines and the documents, but the officers made her delete those from her phone.

However, Mahbubur Rahman, officer-in-charge of Daulatpur Police Station, said the police team visited the house to see if the family was okay. "We did not take medicines or prescriptions," he said.

Close to midnight on Saturday, Kawsar was on duty near the Palestine embassy when he fired 38 shots from his service SMT-9 submachine gun, killing constable Monirul Islam and injuring another man who happened to be there.

He was arrested later and a court placed him on a seven-day remand.

STRESS MANAGEMENT TRAINING

IGP Mamun said, "Bangladesh Police is a professional force. They receive basic training on stress management from both experienced police officers and psychiatrists."

Before they are deployed, members of the force are briefed about the job location and conditions, he said.

In the orientation course, recruits are briefed about the stress they may face at work, he added.

"If needed, we will enhance the training."

India to focus on solving border issues with China

Says FM Jaishankar

REUTERS, Mumbai

India will focus on finding solutions to the border issues with China that has long strained ties between the neighbouring countries, Indian Foreign Minister Subrahmanyam Jaishankar said yesterday after assuming charge for a second straight term.

India and China share a 3,800 km (2,400 mile) border - much of it poorly demarcated - over which the nuclear-armed nations also fought a war in 1962.

They have engaged in a military standoff since July 2020 when 20 Indian soldiers and four Chinese troops were killed in the worst clashes in five decades. "With Pakistan, we would want to find a solution to the issue of years-old cross-border terrorism. That cannot be the policy of a good neighbour," Jaishankar said.

SNAP POLLS

French right-wing leader backs Le Pen alliance

AFP, Paris

The leader of France's main right-wing party yesterday said he backed an alliance with the far right of Marine Le Pen in snap legislative elections, triggering a crisis within his own party and fury from the government.

The stunning announcement by the Republicans (LR) leader Eric Ciotti in a lunchtime television interview is the first time in modern French political history that a leader of a traditional party has backed an alliance with the far-right National Rally (RN).

President Emmanuel Macron called the polls on June 30, with a second round on July 7, in a gamble after the RN scored more than double the number of votes of his centrist alliance in EU elections.

Gaza civilian killings could be war crimes: UN rights office

AGENCIES

The UN human rights office said yesterday the killings of civilians in Gaza during the Israeli operation to release four hostages, and also armed groups' holding of captives in densely populated areas, could amount to war crimes.

Israel said the operation, accompanied by an air assault, took place on Saturday in the heart of a residential neighbourhood in central Gaza's Nuseirat area where Hamas had kept the hostages in two separate apartment blocks.

The operation killed more than 270 Palestinians, according to Gaza health officials, reports Reuters.

"The manner in which the raid was conducted in such a densely populated area seriously calls into question whether the principles of distinction, proportionality and precaution - as set out under the laws of war - were respected by the Israeli forces," Jeremy Laurence, spokesperson for the UN human rights office, said.

Laurence added that the holding of hostages in such densely populated areas by armed groups was "putting the lives of Palestinian civilians, as well as the hostages themselves, at added risk from the hostilities."

"All these actions, by both parties, may amount to war crimes," he said.

Meanwhile, the UN World Food Programme (WFP) has suspended the delivery of aid to Gaza via a temporary US military pier in order to assess the security situation, a spokesperson said Monday.

Stephane Dujarric linked the move to the Israeli hostage rescue operation over the weekend, reports AFP.

"World Food Programme colleagues tell us that we are temporarily pausing operations at the floating dock until a thorough assessment of the security situation is conducted to ensure the safety of our staff and our partners," said Dujarric, spokesperson for the UN secretary-general.

"We've all seen what happened in Gaza over the weekend. We've seen some of the media reports. We've also taken note of very public statements by the US Central Command that the floating pier had not been used in the operation by the Israeli forces regarding the hostages," he said.

4 US instructors stabbed in China

White House expresses deep concern

AFP, Beijing

A suspect has been arrested over the stabbing of four American college teachers in northeastern China, police said yesterday, with Beijing describing the attack as an "isolated" incident.

The four were on an academic exchange and worked as instructors at Iowa's Cornell College, which said they were wounded in a "serious incident". White House expressed "deep concern" about the stabbing incident.

The attack took place on Monday in a public park in Jilin province, where police confirmed they had arrested a 55-year-old man. "The suspect, named Mr Cui, was arrested the same day (as the attack)," the local police said.

Beijing confirmed that "four foreign teachers" had been attacked. "All the wounded were taken to hospital... and received proper treatment. None of them are in danger of losing their life," spokesman Lin Jian told reporters.

"The police preliminarily judged that the case was isolated. Further investigation is underway."

"China is generally recognised as one of the safest countries in the world," Lin added. "China... will continue to take relevant measures to effectively protect the safety of all foreigners in China," he said.

China urges greater BRICS role as Western sanctions mount

REUTERS, Beijing

China has urged the BRICS bloc of nations to take on greater responsibilities and establish itself as being inclusive to the world, Foreign Minister Wang Yi said yesterday, in the wake of Western sanctions and trade restrictions imposed on the country.

Many Chinese companies have faced Western sanctions over their support for Russia's war in Ukraine, and the European Commission is set to announce tariffs this week on Chinese EVs in a bid to protect European carmakers.

This week, the Group of Seven wealthy democracies is expected to send a tough warning to smaller Chinese banks to stop helping Russia evade Western sanctions, Reuters reported, citing sources.

Russia destroyed half of Ukraine's power generation

Says Zelensky, urges allies to supply more air defence systems

AFP, Berlin

Russian strikes on Ukraine's energy facilities have destroyed half of its electricity generation capacity since winter, Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky said yesterday.

Months of Russian strikes have caused severe energy shortages in Ukraine, leading to scheduled power outages and blackouts.

"As a result of the strikes of Russian missiles and drones, nine gigawatts of capacity have already been destroyed. The peak of electricity consumption last winter was 18 gigawatts. So half now doesn't exist," Zelensky told a conference in Berlin.

Zelensky also urged allies to supply more air defence systems, saying: "It is missile and bomb terror that helps Russian troops advance on the ground."

"Air defence is the answer," he said. Ukraine's state power operator said it was extending scheduled outages around the country because of increased consumption.

"Today... the period of application of hourly outage schedules throughout Ukraine has been extended -- restrictions will be imposed from 2:00 pm to 11:00 pm," Ukrenergo said in a statement.

The company had announced outages on Monday between 4:00pm-10:00 pm and had said outages would continue between 2:00pm-7:00pm yesterday.

"The reason is that consumption continues to grow. At the same time, due to extensive damage, Ukrainian power plants cannot produce as much electricity as before the attacks," the company said.

Zelensky said the strikes showed Russian President Vladimir Putin was trying to "hone the practice of destroying energy facilities" including connections between the Ukrainian and European energy systems.

Ukrenergo chairman Volodymyr Kudrytsky said last week that it could take "years" for Ukraine to restore its full generating capacity.

Acute suffering as gas crisis hits hard

It's another wake-up call for the energy sector

We are worried about the weeks-long gas crisis that followed the shutdown of an LNG regasification terminal in Cox's Bazar's Moheshkhali after being damaged by Cyclone Remal. According to a report, the crisis has plagued many households, factories, and vehicles running on compressed natural gas (CNG). For many residents in Dhaka and elsewhere, cooking has become a daily struggle. The situation is no better for the industrial sector, where factory closures and operational disruptions have resulted in significant economic losses and job insecurity for thousands of workers. Meanwhile, CNG filling stations have been overwhelmed with long queues of cars and auto-rickshaws. The power supply in rural areas has worsened as well.

Reportedly, the crisis will continue for some more time as the damaged LNG unit—which reduced our LNG supply by almost half, and was taken to a dry dock abroad for repairs—is not expected to be back for another two weeks. That means more outages, more disruptions, and more sufferings. The Moheshkhali unit is one of the two floating storage and regasification units (FSRUs) in Bangladesh that convert LNG, or liquefied natural gas, back to gas before supplying it to the national grid. While the present crisis has again brought into focus the country's poor LNG import/supply infrastructure—it was only recently that we commented on the risk of surplus LNG regasification capacity as well as gas compressor stations lying idle amid insufficient supply—it also exposed deeper systemic issues surrounding our energy policy.

At the heart of it is the over-reliance on imported LNG amid dwindling local gas reserves. As experts have repeatedly said, a short-term, small-scale dependence on LNG import is reasonable, but tying it with our long-term energy future is not sustainable. Yet this is what the government has been doing, and doing rather badly as it cannot pay for the import thanks to the dollar crisis. What we need to focus and indeed invest more on is diversifying our energy sources so as not to be so vulnerable to economic and natural shocks like Cyclone Remal. That, right now, should start with exploring local gas, including the 48 gas wells that the government flagged for exploration in three years. We should also invest more on renewable energy sources which haven't yet got the traction they deserve.

So, while we call on the government to do everything necessary to address the present gas crisis, we should also keep an eye on the future. Exploring and extracting local gas must be a priority going forward, and the national budget must reflect that priority before it is passed. The government should also work on our vulnerable energy supply/distribution infrastructure, which is seldom discussed despite the sufferings it caused in recent years.

Rehabilitation must come before eviction

DSCC drive against Harijan families raises alarm

We are outraged by the Dhaka South City Corporation's (DSCC) recent eviction of multiple families at the Miranzilla Harijan Colony in Bangshal. The way these vulnerable and marginalised members of our society have been made homeless, without any proper rehabilitation plans, sets a dangerous precedent that could have alarming impacts.

The sweeper colonies in the city are like ancestral homes for the Harijan community and others, who were mostly brought here during the British period. Generations grew up in these colonies, doing the same cleaning jobs for pitiable wages, which means almost none of them can save up enough to enjoy a comfortable retirement, release themselves from the grips of poverty, or leave the colonies. Therefore, the DSCC cannot just write off those no longer employed by the city as "illegal residents". Besides, how can the DSCC justify expanding a kitchen market by evicting marginalised people who have no other place to call home?

Ironically, a DSCC official has told this daily that the kitchen market expansion decision was taken in 2016; they are just implementing it now. This means that the DSCC had eight years to rehabilitate the now-evicted Harijan families but did nothing. How does this feudalistic attitude, reclaiming their land without any consideration for the gravity of the situation of the Harijans, align with the idea of a social welfare state?

While we understand that the decentralisation and development needs of the city would ultimately drive the relocation (or migration) of many families and communities, such actions should not take place in a haphazard manner. The higher authorities must come up with a long-term plan for the communities likely to be evicted as the city corporations increasingly reclaim their land for development or commercial purposes. In the meantime, immediate steps should be taken to rehabilitate the evicted families of the Miranzilla Harijan Colony. These communities also need special allocations under the social safety net to reduce their vulnerability from extreme poverty, job loss, or old age. The state must steer them out of poverty so that they do not have to live in constant fear of eviction or at the mercy of others.

EDUCATION IN FY2024-25 BUDGET

A futile debate achieving little

is professor emeritus at BRAC University, chair of Bangladesh ECD Network, adviser to Campaign for Popular Education (CAMPE), and associate editor of the International Journal of Educational Development.

Views expressed in this article are the author's own.

MANZOOR AHMED

For the past 15 years since the Awami League government took over, there has been pre-budget discussion every year about the need for increasing the miserably low public expenditure for education and health. And then the proposed annual budget paid little heed to the plea for a change in priorities, causing frustration and disappointment. The proposed FY2024-25 budget has been no different—it follows the same pattern.

The new budget can be described as a "crisis response" one that the government has prepared in the face of the formidable challenges of unabated inflation, economic slowdown, revenue shortfall, dwindling foreign exchange reserves, and a rising annual debt burden. Allocations have been tightened for every sector, while there is a nominal increase in the total budget from the previous one and a high level of deficit financing. There is, therefore, no expectation of any significant increase in education and health allocations as borne out by the proposed budget. Nor is there an indication of any shift in strategy and priority responding to long-standing issues in education and human development, which have been periodically raised by educationists and concerned citizens.

Out of a Tk 7,97,000 crore budget, education allocation is Tk 94,710 crore or 11.88 percent of the budget and 1.69 percent of GDP. Allocations proposed for sub-sectors of education are: Tk 44,108 crore for secondary and higher education; Tk 38,819 crore for primary and mass education; and Tk 11,783 crore for technical and madrasa education. The education allocation for the outgoing fiscal year was Tk 88,162 crore or 11.5 percent of the budget and 1.76 percent of GDP. The revised budget was, however, reduced to Tk 74,597 crore. The proposed education budget is only nominally higher than the allocated amount for the past year, which is actually a reduction if the inflation of over nine percent is counted.

Noteworthy is the fact that the education sector is not able to use all of the funds allocated for it in the outgoing financial year. As much as Tk 14,000 crore will not be spent, as the revised allocation indicates. It is difficult to make a case for increased budget when the fund available cannot be fully utilised.

As this author as well as other education activists have often pointed out, the education authorities—the two ministries—have to make a case for public investment priorities in education and be persuasive about it. When the national budget fails to give due recognition to the needs and priorities of a vital sector such as education, it is as much the failure of the education ministries as it is of the finance ministry, who presents the budget on behalf of the government.

It is not, but should have been, in the public domain what the two ministries asked for in respect of increasing allocations and whether any innovative thinking found a place in their budget submission. There was no opportunity for public discussion when the budget proposals by the two education ministries were being formulated. There hasn't been a great receptivity on the part of the two education ministries, the political leadership and the administrative decision-makers regarding the civil society education advocates' pleas for re-thinking the needs for 21st century education. There is rhetoric aplenty about Smart Bangladesh and a smart new generation, but the serious and holistic planning and systematic efforts for achieving results have been lacking.

VISUAL: REHNUMA PROSHOON

Educationists have argued that the various initiatives taken by the two ministries have been fragmented, partial and treating the symptoms of diseases rather than the roots of problems. These initiatives have not been based on a holistic and coordinated sector-wide effort to achieve well-articulated medium- and long-term educational objectives. Cases in point are the introduction of the new curriculum and student assessment without preparing the ground; the sub-sector activities such as the series of primary education development programmes (PEDP5 or the fifth round is supposed to be under consideration now); the decision again to shift Classes 6 to 8 from secondary to primary schools (after several failed attempts since 2010 Education Policy was announced); various largely ineffective and frequently re-formulated teachers' training projects; and token efforts towards building a decentralised, responsive and accountable system of school education.

Academics and researchers have put forward an agenda for re-imagining education for the 21st century through their advocacy, such as Education Watch reports. This agenda includes moving towards a greater and genuine decentralisation of education governance; attracting talented people to the teaching profession and keeping them there; a major initiative to widely and effectively apply the blended approach (merging tech-based and teacher-supported learning); building partnerships between government and non-state actors; and establishing a permanent education commission to guide and monitor education system changes. These could be the components of an education sector plan and a 10-year megaproject for education. All of these would lay the ground for equitable, quality and inclusive school education for all children, thus building the foundation for an education system fit for a higher-middle-income and eventually a developed country. Such a sector plan would demand larger resources and efficient use of the resources.

The annual budget is not the instrument for a major overhaul of the education system. It can, however, reflect and help prepare the ground for a transformative change, if such a change is envisaged by the policymakers. The new budget, as the ones of past years, following a much trodden path, has not helped a move in this direction.

WORLD DAY AGAINST CHILD LABOUR

Ending child labour needs decisive interventions is assistant professor at Bangladesh Institute of Governance and Management (BIGM). She can be reached at fataraz.zahan@bigm.edu.bd.

Fataraz Zahan

FATARAZ ZAHAN

Child labour, a global problem, is a narrower concept of working children. In terms of national and international laws, child labour is unlawful. The International Labour Organization (ILO) estimates that there are 160 million child labourers worldwide (as of 2020)—63 million girls and 97 million boys—most of whom are engaged in agriculture, followed by service and industrial sectors, as well as in domestic labour. The majority of them are from the Asia-Pacific region. Nevertheless, the number of children engaged in labour worldwide decreased by 85 million between 2000 and 2020, according to ILO.

Bangladesh has also significantly reduced child labour, but there is still work to be done to completely eradicate the practice. This progress has been facilitated by a number of international agreements that set out legal guidelines and frameworks for action, including the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention (C182) and the ILO's Minimum Age Convention (C138). Over the past 20 years, there has been a noticeable improvement in the rate of child labour reduction. The National Child Labour Survey 2022 finds that Bangladesh has 39.96 million children (51.79 percent boys and 48.21 percent girls) aged five to 17 years. Out of the entire child population, 3.54 million are working children. The report also highlights their involvement in various sectors, including agriculture, manufacturing, construction, wholesale, retail, and transport. Some 60.8 percent of them are employees, and 99 percent of them informally employed. Despite government initiatives, child labour is still a common practice especially in the rural region of Bangladesh.

However, the government has put in place some measures to lessen child labour, like raising the minimum working age and offering children training and education opportunities. The National Child Labour Elimination Policy 2010 was aimed at addressing the deep-rooted issue of child labour by implementing a comprehensive strategy. The policy was a big step in the right direction towards solving the problem. Its main objectives are to enhance the legal system, provide access to education, and end dangerous kinds of child labour. The National Child Labour Elimination Action Plan (NPA) is another initiative that aims to operationalise the policy by providing strategies for intervention and clearly defined targets.

Socioeconomic conditions, poverty, limited access to education, and deeply ingrained cultural norms have normalised the idea of children contributing to family income through labour. These contextual factors necessitated a targeted and multifaceted approach to address child labour effectively. There have been numerous international organisations, governments, and non-governmental organisations (NGOs) working towards the goal of ending child labour for decades. Most Bangladeshi children have low-income parents who engage in a range of risky occupations. These kids' physical and emotional health are in danger due to the nature of their jobs, and their basic rights to an education and a healthy upbringing are being infringed. It also has an impact on children's physical and emotional well-being as well as their access to education.

Socioeconomic conditions, poverty, limited access to education, and deeply ingrained cultural norms have normalised the idea of children contributing to family income through labour. These contextual factors necessitated a targeted and multifaceted approach to address child labour effectively.

Numerous reports, including those from local NGOs and the ILO, claim that child labour is still common in a number of industries, including manufacturing, household work, and agriculture. The inadequate monitoring and evaluation of the National Child Labour Elimination Policy has drawn criticism. The policy's poor implementation, monitoring and evaluation have been attributed in large part to a lack of resources, a lack of enforcement, and low stakeholder awareness. The strategy received praise for its emphasis on social security and education, but it has not been enough to solve the underlying issues that lead to child labour in Bangladesh. Because of this, the government has been pushed to step up efforts, such as by tightening the enforcement of labour laws, expanding access to social services and education, and collaborating with civil society organisations.

It is important to note that while the government is dedicated to protecting children, only comprehensive action can have a beneficial effect on reducing or eliminating child labour at all societal levels. National action is, therefore, crucial. However, in order to behave in complete accordance with reality, all relevant factors such as the social, political, cultural, and economic conditions must be taken into account. In addition, a strong child sensitivity approach and the use of multiplier measures are required. Beside our social safety net programmes, it is also necessary to formulate new social policies to improve these conditions.

Lastly, poverty and child labour are inextricably linked, and as long as we ignore or do not recognise child labour as a structural reality of the economy, it will be difficult to eliminate child labour from the supply chain.

How to break the curse of losing heartbreaking matches

Bangladesh lost to South Africa by four runs—runs that were denied to the team due to a faulty decision by the on-field umpire.

Bangladesh is a seasoned customer of heartbreaking finishes. As a Bangladeshi fan, all that could have gone in our favour naturally becomes glaringly obvious and sharpens the pain of losses in tight matches, such as the one against South Africa. Bangladesh lost the match by four runs—runs that were denied to the team due to a faulty decision by the on-field umpire. As the umpire raised his finger to Mahmudullah's dismay, the ball raced behind him to the boundary. He immediately reviewed the decision and successfully overturned it, but because of a rule of the game, the ball was deemed a dead ball and those four runs ultimately became the margin by which Bangladesh lost the game. That fact is salt to the wound for Bangladeshis as much as it is a consolation prize. Fans can look to moments like this to convince themselves that we nearly did it and lost it for something that was out of our control.

Sidharth Monga's insightful match analysis of the game, "The Bangladesh-SA thriller that you think you saw, but TV didn't fully show" on ESPNcricinfo sheds more light on the uncontrollable factors that did not go in Bangladesh's favour. He talked about the three full tosses that Maharaj bowled in the last over—deliveries that arguably should have helped Bangladesh score the required 10 runs. With Mahmudullah on strike and six to defend from two balls, Maharaj attempted to bowl a yorker. It was wind of all things that made the difference. It picked up just then behind Maharaj and turned the ball into a full toss instead of the attempted yorker. This became the batter's advantage and Mahmudullah was perfectly placed to finish the match with one winning shot. But as Monga says, "What made Maharaj miss his execution also helped him." The same wind resisted the trajectory of Mahmudullah's shot, holding it just long enough in the air to not clear the boundary. The knife in the wound twists.

The only solution for Bangladesh to escape what feels like the curse of losing heartbreaking and close matches is to be so good that these factors no longer make a difference. I cannot say with certainty, but I am sure that other teams like ours who are often nearly there but not quite enough find a plethora of examples where if only things were slightly different, they would emerge victorious. The goal has to be to become a team that displays indomitable spirit and is so capable that they are largely always in control of the game. I doubt that achieving this high standard of cricket exempts a team from facing the short end of the stick in times of uncertainty. It's just that the team's performance would then be so strong that small factors no longer have much sway in defining the outcome of the game.

When it comes to factors within the team's control, the batters' weakness against the short ball stands out. Both Shanto and Shakib got out to similar deliveries in the same fashion where they did not seem to have any idea of how to execute a shot against a short ball. The two players' years of experience vary greatly, and yet they seemed to have the same approach. This can be an example of the fact that when problems emerge in the team—which is only fair and expected—it is allowed to persist instead of being addressed with a strategy in place to overcome the weakness.

The Bangladeshi bowlers maintained excellent discipline throughout the first innings. They made the most of the early breakthroughs and did not falter in line and length even when the partnership grew after the fourth wicket. They pulled it back nicely towards the end of the innings with Mustafiz bowling a stunning last over that gave away only four runs. The bowlers seem to be in much more harmony with each other than the batters of the team. The bowlers' performance is that of a cohesive unit where if one has a bad over, they do not let the momentum get away from them. The captaincy was also commendable in terms of backing players who bowl expensive overs such as Rishad, who came back after bowling three overs for 28 runs to get the wicket of David Miller.

Bangladesh is experienced in playing and winning low-scoring T20 matches, but sadly the support of the batters is sorely missed. Surely, there cannot be an easier target to chase in a T20 match than 114. As always, Mahmudullah Riyad continues to be the most dependable asset of the team and has perhaps been its true leader without ever donning any feathers.

A serious book for serious times

A review of My Golden Bengal: Views and Voices from Civil Society by René Holenstein

is a development anthropologist and author of several books and numerous journal articles, with a regional focus on South Asia. He is also emeritus professor of international development at the University of Bath, UK.

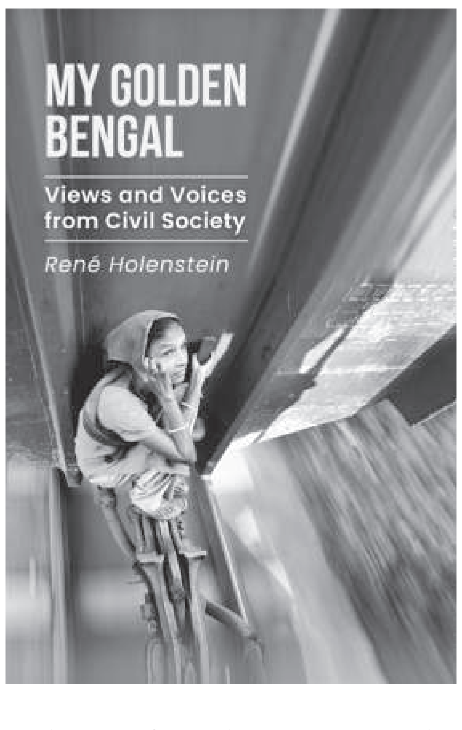
GEOF WOOD

A remarkable gathering of informants have been interviewed in recent years by René Holenstein, a recent ambassador for Switzerland, who returned to Bangladesh in May 2024 to launch this book in the company of most of them. It is a testimony to his period in office here that he explored the country with affection and detail, and listened well to people in the villages as well as leading figures representing concerned academics and lawyers, and activists from many parts of the civil society. As a collection of their testimonies, My Golden Bengal: Views and Voices from Civil Society (published by UPL) combines recollections from the liberation struggle which outline the hopes for a distinctive national mission reflecting Bangalee socio-cultural traditions in contrast to those of the dominant, oppressing partner in the flawed postcolonial experiment that was Pakistan. It is never a bad idea to be reminded of the trauma of that struggle, especially in its final episode of crackdown. It took the lives of Bangladeshis to atone for the catastrophic mistake of a rushed exit via Partition.

With this backdrop, ambivalence is soon displayed in this volume. A sense of disappointment that the hopes and dreams of a generation quickly descended into contestation as desperate people and groups fought for their family livelihoods by whatever means possible in the knowledge that the young state was unable to come to their rescue. Perhaps the legacy of chaos left by departing forces from Pakistan and then India could have been highlighted more as the context within which inexperienced leaders wrestled for control and stability. While struggles against a common enemy can unite, things can also rapidly fall apart. And it is often observed that campaigning and voice is not always the best qualification for governing.

The author has to manage this balance between recording the views of his interlocutors and providing his own interspersed analysis that respects those accounts rather than challenging or re-interpreting them. This is what makes the book unique in a sense, because it is not a single author's account in effect. The "data" is presented in its raw form and then has to be woven into a narrative. It is a navigation between a range of views and voices, to use the book's subtitle.

These views progress to the present, reflecting on the challenges now evident in society. Of course, there is a consensus that the violent coup in August 1975 was a betrayal of all that had been fought for, no matter that it occurred within a sense of letdown. And a further consensus of no sympathy for the period of military rule which followed up to the end of 1990, 15 years later. By this route, most of the interlocutors reach the similar point of a country faced with a prospect of unfinished dreams under the conditions of a tarnished democracy. A familiar set of criticisms emerge of hopes dashed. These amount to the imperative for a continuous need for struggle to realise ambitions, originally promised. The common theme emerges as vigilance across all sectors of Bangladeshi life, whether it is the persistence of child marriage, widespread rent-seeking and corruption enabling the megarich, the absence of openly competitive politics and voting, the pervasiveness of violence both as a means of that competition and as perpetrated upon women, freedom of speech, shrinking of space for civil society to exercise its accountability role, or free riders escaping civic duty to pay taxes—and the list goes on, as frequently covered by this newspaper.



But the need for vigilance is not the only theme. The question of glass half full or half empty emerges. Achievements are observed. Not least from outside the state, from among the NGOs and from among business. One of the interlocutors offers the sobering thought that it could have been much worse. This comment sets up the development/democracy discussion towards the end of the book, akin perhaps to the paradox debate. This is a sharp reminder that many societies globally have historically developed with deeply flawed governance systems—not least the UK during the 19th century. And of course, some still do, as in China with its autocratic development model. With his development background, it would have been interesting if the author could have coaxed a little more in this regard from his impressive list of interlocutors. It would have certainly connected Bangladesh to the literature on the developmental state. And perhaps a sharper conclusion could then have been offered referring to another literature about lost opportunities when governance in both senses of accountability and competence falls short of the needs of development, and the correlation between rising inequalities and dangers to the body politic, which renders "leave no one behind" as a hollow joke.

The author has to manage this balance between recording the views of his interlocutors and providing his own interspersed analysis that respects those accounts rather than challenging or re-interpreting them. This is what makes the book unique in a sense, because it is not a single author's account in effect.

These missing parts leave one with a sense of widespread collusion in the "good enough governance" position, which delivers some development through cascading paths of patronage, rather than as a matter of citizen rights and entitlements, just keeping the society on the right side of fragile stability. But such collusion does not come from most interlocutors, but rather from a wider set of global observers. The participants in this book can be distinguished by the feeling that their collective job has not yet been done. And the author has allowed this sentiment to be expressed. But perhaps uncomfortably, this leaves us with the hanging question—should this responsibility be passed down the generations to youth, or should the seniors remain on the barricades having both less to lose and less to gain personally? A final altruistic gift, albeit risky, to the future of that youth.

This book should be read widely, and it would certainly enhance its value to society if it appeared in Bangla, not just German followed by English. A serious book for serious times, but also intensely readable.

LAW OPINION

Who has paralysed the postwar rule-based world order?

Israel and its allies justify the Gaza invasion as a form of aggressive self-defence to annihilate a target group wholly or partially in the same way the US-UK invented pre-emptive self-defence to justify the Iraq invasion. Neither form of self-defence exists in international law and the UN Charter, yet, they have exercised this self-made self-defence with impunity.

M RAFIQUL ISLAM

The heinous tragedy and torment of Gaza continues unabated. The outrage of international public opinion, overwhelming support of states in the UN General Assembly, unprecedented Security Council binding resolution, and the Secretary-General's repeated warning of an apocalyptic situation warranting immediate cease-fire and uninterrupted access of humanitarian assistance have so far gone unheeded in this world order. This failure is not to the wonderment of those who are familiar with the excessive exceptionalism of the leader of this deceptive rule-based order and rampant bias for allies.

There are pressing embryonic flaws in the genesis of the postwar world order, based on international law, absolutely dominated by Eurocentricism. Originating in the heartland of Europe, this order encapsulates Anglo-American imperial ambitions, values, ideals, and vocabularies as the foundation of its legal rationality. Colonial narratives propagated this order as neutral and civilised to be adhered as universal and valid for the rest of the world. It is this pervasive idea of westernisation of the order that has de-legitimised the values and expectations of non-western and non-ally states contrary to the principle of sovereign equality of states as the foundation of international legal order. The derisory treatment of non-western states making them peripheral reflects an inherent orientalist superiority complex to gerrymander the elusive virtues of the order. For its very survival and continuity in a multi-cultural plural world, the postwar mono-cultural 'order' has patronised the emergence of an ego-centric 'power-cult' and alliance for economic strangulation/sanction and military coercion on those deemed inimical to the hierarchical power. Since the 1990s, the US-led western allies have established military superiority through NATO in the absence of their cold war rival, the USSR and Warsaw Pact.

The history of the so-called rule-based world order is littered with instances of disorderly and unlawful powerplays condoned to camouflage the impunity and unaccountability of the powerful perpetrators. The atrocities committed in Gaza is yet the latest manifestation of this (dis)order. In May 2024, the US State Department has submitted a Report to the Congress on the use of US weapons by Israel in Gaza commissioned by President Biden. The Report reveals that Israel may have violated international law for being 'inconsistent' with the US and Israel's obligations under international humanitarian law protecting non-combatant civilians, women, and children. Unsurprisingly, the US has been sending new arms to Israel despite Rafah invasion. This is how successive US administrations have been pursuing their belligerent foreign policy and providing blanket armed protection to Israel. This US policy has mismanaged and stultified the Middle East peace process. This State Department Report 2024 is likely to be shelved with no action whatsoever as happened with similar past reports.

The British Parliament launched the Sir John Chilcot Commission to investigate the justification of the UK's participation in the Iraq war. The Chilcot Report of 6 July 2016 found that Prime Minister Blair's decision to go on war was based on flawed and fabricated intelligence and unfounded assumptions. Similarly, the House of Commons' International Commission of Inquiry on Libya Report of 16 September 2016 revealed that Prime Minister Cameron's decision to invade Libya through NATO was neither lawful, nor successful and that he lied/misled the House by asserting that the Libyan operation would be limited to only civilian protection, while the Libyan regime change was his hidden agenda. Nothing has happened to the war mongering western leaders who repeatedly infringed Article 2(4): the prohibition of the use of force in international relations, a governing principle of the UN Charter and peremptory (jus cogens) norwm with hierarchically superior status in international law. They remained unaccountable for their crimes of aggression that destroyed Iraq and Libya; rather they were rewarded. Tony Blair was appointed on 7 June 2007 as special representative of the Quartet of international powers to negotiate a peace deal between Israel and the Palestinians and David Cameron is the incumbent British Foreign Secretary overtly determined to supply arms to Israel.

The present contemptuous state of the world order is largely attributable to the US-led unipolar world without the USSR since the 1990s. It led US Secretary of State Madeleine Albright to arrogantly assert, 'we are the indispensable nation' in pursuit of 'asserted multilateralism', backed by unilateral military intervention when necessary to protect its geopolitical and geostrategic interests beyond the reach of international law and the UN – an exceptionalist state indeed. In interstate conflicts so far, the US is the only state that dropped atomic bombs in Japan, chemical weapon agent orange in Viet Nam, and cluster bombs in Afghanistan. Recently, US lawmakers initiated a bill, the Illegitimate Court Counteraction Act 2024, for sanction and visa restriction on key ICC prosecutorial officials involved in seeking arrest warrants against Israel leaders for committing war crimes and crimes against humanity in Gaza. Such US threats and bullying tactics against international judiciaries are common in the face of every adverse judgement. The US undermined the International Court of Justice when lost in the Nicaragua case in 1987 and has hamstrung the WTO Appellate Body for decisions made against US for trade-rule violations.

The US declined to be party to the International Criminal Court (ICC) and campaigned to destabilise the ICC. Its American Service Members Protection Act 2002 prohibited US cooperation with the ICC and granted the President to 'use all means necessary and appropriate to bring about the release' of US nationals or allies if detained by the ICC. The US concluded bilateral treaties with Israel, among others, preventing the surrender to the ICC of any US national guilty of international crimes. In 2002, the US threatened to veto the renewal of all UN peace-keeping missions unless its troops committing crimes were granted immunity from ICC prosecution. The Security Council granted this immunity for 12-months and renewed once. The US demand for immunity ceased in 2004 after footages of US troops' degrading and dehumanising treatments of Iraqi prisoners in the Abu Ghraib jail went viral worldwide. In 2020, the US imposed sanctions on senior ICC officials for launching investigations into alleged war crimes committed by US and allies' troops in Afghanistan and denied visa to the ICC Chief Prosecutor to interview repatriated US marines served in Afghanistan to find out whether war crimes were committed. While the US praised the ICC for issuing arrest warrant against Putin, the US/UK are reportedly persuading the ICC not to issue arrest warrant against Netanyahu. Talking about allies, in 2023 the Australian Federal Court found a Victoria Cross recipient soldier committing war crimes in Afghanistan in 2009-10, 2012, who has appealed the decision. An Australian whistleblower has been jailed in May 2024 for revealing confidential information on alleged war crimes committed by Australian soldiers in Afghanistan.

The legal equality of all sovereign states was conceived as the enforcer of international obligations to respect each other. This ideological basis of the world order is being routinely eroded by a pervasive tendency to reduce international legal obligations subservient to 'power'. This power-driven defiance has become tormenting for states not enamoured with this hierarchical power. This is how the predatory power of the US-led coalition has disrupted, depleted, and paralysed the effectiveness of the world order for peaceful co-existence of states since the end of the cold war. Instead of being benevolent leaders, the post-cold war leaders displayed their cold war confrontationist agenda to retain hegemonic control over the world and opted to confront world affairs in their own way through sheer force and rendered their legal obligations to eclipse under the shadow of 'power'. The rule-based postwar world order has turned into a rule of the jungle-based order led by the US. This systemic dysfunctionality has caused an extraordinary confidence crisis in the world order, experiencing spiraling recourse to power as a means of resolving interstate disputes like the Ukraine war in defiance of their assumed duty to the peaceful settlement of disputes under international law and the UN Charter (Art 33). The growing strategic partnership between Russia/China and their allies shows the ominous sign of besetting the world order into cold war hostilities once again.

It is in this context of the world order that Israel's savage and deadly invasion of Gaza needs to be understood. Israel and its allies justify the Gaza invasion as a form of aggressive self-defence to annihilate a target group wholly or partially in the same way the US-UK invented pre-emptive self-defence to justify the Iraq invasion. Neither form of self-defence exists in international law and the UN Charter, yet, they have exercised this self-made self-defence with impunity. The UN inaction in implementing the Security Council mandatory ceasefire resolution despite its authority to resort to sanctions and armed action against the defying state mandated in Articles 41-42 of the UN Charter, procrastinating ICJ proceedings, ICC trepidation in issuing arrest warrant against Israeli war leaders, hypocritical western threat against Rafah attack amid relentless arms supply to Israel, and whispering opposition of the Arab states are indicative that 'might' determines 'right' and 'power' prevails over 'justice' – as the hallmark of the postwar world order. One promising outcome of the Gaza crisis is the transcending galvanisation of bottom-up international public outrage, waging a consciousness-raising campaign that is storming the corridor of power for seismic reform in the prevalent world order. To them, the US sermon of human rights, freedom, fairness, and democracy sounds increasingly hollow and self-defeating on the face of its persistent paradoxical and lawless actions in global problems. Any claim that this order is 'rule-based' is far-fetched and pretentious.

SHIPBREAKING YARDS need to be environment friendly

ATIQUR RAHAMAN

The shipbreaking industry implies an industry that processes (e.g., separates and stores) old and discarded steel, copper metal materials, serviceable parts and machineries, fittings, furniture, and other materials in a shipyard or any convenient place. Importing and dismantling ships can generate foreign exchange revenue for the home country and potentially boost economic growth. Bangladesh is making a significant contribution to the global shipbreaking market through resource recovery.

Article 18(A) of the Bangladesh Constitution states that the state shall protect the environment and safeguard the natural resources, among others. The purpose of this constitutional provision is to protect the environment in Bangladesh. Bangladesh has ratified the Hong Kong Convention (HKC) in 2023, and the convention provides guidelines for stricter environmental safety standards for shipbreaking industries.

Some domestic laws have been enacted for shipbreaking to ensure environmental protection. For instance, the Bangladesh Ship Recycling Act, 2018, the Shipbreaking and Recycling Rules, 2011, the Bangladesh Environment Conservation Act, 1995, the Environment Conservation Rules, 1997, the Environment Court Act, 2010, the Accidents Act, 1855 and many other related laws. The main objective of these laws is to outline regulations for safe and environment friendly recycling of ships, address environmental concerns, and ensure worker safety.

Unfortunately, due to lack of enforcement of laws, shipbreaking industry engenders huge pollutants and thereby degrade the environment. Furthermore, according to the International Labor Organisation (ILO), the shipbreaking industry is one of the most dangerous in the world. Every year, many workers die by suffocation due to explosions, poisonous gases, and falling iron sheets while cutting ships in the traditional way in these yards. Ships imported for breaking contain black oil, asbestos, harmful paints, and various chemical, while shipbreaking produces unrecyclable iron powder. Many old toxic ships are also bought by the owners in Bangladesh; the owners of the shipbreaking industry buy those ships at a low cost and these ships are not safe for the environment. Indeed, the shipbreaking industry owners do not maintain any safety procedures. Thus, the shipwreck industry causes terrible damage to the environment as well as to human health.

The shipbreaking industry is playing a significant role in the economy, but that should not be the case at the cost of environmental degradation and worker insecurity. The industry cannot be considered as safe in any way in the present context. By implementing mandatory Environmental Impact Assessments (EIAs) and other necessary measures, Bangladesh can ensure that the shipbreaking industry contributes to a sustainable future, protects the environment, protects workers' health, and generates economic benefits.

Umpire's call sparks call for change

SPORTS REPORTER

Experts as well as fans have called for change in ICC's law relating to the ball being dead after the umpire signals out after such an incident proved crucial in Bangladesh's four-run loss to South Africa in a T20 World Cup fixture in New York yesterday.

On-field umpire Sam Nogajski was in the thick of things as it was hisdecision to signal Mahmudullah out in the 17th over which sparked the whole incident and seemingly cost Bangladesh the match.

Mahmudullah was given out lbw by Nogajski after the right-handed batter failed to make contact with an in-swinging length ball from Ottneil Baartman. The ball, which clearly looked to be going down the legside without disturbing the stumps, brushed off Mahmadullah's front pad and rolled down to the boundary.

The umpire raised his finger and upon a player review, Ball Tracking revealed that the delivery was indeed missing the stumps. Despite the successful review, Bangladesh were left ruing the four leg-byes which were not added to their tally owing to ICC's ruling on such situations.

As per the ICC law, once the umpire gives a decision, the ball is deemed dead and runs gathered during that phase will not be considered.

If the umpire had not given him out, Bangladesh would have had four leg-byes added to their total.

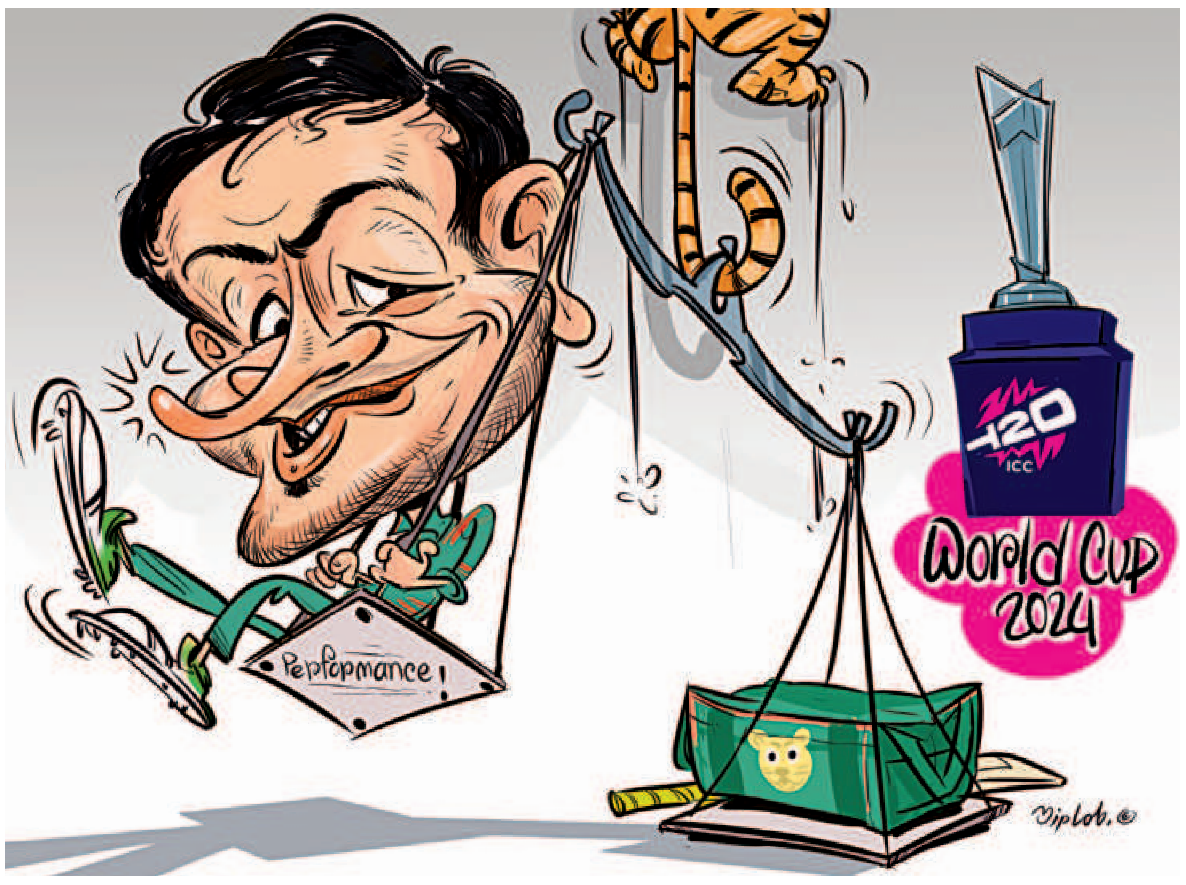
Former New Zealand pacer and renowned commentator Simon Doull criticised the umpire's lbw decision, brought forth the gravity of the implications the ruling has on games and called for a change.

"Just imagine this happens in the final and let's say India are on the wrong end of that in a final," Doull told Cricbuzz yesterday.

"There's got to be something changed in the way the system works because that was a howler, an absolute howler. It was a poor decision and it was never hitting the stumps and he [the umpire] had just thrown his finger up so quickly like a gunslinger.

"We've got to say that they've made some great decisions, there's been some very good umpiring throughout the tournament but that one wasn't and the result should've been four leg-byes.

"Let's say that happens in the final ball of the T20 World Cup and one team loses on a really poor decision. There's got to be some way of changing this because it is happening more often than not. Every time, I have this question brought up pre-tournament or before an ICC event, they're like we can't do anything about it and it's not going to be significant in the course of a game. Well, it is significant and it will be in the course of a game. It is now costing games and we can't have it."



TIGERS NEED SHAKIB
to make his experience count

ABDULLAH AL MEHDI

Marginal calls, full tosses not being put away or the general inconsistency of Bangladesh top-order were all cause for concern in Bangladesh's loss to South Africa in New York in a hard-fought contest on Monday. But the situation would not have gotten so desperate had Bangladesh's key player Shakib Al Hasan left a mark on the game coming in at number four in what was another crucial T20 World Cup game for the Tigers.

Shakib's stay at the crease lasted just four deliveries before he was holed out at mid-wicket, unable to connect a pull shot against Anrich Nortje. Shakib's soft dismissal saw South Africa back in the hunt.

Naturally, following the game there was scathing criticism regarding Shakib's performances.

Shakib's last fifty in the format came before the 2022 T20 World Cup in Australia, during the tri-nation series in New Zealand also involving Pakistan.

He has not enjoyed the best of circumstances leading up to this edition. Bar a match-winning bowling performance against Zimbabwe recently, his all-around performances against both Zimbabwe and then in the three-match T20I series against USA in Texas have been missing.

His troubles with the bat have been evident in the two World Cup matches so far. If it was expected that he would take control of the South Africa game, Shakib failed to live up to expectations. Now if Bangladesh are to advance to the next round and trouble opponents in the Super Eight, Shakib's contribution would be crucial.

"If he wants to play in front of Towhid Hridoy in the middle order, he has to play with a cooler head and take responsibility. We can see that these are not 200-run wickets, so it becomes easier for an experienced player like Shakib," his mentor Nazmul Abedeen Fahim told The Daily Star.

"If he can control the game, it will be better for everyone since the top-order is not doing well. Of course, you can't match expectations all the time, but you have to do it on and off," added the veteran coach and analyst.

Shakib's bowling has perhaps been a bigger concern. He was Bangladesh's most expensive bowler against Sri Lanka and bowled just one over against the Proteas, the first time in his career that it happened. It also upsets Bangladesh's bowling plan, especially with spin likely to be decisive in the West Indies.

"He has a very important role because there are only two specialist spinners in the side. He has to bowl in Powerplay and if he can't fulfil that, Bangladesh's bowling strategy suffers. At times it's important for spinners to bowl in Powerplay and then also key in middle overs. If he can't bowl, we have to go to Mahmudullah but you can't always expect him to perform even as he [Mahmudullah] did excellently against South Africa," Fahim said about Shakib's bowling.

Shakib now has a chance to make it count on surfaces offered in West Indies and gain momentum against lower-ranked opponents in Netherlands and Nepal.

Fahim expects Shakib -- the leading wicket-taker in the tournament's history but is yet to get a wicket in this edition -- to get more turn.

"Given the immediate oppositions [Netherlands], it should make him comfortable. I am hoping he would do better there since you can't just perform badly all of a sudden. There should not be this drop," he added.

Even as Bangladesh could cover for Shakib with the ball, the top-order troubles mean Shakib -- possessing a wealth of experience in the competition as the only two players alongside India's Rohit Sharma to have played in all editions -- will have to make his experience count and shelter the rest.

> If Shakib can control the game, it will be better for everyone since the top-order is not doing well. Of course, you can't match expectations all the time, but you have to do it on and off.

China survive WC qualifying scare

AFP, Hong Kong

China squeezed into the third and final round of Asian qualifying for the 2026 World Cup despite suffering a 1-0 defeat at South Korea on Tuesday, with Indonesia also progressing.

Paris Saint-Germain's Lee Kang-in scored just after the hour in Seoul for South Korea, who were already into the next qualifying phase as group winners.

The damaging loss left China's World Cup hopes hanging by a thread, but Thailand failed to take advantage as their dreams of progressing fell agonisingly short.

They needed to beat basement side Singapore by three goals in Bangkok to leapfrog China into second place in Group C of the second qualifying phase, but the Thais could only win 3-1.

In contrast to the crushing disappointment in Bangkok, Indonesia celebrated reaching the third qualifying round for the first time with a 2-0 home victory over the Philippines.

Indonesia joined Iraq in advancing out of Group F, with Thom Haye and Rizky Ridho the goal-scoring heroes on the night in Jakarta.

Elsewhere, coach Hajime Moriyasu warned Japan that the final qualifying round will be "a completely different level" after thrashing Syria 5-0 to go through with a 100 percent record.

Syria were left to sweat on a place in the next phase.

North Korea need just a point at Group B bottom side Myanmar later Tuesday to leapfrog Syria and progress.

In a dead rubber in Group I, Australia thrashed Palestine 5-0 in Perth with Portsmouth's Kusini Yengi scoring twice, one from the spot. Both sides were already into the next phase.

Like Japan, Australia had maximum points in the second phase and did not concede a goal in six games.

Can USA slay another giant?

STAR SPORTS DESK

The Group A fixture of the ICC Men's T20 World Cup between Asian powerhouse India and co-hosts USA on Wednesday at the Nassau County Cricket Stadium in New York is set to be the first-ever international match between the two teams.

Aside from it being a landmark game, the outcome of the match bears significance given the context of the group as the winner get to seal their entry into the Super Eight.

While this match was deemed a total mismatch ahead of the marquee event, with former champions taking on an associate nation, USA have shown that they are no pushovers.

The tournament opener saw the co-hosts earn bragging rights over neighbours Canada, but very few expected them to produce one of the biggest upsets in history in their next outing against Pakistan -- stunning the 2009 winners following a Super Over contest to garner attention in a country where the attention to cricket is yet to gain traction, leading to players like Saurabh Nethralvakar and Aaron Jones becoming overnight household names.

USA skipper Monank Patel said "beating Pakistan was a big achievement" but it was apparent that the so-called minnows had their feet on the ground.

"Before the tournament I said that we want to focus on one game at a time, and our focus will be on playing against India now," Monank said after his side's monumental win over Pakistan, whose campaign took a nosedive after India defeated them in a thriller at the same venue.

Although the possibilities of bad weather intervening today remain slim, if it happens, it will mean elimination for Pakistan and Ireland as well.

India, on the other hand, even though the men in blue can't complain about how the results have gone in their favour so far, they are yet to fire as a collective unit.

While ace pacer Jasprit Bumrah has played to his reputation, backed by fellow quick Arshdeep Singh, all-rounder Hardik Pandya finding some sort of form following a forgetful Indian Premier League campaign has been the surprising positive aspect.

On the batting front, keeper-batter Rishabh Pant has flourished but the likes of star batter Virat Kohli -- tournament's all-time leading run-scorer -- T20 specialist Suryakumar Yadav and Shivam Dube, who made the cut in to the side on the back of IPL exploits, will be desperate to stamp their authority.

However, finding batting form for the big shots will be a challenge due to the playing conditions in store, with Nassau County producing several low-scoring affairs, increasing the likelihood of yet another upset.

Kroos hoping for 'cheesy' career end with Euro win

AFP, Herzogenaurach

Germany veteran Toni Kroos is hoping to sign off from his club and national career with a dream victory on home soil in Euro 2024 -- and admitted on Tuesday the prospect was almost "a bit too cheesy".

Kroos, who won the 2014 World Cup with Germany and most recently lifted the Champions League for a sixth time after Real Madrid's 2-0 win over Borussia Dortmund in June, is set to retire after the European Championship.

Kroos stepped down from international duty after Germany's last-16 Euros exit to England in 2021 but answered a call from manager Julian Nagelsmann to return in February this year.

Speaking on Tuesday at Germany's Euros training base in the Bavarian village of Herzogenaurach, a "hungry" Kroos said he would not have come back if he did not believe in a sentimental ending.

"That ending would be a bit too cheesy, with the Champions League and the European Championship, but I'll take it. I want to win the tournament this summer," Kroos said.

Germany face Scotland in Munich on Friday in the tournament's curtainraiser.

49 migrants die as boat sinks off Yemen: IOM

AFP, Dubai

A boat carrying more than 200 migrants sank off Yemen, leaving at least 49 dead, mostly women and children, in the latest disaster on the perilous migration route from Africa, a UN agency said yesterday.

"At least 49 migrants have died and 140 others remain missing after a boat" carrying 260 people capsized off the southern province of Shabwah on Monday, the International Organization for Migration (IOM) said.

It said 31 women and six children were among those confirmed dead, adding that 115 Somali nationals and 145 Ethiopians were initially on board the vessel before it sank.

"Search and rescue operations are ongoing despite significant challenges due to a shortage of operational patrol boats," the IOM said.

The boat departed from Bossaso in Somalia at around 3:00 am (0000 GMT) on Sunday amid a "recent rise in migrants from the Horn of Africa travelling to Yemen," the UN agency said.

Each year many tens of thousands of migrants from the Horn of Africa set off across the Red Sea in a bid to reach the oil-rich Gulf, escaping conflict, natural disasters or poor economic prospects.

In 2023 alone, the IOM observed more than 97,200 migrant arrivals in Yemen, it said.

In April, two boats sank off the coast of Djibouti just two weeks apart, leaving at least 62 dead, according to the UN agency.

The IOM said yesterday it had recorded 1,860 migrant Bangladesh has turned into a "one-party" state as the ruling party stamps out political competition, Nobel Peace laureate Muhammad Yunus, a pioneer of the global microcredit movement, said in an interview.

An election in January won Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina a fourth straight term, but it was boycotted by the main opposition party, whose top leaders were either jailed or in exile ahead of the polls.

It's service charge, not extortion

Home minister says about transport leaders collecting money on highways

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan said they prevent extortion on highways and that what transport leaders collect from vehicles was "service charge".

"Leaders of the transport sector give us a list of how much service charge will be collected at which places. If not followed, they asked [police] to take action. We prioritise that list," the minister said yesterday.

He, however, said, "We think the service charge should be taken from a specific place. Police face an awkward situation as the service charge was not collected from a specific point and many think it is extortion."

The home boss made the comments in response to a reporter's query after he joined a discussion marking the 19th founding anniversary of Highway Police in Bangladesh Police Auditorium at Rajarbagh Police Lines.

According to transport leaders, the "service charge" is taken as operational costs of different transport associations. In Dhaka, the charge is Tk 80 and Tk 70 outside Dhaka.

Osman Ali, general secretary of Bangladesh Road Transport Workers' Federation, who spoke at the discussion as a special guest, criticised the extortion on roads and operation of three-wheelers, including auto-rickshaws, on highways.

Hamas accepts UN-backed Gaza truce plan

US cites 'hopeful sign'; 40 more Palestinians killed as Israel steps up strikes across enclave

REUTERS, Cairo

Hamas accepts a UN resolution backing a plan to end the Israeli offensive in Gaza and is ready to negotiate details, a senior official of the Palestinian group said yesterday in what the US Secretary of State called "a hopeful sign".

But Qatari and Egyptian mediators have not received formal replies from Hamas or Israel to the UN-backed truce proposal, an official close to the talks told Reuters, and both sides suggested yesterday the plan fit their clashing goals, raising doubt whether any genuine headway towards a deal had been made.

Discussions also touching on post-offensive plans for Gaza will continue over the next couple of days, Blinken said in Tel Aviv after talks with Israeli leaders.

Blinken met Israeli officials yesterday in a push to end the eight-month-old offensive that has devastated Gaza, a day after President Joe Biden's proposal for a truce was approved by the UN Security Council.

- Mediators yet to get formal response from Hamas, Israel on truce proposal
- Discussions on post-offensive plans for Gaza to continue: Blinken
- Gaza death toll now 37,164

Ahead of Blinken's trip, Israel and Hamas both repeated hardline positions that have scuttled previous rounds of truce mediation, while Israel has pressed on with assaults in central and southern Gaza.

Biden's proposal envisages a ceasefire and phased release of hostages in exchange for Palestinians jailed in Israel, ultimately leading to a permanent end to the offensive.

Yesterday, senior Hamas official Sami Abu Zuhri, who is based outside Gaza, said it accepted the ceasefire resolution and was ready to negotiate over the specifics.

This required a formula stipulating the total withdrawal of Israeli troops from Gaza and a swap of hostages held in Gaza for Palestinians jailed in Israel, he told Reuters.

Blinken said the Hamas statement was "a hopeful sign" but definitive word was still needed from the Hamas leadership inside Israeli-besieged Gaza. "That's what counts, and that's what we don't have yet."

After Blinken left for Jordan, a senior Israeli government official said the published proposal would enable Israel to achieve its war goals. Blinken, speaking later in the day at a conference in Jordan on the humanitarian response for Gaza, announced $404 million in aid for Palestinians and called on other donors to also step up.

Meanwhile, the offensive raged on in Gaza yesterday as Israeli forces stepped up strikes on its southern city of Rafah a day after four soldiers were killed in an ambush claimed by Hamas.

CONSTABLE KILLING

Police knew about shooter cop's mental illness

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Police were aware of the mental illness of the constable who shot dead a colleague and injured another man, Inspector General of Police Chowdhury Abdullah Al-Mamun told reporters yesterday.

Since the incident happened near several foreign diplomatic missions in the capital's Baridhara on Saturday, police officials maintained that they were not aware of constable Kawsar Ali's mental health issues.

While IGP Mamun was talking to reporters at Rajarbagh Police Lines, a journalist mentioned that Kawsar was earlier treated at a hospital for mental health issues.

The IGP replied, "We deployed him again after a doctor said he was fully fit for the job. We will be more cautious [in the future] about any deployment."

According to Kawsar's family members, he had mental illness and received treatment for it

Police detain Jhenaidah AL general secy

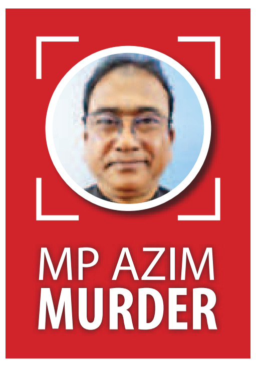
MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN

Multiple leaders of Jhenaidah Awami League were aware of MP Anwarul Azim Anar's murder before the government's announcement.

The leaders even exchanged images of the murder with the planner and the hitman.

Investigators claimed to have the information by interrogating and analysing the mobile phone record of Kazi Kamal Ahmed Babu, relief and social welfare affairs secretary of Jhenaidah AL, now on a seven-day remand with the Detective Branch of Dhaka Metropolitan Police.

Meanwhile, a DB team picked up Saidul Karim Mintu, general secretary of the district AL, from the capital's Dhanmondi for interrogation in connection with the killing of the Jhenidah-4 lawmaker.



A DB source confirmed it, but no official confirmation was available.

Mintu, who was a former mayor of Jhenaidah Sadar municipality, had a conflict with Azim over influence in the party politics, said local sources.

Azim wanted to be the secretary of the district AL while Mintu tried to secure the AL ticket for Jhenidah-4 (Kaliganj) in the last national election, they added.

Mintu's elder sister Dipti Rahman told The Daily Star last night that they heard about the detention of her brother.

"We are trying to find out what happened. My brother is not involved in any murder, but it is now being framed for political reasons."

Investigators said Babu was very close to Mintu.

Dhaka footpaths, a money-spinner for extortionists

Ruling party leaders, cops, hawkers' associations get cuts

MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN and HELEMUL ALAM

On the footpath next to the General Post Office (GPO) in the capital, Sohel Howlader sells children's clothes from a small table.

He sits on a stool beside the table, roughly 5 feet long and 3 feet wide, and runs the business by paying Tk 150 to the ruling party and hawkers' association leaders every day. He also has to pay another Tk 150 a day to the security guards and for electricity.

When sales peak in the month of Ramadan and in the days before Puja, the "rent" jumps to Tk 250.

"All of us who have set up shops on the footpath pay these men," said Sohel.

There are around 100 such shops on the footpath adjacent to the post office, and as these correspondents asked around whether it would be possible to "rent" space, a leader of the vendor community named Monir Hossain said, "Bookings are already closed for this year. For next year, you will have to make a one-time payment of Tk 1.5 lakh, and then pay Tk 150 each day."

- Around 5 lakh hawkers in Dhaka city
- Daily footpath 'rent' Tk 100-Tk 300 a day
- Tk 30,000 a day extorted from GPO area alone
- City corporation's rehab programme fails

A space big enough for a stool and a table can be bought permanently for Tk 8-10 lakh, depending on how close it is to the GPO gate.

Monir, who according to locals is a ruling party supporter, assures that shopkeepers make a profit of at least Tk 300 a day, and the space is worth the investment.

Footpaths and roadsides in the city's busiest places like Gulistan, Farmgate, and Motijheel, are illegally occupied, and a lot of money changes hands every day to keep the system in place, according to sources in the hawkers' community.

This worsens congestion in the areas and makes pedestrians suffer.

Contacted, Enamul Haque, councillor of Ward-13, said political leaders, hawkers' associations, and the law enforcers receive a cut.

363 foreigners currently in Bangladesh jails: minister

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan told parliament yesterday that no one is being kept in the country's prisons "unlawfully".

He said this in response to a question from independent MP Mohammad Huchamuddin Chowdhury from Sylhet-5.

In response to another question from Awami League MP Farida Yasmin, he said 363 foreign nationals from 16 countries are detained in the country's jails. He said 212 Indian citizens were detained in the jails of Bangladesh. Among them, 11 were prisoners, 53 were inmates and 148 were released.

There are also 114 Myanmar nationals detained in Bangladesh jails. Besides, seven from Pakistan, six each from Nigeria and Malaysia, four each from China and Belarus, two each from Cameroon and Peru and one each from the US, Botswana, Georgia, Tanzania, Malaya and Angola are in country's prisons.

The minister also said 994 displaced Myanmar citizens have been arrested in murder and arms cases from August 25, 2017 to May 31, 2024.

Two road accidents in an hour leave three dead

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Three persons were killed in two road accidents in the capital's Gabtoli area within an hour yesterday morning.

A motorcyclist and his co-rider were killed as a truck hit their bike from behind in front of a restaurant in the area around 5:30am, said Mofizur Rahman, assistant commissioner of Dhaka Metropolitan Police.

Shafiqul Islam, 44, the driver, died on the spot while Abul Hasan, 38, succumbed to his injuries at Shaheed Suhrawardy Medical College Hospital.

The driver fled with the truck after the accident.

In another accident, a helper of a bus driver was killed as a CNG-run auto-rickshaw hit him while he was crossing a road in front of a market adjacent to the Gabtoli bus terminal around 6:30am.

Babul Ali, 50, died at National Institute of Neurosciences Hospital.

The auto-rickshaw driver, Haider, was arrested in this regard.

These illegally set up power connections on footpaths not only cause losses but also consumes a chunk of the available power in the capital. Despite load shedding being a constant menace in the city, such activities continue unabated. The photo was taken in the Purana Paltan area recently.

CATTLE MARKETS

High supply, higher price

Traders fear loss due to low customer presence

HELEMUL ALAM and SHAHEEN MOLLAH

Despite a large number of sacrificial animals being on sale at all 16 cattle markets in Dhaka, the prices are still quite high.

Meanwhile, the number of customers is very low even four days before Eid-ul-Azha.

Cattle traders, who faced huge losses last year due to a significant drop in prices two days ahead of Eid, are passing days anxiously fearing losses due to the low customer presence.

"I'll have to sell my land to pay off debts if I face losses again this year," said Md Badhon, who has faced losses of Tk 5 lakh in the last three years.

He said they have brought 10 bulls to Diabari cattle market, priced around Tk 1 lakh each.

"Demand for small-sized bulls is good, but supply is very low, for which I am expecting some profits this year," he added.

Jamal Hossain, who brought four bulls to the Diabari cattle market from Kushtia, echoed him.

Meanwhile, in the Kachukhet cattle market, Abul Kashem brought 40 bulls.

"I had to take a Tk 8 lakh loan to bring the cattle to the capital. I haven't had much sales yet," he said.

Many farmers did not raise bulls this year due to last year's loss, he added.

These correspondents also saw a similar situation at Gabtoli cattle market.

The number of big-sized bulls at the market was lower due to losses made by traders last year.

"I have brought 10 big-sized bulls, priced between Tk 5 lakh and 7.5 lakh, including five that went unsold last year," said Nurul Islam, a trader from Sirajganj, adding that last year he faced a Tk 5 lakh loss.

Musa Ibrahim, owner of Everest Dairy and Agro Farm at Dakkhin Keraniganj, said it is really tough to profit in this business due to high prices of cattle feed.

"I have to spend around Tk 1.5 lakh per year for a big-sized bull," said Musa, who raised 50 bulls, priced between Tk 90,000 and Tk 5 lakh, and sold 25 of those already.

Meanwhile, turning towards the north, a similar picture was seen.

There are more sellers than buyers in 78 cattle markets in five districts of Rangpur region -- Kurigram, Lalmonirhat, Gaibandha, Rangpur, and Nilphamari -- as well.

He also requested people to keep sacrificial waste in a specific place.

Meanwhile, Dhaka South City Corporation Mayor Sheikh Fazle Noor Taposh has assured to clear sacrificial waste within 24 hours.

He made the announcement during a media interaction following the inspection of the National Eidgah ground yesterday.

Budget too Dhaka-centric

Speakers tell BIP discussion

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The proposed budget for the upcoming fiscal year prioritises Dhaka at the expense of other districts, experts said at a programme yesterday.

"If we concentrate on development projects and budget on Dhaka and neglect the rest of the districts, it will not benefit the people," said Amanur Rahman, director of CARE Bangladesh. He also said the proposed budget does not prioritise green and balanced urbanisation.

He was speaking at a press conference titled "Proposed Budget for FY 2024-25: Review of BIP", organised by Bangladesh Institute of Planners at the capital's BIP conference hall.

Amanur said the government should increase budget allocations for districts with low per capita income.

"If we allocate more funds to these districts, people will not feel the need to move to Dhaka. Development in coastal and other remote areas will reduce Dhaka-centric migration," he said.

He also highlighted the importance of investing in government hospitals, educational institutions, and other critical infrastructure at the district level.

BIP President Adil Mohammed Khan, said "We need a specialised budget that reflects allocations for each district."

He said the government has taken a positive initiative to introduce the district budget, but the failure to apply it is disappointing.

85,113 to perform hajj this year

All pre-hajj flights end

RASHIDUL HASAN

Finally ending all uncertainty, almost all intended pilgrims have gone to Saudi Arabia to perform hajj this year.

Through the operation of the last hajj flights of Flynas from Dhaka airport around 6:00pm yesterday, the outgoing hajj flight operation of this year came to an end.

The month-long flight operation began on May 9.

This year, a total of 85,180 Bangladeshis were registered to perform hajj. Of them, 85,113 have gone to Saudi Arabia through 217 flights of Biman, Saudia and Flynas, said Abdul Maleq, assistant hajj officer at the Hajj Office.

Of the total pilgrims, 4,482 people went to Saudi Arabia under the government hajj management.

However, 51 intended pilgrims failed to go to Saudi Arabia for various reasons -- including sickness and personal reasons, said Bazlul Haque Biswas, an official of Ashkona Hajj Camp.

Biman carried 40,903 pilgrims in 105 flights, Saudia carried 30,021, and Flynas carried 14,189 pilgrims, according to Dhaka's Ashkona Hajj Office.

This was the first time that immigration formalities for all hajj pilgrims at the Saudi airport were completed in advance at the Dhaka airport.

"This was the smoothest ever hajj management in the recent history of Bangladesh. All credit goes to the sincere joint efforts of the religious affairs ministry, Hajj Agencies Association of Bangladesh and other related organisations," HAAB President M Shahadat Hossain Taslim told The Daily Star.

Hajj management was not easy, as there were lots of challenges and uncertainty, he added.

After beginning the hajj operation, the religious affairs ministry expressed concerns at different times that several thousand pilgrims might not be able to go to Saudi Arabia due to mismanagement and lack of sincerity among private hajj agencies.

"Due to the strong and repeated vigilance of the ministry, all that uncertainty was resolved," said Matiul Islam, additional secretary of the religious affairs ministry.

Hajj will be observed on June 15 this year.

Dev projects not at cost of environment

Bangladesh Poribesh Andolon yesterday urged the authorities to plan and implement development projects while keeping existing trees and greenery intact as much as possible.

It also demanded immediate action to recover and protect waterbodies and the creation of a "blue network" connecting waterbodies with rivers.

Bapa organised a discussion on the importance of the environment in sustainable urbanisation and unveiled a proposal booklet at Dhaka Reporters' Unity.

Bapa Vice President and architect Iqbal Habib presented the main article while scholars and activists discussed how to ensure sustainable urbanisation, focusing on waterbodies, greenery and open spaces.

Discussants proposed a tree census and a database of roadside trees to control tree felling in the name of development. They proposed a policy to ensure tree plantation.

"Due to encroachment and pollution, Dhaka's waterbodies and greenery have decreased alarmingly. Before taking any development project, a proper Environmental Impact Assessment and Environmental Mitigation Plan must be done and stakeholders should be informed about these," said Iqbal Habib.

Conduct drives against loan defaulters

JP lawmakers urge govt

Reserved seat MP Salma Islam yesterday in parliament demanded that the government initiate a drive against loan defaulters and money launderers.

While participating in the general discussion on the proposed budget, Saima said, "A section of money launderers and bank looters have brought the country to the brink of destruction."

Salma, also Jatiyo Party co-chairperson, said although the small fish are sometimes punished but the big ones remain safe. "They rescheduled loan payments in different phases, showing influence. As a result, their names do not appear as loan defaulters," she said.

Another JP MP, Golam Kibria, said action should be taken against those responsible for the financial crisis, money laundering and corruption.

UNB, Dhaka

Stating that all opposition parties are now united against the current government, BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday said the ongoing movement for the restoration of democracy will be intensified soon.

Speaking at a discussion, he also said the Awami League government is now the main enemy of the opposition parties as it has destroyed all institutions of the country.

He said their party is talking to all the leftist and right wing parties to make their ongoing movement a success.

"I am very happy to say that in this movement, no political party was in favour of this government, no one supported them... This is a great success of the movement. No one went to the so-called polls [on January 7], except the Jatiyo Party," he said.

significantly one to two days before Eid when most service workers leave Dhaka, he said.

He also said vehicles transporting cattle must go to city corporation-approved markets and load or unload the animals within the market premises.

Cattle-carrying vehicles must display a sticker banner indicating the designated market, he added.

High supply, higher

Meherul Islam, a lessee member of Barabari cattle market in Lalmonirhat Sadar upazila, told The Daily Star that cattle farmers have been waiting for hours to sell at their expected rates.

Only 20-25 percent of the supplied cattle have been sold, he said, adding that around 6,000 cattle are supplied every day.

Sohrab Hossain, 60, a cattle farmer from Char Jorgachh area in Kurigram's Chilmari upazila, said he brought two cows, but could only sell one.

"I sold a cow for Tk 65,000 as I needed the money for my family, but a month ago the price of this cow was Tk 70,000," he said.

In Pabna, prices of sacrificial animals are still very high at cattle markets, including Sharatnagar Haat, Ekdanta Haat, and Chatmohar Rail Bazar Haat, even though there is no scarcity of cattle.

Mojibar, a buyer at Sharatnagar Haat, said, "I have a budget of Tk 90,000 to Tk 1 lakh. Unfortunately, I am unable to get the expected animal according to my budget. Traders are asking for Tk 1.10 lakh to Tk 1.20 lakh for a small cow, which is too high for my budget."

took place at the meeting with the delegation.

"They wanted to know when the Labour Law would be passed. I told them that we want an end to the complaint filed against us with the International Labour Court. We have done enough work on the law. We are also working on amending it. We asked them to support us at their governing body meeting next November," he said.

The law minister also said many questions have come from their countries about Yunus' trial process.

"I told them that he [Yunus] violated the rights of the workers. There was a case against him to this effect and he has been sentenced. Besides, 108 workers sued him personally. Some of them withdrew their cases after he assured them of compensation," he said.

Meanwhile, Supreme Court Bar Association President AM Mahbub Uddin Khokon told reporters at a briefing on the SC premises yesterday that Yunus is being harassed with cases one after another, and this harassment should stop immediately.

"Many say that Prof Yunus has won the Nobel Prize... as if it were his offence to win it. He did not award it to himself. The committee concerned gave him the prize," he added.

"Dr Yunus was put in an iron cage in a Dhaka court, which was very insulting to him. Where does this end?" he said.

"We don't know how to honour a respected person. There is no democracy, human rights, or rule of law in the country. People cannot exercise their right to vote. The country is not being governed in accordance with the constitution," the SCBA president said.

New walkway to open

"It takes me a considerable time to cross the river by ferry as the bridge remains closed. Once vehicular movement on the bridge resumes, it will mitigate our suffering," said Nayeem Uddin, who used to commute from Boalkhali upazila to the port city using the bridge.

BR officials said they are trying to reopen the bridge for vehicular movement within June.

"The road work of the bridge is expected to be completed within this month," Zishan Dutta said.

Constructed in 1931, the metre-gauge single-line rail bridge was reconfigured in 1962 so that vehicles could use it too.

BR has long been working to replace Kalurghat Bridge, and already got a proposal to construct a rail and road bridge approved.

corruption, which might be the reason as to why it is not being followed," he said.

Adil recommended creating a district-wise masterplan to improve the lives of people.

BIP Vice President Syed Shahriar Amin said, "We need detailed plans and clear budget allocations for each sector. The budget should serve everyone."

BIP Joint Secretary Tamzidul Islam said the government needs to prioritise planning to ensure effective use of the budget.

Traders, and four others for six months in the case around 11:00am.

The bench also issued a rule asking the state and ACC to explain why they should not be granted regular bail in the case.

The HC bench issued the bail order and rule following a petition filed by the five accused seeking bail.

The case was filed against them on November 26 last year on charges of misappropriating 72,000 tonnes of government-imported urea fertiliser, valued at Tk 582 crore, during transportation, the ACC lawyer said.

Where did the vessel go?

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Munshiganj

PHOTO: COLLECTED

An old oil tanker has been missing from a shipyard in Gazaria of Munshiganj for 24 days.

The vessel, T Teknaf, went "missing" on May 18 after it was brought to the shipyard of Three-Angle Marine Limited for repairs around a year back.

The shipyard authority and the vessel's owner filed counter complaints with Gazaria Police Station in this connection on May 29 and May 30 respectively, accusing each other.

"The owner has not been paying the bill of Tk 30 lakh issued for the vessel's repairs for around a year. We have no reason to take the ship away. On May 18 night, the vessel's owner took it away, and later filed a complaint to defame us. So, we have filed a Tk 100 crore defamation case against the vessel's owner," claimed Mozammel Haque, general manager (operations) of Three-Angle Marine Limited.

Contacted, the vessel's owner Mottaqim Salam, also deputy managing director of Bengal Electric Ltd, said, "The shipyard authority billed us Tk 11.36 lakh for the repair. When we went to pay the bill, we found that the ship was not in the shipyard. So, we lodged a complaint with the police. We have information with video footage that the shipyard authority dismantled the vessel between May 1 and May 18 and sold the parts across the country."

"Both parties filed separate complaints in this connection. We are continuing our investigation," said Md Rajib Khan, officer-in-charge of Gazaria Police Station.

KALURGHAT BRIDGE

New walkway to open before Eid

SIFAYET ULLAH, Ctg

The newly constructed walkway of Kalurghat Bridge in Chattogram is set to open to the public before Eid-ul-Azha.

The repair work of the bridge is also nearing completion.

"The construction work is 98 percent completed. We now have to finish the railing work," said Zishan Dutta, bridge engineer of Bangladesh Railway (East Zone).

The renovation work of the bridge began in August last year at a cost of Tk 55 crore. While it was supposed to be completed within three months, the work got delayed, causing sufferings to commuters.

Around 10 lakh people from Boalkhali, Patiya and Rangunia have no alternative to cross Karnaphuli river without using the bridge.

The Roads and Highways Department launched a ferry service next to the bridge while the bridge remained closed to the public to ease commuters' sufferings to some extent.

Oman lifts visa restrictions for Bangladeshis

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

After eight months, the Oman government has lifted temporary visa restrictions on several categories for Bangladeshi nationals.

The exempted visa categories include all official visas, family visas, visitor visas for Bangladeshi nationals living in GCC countries, and visas for engineers, doctors, nurses, teachers, accountants, investors, and high-income tourists, said a note issued by the Omani Embassy in Dhaka yesterday.

The note also stated that from now on, the local embassy will receive and process all applications and related documents in these categories in coordination with the Royal Omani Police authority.

The embassy note further assured that both authorities concerned in Oman and Bangladesh are working towards lifting the ban on work visas, which is in progress.

Mentionable, in October 2023, the Omani Royal Police imposed a temporary ban on all categories of visas, except for official purposes, for Bangladeshi nationals in a bid to review their overall migration policy.

Erosion fear grips 1,000 families

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Faridpur

Nearly a thousand families on the bank of the Padma river in Daulatdia union under Rajbari's Goalanda upazila are passing days in fear of erosion.

The 2.5-kilometre stretch of the river bank between Daulatdia Ferry Ghat's Terminal 6 and 7 is particularly affected, according to the Bangladesh Inland Water Transport Authority.

Locals said the water level of the river has risen significantly since Cyclone Remal.

BIWTA has been dumping sand-filled geo-bags on the river bank to prevent erosion. However, many areas still remain vulnerable, including Sattar Member Para, Bahir Char, Majid Sheikh Para, and Bepari Para, among others.

Nearly 1,000 families dwell in these areas.

BIWTA sources said it is not possible to conduct erosion prevention drives in full swing due to limited allocation to this end.

Kashem Khan, a member of Daulatdia Union Parishad, said, "All the families are spending sleepless nights in fear of losing their lands and homesteads to river erosion, as it is likely to exacerbate in the monsoon. A road has already been devoured by the river. BIWTA has been dumping geo-bags, but it is inadequate to prevent erosion."

Siddique Pattadar, 30, a resident of Sattar Member Para, said, "The river's erosion worsened recently after the cyclone. Now the river is just across the yard from my house. If the situation worsens further, it will entirely engulf my homestead."

Several other locals, including Chobeda Begum, 45, Hazrat Ali Mondal, 70, and Hashem Mondal, 45, echoed him and urged local authorities to take prompt steps to this end.

Jyoti Bikas Chandra, UNO of Goalanda upazila, said he has informed higher authorities in this regard.

Md Salahuddin, manager of Daulatdia office of Bangladesh Inland Water Transport Corporation, said they have requested BIWTA to construct another alternative ghat to minimise erosion between terminals 6 and 7.

Risab Ahamad, assistant engineer of BIWTA in Aricha, said, "We have dumped at least 8,000 geo-bags in the river bank areas since May 8. However, due to limited allocation, we are unable to do more at this point. If we get an allocation, more geo-bags will be placed at the erosion sites."

POST-POLLS VIOLENCE

EC directs Sylhet DIG to take action

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Moulvibazar

The Election Commission has directed the deputy inspector general (DIG) of police in Sylhet range to take legal action against those involved in the recent post-polls violence that left seven people injured in Madhyanagar upazila, Sunamganj.

The commission came up with the directive in a letter signed by its Deputy Secretary Md Atirar Rahman on June 10.

The Daily Star got a copy of the letter yesterday.

"You [DIG] are requested to inform the Election Commission about the legal measures taken against those involved in the incident [attack]," said the letter.

Election to Madhyanagar Upazila Parishad was held on June 5.

Two days later, at least seven people, including a defeated chairman candidate Saidur Rahman, were injured in an attack allegedly by the supporters of his rival candidate Abdur Razzak Bhuiyan, who was elected as upazila chairman.

The clash ensued near Saidur's residence at Datiapara village.

Later, Saidur's son filed a complaint with the EC, alleging that local police were working in favour of Razzak, also elder brother of another DIG.

However, local police officials denied the allegation.

Contacted earlier, Razzak claimed that his followers first came under attack by Saidur's men.

The top-order continues to be one of the major headaches for the Tigers, more so because it includes skipper Najmul Hossain Shanto, who hasn't been able to snap out of his miserable run, averaging 14.2 in his last 10 innings at a strike-rate of 86.1.

With the pitches in Dallas and New York being significant limiting factors in batting, the move away from the USA could not have come at a better time for Bangladesh batters who will hope that the surfaces in the West Indies will allow them to bat with more freedom.

The Tigers will also take confidence from the fact that they have gone through the most difficult phase in the group with minimal damage as they have a win and a loss against relatively superior sides (Sri Lanka and South Africa) and have Netherlands and Nepal, both of whom are lower down in the rankings, up next.

A win against the Netherlands will put Bangladesh in a favourable position as far as qualification to the Super 8s is concerned as it will allow the Tigers to have progression to the next round in their own hands. With Sri Lanka and Nepal on one point each, Bangladesh, who have two, have the Netherlands as key competition for qualification.

a meeting beside the Bhanga expressway.

Local sources said Mintu had a rivalry with Jhenaidah-4 (Kaliganj) lawmaker Azim.

Harun Or Rashid, additional commissioner (DB) of the DMP, yesterday confirmed these developments.

The investigation officer is interrogating Mintu on issues like why Babu's mobile phone was with him and why he did not share murder information with the law enforcers or the victim's family, said the DB chief.

Harun said, "The IO will let Mintu go if he can answer properly, or else lawful action will be taken."

In response to a query of political leaders' involvement in the killing, the DB chief said district AL Relief and Social Welfare Secretary Babu is on remand and General Secretary Mintu was detained for interrogation.

"There is also evidence about some others' involvement. No one, including those who gave instructions and those who planned the murder of Azim, will be spared," he said.

He further said, "I also want to say that no innocent person will be harassed at anyone's instigation."

In another development, Azim's daughter Mumtarin Ferdous Doreen yesterday met Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan at the Secretariat and demanded justice for her father's killing.

After the meeting, Doreen told reporters that she heard that attempts were being made to get those arrested in connection with the murder freed.

She said she requested the minister not to stop the probe under any pressure.

Dorren said she heard that arrestee Babu had a meeting beside the Bhanga expressway regarding financial transactions. "I want to know the name of the people who gave the money. Why did they do it?"

Asaduzzaman said her father was killed and it was only natural that she would seek justice.

Asked whether there is any pressure, the minister said, "Who will put pressure on us? There is no pressure. The probe is underway properly."

DB chief Harun said, "The higher authorities don't exert any pressure on us. Because they [authorities] know that all DB teams investigate cases properly and identify the real culprits even if they are at home or abroad. There is no question of harassing any innocent person."

Meanwhile, human chains were formed at different points of Jhenaidah, demanding punishment of MP Azim's killers. There was a demonstration in Jhenaidah too against the detention of Mintu.

Mujib's time in Kolkata was vital

When police charged at protesting students, Mujib would step in without batting an eyelid and put himself up as a shield between the batons charged mercilessly and the hapless protesters.

He was the first among the student leaders who rushed to do famine relief work and try dousing the communal conflagration.

On each occasion, when the going got tough, or even life-threatening, Mujib got going, without fail.

No biography of Mujib is complete without shedding light on his Kolkata stay.

It is this part of his life that India's acclaimed filmmaker Goutam Ghose has focused on in his 63-minute documentary "Mujib in Calcutta". It tells the story of the college years of the man who rose to become Bangabandhu and then the father of the nation after Bangladesh was liberated through a nine-month war.

"This period was very important for Mujib's political upbringing," stated Goutam during a tete-a-tete with The Daily Star during his recent visit to Dhaka.

So popular was Mujib with the students at the then Islamia College of Kolkata, later renamed Maulana Azad College, that none went against him when he was simultaneously involved with student politics as well as the Muslim League, said the director who has delved into the details of his life in Kolkata.

The documentary will also include Mujib's first-ever Kolkata visit in 1934 for medical treatment and his historic speech at a public meeting at the Brigade Parade Ground in the city on February 6, 1972, soon after his return from prison in Pakistan, Goutam said.

The documentary got the go-ahead after Mujib's eldest daughter and Prime Minister of Bangladesh Sheikh Hasina watched it on April 26.

It was originally titled "Kolkatay Bangabandhu", but Hasina suggested changing the title and recommended "Mujib in Calcutta", citing her logic that during his life there, he was not known as Bangabandhu yet, Goutam said.

His documentary vividly recreated the memories of Mujib's Kolkata life as his camera captured the Islamia College campus, Mujib's politics as the general secretary of the college's student union, his room no-24 of Baker Hostel, Alimuddin Street, Park Circus and the Muslim League office where Mujib had spent his time.

The Indian director, critically acclaimed for films like "Padma Nadir Majhi", "Antarjali Jatra", "Moner Manush", "Sankhachil", "Ma Bhumi", "Paar" and "Kaalbela", said Mujib's years in Kolkata was an important period for the sub-continent as well.

"During that period, Mujib was involved in relief work during the famine of 1943. He was witness to Hindu-Muslim riots and the great Calcutta killings. He saw the flight of Subhas Bose from India and used to listen to Bose's speeches from Singapore on the radio," the director continued.

Goutam had to face hurdles in making the documentary due to a lack of authentic and recorded information. He relied heavily on Mujib's "Unfinished Autobiography", Sheikh Hasina's book "Sheikh Mujib Amaar Pita", interviews with Hasina and her sister Sheikh Rehana and with Mujib's friend, 101-year-old Nihar Chakraborty, to make the documentary.

"In our country, the main problem is the [lack of] archival material for making such a documentary. We have no picture or video of that time when Bangabandhu was in Kolkata. Moreover, it's a political documentation about Bangabandhu when he started his political life.

"Had Sheikh Hasina not preserved Bangabandhu's autobiography, a vital chapter of history would have been lost and people would have never known the history of that period," said the filmmaker, adding that Hasina must be credited for "unveiling an important slice of history".

"But when I started research on the topic, I was fortunate to have found Nihar Chakraborty, who was Bangabandhu's contemporary. He is the only living person who witnessed Bangabandhu's Kolkata life and was involved with the student movements with him."

Goutam said that according to Nihar, Sheikh Mujib was an amiable person who used to go all out to help his friends and never considered religion, caste and creed when choosing them.

The director said the documentary on Mujib was important for him for two reasons. "First, I was young during the Bangladesh Liberation War, and then I was present at the Brigade Parade Ground in Kolkata in 1972, hearing his historic speech, and secondly my ancestors were from Faridpur [Bangabandhu's home district]."

He added, "I've been making the documentary as my responsibility to history. I wanted to apprise the young generation of the political upbringings of Bangabandhu."

The duration of the documentary was at first only half an hour, but it became longer with the addition of interviews of Sheikh Hasina and Sheikh Rehana.

Jointly funded by the Bangladesh government and an Indian NGO named "Friends of Bangladesh", the documentary has no character. The director himself describes the history of that time, where footage of some historical places of Kolkata related to Bangabandhu and footage of the Liberation War are shown.

Goutam said he was in Dhaka to screen the documentary to Hasina and get her green signal.

"I felt the documentary should not be brought to public domain without her prior approval. The PM saw and loved it. She thanked me, and I told her it was my responsibility."

Replying to a question about when the documentary might be released, he said it depends on the Bangladesh government.

be used for emergency passenger transportation with necessary security arrangements provided by the Coast Guard, said Yamin.

The island, home to about 10,000 people, is accessible only by vessels. The locals depend on trawlers for supplies.

Meanwhile, Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan yesterday said, "The Arakan Army is fighting against the Myanmar government. The war has been going on for quite some time ... One or two bullets hit trawlers or our patrol boats. We still don't know who fired those shots.

"We contacted them [Myanmar authorities], but they could not confirm anything," he said.

Mujibor Rahman, chairman of St Martin's Union Parishad, said stocks of food are running out.

Prices of essentials have gone up and they will run out of rice within two to three days, he told The Daily Star.

He said he requested the deputy commissioner of Cox's Bazar to send food and other essentials to the island by sea trucks using alternative routes.

Merchant ship hit in Red Sea off Yemen

Says security firm

AFP, Dubai

A merchant ship issued a distress call after being struck in the Red Sea off Yemen, a security firm said yesterday, in what appeared to be the latest attack by Iran-backed Houthi rebels.

The ship was hit about 68 nautical miles southwest of the rebel-held port city of Hodeida, maritime security firm Ambrey said.

The company "assessed the vessel aligned with the Houthi target profile at the time of the incident", it said.

Houthis, who are at war with a Saudi-led coalition after ousting the government from Sanaa in 2014, have launched drone and missile attacks on shipping since November.

They say they are harassing the vital trade route as an act of solidarity with Palestinians during the Israel's offensive in the Gaza Strip.

Smoke billows from the site of an Israeli airstrike on Zibqin in southern Lebanon yesterday, amid ongoing cross-border tensions. Hezbollah fired big barrages of rockets at Israel yesterday and vowed to ramp up its attacks in retaliation for the Israeli strike which killed a senior Hezbollah field commander.

Form electoral pact against far right

France's Macron asks rival parties ahead of snap polls

REUTERS, Paris

French President Emmanuel Macron yesterday urged rival parties on both sides of the political centre to join him in forging a democratic alliance against Marine Le Pen's far-right National Rally (RN) in upcoming snap legislative elections.

In what amounted to a campaign speech just days after his shock call for an election, Macron acknowledged making mistakes, saying the French had expressed their indignation but felt they were not being heard.

The election would provide clarity, Macron said.

He called on "many of our compatriots and political leaders who do not recognize themselves in the extremist fever" to "build a new project ... a coalition to govern, a coalition to act in the service of the French and for the republic".

He pledged to take a firmer hand in questions of immigration, security and justice, arguing that a far left prone to anti-Semitism would be too "lax," while the extreme right would bulldoze France's constitutional rule of law.

In a dig at the leader of the conservative Republicans party, Macron decried political horsetrading over the last few days, saying "the mask has come off" some parties seeking to forge "unnatural alliances."

Child victims of war spiked in 2023

UN report warns amid Gaza, Sudan crises

AFP, United Nations

Violence against children in armed conflicts reached "extreme levels" in 2023, particularly in Gaza and Sudan, according to a forthcoming UN report obtained by AFP on Tuesday.

The United Nations' annual "Children in Armed conflict" report placed the Sudanese army as well as the rival Rapid Support Forces (RSF) on the blacklist for "the killing and maiming of children, and for attacks on schools and hospitals."

Also added to the blacklist were Hamas and the armed wing of Palestinian Islamic Jihad for the October 7 incident, as well as the Israeli army for its offensive in Gaza.

The report placed Sudanese army, its rival RSF, Hamas and the Israeli army on the blacklist.

"In 2023, violence against children in armed conflict reached extreme levels, with a shocking 21 percent increase in grave violations," said the report by Secretary-General Antonio Guterres, which is due to be published today.

The UN verified 30,705 violations committed against children last year, including 5,301 killings, 6,348 injuries, 8,655 instances of children recruited and used in conflicts, 5,205 denials of humanitarian access and 4,356 kidnappings.

"We've never verified so many violations against children as last year," said a senior UN official speaking on condition of anonymity.

In 2023, "children bore the brunt of multiplying and escalating crises that were marked by a complete disregard for child rights, notably the inherent right to life," the report said.

The conflict in the Middle East has led to a 155 percent increase in grave violations against children, the report said.

The UN verified that 43 Israeli children were killed in Israel and the West Bank during the October 7 attack, and a total of 47 Israeli children were abducted by Hamas and other Palestinian groups.

The report also confirmed the deaths of 2,141 Palestinian children in the Gaza Strip in 2023, with 2,051 killed between October 7 and December 31.

Over 23,000 reports of grave violations against children -- 3,900 Israeli children and 19,887 Palestinian children -- by all parties to the conflict had yet to be verified.

"It will take a long, long time to verify," said the UN official.

Israel reacted angrily when the news of its inclusion on the blacklist was leaked last week, with the country's UN ambassador Gilad Erdan saying he was "shocked and disgusted by this shameful decision."

As for Sudan, it has seen "a staggering 480 percent increase in grave violations against children" against children from 2022 to 2023, the report said.

The RSF paramilitary force was listed for recruiting children and for "rape and other forms of sexual violence against children," as well as attacks on schools and hospitals.

"I am appalled by the dramatic increase in grave violations," Guterres wrote in the report, also noting a rise in ethnically motivated attacks and mass displacement of children in Sudan.

Covering some 20 conflict zones worldwide, the report includes the killing, injuring, recruitment, kidnapping and sexual violence against children.

It verified 30,705 "grave violations" committed last year, including during the offensive in Gaza.

The Russian army and "affiliated armed groups," remained on the blacklist for killing 80 children in Ukraine in 2023 and injuring 339.

INDIA'S JAMMU & KASHMIR

Police blame Pakistan for strife that killed 12

Dozens injured over the last three days

REUTER, Srinagar

Police in India's territory of Jammu and Kashmir yesterday blamed arch rival Pakistan for a spurt in militant attacks that killed 12 people and injured dozens over the last three days, just weeks after a large turnout for general elections.

Pakistan claims the Himalayan region, which has been roiled by militant violence since the start of an anti-Indian insurgency in 1989 that killed tens of thousands, although violence has waned in recent years.

"Our hostile neighbour wants to damage our peaceful environment," Anand Jain, police chief of Jammu, told reporters in a reference to Pakistan, which India has accused of stoking violence in the region for decades.

A spokesperson for Pakistan's foreign ministry did not immediately respond to a request for comment from Reuters. It has denied such claims in the past, saying it has given only political and diplomatic support to the insurgency.

Gun battles in the area on Tuesday killed two militants and a paramilitary soldier while injuring a civilian and six security personnel, authorities said.

The incidents came two days after nine Hindu pilgrims were killed and 41 injured when militants attacked a bus taking them to a Hindu shrine on Sunday, as Prime Minister Narendra Modi was sworn in for a third term.

The latest violence has prompted criticism of Modi by opposition parties demanding action against the perpetrators.

"Unless we talk to our neighbours we will not be able to solve the problem," Farooq Abdullah, a former chief minister of the region, told news agency ANI.

The sudden rise in violence comes after the region's director general of police, R R Swain, said the number of local militants was dropping, although 70 to 80 foreign militants continue to be active.

"We are moving from resident terrorism to foreign terrorism," Swain said last week.

Ties between the neighbours have been frozen since India ended the special status of Jammu and Kashmir state in 2019, splitting it into two federally administered territories.

On Monday, the leaders of the nuclear-armed rivals engaged in diplomacy on X as Pakistan's Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif and his elder brother and former three-time prime minister Nawaz Sharif posted congratulations to Modi for his third term.

Mahathir denies corruption

AGENCIES

Malaysia's former prime minister Mahathir Mohamad has denied engaging in corruption, saying he earned his money from his salary during his decades-long political career and most of it is "now gone".

In an interview with Al Jazeera, Mahathir, who is under investigation by the country's anticorruption agency, hit out at current Prime Minister Anwar Ibrahim over remarks that implied that he had used his time in office to enrich himself and his family.

Mahathir also accused Anwar of targeting his two eldest sons, Mirzan Mahathir and Mokhzani Mahathir.

The Malaysian Anti-Corruption Commission (MACC) in January ordered Mirzan Mahathir to declare all his assets in and outside the country as part of an investigation following revelations contained in the so-called Panama Papers, reports AFP.

When the powerful prey on the vulnerable

Alleged abuse of power by Benazir must be investigated

In what can only be described as a gross abuse of power, ex-IGP Benazir Ahmed allegedly used his position to intimidate and coerce members of a Hindu community out of their land—their primary source of income—for a fraction of its worth in his hometown in Gopalganj. The Anti-Corruption Commission (ACC), which is currently investigating Benazir, has so far found Benazir and his family to have bought at least 613.41 bighas of land in different districts, including 605.77 bighas in Gopalganj and Madaripur that once belonged to minority communities.

A recent report by this daily has revealed disturbing details of how the former police chief engaged Taimur Islam, an inspector of a police station, to acquire the farmland to build his resorts. The Daily Star spoke to at least 40 people in Machkandi, Bairagitol and Patikelbari villages of Gopalganj Sadar and Borokhola village in Rajoir, who insisted that they would have never sold their land at reduced prices had it not been for direct and indirect threats from Benazir's people. Those who refused to sell initially were targeted by using other tactics, from blocking access to their land to filling them up with sand, ultimately forcing them to part with their property. According to locals, Benazir also engaged several police and Rab officials to supervise the construction work of one of his resorts until he went into retirement in 2022.

The ACC has confirmed that he procured and built most of his assets while he headed Rab and police. It is terrifying that a man constitutionally mandated to protect citizens would use his power so blatantly against vulnerable populations for his own gains, leaving them helpless to seek recourse from the law. After all, he was the law. That he used members of the law enforcement agencies to do his dirty work for years on end points to a bigger crisis within state institutions—one where checks and balances as well as systems of accountability have long ceased to exist.

It goes without saying that this case demands a thorough and transparent investigation. Those responsible, from Benazir to those who facilitated his actions, must be held accountable and the victims compensated financially for the loss suffered. And while it is commendable that the ex-IGP is finally being investigated for his crimes and corruption, we cannot help but wonder how it is possible that he carried out these unlawful activities under the nose of the administration with such impunity.

How many more officials, tasked with protecting the public, are doing the same right now? How many more such helpless communities have been terrorised into selling off their land? The government has the responsibility to prevent any kind of abuse of power by those it has employed and empowered. It also has a duty to protect the rights of vulnerable communities, which includes safeguarding their land.

Why must freshers suffer so much to pay fees?

It's a wonder why university freshers would need to stand under the blistering sun for three days just to enrol into the very institution they have been accepted to. This is exactly what happened during the just-concluded admission process at Dhaka University (DU). Students said they had to struggle with a slew of tedious and repetitive steps just to pay their fees, going from one building to another and waiting in queues for hours on end. Surely, one of the country's top educational institutions could've thought of a better, easier alternative?

Amid the lack of coordination among DU's offices, some 6,000 admission-seekers only had three days, beginning on Monday, to complete the whole process. Unsurprisingly, these many people standing in lines, desperate to finish all procedures, will lead to delays, sufferings, and utter chaos.

This process, in this day and age, seems truly ancient. Reportedly, students had to pay the admission fees online, but then take the receipt to their respective department, which handed them a pay slip to deposit a development fee at the nearby Sonali Bank branch. Accomplishing this after trudging in line for hours did not bring relief, as they had to bring back the pay slip and get their documents signed from the department head, who by then likely left the premises. This whole process had to be repeated for paying the dorm fees.

When the country is striving for digitalisation, is this how a university, recently ranked as the best in Bangladesh, should be operating? Apparently, the admission committee had requested department heads to ensure that students could pay all fees online, but the latter ignored the call. Some heads weren't even aware of the request, such is the level of dysfunction and mismanagement. According to a professor, from the 90s till now, the admission process has remained the same, pointing to the DU's lack of progress, while the vice-chancellor himself has admitted to the dismal coordination.

We urge the DU authorities to address the ordeal students have to go through annually just to get admitted. This issue can easily be solved through the use of digital platforms and proper coordination among university bodies, and we hope to see just that next year.

We need humility, not hubris, to turn the economy around

While a privileged minority, sitting in their high castles, continue to enjoy a larger and larger share of the fruits of "development," it is becoming obvious that the vast majority are increasingly struggling. Worryingly, economic growth is slowing down. On April 2, the World Bank revealed that it projects Bangladesh's real GDP growth to remain relatively subdued at 5.6 percent in the current fiscal year and 5.7 in the following year, lower than the average annual growth rate of 6.6 percent over the decade preceding the Covid-19 pandemic. Similarly, the IMF, for a second time, revised down Bangladesh's growth forecast for the current fiscal year to 5.7 percent in its World Economic Outlook report released on April 16.

On May 20, the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics (BBS) released its periodic data projecting that the economy grew by 5.82 percent in the outgoing financial year, which is far less than the initial projection of 7.5 percent made in the budget speech for FY24 and the revised projection of 6.54 percent made in a meeting of the coordination council in December—but is much closer to the World Bank and IMF's projections.

This raises a very critical question: why were the government's projections so far off and why couldn't it come up with more accurate estimates like the World Bank and IMF? Given that government officials often outright refuse to accept reputed organisation's data—without presenting their own evidence to counter it—it is perhaps time for the authorities to get down from their high horses, particularly in light of their own poor record of coming up with correct estimates.

Be that as it may, some economists have even questioned the BBS projection of GDP growth based on the fact that there is "no positive indicator" to explain it currently. For example, even though BBS data shows the agriculture sector this year recorded a growth similar to last year, the industry sector, which accounted for more than one-third of the country's GDP, grew at 6.6 percent in FY24 compared to 8.37 percent in FY23. And a large part of that had to do with the import of industrial raw materials and machinery being affected by the dollar crisis, and energy price hikes having substantially increased industrial production costs for businesses.

Unfortunately, there wasn't much the government could do in that regard, as it had to take certain policy measures to try to rein in inflation which, on the flipside, was bound to negatively affect growth. However, as a Centre for Policy Dialogue survey in partnership with the World Economic Forum (WEF) found, 67.6 percent of respondents complained about high levels of corruption as another major problematic factor for doing business. So, the government should have tried to reduce corruption, which could automatically improve our business environment and perhaps encourage more businesses to set up.

Meanwhile, persistent inflation has been weighing on private consumption growth, and combined with rising interest rates and financial sector vulnerabilities, the World Bank expects investor sentiment in Bangladesh to dampen. Consequently, it believes that an efficient resolution framework for non-performing loans (NPLs) is urgently needed. However, since most of our banking sector issues are somehow tied up with political considerations, the government till now has shown no sign of mustering up the political will or courage to actually address them.

Private investment growth slowing has become a regional problem, according to another World Bank report. And so is the fact that South Asia as a whole is not creating enough jobs to keep up with its rapidly increasing working-age population. For Bangladesh, this has become a particularly acute problem and, as a result, the country is failing to make the most of its demographic dividend.

Even among those who have jobs, the majority are seeing their wage growth being significantly lower than the inflation rate for more than two years. According to BBS figures, wage growth remained below the inflation rate for the 26th consecutive month in March.

The combination of these factors has prompted some to ask whether Bangladesh is entering a period of stagflation—a phenomenon that combines slow growth, high unemployment and inflation. But that does seem a bit premature, as the economy is still growing, albeit at a slower rate, and unemployment is still not exceedingly high—even though the official unemployment figures are clearly too good to be true.

However, the cost-of-living crisis is a serious problem which is drastically reducing the standard of living for most people. The erosion of purchasing power has already led to around five lakh people falling into extreme poverty between FY2022-23 and FY2023-24, according to the World Bank. Unless things turn around quickly—which does not look very likely—poverty will continue to rise and people's disposable income will continue to fall.

Amidst all these, BBS data shows per capita income increasing slightly from last year to $2,784 in the current fiscal year. Does that mean Bangladeshis are now economically better off? Absolutely not. Per capita income is obviously getting skewed by the ultra-rich, many of whom, according to media reports are now running for or occupying government offices at different levels.

With their wealth surging, most policymakers and politicians have become oblivious to the current economic sufferings of the mass people. As a result, policies have been insufficient at addressing the crisis. In fact, many government policies nowadays are no longer formulated with the aim of easing the ongoing crisis, but to continue filling the pockets of vested interests, at the expense of the majority and the country's economy as a whole.

In other words, the rich and the powerful are in the process of slowly killing the golden goose that they have been benefitting from. This can cause social unrest while the share of the benefits that the oligarchs fight over could decrease, leading to more infighting. Since both these factors could destabilise the economy further, one could only hope that common sense (in the oligarch's self-interest even) prevails before we get to that dangerous tipping point—but how wise is it to expect humility, from where there has only been hubris?

Don't children have the right to privacy?

LAILA KHONDKAR

At the registration desk of a private hospital in Dhaka, an employee loudly asked for personal information, including phone number, address, etc., of everyone who came to take service there. At that moment, it occurred to me that many people do not understand the importance of privacy protection in our society. This becomes more evident when we observe attitudes of adults towards children.

Children have the right to privacy. According to the article 16 of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child, "No child shall be subjected to arbitrary or unlawful interference with his or her privacy, family, home or correspondence, nor to unlawful attacks on his or her honour and reputation." Unfortunately, awareness about this is very low in Bangladesh.

Nowadays, people of all ages use the internet for education, work, communication, and entertainment. Social media has also become a part of many people's lives. This has positive aspects, but child protection and privacy are at risk.

Children can be harmed in many ways in the online world. One of these is the production, distribution, and use of images and videos of child sexual abuse. Online "grooming" is another serious issue, where abusers harm children after gaining their trust. Apart from this, children get information on various negative topics including militancy, drugs, and suicide through the internet.

Besides, many parents post on social media about their children's likes and dislikes, achievements and problems in academic and other domains, almost regularly. Disclosure of children's personal information including location, name, date of birth, and school name puts them at risk. Anyone with malicious intentions can misuse this information to cause different types of harm.

And who keeps track of how the children feel about parents sharing their everyday lives with the rest of the world without their consent? Children are not property of the parents that they can treat them in whatever way they want to. Children are individuals with rights and their own sense of dignity.

It is the responsibility of parents to guide children to stay safe online. They should also ensure that none of their behaviour puts the child at risk. Dr Victoria Nash, Director of the Oxford Internet Institute, provided some advice for parents to keep children safe online:

Children should enable privacy settings on social media. They need to know where their information is going and how it is being used. Even if a picture or video is deleted from the internet, it can still be viewed, or someone may have already taken a screenshot. Children need to be reminded of this. Parents have to know what apps, games, and social media platforms their children are using.

Besides, parents have to consider whether their posts will cause their children to feel ashamed, embarrassed, anxious, or upset in the future. Can it harm their children? It is important to take care that no one can know about the daily routine from the posts. Geotagging (through which the physical location of a person can be derived from the internet) needs to be stopped. Privacy settings will be such that posts can only be seen by trusted friends and family members. They should be told not to share the posts.

Online activities mirror real life in most cases. If parents spend time with their children, listen to them actively, and know about their lives including their interests and friends, they will be able to provide appropriate guidance and support to children for staying safe in the real and online world.

Helping children develop social and emotional skills, making them confident, asking them to use devices in open areas of the house, setting time limits for device usage can be done by any parent. It does not require much technical knowledge.

It is the responsibility of the state to formulate and implement the necessary laws and policies for child protection online. In Bangladesh there is a need to harmonise laws relevant to protecting children online, which includes Children Act 2013 (amended 2018), Information and Communication Technology Act 2006 (amended 2013); Digital Security Act 2018, and Pornography Control Act 2012.

Internet service providers, mobile phone companies, and all those involved in information and communication technology must consider the best interests of children with utmost importance while developing products and providing services. States should hold them accountable for their actions and non-actions.

It is our responsibility to ensure that using the internet is a positive experience for children, that it contributes to their development and empowerment, and that children are not put at risk because of parents and other adults' actions.

Student protests can challenge the status quo

MOHAMMAD TAREQ HASAN

Mohammad Tareq Hasan, PhD,
is an anthropologist and teaches at Dhaka University. He is currently a visiting fellow at the University of Oregon, USA.

What comprises our rights as humans? The Universal Declaration of Human Rights aim for "recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world." So, we have the right to anything and everything, given that we do not create threats toward others' freedom and peace.

The fundamental issue is about achieving equal rights for all fellow humans. Hence, the collective shaping of the structures that govern our lives, i.e. politics or society, is even more crucial. However, today, we have less and less control over politics globally; we vote and choose the people that govern us, but more often than not, the political parties that hold state power overlook popular demands and become threats to the collective humanity as evinced by wars and the destruction of the environment for profit-making ventures.

The student protests, in a way, have demonstrated that anarchism may promote equality and justice. While it is accused of violence and chaos, David Graeber claimed that anarchism is philosophically grounded in the belief that humans are capable of reason and can flourish without being subjected to coercive force.

Then, how could we overcome the socio-political structures that dominate us and reclaim our right to politics?

The student encampment movements in the US recently reflected how we could regain control of what is ours. We all know by now that students on campuses across the US have built encampments, occupied buildings, and led protests urging educational institutions to divest their endowments from companies profiting from the Israeli war against the Palestinian people. However, through police brutality, arrests, and negotiations, many of the encampments are cleared from campuses. Nonetheless, some universities have committed to reviewing their investments. There are some encampments still holding their places. However, we are not sure how long they will survive. The student protests may shrink without ensuring any drastic changes in the US policies regarding their support towards Israel. Still, how students protested reflects possibilities for egalitarianism and a shared vision for reclaiming our right to politics and ensuring peace and liberty for all.

I witnessed student protests at the University of Oregon. On May 10, the 12th day of their encampment, the student protest took a significant turn. They momentarily took control of the main administrative building and chanted slogans for divestment. One basis of their demands is reflected by the slogan, "Whose university? Our university" or "We are the University [of Oregon]." Later, when they came out, some students delivered speeches from the entrance staircase to a mass crowd in front of the building. They argued that their tuition fees should not fund the war and killings of innocent people. Thus, they demanded the university to divest and sought public support. They did not claim to take over the university or the state but wanted to cease the ongoing war. During this time, employees of the administrative building locked the building from the inside so the students could not reenter. Later, the students marched across the campus and returned to the encampment sites. That day, students momentarily took back spaces controlled by the "authorities".

We recently experienced similar anti-establishment protests in Bangladesh. We can recall large student protests for ensuring road safety and enacting new traffic laws, restructuring the quotas in government jobs, and eliminating imposed VAT on tuition fees, etc. All these protests reflect similar aspirations for equality and justice and, more importantly, the power of unity. Students without centralised leadership took control of spaces, even if momentarily, shaking the centres of power to their core—even though they did not aim to overthrow the regime.

This form of prefigurative protest is pivotal in reclaiming our right to politics. David Graeber, in the book The Democracy Project, reflected how a popular movement's hostility to the political establishment is reflected through its refusal to take any political positions at all. Unlike other political movements, recent student movements in the US or Bangladesh do not seek state power. Still, by not aiming for power, these movements envision a society without an authoritarian structure.

An atmosphere of equality and fairness, the ability to organise and mobilise through digital media, the peaceful takeover of infrastructures such as roads and administrative offices, and a gradual movement expansion are all key features of student protests. In the US, there was another crucial factor: the protesters were from different races and cultures, but they were united in their shared vision for an equitable future. Student protests exhibited a new form of organising discontent by endorsing a prefigurative strategy—without having a political structure. The movements themselves are critical achievements. In Alain Badiou's words, the student movements can womb an "[idea] capable of challenging the corrupt, lifeless version of 'democracy', which has become the banner of the legionaries of Capital." The frequency of student protests worldwide indicates the possibility of forming a more egalitarian society.

The student protests, in a way, have demonstrated that anarchism may promote equality and justice. While it is accused of violence and chaos, David Graeber claimed that anarchism is philosophically grounded in the belief that humans are capable of reason and can flourish without being subjected to coercive force. In contrast, traditional governing structures often perpetuate unequal power structures. For this reason, following the student protests, we must embrace our capacity for reason and come together to reclaim our rights to politics and create a more just world. This will not be easy, as our experiences of the student protests tell us.

The questions that might remain in our hearts are: What future lies ahead of such prefigurative protests? What can we possibly do once such protests succumb to the existing political forces? Frankly, there is no blueprint. Instead, it should be an experimental process. For now, the momentary experience of real freedom is what the protest participants will have once all the encampments are cleared across the US. Many of us will have a first-person account of such political moments and stories to tell, possibly leading to a revolutionary or creative epoch.

We need to act on AI now, not have an act for it

SHAHED ALAM

is a barrister and telecom expert.

When Bangladesh embarked on its journey towards Digital Bangladesh in 2009, many were sceptical about it. But as time progressed, we all saw how the vision started to become a reality.

This vision, at its core, aspires to create a nation that is adept at solving problems at all spheres of life through innovative application of digital technologies. The government has made it abundantly clear that Artificial Intelligence (AI) is going to play a pivotal role in implementing the Smart Bangladesh vision. Following this vision, the government has recently unveiled a draft National Artificial Intelligence (AI) Policy 2024 for public consultation.

There is a good reason why the government has decided to use AI as the fulcrum to realise the goal of Smart Bangladesh. Unlike other digital technologies, the potential of application of AI is literally all around us. Starting from our personal lives, to modernising public service delivery, the scope for AI is limitless.

Be it public transport or AI-driven personal vehicles, personal healthcare solutions or the public healthcare system, from individual human resource productivity or national competitiveness in productivity levels, every imaginable aspect of our individual, societal, as well as national issues can have a transformative impact if we can smartly apply AI to solve our problems.

But the question is this: how do we facilitate AI to deliver the dividends for us? If we look around, we can see that every country in the world is trying to strike a balance between innovation and regulatory oversight. There is palpable consensus on adopting more of a business-friendly approach to AI regulation, by avoiding excessive restrictions.

The government has been trying to create a pathway for AI in Bangladesh by preparing the National Strategy for AI in 2020, followed by the recent release of the draft AI Policy in 2024. Having read the draft policy on AI, I felt that it provides an excellent template to foment the use of AI in every sector. The institutional framework outlined in the policy to pursue AI projects is well thought through. On top of that, the sectoral plans for application of AI provides an excellent starting point.

But what puzzles me is the stated desire of the government to introduce an Act for AI. When we are supposed to allow as much room as possible for our AI practitioners to fully demonstrate their talent, we are planning to limit what they can and can't do along with defined punitive measures through the AI Act. I am certain that this is not how you invite people into the fold of new technology.

As of now, the European Union (EU) is the only entity to have enacted an AI Act. At the heart of the Act, it is mandatory to ensure that AI platforms are monitored or overseen by human beings, not another AI platform. It's worth noting that many AI experts have termed this as a knee-jerk reaction as they consider a law on AI to be too premature at this stage.

The US does not have a federal law covering AI, nor is there any universal definition for AI. It is currently governed by a mix of decentralised existing federal and state legislations, industry itself and the courts. Through an executive order last year, every US government agency was tasked to set up working groups to evaluate AI, develop regulations and establish public-private engagement.

In United Kingdom (UK), the government has unveiled its response to AI Regulation White Paper consultation in February 2024. They don't have any plans to codify that into law for now. It advocates a context-sensitive, balanced approach, using existing sector-specific laws for AI guidance.

In India, the upcoming Digital India Act is set to focus on the regulation of high-risk AI applications. No plan to enact separate legislation is afoot. Singapore also doesn't have any AI legislation; they have a sector specific approach to overall governance and regulation. Japan also has a relatively hands-off approach and has been encouraging AI development and application across various sectors.

The Association of South East Asian Nations (ASEAN) has issued a guide to AI governance and ethics in February 2024. The national-level recommendations include nurturing AI talent, upskilling workforces and investing in AI research and development. Australia also doesn't have any AI legislation; the government there is approaching it with a voluntary ethics framework.

It's worth noting that the core purpose of having a law is to create a framework for dos and don'ts in a particular area with the option to resort to the legal system to settle disputes or punish offenders of the law. The question here is, how do we know what is doable and what is not, when we don't have any prior experience with AI in Bangladesh.

Even if we consider enacting a law, we need to ascertain areas where government regulation is needed, in light of the global best practices. AI law or policy considerations should include the use and processing of personal data, privacy, infringement, surveillance, algorithm bias in customer interactions, data sovereignty, monitoring AI based platforms, cybersecurity, and social norms and values etc. Most importantly, we need to focus on the fundamental ethical aspects of AI, which are more universally agreed upon compared to specific AI regulations.

We must realise innovation involves a very messy and unstructured process. The key to innovation is to have a creative mindset that can go beyond conventional thinking to come up with the simplest of solutions to complex problems. Putting barriers on this through an AI Act is the last thing we need at this moment.

If we want to meet the export earnings target of $5 billion from the ICT sector, we need to facilitate our developers to catch up with the rapid pace of AI development globally, instead of scaring them off with an act that comes with punitive measures. More AI regulation risks stifling new start-ups who lack the resources of the globally dominant platforms. We need to focus on creating a large pool of highly skilled human resources in AI. The draft AI policy provides a baseline to embark on this AI journey.

BOOK REVIEW: FICTION

Celebrating the best of BENGALI SHORT FICTION

Review of 'The Penguin Book of Bengali Short Stories' (Penguin UK, 2024), edited by Arunava Sinha

The Penguin Book of Bengali Short Stories
Edited by Arunava Sinha

ILLUSTRATION: MAISHA SYEDA

SHAHRIAR SHAAMS

Bengali literature has had a rich history of prose, beginning more or less in the early 19th century under the colonial Raj. Calcutta's presence as the British Empire's capital in the colony shaped much of these works and Arunava Sinha is right to claim that "Bengali fiction has always been written in a time of turmoil." The cultural upheavals of 19th century Bengal, the political crises of the early 20th century, the famines, the partitions (of both 1905 and 1947), the violent language protests, the Bangladesh war of independence—all of this had coloured and moulded the trajectories of Bengali literature.

In a new anthology helmed by Arunava Sinha, The Penguin Book of Bengali Short Stories, the veteran translator and editor of Bengali fiction takes on the task of curating a set of stories, a showcase of Bengali short-fiction through the ages. Though he claims in his introduction that these are "the personal choice of someone who found these stories worthy of full-bodied reading..." the reader would find a representative bunch that highlights much of Bengali history with minimal bloat.

It is not Arunava Sinha's first attempt, having edited The Greatest Bengali Stories Ever Told (Aleph Book Company, 2016) before. The present collection does seem to overcome the few faults its predecessor had, such as the exclusion of writers from Bangladesh. The present anthology is far more encompassing, putting on display the Bengali ghost story, the detective fiction (featuring, of course, Byomkesh), the stories of Bengali war-times, of hunger and the cruelty of caste. We have tales of modern love and anguish in the city, and of the illustrious village-life in the delta.

Fittingly, the anthology starts with Rabindranath Tagore. Tagore's story, "Dead or Alive" is an eclectic look at the oeuvre of the poet, a ghost story that seeks to answer questions of familial bonds. Kadambini, who returns from the dead, finds that her presence has changed how her loved ones view her. "Humans fear ghosts, ghosts fear humans too," Rabindranath says, "they occupy opposite banks of the river of death."

The beautifully constructed "Dead or Alive" is concise in action and deeply moving. Arunava Sinha decides to follow it up with a heart-wrenching story of low-caste life in Sarat Chandra Chattopaddhyay's "Paradise of the Wretched". In Sarat's story, the reader finds an untrammelled prose that vividly captures the dreams and despair of those cursed to be born off low-caste.

Standouts in the anthology includes Bibhutibushan's black-comedic "Drobomoyee's Sojourn in Kashi," where an elderly woman is sent to live with a religious nut, and Buddhadeva Bose's "A Life," where a schoolteacher's life, as he plans to write a dictionary, is shown with the breadth and richness of a novel. But perhaps the best of the collection can be found in Jibanananda Das's "Women" and Ashapurna Devi's "Deceiver and Deception". In the former, the writer documents a day in the life of a bored couple Hemen and Chapola: "...his face was a replica of his paunch. Chapola's face was no different from Hemen's—dreams or imaginativeness never seemed to have encroached on their visages." Their visit to friends, a couple with their own problems, soon descend into a violent conversation of jealousy, self-worth, and marriage. Das's story should be a required reading for any serious writer, wishing to portray the complex, dreary lives of young cityfolk.

The other, in Devi's story, the author takes the reader on a whirlwind of trickery. While nothing seems to happen on a surface level, the intrinsic desires of the characters, the form of a husband who comes home to find his wife might be dead, bring about the dark truths that are usually best left unsaid.

The inclusion of writers from the "other" Bengal, that is here in Bangladesh, has surely made this anthology more worthwhile and lasting, yet the selection is noticeably patchy, as only six writers have made it (most of these translations, as noted in the credits, have been taken from a single book: The Book of Dhaka, an anthology of stories set in Dhaka by Bangladeshi authors). It is still commendable that Sinha includes writers such as Akhtaruzzaman Elias, whose story "The Raincoat" is a fantastic play of anxiety, as a man wears a raincoat belonging to his brother-in-law (who had joined the freedom fighters), goes out into the pouring rain of war-time Dhaka and tries to make it back alive. But Sinha also decides to include, in the same vein, stories such as "The Weapon", a saccharine tale of poverty and crime.

Perhaps, the biggest omission is Kazi Nazrul Islam, without whom any talk of Bengali literature is incomplete and one-sided. Nazrul had been a poet and revolutionary, but his works of prose too had passion and intellectual rigour. The addition of so many novelists whose best works weren't short-stories show that Arunava Sinha selected these writers on the basis of their strength and place in Bengali Literature, therefore it is quite puzzling why he chose to leave out Nazrul.

Still, Arunava Sinha's anthology is a vastly enjoyable read and displays the richness and genius of the Bengali short story.

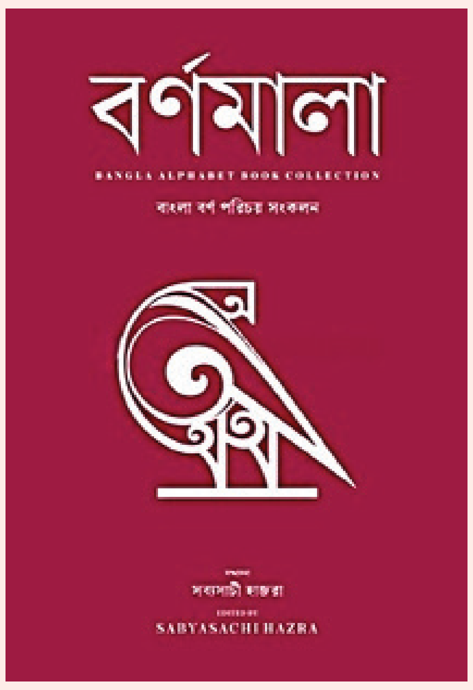
Bornomala: Bangla Alphabet Book Collection

Sabyasachi Hazra (ed.)
Kobi Prokashoni, 2014

I came across this book when I went to an exhibition titled "Primer to Press" by Sabyasachi Hazra. The book was launched there, the collection edited by Hazra himself. It assembles eight selected primers of Bangla language dating from 1849 to 1948. The book is a rich collection of specimens, and, as a whole, a well -researched testament to the evolution of Bangla letters over the years. It boasts an impressive analysis of the practice of printing and publishing used in Bangla primers and is great to have in collection for those interested in the linguistic history of Bangla lettering.



BOOK REVIEW: NONFICTION

Rising from the ashes

Review of 'Knife: Meditations After an Attempted Murder' (Penguin Random House, 2024) by Salman Rushdie

ZERTAB QUADERI

The literary world was shaken on August 12, 2022, when the news of Salman Rushdie being stabbed on stage in upstate New York started to pour in. Ironically, he was all set to talk about his involvement in a project to create a refuge in the USA for those writers who are not safe in their country. I have a few fans of Rushdie in the family so it was natural for me to exchange text messages with them as I kept one eye (ironically, again) on the TV, trying to gulp down the latest on this incident. As images of a helicopter and a stretcher being carried inside kept playing, I was anxious (like multitudes of others, I'm sure) about whether he would make it or not. Keeping his religious sentiments or lack thereof aside, Rushdie is one of the greatest authors of our times with an unparalleled sense of humour, keen observation, boundless imagination, and a sharp voice for satire. He's a wordsmith par excellence with the gift of crafting the funniest words and puns in English and Urdu. Therefore, it came as a slight relief when, on the next day of the attack, the news came that he was alive—although he was likely to lose an eye and the use of his left arm.

After being stabbed 15 times in different parts of his body, it was a miracle that he lived to tell the tale in his latest book, Knife: Meditations After an Attempted Murder. At its core, the book is a cathartic process that helps the author take stock of what ensued, recognise it, come to terms with it (somewhat), and use it to put the past behind and begin a new chapter. It is a testament to Rushdie's resilience, determination, and steel-strong willpower to use his talent and intellect to claw his way back into regular life. An emotional and personal account, Knife is a recounting of the 77-year-old author's account of what went on just before, during, and after the horrific incident.

The book is also a standing ovation to the people, especially his wife, immediate family members, doctors and other members of the medical profession, and friends from the writers' community and otherwise, who sat, stood, and slept by him and literally held him through this difficult stage to nurture him back to life. Rushdie shares chunks of his personal life, dedicating one full chapter to his wife, Rachel Eliza Griffiths, an American poet, author, photographer, and visual artist. He describes lovingly and in his usual humorous way where and how they met and how their relationship blossomed. Knife is coming to terms with a new reality for both Eliza and Rushdie. An emotional rollercoaster, it traces the upheavals in their lives and how they overcome the trauma and anger to live a life of peace and love.

ILLUSTRATION: AMREETA LETHE

Besides his marital bliss, Rushdie shows glimpses into his past turbulent relationship with his father, touches upon the famous fatwa, and shares his close relationship with his sister, nieces, and sons. For someone who has mostly read his works of fiction, it's hard to imagine what the author is like in real life. Knife gives a good portrayal of him—he's just like any other human being who's concerned about his Ralph Lauren suit at the time of the attack. Never before have I seen the man behind the works of award-winning fiction like I've done here.

Detailed depictions of Rushdie's physical and psychological suffering during his hospitalisation and rehabilitation, the loss of his freedom of movement, and his dependence on others are heart-wrenching, but the pain for the reader is a bit dulled through the dry humour—which is his forte; he does make us smile even through the worst pain imaginable. However, when it comes to the loss of his eye, it's an agony he can't get over and in his words, it's "an absence with an immensely powerful presence". The silver lining in all this is the miraculous recovery of his left hand through rigorous and painful hand therapy, proving that where there's a will, there's a way.

Rushdie is unapologetically himself in Knife. He reaffirms his belief in not believing in any religion and voices his strong opinion on a politicised and weaponised religion that causes more harm than good. By the end of the book, we see him as a strong man who revisits the place of the attack in a new Ralph Lauren suit, is not afraid to speak out, is determined to stay true to his way of storytelling with grit and gumption, and is very much basking in the love of his wife and family. He promises that the knife attack will not change his writing style or make it appear weak or smell of defeat. Through this book, Rushdie rises from the ashes like a phoenix from a life-threatening 27 seconds, once again free to do what he does best while his attacker languishes in prison.

Steering away from the memoir a little, we recently got a further glimpse into Rushdie's mode of thinking especially in light of the ongoing carnage in Palestine. As has been widely reported in various news sources including The Guardian, Rushdie has added his two cents on the genocide in Palestine and the student protests across in Western university campuses. He justifies the "emotional reaction" to the situation but questions the viability of a Palestinian state "right now" under the Hamas leadership, which, in his opinion, would lead to a "Taliban-like state" under the tutelage of Iran. Being the subject of an extremist's brutal attack himself, we may try to understand his apprehension and aversion toward another potential terrorist/religious fundamentalist nation. However, his opinion that the terrorist organisation Hamas should be mentioned in the university campus protests because "that's where this started" comes across as a bit off-key. October 7, 2023 was not when it started. And there's plenty of debate on who created the Taliban in the first place but that's a story for another day.

In The Guardian piece, Rushdie mostly walks the middle path when he opines that student demonstrations are okay as long as other students are not made to feel unsafe. He is sympathetic to the Palestinians and their cause but feels that not enough voices are being raised against Hamas. In my opinion, this is not the time to issue "safe" statements. The horrific and exponentially increasing statistics in Palestine cannot be compared to anything that we have witnessed since the persecution of the Jews almost a century back. We expect a stronger opinion from writers, artists, musicians, film makers, actors, poets, or someone who practises any form of art and has the weapon (not necessarily a knife) to make their voices count. Keeping the art separate from the artist is our job.

A do-or-die contest for Kiwis

AGENCIES

Following a stunning 84-run defeat against Afghanistan in their tournament opener, New Zealand now face a challenging task as the Kiwis need to win their remaining Group C matches in order to progress to the Super Eight.

That challenge for the Kiwis, who now stutter at the bottom of the five-team table, starts against co-hosts the West Indies at the Brian Lara Stadium in Trinidad today.

"This is essentially like a knockout game. We have got to give it everything we can," New Zealand coach Gary Stead said.

"We have to win three games. We have to win them well," Stead said, adding that he may tinker with his line-up, but will resist making vast changes.

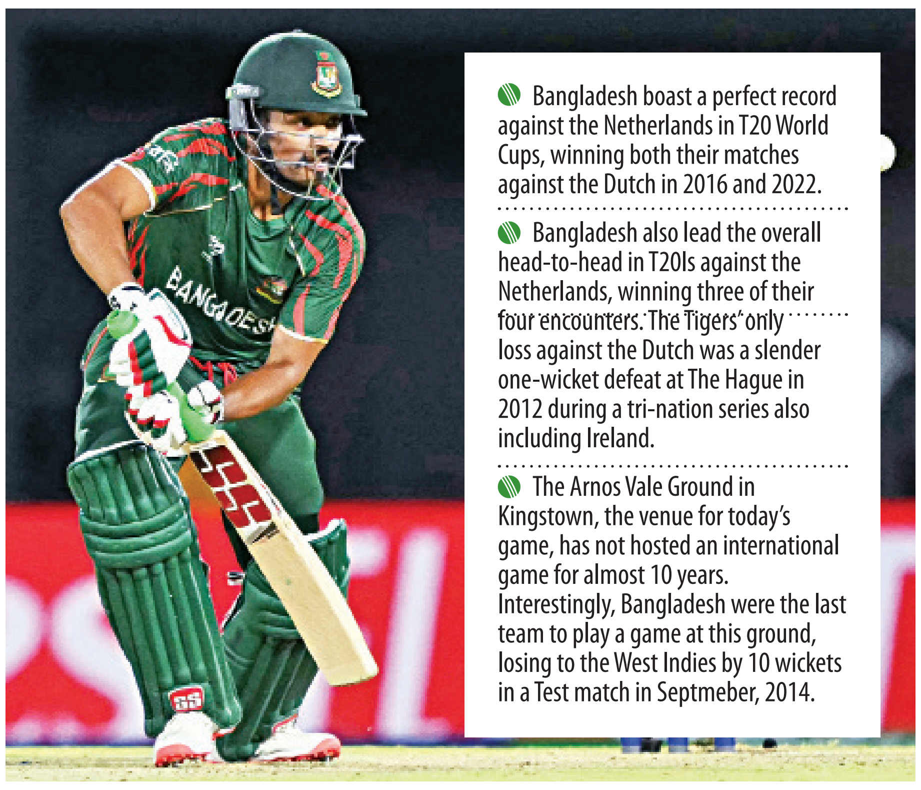
Meanwhile, with two wins in as many games, the Windies find themselves in a comfortable second position in the group, following Afghanistan. But the co-hosts will certainly be wary of a slip, especially having survived a scare of their own in their opening game when they laboured to a five-wicket win over Papua New Guinea.

Zampa first to 100

Australia leggie Adam Zampa led the rout of Namibia in their nine-wicket victory in a Group B game of the T20 World Cup in in Antigua on Tuesday. Zampa returned figures of 4-12 as he became the first Australian man to reach 100 T20I wickets. The win also saw Australia secure a Super Eight spot.

Frequent opening slot rejig yet to bear fruit

SPORTS REPORTER



- Bangladesh boast a perfect record against the Netherlands in T20 World Cups, winning both their matches against the Dutch in 2016 and 2022.
- Bangladesh also lead the overall head-to-head in T20Is against the Netherlands, winning three of their four encounters. The Tigers' only loss against the Dutch was a slender one-wicket defeat at The Hague in 2012 during a tri-nation series also including Ireland.
- The Arnos Vale Ground in Kingstown, the venue for today's game, has not hosted an international game for almost 10 years. Interestingly, Bangladesh were the last team to play a game at this ground, losing to the West Indies by 10 wickets in a Test match in Septmeber, 2014.

Bangladesh take on the Netherlands in a vital T20 World Cup game at the Arnos Vale Stadium in St. Vincent on Thursday where adaptation would be key for the distraught top-order batters. For Bangladesh, however, it would come in various forms, with team combinations also forcing them to adapt to different batting lineups.

Form troubles at the top guide the Bangladesh team management towards such changes. Earlier in March this year, head coach Chandika Hathurusingha was asked about whether they were finding stability at the top and about the then opening pair of Soumya Sarkar and Liton Das in the Sri Lanka T20Is.

"It's not about this pair but correcting what we have done wrong in the past. Because if something was working, I don't think they would have made so many changes," was Hathurusingha's reply to The Daily Star's query during a press conference.

In a nutshell, many batters have been tried in combinations, but consistency has been lacking. In Monday's South Africa fixture, team combination or opener Soumya's form concerns kept him out of the side while the Tigers unfurled another opening pair as skipper Najmul Hossain Shanto came out to open.

For Shanto, it was an opportunity to find some meaningful time and form at the crease, which he could not capitalise in a chase that was not steep.

The thing to watch for, in terms of playing eleven-wise, is what Bangladesh feel is the best combination against the Dutch. Jaker Ali Anik played the last game but did not keep wickets. Given the form of the rest of the batting unit, bar Towhid Hridoy and Mahmudullah Riyad, most of the others have experienced a difficult time of late.

The team management would have to focus on playing to their strengths, but where does that strength lie in the batting unit? The last T20I played at the Arnos Vale Stadium was in 2013 and there is no certainty that Bangladesh and Netherlands will play on a better batting surface in West Indies compared to what it was in USA.

Bangladesh have used three different opening pairs within the last six matches, and seven pairs within a year. It is surprising that they had a century opening stand in their last game of the three-match T20I series against USA and are having to change plans so soon. It also gives an idea of the inconsistency at the top, but it may also be a matter of putting trust in players.

Bangladesh batters have always dealt with slower or lower wickets. A better wicket may even see Soumya come in after being overlooked in the last game. If Shanto is to open, it leaves room for middle order to be bolstered. It may not have worked with Jaker against South Africa, but it will once again be up for discussion after that tight match ended in a disappointing loss.

Form inconsistency starts from the very top. It could also be from the top that the tone is set for better batting effort. Netherlands bowling has been up to mark in this mega event and Shanto and Tanzid Hasan Tamim would have to find an answer.

Junior hockey teams eye Asia Cup berths

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh men's and women's U-21 hockey teams left for Singapore last night to take part in the Junior AHF Cups starting from June 14 with an aim to secure berths in next month's Junior Asia Cups in their respective events.

Bangladesh, reigning champions in men's Junior AHF Cup, have been placed in Pool A along with Thailand, Sri Lanka, Indonesia and Singapore while Pool B features Oman, Chinese Taipei, China, Hong Kong, Iran and Kazakhstan, with four semifinalists advancing to the next edition of Junior Asia Cup.

Meanwhile, Bangladesh women's U-21 team, who are going to participate in this tournament for the second time, will have to battle against Chinese Taipei, Hong Kong, Thailand, Singapore, Indonesia and Sri Lanka as top four finishers will qualify for Women's Junior Asia Cup.

Both teams have taken more than one month's preparation for the tournaments but could not play any warm-up matches.

"Our target is to defend the title as we have prepared well for more than one month. It could have been better with a couple of practice matches but we are optimistic as the players came into the camp just after the Dhaka Premier League," said men's team's assistant coach Hedayetul Islam Razib on the eve of the teams' departure.

Women's team manager Tariquzzaman Nannu informed that they would try to arrange a couple of practice matches in Singapore.

"Bangladesh beat Sri Lanka and played well against Hong Kong in 2019 while the girls also performed well against Chinese Taipei and Indonesia in another five-a-side tournament. So we are hoping to finish among the top four," Nannu told The Daily Star.

Batters yet to pull their weight

Batting will be at the forefront of Bangladesh's agenda after consecutive underwhelming efforts going into their T20 World Cup Group D fixture against the Netherlands at the Arnos Vale Stadium in Kingstown today.

Bangladesh almost made a meal of their 124-run chase against Sri Lanka in their two-wicket win in Dallas and were on the wrong end of the results, falling short by four runs, when they had to chase 113 against South Africa in their second match in New York.

While the bowlers delivered excellent efforts in both matches, the batters, with the exception of in-form Towhid Hridoy, have largely misfired and failed to pull their weight.

Mujib's time in Kolkata was vital for his political upbringing

Goutam Ghose tells Star about his documentary

PARTHA PRATIM BHATTACHARJEE

The 1940s was a tumultuous period in Kolkata politically and economically. The man-made famine of 1943, the Hindu-Muslim riots and the great Calcutta killings ravaged the socio-economic fabric of the society in east and west Bengal -- the effects of which are still felt.

Then there was Netaji Subhas Chandra Bose's great escape from India and the partition of the subcontinent.

All these events left a lasting imprint on the young mind of Sheikh Mujibur Rahman in his formative years as a student and a political activist.

Mujib spent only five years in Kolkata from 1942 to 1947. But his experiences as a student activist in that short time contributed to shaping his political thoughts and vision of an inclusive economic and secular political culture.

The one lasting thread running through his stay in Kolkata was his raw courage in the face of adverse situations.

St Martin's to start getting supplies from today

Island almost out of essentials

MOKAMMEL SHUVO, Cox's Bazar

Two trawlers from Teknaf will sail for the St Martin's today with essentials to ease the food crisis on the island, said Yamin Hossain, additional district magistrate of Cox's Bazar, yesterday.

The Coast Guard will provide security for safe transportation of the essentials, he said after an emergency meeting of officials at the deputy commissioner's office.

Operation of passenger and cargo vessels on this route remains suspended after several vessels were fired upon from Myanmar since last Thursday. This led to shortage of food and other essential supplies in the island.

Within a day or two, a vessel from Cox's Bazar's BIWTA jetty will make regular trips to the island to keep it supplied, the additional district magistrate added.

If needed, trawlers from Bholarchar in Teknaf will

Gaza ceasefire plan hangs in balance

Hamas seeks changes; Blinken says some proposals unworkable; 38 more Palestinians killed in Israeli strikes

REUTERS, Cairo

- Israel, Hamas committed war crimes in Gaza: UN inquiry
- Lebanon's Hezbollah fires barrages of rockets at Israel
- Gaza death toll rises to 37,202

US Secretary of State Antony Blinken said yesterday that Hamas had proposed numerous changes, some unworkable, to a US-backed proposal for a ceasefire in Gaza, but that mediators were determined to close the gaps.

The proposal outlined by US President Joe Biden envisages a truce and a phased release of Israeli hostages in Gaza in exchange for Palestinians jailed in Israel, ultimately leading to a permanent end to the offensive.

At a press conference with Qatar's prime minister in Doha, Blinken said some of the counter-proposals from Hamas administering Gaza had sought to amend terms that it had accepted in previous talks.

"Hamas could have answered with a single word: Yes," Blinken said. "Instead, Hamas waited nearly two weeks and then proposed more changes, a number of which go beyond positions that it had previously taken and accepted."

The US has said Israel has accepted its proposal, but Israel has not publicly stated this.

Izzat al-Rishq from Hamas' political bureau said its formal response to the US proposal was "responsible, serious and positive" and "opens up a wide pathway" for an accord.

Hamas also wants written guarantees from the US on the ceasefire plan, two Egyptian security sources said.

Major powers are intensifying efforts to halt the conflict in part to prevent it spiralling into a regional war, with a dangerous flashpoint being the escalating hostilities on the Lebanese-Israeli border.

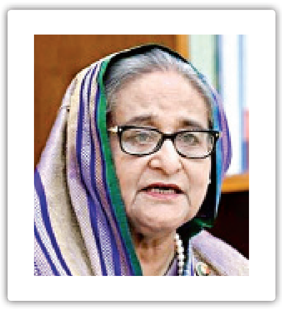
Lebanon's Hezbollah militia, backed by Iran, fired barrages of rockets at Israel yesterday in retaliation for the killing of a senior Hezbollah field commander. Israel said it had in turn attacked the launch sites from the air.

AUG 21 GRENADE ATTACK CASE

Efforts on to arrest 15 fugitive convicts including Tarique

PM tells parliament

STAFF CORRESPONDENT



Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina told parliament yesterday that 15 convicts in the August 21 grenade attack case, including BNP acting chairman Tarique Rahman, are absconding and efforts are on to arrest them.

"Out of the 49 convicts, 34 were arrested," she said in response to a question from Farida Yasmin, Awami League MP from a reserved seat, during the question-answer session.

With Speaker Shirin Sharmin Chaudhury, the session was held at the beginning of the day's sitting.

"Among the convicts, 19 were sentenced to death and 19 to life imprisonment, and the rest got different jail terms," said Hasina, also leader of the House, adding that Dhaka's Speedy Trial Tribunal-1 passed the judgment on October 10, 2018.

She said Interpol issued red notices against convicts Maulana Tajuddin, Harris Chowdhury, and Ratul Ahmed Babu alias Ratul Babu, who are now abroad.

Two cases -- one under the penal code and another under the Explosive Substances Act -- were filed over the grenade attack on AL's anti-terrorism rally on the capital's Bangabandhu Avenue on August 21, 2004.

The PM said two charge sheets were filed against 52 people in the cases.

She said that out of the 52 charge-sheeted accused, three were executed in other cases before the verdict was declared.

Kuwait fire kills 49 Indian workers

Dozens injured

AFP, Kuwait City

A fire in Kuwait killed 49 people, all Indian nationals, when it ripped through a building housing nearly 200 foreign workers yesterday, the government said.

The blaze, which broke out in the six-storey building south of Kuwait City around dawn, also left dozens injured, the health ministry said.

Flames engulfed the lower floors as black smoke poured out of the upper-storey windows, unverified images posted on social media showed.

The interior ministry revised the death toll up to 49, from 35 earlier, after forensic teams scoured the charred building.

"The number of deaths as a result of the fire in the workers' building... has risen to 49," the ministry said.

The official Kuwait News Agency quoted Health Minister Ahmed al-Awadhi as saying hospitals had received 56 people injured in the fire in the Mangaf area, which is heavily populated with migrant workers.

The building, whose exterior was blackened with soot, housed 196 workers, according to information given to the interior minister by their employer.

AL leader knew about his murder but kept mum

Say investigators

MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN

Investigators have found evidence that Saidul Karim Mintu, general secretary of Jhenaidah Awami League, knew about MP Anwarul Azim Anar's murder before it was made public.

MP AZIM
MURDER

Mintu learnt about the lawmaker's killing and even got the photos on May 16, but did not inform the law enforcers or the victim's family of the matter.

The detectives got the information by interrogating Kazi Kamal Ahmed Babu, relief and social welfare affairs secretary of Jhenaidah AL, and analysing his mobile phone records.

Even Babu, who is now on a seven-day remand, told the Detective Branch of Dhaka Metropolitan Police that he gave his phones to Mintu and shared information of the murder with him.

Over phone, Babu communicated with Amanullah alias Shimul Bhuiyan, the coordinator of the murder. Amanullah and Babu in their earlier statements said they exchanged photos of the murder via WhatsApp and held

Free rein for gold smugglers in Jhenaidah

Azim 'invented' a token system for carriers, cops

MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN and RASHIDUL HASAN

Since he was recruited as a carrier about six months ago, Sohel (real name withheld) transported smuggled golds on his motorbike from Jashore to Jhenaidah's Maheshpur border at least 27 times.

He was arrested by local police in January but came out of jail within weeks.

Ever since, police never stopped him as his bike's registration number was passed on to the local police as part of the deal with smuggling kingpins, Sohel told The Daily Star during a recent visit to the area.

The now slain Jhenaidah MP Anwarul Azim Anar is said to have invented this system, known as "token system," for easy movement of smuggled gold.

Secrecy in this gold smuggling operations is of utmost importance. So carriers like Sohel do not even know the names of their recruiters as well as the consignment receivers at the border.

"For the job, I would receive a monthly salary of Tk 40,000, no matter how many consignments I carried. However, the delivery operations remain suspended for the last few weeks," said Sohel, also a support staffer at a Jashore madrasa.

According to him, there are dozens of carriers like him whose only job is to pick up consignments from Jashore or other nearby districts and drop them off at Maheshpur border.

Premier all-rounder Shakib Al Hasan returned to form to put Bangladesh on the brink of the Super Eight of the ongoing T20 World Cup with a convincing 25-run win over the Netherlands in a Group D encounter at the Arnos Vale Ground in Kingstown on Thursday.

Shakib's statement-making 46-ball 64 that saw Bangladesh set a competitive 160-run target was well-complimented by young leg-spinner Rishad Hossain, who picked up two crucial wickets in one over, to help the Tigers sway the momentum of the game towards them, as the Tigers restricted the Netherlands to 134 for eight.

Bangladesh may lose a third of agri output by 2050

Says a recent WB report

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Climate variability could result in the loss of one-third of Bangladesh's agricultural GDP by 2050, said a recent World Bank report.

By 2040, it could cause the loss of 6.5 percent of the country's cropland, said the report titled 'Framework for Implementing Green Growth in Bangladesh'.

The report, which was released yesterday, said climate variability could result in the loss of 18 percent of the cropland in southern Bangladesh.

Bangladesh faced an estimated average annual loss of $1 billion (0.7 percent of GDP) from tropical cyclones alone.

Also, the coastal population is at risk from events such as 100-year coastal floods, which could become more frequent.

"Climate and other environmental hazards have greater impacts on the poor and other vulnerable groups. Efforts to reduce poverty, particularly amongst populations whose livelihoods rely heavily on natural resources,

St Martin's running out of supplies

Explosions in Myanmar rock neighbourhoods in Teknaf

MOKAMMEL SHUVO, Cox's Bazar

Amid growing skirmishes between the Myanmar military and the Arakan Army across the border, movement of vessels between Teknaf and the Saint Martin's Island has become risky, causing uncertainty over supply of food and other essentials to the island.

Bangladesh government's initiative to send provisions to the island had to be postponed yesterday, as the fighting along the border escalated, threatening the safety of vessels on the Naf river.

The Saint Martin's Island is almost out of food and other supplies after the suspension of vessel movement on the usual route via the Naf. Over the last few days, several trawlers and speedboats had been fired upon from across the border.

St Martin's, which can only be accessed by boats, has not had regular supplies sent to it since June 6.

The tiny island depends on the mainland for almost all of its supplies.

The Cox's Bazar administration yesterday postponed its move to send two supply trawlers to the island from Teknaf. The tourist ship Baro Awlia would set sail for the island from the Cox's Bazar BIWTA jetty today with passengers, food, and supplies, said Mohammad Adnan Chowdhury, Teknaf upazila nirbahi officer.

Mujibor Rahman, chairman of St Martin's Union Parishad, said the food crisis on the island was turning severe.

নিরাপদ মাংস প্রক্রিয়াকরণ ও সংরক্ষণ

- কোরবানির প্রাণী জবাই থেকে শুরু করে মাংস কাটা, সংরক্ষণের সঙ্গে সংশ্লিষ্ট সকল সরঞ্জামাদি (দা,ছুরি,চাটাই,হাড়ি,বস্তা ইত্যাদি) জীবাণুমুক্ত করে নিতে হবে। যেসব ব্যক্তি এই কাজগুলো করবেন তাঁরাও নিজেদের পরিচ্ছন্নতা নিশ্চিত করবেন।
- জবাইকৃত প্রাণীর মৃত্যু নিশ্চিত হওয়ার পরে শরীর হতে চামড়া ছাড়ানোর কাজ শুরু করতে হবে।
- প্রাণীর চামড়া ছাড়ানোর সময়ে এবং মাংস কাটার সময় যেন কোনো ক্ষতিকর অণুজীব মাংসে যুক্ত না হতে পারে সেটা নিশ্চিত করতে হবে। কুকুর, বিড়াল, হাঁস-মুরগি, পোকামাকড়, মাছি বা অন্যান্য প্রাণী দ্বারা মাংসকে যেন কোনো অণুজীব সংক্রমণ না হয় সেদিকে বিশেষ নজর দিতে হবে।
- মাংস কাটার সময়ে প্রাণীর শরীরের কোনো রোগাক্রান্ত অংশ পাওয়া গেলে সতর্কতার সঙ্গে সেটা আলাদা করে ফেলতে হবে। আলাদা করা অংশটুকু স্বাস্থ্যসম্মত উপায়ে মাটি চাপা দেয়ার ব্যবস্থা নিতে হবে।
- মাংস সংগ্রহ শেষে জবাইয়ের স্থান ও মাংস প্রক্রিয়াকরণের স্থান জীবাণুমুক্ত করতে হবে এবং বর্জ্য অপসারণের ব্যবস্থা নিতে হবে।
- কাঁচা মাংস ৪ ঘণ্টার বেশি সময় স্বাভাবিক তাপমাত্রায় (Room Temperature) সংরক্ষণ করা থেকে বিরত থাকুন।
- সবসময় কাঁচা ও রান্না করা মাংস আলাদা আলাদা স্থানে রাখুন। কাঁচা মাংসে থাকা ক্ষতিকর অণুজীব রান্না করা মাংসে সংক্রমিত (Cross Contamination) হতে পারে।
- মাংসের রক্ত ধুয়ে, ভালো মতো পানি ঝরিয়ে তারপর সংরক্ষণ করুন।
- সংরক্ষণের জন্য সঠিকভাবে মাংসে জ্বাল দিয়ে রাখতে হবে এবং ছয় ঘণ্টা পরপর সেটা পুনরায় জ্বাল দেয়া হলে মাংস নষ্ট হওয়ার ঝুঁকি কম থাকে।

পুষ্টিমান বজায় রেখে রান্না ও পরিমিত খাদ্যাভ্যাস

- রান্নার আগেই মাংসের দৃশ্যমান চর্বি কেটে আলাদা করে ফেললে অতিরিক্ত চর্বির ক্ষতিকর প্রভাব এড়ানো যায়।
- রান্নার সময় মাংসের টুকরোগুলো ছোট করে কাটলে সেই সঙ্গে মাংসটি টক দই, লেবুর রস, সিরকা, পেঁপে বাটা দিয়ে মেখে রাখলে একদিকে যেমন কম সময়ে মাংস সেদ্ধ হয়, তেমনি মাংসের চর্বির ক্ষতিকর প্রভাব অনেকটাই কমিয়ে যায়।
- ঈদ ও ঈদ পরবর্তী সময়ে খাবারের মধ্যে মাংসের পাশাপাশি কিছু আঁশযুক্ত খাবার রাখা ভালো যেমন, শাক-সবজি, বিভিন্ন ফল বা ফলের সালাদ ইত্যাদি। মাংস সাধারণ সময়ের চেয়ে বেশি খাওয়ার ফলে অনেক সময় কোষ্ঠকাঠিন্য দেখা যায়। আঁশজাতীয় খাবার খেলে এই ধরনের জটিলতা কম হবে।
- লাল মাংসে (Red Meat-গরু,খাসি প্রভৃতি প্রাণীর মাংস) হজমে দেহের প্রচুর পানি পরিশোষিত হয়। তাই দৈনিক অন্তত ৮-১৪ গ্লাস পানি অথবা ২.৫-৩.৫ লিটার পানি পান করুন। পাশাপাশি তাজা ফলের শরবত, ইসবগুলের ভুষি ও অন্যান্য তরল খাবার বেশি করে খাওয়া স্বাস্থ্যের জন্য উপকারী।
- কোরবানির দিনে অন্যান্য সময়ের তুলনায় মাংস বেশি খাওয়া হয়। তাই অতিরিক্ত ক্যালরি পোড়াতে প্রতিদিন নিয়মিত হাঁটা বা ব্যায়াম (শারীরিক পরিশ্রম) করা ভালো।
- প্রাণীর মগজ, কলিজা সেই সঙ্গে ভোলে সবচেয়ে বেশি চর্বি থাকে, তাই খাওয়ার সময় সেগুলো পরিমিত খাওয়াই ভাল।
- লাল মাংসে "Saturated Fat" বা সম্পৃক্ত চর্বি বেশি পরিমাণে থাকে। এটি অতিরিক্ত গ্রহণ করলে ওজন বাড়ার পাশাপাশি রক্তনালিতে চর্বি জমার ঝুঁকি সৃষ্টি হয়, যার ফলে রক্তচাপ, স্ট্রোক ও হার্ট অ্যাটাকের ঝুঁকি বাড়ে। তাই পরিমিত পরিমাণে মাংস গ্রহণ করা স্বাস্থ্যের জন্য উপকারী।

"We don't have to do anything. The smuggling syndicate members do all the job," he said.

According to intelligence and police sources, about 40 bikers are engaged in carrying consignments to Jashore and Jhenidah borders.

"We deliver the consignment to a designated place at the border, where another carrier receives it. The consignment is then smuggled into India considering the border security situation," a second carrier said.

According to him, the carriers at the border who smuggle the gold into India get Tk 1 to Tk 2 lakh, depending on the consignment size.

Most carriers have gone into hiding after Bangladesh and India police opened an investigation into the murder mystery surrounding Jhenaidah-4 MP Anwarul Azim Anar in Kolkata, although a number of consignments crossed into India in recent days, according to sources.

Azim was one of the influential kingpins who used to control the smuggling racket since Maheshpur became a safe gateway, as parts of its border with India have no fence, according to four carriers, three local elected representatives and an intelligence source.

AZIM: INVENTOR OF TOKEN SYSTEM

Gold smuggling through this border has been taking place for the last four to five decades, with Azim assuming a leading role about 10 years ago, they said.

But long before that, he started smuggling gold into India through a group of bikers in 1986, when he was a student and actively involved with the Purbo Banglar Communist Party, according to an intelligence source.

Over time, he came up with the idea of recruiting salaried carriers and introducing a token system for law enforcers, the intelligence source adds.

The token system works as a gate pass: when carriers produce it, law enforcers do not "disturb" them. In exchange, the law enforcers get a "handsome cut".

Abul Kalam Azad, chairman of Barobazar Union Parishad, said he is aware of the token system.

"Law enforcers would not stop the bike once you showed the token. But those days are gone now that we have declared a war against smuggling," he told The Daily Star.

According to the intelligence source, Azad was once part of Azim's racket, an allegation Azad rejected.

"I am not involved with gold smuggling," he said, even before this newspaper could finish asking him the question about his link.

Mahbubur Rahman, officer-in-charge of Maheshpur Police Station, denied having any facilitating role in the smuggling operations.

"We do not know about any token system. Police along with the Border Guard Bangladesh are working round the clock to stop all sorts of smuggling, including gold," he said.

A HOTSPOT

A senior police official in the district admitted that Maheshpur is a hotspot for smuggling gold into India. "But we often cannot take action as public representatives are involved."

According to police sources, smuggled gold enters Bangladesh mainly from Saudi Arabia, Dubai, Singapore and Malaysia through Dhaka, Sylhet and Chattogram airports.

A significant portion of the gold is then smuggled into India through Chuadanga, Jashore and Jhenaidah borders, with Jhenidah's Matila border point being one of the most preferred routes. Sometimes, the racket uses rail routes as well, police sources said.

Instead of directly smuggling gold into India from other countries, smugglers use Bangladesh as a transit route as both the legal system and payment method involving gold are stricter in the neighbouring country.

MASTERMIND UNTOUCHED

Over the years, police and BGB members seized some gold consignments and arrested some carriers, but the masterminds have always remained untouched.

Any information leak, even the possibility of it, can lead to murders.

On January 17 this year, two men were shot dead in Baghadanga village of Maheshpur following a dispute over a gold consignment.

According to police and local journalists, the killings are linked to a gold consignment weighing 4.66 kilogrammes.

The 58 BGB battalion seized the consignment in the morning and the two were killed in the afternoon. It later emerged that the consignment's owner fled to India after the incident.

OC Mahbubur Rahman said an investigation into the matter is underway.

Local BGB seized around 38.4 kgs of gold in 2022, around 37.56 kgs in 2023, and 27 kgs in the first three months of this year.

At least 30 people were arrested in connection with the seizures and 25 cases were filed, but police could not track down a single mastermind in any of the cases.

Incidents of any gold carriers facing punishments are also rare. In the last 10 years, only two carriers have been handed a one-year jail term and a fine of Tk 50,000 each.

Lt Col Shah Md Azizush Shahid, commander of the Maheshpur 58 BGB battalion, said in most cases, they can only arrest the carriers.

"We cannot track down the mastermind as we are not an investigation agency. We simply hand the arrestees over to the police, who carry out the probe," he said.

continue to be hampered by climate change," the WB said in the report.

Green growth -- which balances economic prosperity with environmental compliance, benefits and protection -- can be a strong and sustainable driver of growth.

Subsequently, the report proposed nine key policy directions that aim to achieve three overarching objectives: effective environmental governance and energy transition, new engines and skills for green growth and a just transition to a resilient, green and healthy society.

The policy directions include strengthening environmental governance, promoting renewable energy trade, promoting inclusive connectivity through green transport and logistics systems, investing in green industries and human capital, and improving public health and wellbeing, among others.

It is important that all the recommended policies work together for them to be successful, the report said.

"Global experience shows that growth that harms the environment cannot be sustained. On the other hand, green growth can offer a strong and effective way to reduce poverty while safeguarding our environment, essentially serving as a catalyst for growth," said Abdoulaye Seck, the WB's country director for Bhutan and Bangladesh.

Highlighting several shortcomings of budget implementation in climate financing, the report says Bangladesh has multiple environmental laws, regulations and plans and yet demonstrates weak performance in environmental management.

Implementation challenges primarily relate to two issues.

One is a case for prioritisation of public investment within the annual development programme managed by the planning ministry together with line ministries.

Second, limited coordination exists between the ADP formulation process and the annual budget process, which is managed by the finance ministry.

"These shortcomings have resulted in an inefficient public investment management system, with insufficient budgetary allocations to investment projects and a low execution rate," the WB said in the report.

Bangladesh's climate-related allocation currently stands at 7.5 percent of the total budget or 0.8 percent of GDP.

The report also highlighted weaknesses in Bangladesh's financial sector weaknesses.

Structural weaknesses in Bangladesh's banking system and institutional bottlenecks pose some of the biggest challenges to increasing the volume and range of green financing instruments, resulting in green investments being perceived as riskier than non-green ones.

"Borrowers face huge hurdles in adopting and financing green practices, resulting in insufficient financial flows and an inadequate pipeline of projects," the WB said.

The report also proposed investing in urban mass transit systems that are green, accessible, reliable and inclusive.

It also called for implementing green building policies and guidelines, promoting the use of electronic vehicles (2/3 wheelers) for inclusive green growth, and promoting pedestrian and bicycle-friendly urban streets.

St Martin's running out of supplies

Stocks were running out, resulting in prices skyrocketing.

Fierce clashes were going on between Myanmar junta forces and the rebel Arakan Army in Rakhine state.

Locals of Teknaf said they spent a sleepless night on Wednesday as the sounds of heavy explosions from Myanmar shook their neighbourhoods until 4:00pm yesterday.

A local, Abdur Rahman, said the explosions were so loud that people in his neighbourhood were in a state of panic.

Residents of Teknaf said two Myanmarese warships reached the Naf, on the Myanmar side across Shah Porir Dwip, Wednesday afternoon and then the fighting intensified.

Quoting local public representatives, Teknaf UNO Adnan said warplanes and helicopters were used and at least 300 explosions were heard.

Members of Border Guard Bangladesh and Bangladesh Coast Guard are on alert, he added.

Meanwhile, about 280 people -- mostly labourers who had gone to the island for work -- reached Teknaf on small boats, said Abdur Rashid, president of Trawler Owners' Association of Teknaf-St Martin's route.

The boats avoided the Naf, where the water is usually calm, and reached the west side of Shah Porir Dwip braving the choppy sea.

Kefayet Ullah, a journalist of St Martin's Island, said the sea was rough and travelling on a fishing trawler could be risky.

But many locals of the island who had been stuck in Teknaf braved the rough sea and went home on fishing trawlers.

Meanwhile, Dhaka has written to Naypyidaw, protesting incidents of shooting at Bangladeshi trawlers between Teknaf and the St Martin's Island.

Nobody of Bangladesh should be targeted, a foreign ministry official told The Daily Star yesterday, adding that Bangladesh had protested incidents of shelling inside its territory before.

"Any conflict inside Myanmar is their internal affair, but that should not affect the people and properties in Bangladesh," the official said.

The conflict between the Myanmar junta force and the Arakan Army intensified since February. The junta troops had to step back and many fled to Bangladesh during battles.

The Arakan Army states that the objective of its armed revolution is to restore the sovereignty of the Arakan people.

Rejoinder, our reply was working for last 06 (six) months on the Airbus was given the responsibility to evaluate the earlier report and submit its report.

It is worth mentioning that no new committee/second committee was formed rather due to normal retirement of the Committee Chairman from the service, then the Co-Chairman was given the responsibility of the existing TFC.

The same TFC applied the standard apps used by other airlines in calculating fluctuation of prices like cost of ticket, fuel and other incidental expenses and earning. So the TFC did not make a U-turn as alleged rather used technology to provide right picture about the purchase.

The report also mentions that Biman is a losing concern about which we would like to state firmly that Biman is always on the operational profit and has been able to pay all its dues and installments to all the foreign companies including Boeing.

It is noteworthy that, Biman Bangladesh Airlines is a 100% state-owned national flag carrier limited company and fully covers all operating expenses including aircraft purchase, payment of advance installments and maintenance related expenses with its own income.

Biman is being rated AAA long term rating by Dun & Bradstreet South Asia Middle East Ltd., a renowned US credit rating agency. During Covid pandemic Biman was given BDT1000 Crore by the Government as loan under incentive package but The Daily Star failed to mention that the amount with interest was paid back to the Government in less than 01 (one) year.

Besides, there are standard laid down policies for purchasing new aircraft to the fleet. Aircraft procurement process is conducted by following the said policy without any deviation. Discussions with Airbus have recently started with the signing of a Joint Communique on the acquisition of Airbus and mutual cooperation in the aviation sector.

At the same time, discussions are ongoing with Biman's long-time tested business partner, the aircraft manufacturer Boeing Company. The final decision will be made public through press briefing after the conclusion of due internal process. Besides, as part of the expansion process, the pilot recruitment program is currently ongoing.

The national flag carrier, Biman Bangladesh Airlines has been providing regular passenger and cargo services as well as operating Hajj flights, VVIP flights, UN mission flights and special flights on various national and international calamities like Covid-19.

With a fleet of only 21 (twenty-one) state-of-the-art aircraft, Biman Bangladesh Airlines currently operates regular flights to 23 (twenty-three) international and 8 (eight) domestic destinations despite many limitations. Recently, 04 (four) new routes have been launched by the existing 21 (twenty-one) aircraft. It may be noted here that out of 21 (twenty-one) aircraft, only 10 (ten) are used for long range, 06 (six) short range and 05 (five) domestic destinations.

In order to increase the number of passengers by air, in the coming days, Biman Bangladesh Airlines is constantly working to expand the passenger services to destinations like Male, Kunming, New York, Sydney, Wuhan, Jakarta, Seoul etc. Due to various reasons, it has not been possible to add the required number of aircraft to the fleet till now. As a result, it is not possible to launch flights on many attractive routes despite of huge demand.

In order to increase the network and quality of passenger services in keeping pace with the increasing passengers demand, a plan has already been adopted to expand the aircraft fleet from 21 (twenty-one) to 47 (forty-seven) by 2035. For this purpose, the process of reviewing the proposals of the aircraft manufacturers is ongoing as per the guidelines of the Biman Board of Directors and the Ministry of Civil Aviation and Tourism.

In order to cope with the competitive aviation business and to operate business profitably, when a process for procurement of aircraft is underway to implement future fleet expansion which is expected to go through various stages before finalization, such kind of news are being used to mislead the public with ill intention by making concocted story with speculative and unsubstantiated information.

Such kinds of news damages the image of the state flag carrier Biman Bangladesh Airlines. Biman Bangladesh Airlines is a state-owned airline which sometimes has to operate under the requirement of the nation. Biman's Positive contribution seldom gets media coverage.

A case in point is the recent Malaysian Flights where Biman charged only about BDT70,000 whereas other airlines charged over BDT100,000 per passenger. The Daily Star failed to report this comparison to the public.

Biman has consistently maintained its success as a profitable company. Biman has been making profit consistently especially in the last three years (post-Covid period) and is operating profitably in the current fiscal year as well.

In such a situation, Biman Management urges all concerned to stop publishing misleading news that creates negative impression in the public mind based on unsupported, partial and false information and refrain from trying to hinder the development of Biman Bangladesh Airlines.

THE DAILY STAR'S RESPONSE

Only selective portions of Biman's 854-word rejoinder directly pertains to the report in question while the rest is details in length the many achievements of the national flag carrier, which are not relevant to the topic at hand.

The Daily Star acknowledges the usage of the term "new committee" and only in that regard, we stand corrected – but we still stand by the fact that reconstituted committee did not have the same members.

While the chairman of the committee retired and went back to his mother organisation (Bangladesh Air Force) in the time period between the two reports, that is hardly the only change in constitution of the committee.

The general manager of finance and accounts, the general manger of internal audit, a deputy secretary of the Ministry of Civil Aviation and Tourism (MoCAT) and the dean of aviation standardisation of the regulations and safety department from Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman Aviation and Aerospace University (BSMRAAU) were noticeably missing from the reconstituted committee.

The reconstituted (second) committee additionally had the director of engineering and material management, the deputy general manager of cost and budget, the dean of the faculty of aviation engineering and technology of BSMRAAU, and a senior assistant secretary from MoCAT – all new faces in the committee that produced the second report.

The first committee had 20 members, meaning 25 percent of the committee was reconstituted for the second evaluation.

Given that the reconstituted committee had three days to overturn the evaluation, the four new members out of 19 hardly had any time to fully acquaint themselves with the complex research this issue required and come to a conclusion.

The fact still remains, that this committee was given such a short time – which was not contested by the rejoinder – to evaluate a multimillion dollar deal that will impact the aviation sector in next two decades to follow.

The rejoinder said that the technofinancial committee used "technology" and "standard apps" to provide the "right picture" about the purchase – both vague terms. This begs the question – was the first committee not using technology to create their extremely detailed and technically exhaustive report?

A comparison between the two reports that they are differ mainly in two regards: the cash-flow statement and the recommendation about whether or not to procure the aircrafts.

The two reports are almost identical in the sections detailing the challenges of inducting Airbus planes, and the estimates of investment required.

This includes the cost estimates for maintenance, cost estimates for training and recruitment, and details on how the planes will be financed and what the financial packages will be.

This raises the question – if "technology" was used to arrive at different finding for profit and loss, then why are the sections on evaluation of investment estimates identical? At no point in its second evaluation report or Biman's rejoinder has Biman shown how it overcame these investment challenges to arrive at the net profit estimates that it did.

About losses – the newspaper simply detailed out which sectors were not profitable, and cited audit objections made by the government's Commercial Audit Directorate that were submitted to a Parliamentary Standing Committee.

The Directorate's report said that in the 2022-23 fiscal, Biman Bangladesh Airlines made a net loss of Tk 259.1 million (Tk 25 crore 91 lakh) in its main airline business. The report also detailed that Biman concealed its liabilities, e.g. money owed to Civil Aviation Authority of Bangladesh.

The rejoinder stated that a plan has already been adopted to expand the aircraft fleet from 21 (twenty-one) to 47 (forty-seven) by 2035. The Daily Star is in possession of documents showing that at the time of publication, the Biman Fleet Planning Committee's permission had not been taken before making strides in procuring Airbus planes, a deviation from Biman's own procurement policy.

The Daily Star stands by its report.

the offensive that began on October 7, the Gaza health ministry said in a statement yesterday. Some 30 Palestinians were killed in the previous 24 hours, the ministry added.

In a statement early yesterday, Hamas urged Blinken to put "direct pressure" on Israel for permanent Gaza ceasefire.

"He continues to talk about Israel's agreement of the latest (ceasefire) proposal, but we have not heard any Israeli official speak out on this," it said.

Israel is standing behind a ceasefire proposal for the eight-month-old offensive in the Gaza Strip, White House National Security Adviser Jake Sullivan said yesterday, and the goal is to bridge gaps with Hamas and get to a deal soon.

Speaking to reporters on the sidelines of a Group of Seven (G7) meeting of leaders in southern Italy, Sullivan said the world should encourage the Palestinian group to accept the proposal and avoid stalemate.

The offensive in Gaza has led to widespread destruction of homes and other infrastructure, with hospitals out of service and the UN warning of famine.

Singer's commitment to improving quality of life

MHM Fairoz
Managing Director and CEO
Singer Bangladesh Ltd.

What trends are you observing in consumer behaviour during this Eid season? Which types of home appliances have the highest demand? Can you share any projections or expectations for this year's Eid sales compared to the previous years?

Singer Bangladesh Ltd. is one of the leading consumer durable companies in the country. We have always catered to the needs of consumers in our 118 years of operation in Bangladesh. Bangladesh has immense potential to become the 9th biggest economy in the world by 2030. We are also aiming to become a $1 trillion economy by 2040. We are preparing to become a part of this growth journey. With the growth of the economy, consumer behaviours are also changing rapidly.

Concept Store

This Eid season, consumers are looking for refrigerators with more capacity. Simultaneously, customers are also looking for appliances at affordable prices. Direct-cool refrigerators have always had a higher demand. The demand for no-frost refrigerators is also increasing. Eid-ul-Adha always comes with an increasing demand for deep freezers, which has remained the same.

As the T20 World Cup is ongoing, there is a good demand for LED TVs as well. We have our flagship Singer Primax series to serve these needs. Customers are also looking for variations in appliances like microwave ovens and grinders. We are expecting a substantial growth in sales compared to the previous year.

What special offers or promotions is Singer introducing for customers this Eid?

Singer is offering a wide array of consumer promotions for Eid-ul-Adha. As you know, Turkish superstar Burak Özçivit is now the brand ambassador of Singer Beko's consumer brand. During his visit to Bangladesh, some of our customers had a chance to meet him. The opportunity to fly to Istanbul to meet him is also up for grabs.

We are also offering up to a 100 percent discount on refrigerators and freezers through scratch cards and up to Tk 20,000 discount in exchange offers on selective models. We are offering refrigerators starting at only a monthly instalment of Tk 1,677.

Customers can also purchase the Singer LED TV and get a chance to win one for free. We are offering up to a 12 percent discount on Singer Green inverter AC.

How do you anticipate the recent national budget will impact the home appliances market, both in terms of consumer spending and the cost of business? From your perspective, what are the key challenges and opportunities facing the home appliances industry in the coming years, and how is Singer preparing for them?

In our 118 years of operations, we have always been compliant with government policies. However, we are concerned about the proposed budgetary changes for the 2024-25 fiscal year, particularly the ones to potentially impact the step-down tax exemption for 10 years (SRO 104 of 2020), and customs and VAT incentives offered to the unit investors of the private economic zones.

BEZA has been instrumental in attracting significant investments to Bangladesh's Economic Zones based on the Tax Exemption, Customs and VAT incentives framework. The concept of the economic zone is a milestone towards planned industrialization in Bangladesh, which will certainly lead to accelerated revenue mobilization in the future. In response to the government's planned industrialization initiatives, Singer Bangladesh Ltd. invested $78 million in the Bangladesh Special Economic Zones (BSEZ) and a step-down tax exemption for 10 years was the cornerstone of the decision-making process. The latest budget proposal can potentially hamper the prospect and feasibility of this investment.

Operating costs within private economic zones are significantly higher due to the rental/lease model with an upfront payment of the entire lease value. This leaves a zero asset base in the end. Fiscal incentives may partially offset these additional expenses. Withdrawing tax exemption for private economic zones could negatively impact the profitability and competitive edge of our ongoing project right before it opens commercial operation. This uncertainty could discourage future investments as well.

We expect that the government will go through with the promised tax exemption and other incentives for the investors, who are already committed to projects under the current framework. This will uphold a favourable investment climate in BEZA and ensure the financial viability of ongoing ventures.

Can you share any upcoming product innovations or technological advancements that Singer is working on to meet future consumer demands and stay ahead in the market?

Earlier this year, Singer Bangladesh announced a series of transformations, including a state-of-the-art manufacturing plant, a unique concept store, and a workspace representing the company's new vision. These transformations brought Koç Group and Arcelik's global expertise and standards to Bangladesh and enhanced the consumer experience. This transformation also signifies that Singer Beko will be introducing global contemporary technologies for our consumers. Our operational knowledge enables us to better understand the needs of Bangladeshi consumers, which is why we have always been relevant in the market.

What is your long-term vision for Singer, and how do you plan to achieve sustainable growth in the coming decade?

We aim to improve the consumer durables industry and the quality of life for our fellow citizens. Bangladesh has the eighth largest population in the world and offers enormous potential with its ever-expanding middle class and young population. By combining our technology and research and development capacity on a global scale, we are developing products that match the specific needs of consumers in Bangladesh.

Bridge lies incomplete for two years

Commuters forced to use earthen diversion road

SUZIT DAS, from Rajbari

Commuters in Rajbari Sadar upazila have been suffering for over two years as construction work of a new bridge over the Mora Kumar river was abandoned by the contractor firm after they demolished the old bridge there.

Local Government Engineering Department in the upazila took the initiative to demolish the old girder bridge on the river connecting Kolarhat-Nimtala road in December 2021, and replace it with a new 20-metre-long and 7.33-metre-wide bridge at a cost of Tk 1,89,71,000.

A contractor firm from Barishal, Rupali Construction, was awarded the tender for the project, slated to be completed by June 2023.

After demolishing the old bridge and making a narrow, earthen diversion road for vehicles to cross over during the project duration, the contractors, however, abandoned the work and left the site.

The Kolarhat-Nimtala road connects Rajbari district headquarters to the rest of the district. Also, Dhaka-bound passenger buses and other vehicles from Rajbari and Faridpur use the road. Since the old bridge was demolished, plying of buses, trucks, private cars, ambulances, and all other four-wheelers has remained suspended.

At present, commuters can only use rickshaws and easy-bikes on the unpaved diversion road to cross the river and get on other vehicles.

Visiting Kolarhat area recently, this correspondent saw an around 20 feet deep ditch was dug on Kolarhat-Nimtala road for construction of the new bridge, with the diversion road beside it to allow small vehicles to ply. However, there was no signboard on the road.

"It is very difficult to use the unpaved diversion road as wheels of vehicles get stuck in deep mud and get damaged if it rains," said Mizan Sheikh, 33, a rickshaw-van puller.

Md Afzal Mollah, 24, a truck driver, said they now have to travel 7-9 kilometres more to reach their destinations from Kolarhat Bazar as they cannot use the diversion road.

Sohidul Islam, 25, owner of a shop at Kolarhat Bazar, said, "There are nearly 725 shops on both ends of the spot where the old bridge used to be. Our businesses are severely affected in absence of the bridge to connect to the road."

Md Seken Mollah, 55, a grocer, echoed him.

Contacted, AKM Rafiqul Islam, senior assistant engineer of LGED in Rajbari, said they cancelled the work order to Rupali Construction and fined them Tk 16.61 lakh for abandoning work.

"We also issued a re-tender for the bridge's construction. Hopefully the work will begin soon," he added.

Air pollution behind rise in asthma cases: Saber

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Increasing number of asthma patients in Bangladesh is directly linked to high levels of air pollution, said Environment Minister Saber Hossain Chowdhury in parliament yesterday.

He was responding to a query from Awami League MP M Abdul Latif during a question-answer session.

Regarding illegal brick kilns, the minister disclosed that significant enforcement actions have been taken. "From April 2019 to April this year, 2,338 drives were conducted against illegal brick kilns," he said.

These efforts resulted in 4,436 cases being filed and 98 individuals sentenced to various terms of imprisonment, with fines totaling Tk 111.50 crore, Saber added.

Meanwhile, Law Minister Anisul Huq told parliament that among 12 cadet colleges in the country, three are only three girls' cadet colleges. He also said there are none in the southern region.

Besides, Civil Aviation Minister Muhammad Faruk Khan told the House it is not true that Biman flights operate with empty seats.

The minister said Biman tickets can only be booked with passenger information through various authorised channels, including Biman's website, GDS, mobile app, call centre, and sales centres.

The rules also fail to specify inter-agency collaboration procedures and stakeholder engagement strategies, which Supan argues are essential for effective cyber-security management.

Regional Director of Article-19, Sheikh Manjur-E-Alam, criticised the government's approach to hastily implement laws without thorough consideration and finalisation.

"Implementing rules based on a flawed law will not yield any positive results," he added.

The speakers highlighted the urgent need for substantial revisions to the Cyber Security Act, 2023, before the implementation of the draft Cyber Security Rules, 2024.

Meanwhile, DNCC will deploy 9,337 employees for the waste management task.

On the first day of Eid, 480 vehicles will be utilised. DNCC will distribute one lakh eco-friendly biodegradable bags along with bleaching powder and disinfectants.

DSCC Mayor Sheikh Fazle Noor Taposh assured the public that the waste generated from sacrificial animals will be cleared within 24 hours.

DNCC Mayor Atiqul Islam announced that they will dispose of sacrificial animal waste within six hours on Eid Day.

"We have also instructed our area-based police officers to increase vigilance so that no untoward situations take place during the Eid holiday," he added.

The DMP also issued instructions for setting up check posts, which involve deploying enough officers on time, providing training to staff, investigating theft incidents, and having ACs monitor check post activities through mobile patrols coordinated with OCs.

A high official of the DMP said they are also working to install GPS trackers on the patrol cars so that no one can be insincere while deployed on duty.

Rajan Kumar Saha, assistant commissioner of the Badda Zone of DMP, said, "Zone-based force has been created ahead of Eid and the patrol team is working cautiously.

THIS EID UL ADHA

Eid offerings in cinema halls
ONLY ONE HARD-HITTER?

As Eid-ul-Azha approaches on June 17, 2024, film enthusiasts are eagerly anticipating the seasonal cinematic offerings. For cinema halls, this period is a vital one, as it brings a surge in audience numbers. Here are some eagerly anticipated films you can enjoy with your family this Eid

SAEED KHAN SHAGOR

'Toofan': The main attraction

The spotlight this Eid will undoubtedly be on Shakib Khan's Toofan. Directed by Raihan Rafi and produced under the banner of Alpha-i, the film is set for a nationwide release on June 17, 2024. Shahriar Shakil is at the helm of production, with digital partner Chorki and international distributor Shree Venkatesh Films (SVF) from Kolkata.

Since the teaser dropped on May 7 on Chorki and SVF's YouTube channels, Toofan has become a hot topic across both Bengals. The teaser showcases Shakib Khan in a never-before-seen avatar. The film's action-packed look, atmosphere, dialogue delivery, and cinematography have captivated audiences throughout the teaser. Following this, the item song Laage Ura Dhura featuring Kolkata's busy actress Mimi Chakraborty and sung by Pritom Hasan, was released, gaining significant popularity. The song's lyrics, presentation, and the appearances of Shakib Khan, Mimi, and Raihan Rafi in a cameo have been widely appreciated.

The film boasts a star-studded cast from both Bengals, including Chanchal Chowdhury, Mimi Chakraborty, Jisshu Sengupta, Misha Sawdagar, Fazlur Rahman Babu, and Shahiduzzaman Selim. Notably, it marks the return of Bangladesh's popular actress Masuma Rahman Nabila to the big screen after a long hiatus.

Despite some cinema halls expressing concerns over high rental fees making it difficult to screen the film, the majority of theatres that operate year-round are eager to book it. The issue was a hot topic at the Bangladesh Film Exhibitors Association's annual general meeting, attended by over 60 theatre owners nationwide.

All in all, there's no doubt that Toofan will be the centerpiece of this Eid's cinematic celebrations.

'Moyurakkhi': A tale of love and betrayal

On June 6, the item song Piriter Bazar from the movie Moyurakkhi was released on YouTube. This video mesmerises with its eclectic mix of visuals, stills, and lyrical typography, notably featuring imagery inspired by rickshaw art.

Directed by Rashid Palash, Moyurakkhi has been long in the making, with multiple release dates being postponed in the past. The film's poster was first unveiled by Rashid on his Facebook page, announcing its imminent Eid release.

The storyline, screenplay, and dialogues for the film were crafted by Golam Rabbani, and it stars Eamin Haque Bobby and Sudip Biswas Deep in the lead roles. The music direction is handled by Jahid Nirob.

According to Rashid Palash, the film revolves around a poignant story of love and betrayal, inspired by a true event.

Controversy surrounds the film as actress Shimla claims that the story mirrors her life. She has even threatened legal action against the director. Shimla's real-life drama includes her marriage to Palash on March 3, 2018, which ended in divorce on November 6 of the same year after she discovered he had hidden a previous marriage.

Following the divorce, Palash attempted to hijack Biman Airlines flight BG-147 out of despair, a tragedy that ended with his death at Shah Amanat International Airport. The film's teaser hints at a plot involving an airplane hijacking and the life of an actress, sparking debates about whether it's based on Shimla's life. Despite the controversy, Moyurakkhi is poised to be a significant draw for audiences this Eid.

'Aguntok': A dark mystery

The latest addition to the list of Eid releases is Aguntok. After receiving clearance from the censor board, the official trailer was released on YouTube. The trailer depicts a series of mysterious murders in the city, with no one able to unravel the identity of the perpetrator. This gripping plot features Puja Chery and Shamol Mawla sharing the screen, with Puja playing an inquisitive journalist navigating through violence and mystery.

Directed by Sumon Dhar, Aguntok received uncut clearance from the censor board on Monday. Producer and distributor Zahid Hasan Abhi confirmed that discussions are already underway with Cineplex multiplexes for the film's screening. However, netizens have noted similarities between the trailer and storyline of the film with Ratsasan and Gumnaam, suggesting it might have drawn inspiration from these.

'Revenge': A run-of-the-mill commercial film?

Among the Eid releases, MD Iqbal's Revenge trailer has been deemed the least captivating. The trailer lacks innovation, sticking to the commercial cinema formula without offering anything new. The dialogues are clichéd, and the expressions are all too familiar.

Even the background music appears to be lifted from Tamil films. The main roles are played by Shobnom Yesmin Bubly and Ziaul Roshan, with Misha Sawdagar portraying the villain.

'Dark World': A producer's 'ambition'

Dark World exemplifies the ambition of producers who wish to star in their own films. Munna Khan, the producer, also takes on the lead role in this film, set to release this Eid. Directed by Mustafizur Rahman Manik, the trailer initially seemed promising. However, Munna Khan's poor dialogue delivery and overacting have already disheartened potential viewers.

Despite casting popular actress Koushani Mukherjee from West Bengal and featuring talented musicians like Asif Akbar, Imran Mahmudul, and Atiya Anisha, the film's success hinges on Munna Khan's ability to win over the audience with his performance.

Fake refrigerants seized at Ctg port regulations of the Department of Environment and Fire Service and Defense Office.

Customs officials who took part in the physical examination said the confiscated products do not properly adhere to the conditions.

The cylinders are being imported under the deceptive names of refrigerant gases such as R-22, R-134A, R-404A, R407A, and R-32.

But the import documents, including the packaging list and Bill of Entry (BE) copies, do not explicitly mention the names, the report said.

The Daily Star has managed to obtain all the import documents for the six confiscated shipments. The documents show that the allegations made by the intelligence agency are indeed true.

The importers include Nishat Traders, Asian Refrigeration Works and TS Enterprises.

According to the documents, Nishat Traders imported 34,140 refrigerant cylinders in three shipments from China this month.

The consignments brought by the importers are from Galaxy Import & Export Trade Limited in China.

Tanshia Overseas, a Clearing and Forwarding (C&F) agent, was responsible for clearance of these consignments on behalf of the importers.

Kamrul Hasan, managing director of the agency, said, "We contacted the importers after receiving information about the seizure by customs. They have denied wrongdoing."

He also said that a meeting will be held with the customs officials on the matter soon.

US, Ukraine ink 10yr defence deal

the agreement says.

Under the agreement, the United States restates its support for Ukraine's defense of its sovereignty and territorial integrity, amid a renewed push by Russia on Ukraine's eastern front.

It also outlines plans to develop Ukraine's own defense industry and expand its military.

Ukraine needs a "significant" military force and sustained investments in its defense industrial base consistent with NATO standards, the text says.

It will allow the two countries to share intelligence, hold training and military education programs and combined military and exercises.

With Trump leading Biden in many election polls, the future of the agreement remains unclear.

Trump has expressed skepticism of Ukraine's continued fight, saying at one point that he would end the conflict on his first day in office. Trump has also pushed for Europe to take on more of the burden of supporting Kyiv.

AL leader Mintu assured killers affairs secretary of Jhenaidah AL, who is now on a seven-day remand, told investigators that he met and discussed Amanullah in person and over phone over the payment after the murder.

Babu and Amanullah even exchanged photos of the murder over mobile phones.

Babu, a cousin of Akhtaruzzaman and close to Mintu, was supposed to pay Amanullah a portion of the blood money on May 23 after collecting it from Mintu.

The Detective Branch of Dhaka Metropolitan Police mentioned the information in an investigation progress report to a Dhaka court yesterday. The court also placed Mintu on an eight-day remand after the investigators sought a 10-day remand for him.

Mintu was shown arrested in connection with the murder of Jhenaidah-4 (Kaliganj) MP Azim.

Locals said Mintu had a political rivalry with MP Azim.

An investigator told The Daily Star yesterday that a Bangladeshi politician was supposed to pay Tk 2 crore for the murder.

MP Azim was murdered a month ago, but investigators were yet to specify the motive behind the killing. Five people, including two AL leaders, were arrested in the abduction case filed in Bangladesh and two others in the murder case lodged in India.

Besides, the body of MP Azim was yet to be identified.

Law enforcers of India have recovered human flesh and some bones. But it could not be ascertained whether those were of MP Azim.

Azim's daughter is yet to get the green signal to go to India for DNA test, said Abdur Rouf, personal secretary of MP Azim.

Azim went to Kolkata on May 12 and stayed at a friend's home for a night. He left the following day, saying that he would visit a doctor.

On May 22, India and Bangladesh police said the lawmaker was murdered.

Updating the investigating progress, Harun Or Rashid, additional commissioner (DB) of the DMP, yesterday said they learnt from Amanullah's statement that Aktaruzzaman contacted a Bangladeshi politician on May 6 over the phone for Tk 2 crore for the killing.

"Of the money, Tk 20 lakh was supposed to be paid to the [killers] upon their return to Bangladesh and the remaining Tk 1.80 crore was to be paid between May 26 and May 29," he told reporters.

After the killing of MP Azim, the killers returned to Bangladesh, and Aktaruzzaman fled to the US, he said.

Aktaruzzaman gave Amanullah the task of coordinating the killing while Mintu gave Babu the job of communication with the killers about payments, said Harun.

"We will now try to know why Babu on behalf of Mintu contacted Amanullah upon his return to Bangladesh on May 15 after the killing. We will also want to know why Mintu did not inform the law enforcers despite seeing the photo of murdered MP Azim on Babu's mobile phone," he added.

Record number of sacrificial animals

At least 21 lakh such animals were not sold across the country last year due to a drop in the purchasing capacity of the people, among other reasons.

Many of the unsold animals were also not sold elsewhere throughout the year, while some farmers may have kept them to be sold this year, which is why the number is so high, said a senior official of the DLS.

However, there is a possibility of low sales this year as well due to the high inflationary pressure on the middle and lower-middle classes – a cause for concern among cattle farmers.

In the fiscal 2022-2023, the average inflation rate was 9.02 percent, far higher than the average of six percent in recent years.

Reajul Huq, director general of the DLS, said many sacrificial animals were not sold last Eid-ul-Azha. Meanwhile, in addition to Eid, the dependence on animals, such as goats, has increased in various social events, further increasing the production for such animals at times other than the festival.

"These are the reasons behind the record number this year. The highest increase was in the number of cows," adding, "We went from door to door to collect the data. There is no manipulation here."

According to the data, while the number of cows and buffaloes saw a rise, that of goats and sheep has decreased.

The number of cows and buffaloes for this Eid-ul-Azha is 5.16 lakh higher than last year, meaning it has increased by around 11 percent – the highest increase in seven years.

On the other hand, cattle farmers said they, along with the buyers, are struggling due to the inflationary pressure and increase in production cost.

- Supply of animals is 1.30cr this year
- Demand is expected to be 1.7cr
- Sales of cattle of Tk 10,000cr expected online
- Prices are higher due to increased production costs

However, keeping the farmers in mind, the prices of the animals are to be kept at a tolerable level because higher prices may result in the animal remaining unsold.

Mohammad Imran Hossain, president of Bangladesh Dairy Farmers Association, the national organisation of the country's cattle farmers, said this year's number of animals was highest in the country's history.

"If you analyse DLS data of the past seven years, a constant growth in production can be seen. This record number is a result of that."

He said the supply this year will be higher than the demand and as such, the prices cannot be too high.

"The production costs have increased by 10 percent from last year, while the prices of the animals are up by only five percent."

Hossain added that for the past four or five years, they have been observing that many cattle are being illegally brought into Bangladesh from neighbouring countries. "As a result, our own farmers are facing losses."

He said they sent a letter to the livestock and fisheries ministry asking for an investigation into the matter, adding that if the government does not pay serious attention in this regard, the cattle farmers will have to keep paying for it.

Meanwhile, sacrificial animals are being sold online since 2020, when the country went into a lockdown due the Covid-19 pandemic.

Businesspeople are expecting more online sales this year compared to the last.

DLS DG Reajul said over 400,000 sacrificial animals were sold during last Eid-ul-Azha and he was expecting the number to reach 500,000 this year.

Bus, launch terminals long downpour, with some failing to reach their terminals and stations on time.

Rokib Kamal, a private firm employee, who got stuck at Bangla Motor during the rain, said, "My bus was scheduled to leave at 7:00pm from Fakirapool, but I could not reach the counter on time due to the rain, and my bus left without me."

However, he also mentioned that the operator at the counter had been gracious enough to offer him a seat on the next bus.

Several bus operators told this newspaper that the number of passengers started increasing in the afternoon.

Mosharref Hossain, general manager of Hanif Paribahan, said, "Most homebound passengers got drenched on their to the counters."

Also due to the rain, the Bangladesh Inland Water Transport Authority had to suspend the launch service for half an hour from 5:30pm to 6:00pm.

"When the rain stopped, we resumed the ferry services at 6:00pm," Alamgir Kabir, joint director of BIWTA, told The Daily Star.

Meanwhile, most trains, except for a few, left the capital on time.

Railways Minister Zillur Hakim said yesterday that all necessary preparations had been made for the smooth operation of trains ahead of the holidays.

"Apart from one or two trains, 30 trains have so far left on time," he told reporters while visiting Kamalapur Railway Station at 3:00pm.

"We've also launched special trains for transporting mangoes and cattle."

However, all northbound trains on the Dhaka-Mymensingh and Dhaka-Tangail rail routes were delayed, causing major inconvenience for thousands of passengers, our Gazipur correspondent reported from the Joydebpur station.

Joydebpur Junction Station Master Hanif Ali said, "Only one train has left Dhaka since noon," he told this correspondent at 5:00pm.

Over half of cropland in hungry Gaza damaged: UN

REUTERS, Geneva

More than half of Gaza's agricultural land, crucial for feeding the territory's hungry population, has been degraded by conflict, satellite images analysed by the United Nations show.

The data reveals a rise in the destruction of orchards, field crops and vegetables in the Palestinian enclave, where hunger is widespread after eight months of Israeli bombardment.

The World Health Organisation warned on Wednesday that many people in Gaza were facing "catastrophic hunger and famine-like conditions".

Using satellite imagery taken between May 2017 and 2024, United Nations Satellite Centre (UNOSAT) and the UN Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) found that 57 percent of Gaza's permanent crop fields and arable lands essential for food security had shown a significant decline in density and health.

"In May 2024, crop health and density across the Gaza Strip showed a marked decline compared to the average of the previous seven seasons," UNOSAT said yesterday.

"This deterioration is attributed to conflict-related activities, including razing, heavy vehicle movement, bombing, and shelling."

The decline, UNOSAT said, marked a 30 percent increase in damaged agricultural land since it published its last analysis in April, reports Reuters.

G7 leaders agree $50bn deal

REUTERS, Borgo Egnazia

Leaders of the Group of Seven (G7) major democracies yesterday agreed an outline deal to provide $50 billion of loans for Ukraine using interest from Russian sovereign assets frozen after Moscow launched its invasion of its neighbour in 2022.

The political agreement was the centrepiece of the opening day in southern Italy of the annual summit of G7 leaders, attended for a second successive year by Ukraine's President Volodymyr Zelensky.

The Ukrainian leader was scheduled to sign a new, long-term security accord with US President Joe Biden later yesterday, as well as one with fellow G7 member Japan.

Many of the G7 leaders are struggling at home but determined to make a difference on the world stage as they also seek to counter China's economic ambitions.

"There is a lot of work to be done, but I am sure that in these two days we will be able to have discussions that will lead to concrete and measurable results," Italian Prime Minister Giorgia Meloni told her G7 guests as their talks started in a luxury hotel resort in the southern region of Puglia.

The G7 plan for Ukraine is based on a multi-year loan using profits from some $300 billion of impounded Russian funds.

The technical details will be finalised in the coming weeks, a G7 diplomatic source told Reuters. The source, who asked not to be named, said the additional funding would arrive by the end of this year.

A senior US official said the United States had agreed to provide up to $50 billion itself, but that amount could decline significantly as other countries announced their participation.

The aim of the deal was to ensure it can run for years regardless of who is in power in each G7 state - a nod to concerns that US Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump might be much less sympathetic to Kyiv if he beats Biden in November, according to a person close to the talks.

While Meloni is flying high after triumphing in weekend European elections, the leaders of the other six nations - the United States, Japan, France, Germany, Britain and Canada - face major domestic woes that risk undermining their authority.

Hezbollah attacks 9 Israeli military sites with rockets

REUTERS, Beirut

Lebanon's Hezbollah said yesterday it had launched rockets and weaponised drones at nine Israeli military sites in a coordinated attack, ramping up hostilities on Lebanon's southern border for the second consecutive day.

The attacks were made in retaliation for an Israeli strike on Tuesday that killed a senior Hezbollah field commander.

The group said in a statement it had fired volleys of Katyusha and Falaq rockets at six Israeli military locations. Its Al-Manar television reported more than 100 rockets fired at once.

Hezbollah's statement said it had also launched attack drones at the headquarters of Israel's northern command, an intelligence headquarters and a military barracks.

A security source told Reuters that involved firing at least 30 attack drones at once, making it the group's largest drone attack to date in the eight-month-old Israeli offensive in Gaza.

The group said yesterday's attack was in response to the killing. It had already carried out at least eight attacks on Wednesday in retaliation.

Israeli strikes have killed more than 300 Hezbollah fighters in Lebanon - more than it lost in 2006, when the sides last fought a major war, according to a Reuters tally.

WSJ says its journo will face 'sham trial' in Russia

AFP, New York

The Wall Street Journal (WSJ) yesterday lashed out at Russia's "outrageous" announcement that its imprisoned reporter Evan Gershkovich will face trial on spying charges.

"Evan Gershkovich is facing a false and baseless charge. Russia's latest move toward a sham trial is, while expected, deeply disappointing and still no less outrageous," Journal chief editor Emma Tucker and top executives said in a statement.

Russian authorities accuse Gershkovich, a Russia correspondent for the leading US business newspaper, of spying and working for the CIA.

He has been imprisoned since his arrest in March 2023 while on a reporting trip to the Urals city of Yekaterinburg.

The Journal's statement said he has so far been held 441 days "for simply doing his job. Evan is a journalist."

Shakib inspires Tigers

The result also means Sri Lanka are out of the tournament, managing just one point in three matches.

Just a victory in their final group game against a lower-ranked Nepal on June 17 will ensure Bangladesh's progression to the next round. But even if the Tigers lose to Nepal, it would take either of two unlikely outcomes to materialise -- the Netherlands beating Sri Lanka by a healthy margin or Nepal beating South Africa -- for Bangladesh to be denied a Super Eight spot.

Shakib replied to a barrage of criticism for his underperformance in the first two matches in the best way possible -- becoming the eighth batter to reach the landmark of 800 runs in the T20 mega event while reaching his 13th T20I fifty off just 38 deliveries.

He smashed a total of nine boundaries and starred in three crucial stands of 48, 41, and an unbroken 29 with Tanzid Hasan (35 off 26), Mahmudullah Riyad (25 off 21), and Jaker Ali (14* off 7), respectively, to propel Bangladesh to a competitive score.

Meanwhile, Rishad bowled a momentum-changing 15th over just when it was needed the most, with the Netherlands cruising towards the target at that point -- needing 56 off the final six overs with seven wickets in hand and two Dutch batters, skipper Scott Edwards and Sybrand Engelbrecht, well set in the middle.

Rishad was taken for seven runs, including a boundary, in the first three deliveries but the 21-year-old showed why Bangladesh needed to include a genuine leggie in their T20 World Cup squad for the first time as he had Engelbrecht top edge one to Tanzim Sakib at point.

Just a ball after ending a crucial 42-run stand between Engelbrecht and Edwards, Rishad had Bas de Leede stumped -- enticing the batter forward with a sharp turn and bounce that was complimented by Liton Das' brilliant glovework behind the wickets -- as the Netherlands suddenly found themselves in a spot of bother at 111 for five after 15 overs.

Mustafizur, who bowled brilliantly to give away just 12 off four overs, made the dangerman Edwards his sole victim of the day in the 17th over before Rishad had Logan van Beek top-edge one for a caught and bowled in the very first delivery of the next over.

Rishad finished with figures of three for 33 as the Netherlands could never bounce back from that situation.

decided that a proposal would be sent to China, for project funding," she said.

Bangladesh sent the PDPP of the project to China in March 2021 seeking a loan for the project.

After evaluating the PDPP, the Chinese government identified some weaknesses in the project, and they sent their recommendations on the project to the government in March this year, Hasina said.

Hasina told the House that the Chinese government, in their evaluation, mentioned a lack of detailed proposals on land development and water navigation. They also suggested downsizing the project by excluding some of the components and recommended implementing the project in phases.

She added that a Chinese company, "Power China", had sent a proposal to the Water Development Board for a detailed feasibility study of the project, which is now under consideration.

Reclaim footpaths from extortionists

Footpaths choked with hawkers causing nuisance for pedestrians

It's no secret that the teeming thoroughfares of Dhaka also teem with hawkers, a combination that has long been a source of pain for pedestrians. According to a recent report by this daily, illegal occupation of footpaths by hawkers has turned these public spaces into hotbeds of extortion, with local political leaders, police, and even hawkers' associations collecting fees in the name of "renting" them. Our reporters' account of the money changing hands through this system is quite telling.

For example, on the footpath adjacent to the General Post Office (GPO) in Dhaka, a hawker has to pay Tk 150 daily. It rises to Tk 250 during peak sales periods like Ramadan and Puja. A one-time payment of Tk 1.5 lakh is apparently needed to secure a spot big enough for a stool and a table, while "permanent" ownership would cost between Tk 8-10 lakh, depending on how close it is to the GPO gate. At Motijheel's Shapla Chattar area, hawkers have to pay Tk 100-300 daily, depending on the size of their space, with the rate rising to Tk 400 during festivals. Vendors operating between Elephant Road and New Market areas have to pay Tk 10,000-20,000 twice a year, plus daily fees of Tk 150-300. Similar arrangements likely exist in other major hubs for hawkers including Gulistan, Paltan, Farmgate, Kamalapur Railway Station, Fulbaria, etc.

What this shows us is that there is a very organised, politically-controlled system governing footpath occupation that has proved to be impossible to dismantle, despite occasional eviction drives by the city corporations. According to an estimate, there are around 5 lakh hawkers in Dhaka. Their existence has created a unique urban challenge in which we have to balance pedestrian rights with the rights of hawkers to a livelihood. We cannot deny that hawkers play an important role in our economy by providing affordable goods to citizens. So, while it is undeniable that their vulnerability has fuelled a corrupt ecosystem that benefits a select few at the expense of the many—with pedestrians often forced onto busy roads, risking their lives—we must find a balanced approach that benefits both groups.

Firstly, we need to strictly enforce existing regulations against illegal street occupations. City authorities and law enforcement must work in tandem to ensure that footpaths are kept clear for pedestrian use. But evicting hawkers without any rehabilitation plan is neither fair nor sustainable. The authorities, therefore, must pursue a comprehensive course of action. That may include designating special times and places for hawkers, providing them with legitimate spaces to conduct their businesses without disrupting pedestrian flow. Issuing ID cards and collecting nominal fees can also help formalise their operations, ensuring that they contribute to the city's revenue rather than paying extortion money to corrupt elements.

Concerted efforts needed to stop such exploitation

There is no denying that many children in Bangladesh face violence and exploitation at home or outside. But how many of us are aware that they can be equally unsafe in online platforms as well? In 2023, the US-based non-profit National Center for Missing & Exploited Children (NCMEC)'s CyberTipline received more than two million reports related to the upload of child sexual abuse material from Bangladesh alone. This is quite staggering and alarming.

Such materials often end up on the internet when children and parents, unaware of the risk of posting personal data online, share images and videos without proper security measures. Referring to global data by the Internet Watch Foundation, a Prothom Alo report said that 92 percent of the 275,652 websites containing child sexual imagery found by the organisation last year contained self-generated imagery. Of that, 55 percent were created by children aged 7 to 10 years.

In Bangladesh, internet and social media literacy among parents is often low, so they may remain in the dark about who their children are interacting with online and what material they are posting. Online predators can fish for children's profiles, collect personal data, and use it to entice, stalk, harass, blackmail and exploit them. Because of the social culture of victim blaming, children may not even share the ordeals they face online with an adult. Parents, on the other hand, may not report such abuse because of the existing barriers in our legal system. Therefore, a concerted effort by the government, parents, NGOs, law enforcement agencies, and educational institutions is needed to protect children from sexual exploitation.

The government, with the help of grassroots non-profits, must conduct campaigns to raise awareness about such abuse. Information about online risks and safe internet use should be properly included in the curriculum. We also need to encourage children's participation in off-line activities for which more parks and playgrounds are a must. Moreover, parents' involvement in children's social and online life should be increased. Legal loopholes enabling online predators and paedophiles must also be removed, so that people feel comfortable about reporting threats against children and using the existing helplines to their full capacity. Finally, we must denounce sexual objectification of children in visual media and reality shows so that children are not influenced by it.

What does poverty research in Bangladesh require?

Dr Selim Raihan
is professor of economics at the University of Dhaka and executive director of South Asian Network on Economic Modeling (SANEM). He can be reached at selim.raihan@gmail.com.

SELIM RAIHAN

Research on poverty in Bangladesh requires answers to four fundamental questions: i) what are the poverty trends in the country?; do the official figures present a true picture?; ii) how do different shocks (economic and non-economic) affect poverty and vulnerability?; iii) what are the structural factors behind poverty?; and iv) what are the important aspects of addressing poverty in a sustainable way?

According to the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics (BBS), the headcount poverty rate (as per the cost of basic needs method) in the country declined from 80 percent in the early 1970s to 18.7 percent in 2022. Between 2016 and 2022, the national poverty rate declined from 24.2 percent to 18.7 percent. Both the rural and urban areas experienced a drop in poverty rates. While the official statistics paint an optimistic picture of poverty reduction, alternative surveys suggest a more nuanced reality. According to two rounds of surveys conducted by SANEM in 2018 and 2023, which tracked the same 10,000 households nationwide, the decline in national poverty rate has been slower than reported, while urban poverty has risen. The Multidimensional Poverty Index (MPI), which measures various deprivations at the household level in health, education and living standards, corroborates this trend. The surveys also highlight a worrying trend of increasing inequality, while food security, a critical component of poverty, has worsened too.

The persistent vulnerability among a large section of the country's population remains a pressing concern despite high economic growth, rise in per capita income, export and remittance performances, and microfinance initiatives. Vulnerable households are those who are categorised as non-poor but may fall into poverty due to any economic or natural shocks. SANEM's surveys indicate that the pandemic caused a sudden spike in poverty rates, reversing some of the progress made before. Climate change poses another significant threat to development. My recent research suggests that if there is inaction in addressing climate change, a rise in temperature by two degrees Celsius by 2040 could increase the headcount poverty rate in Bangladesh by 3.5 percentage points. The ongoing inflationary pressure adds woe to the vulnerabilities. The coping strategies to different shocks, available to poor and vulnerable households, remain limited and repeated shocks make these households exhaust those limited options.

In-depth poverty research in Bangladesh requires understanding the structural factors behind poverty. The ownership structure plays a critical role, as unequal distribution of assets can lead to wealth concentration in the hands of a few. The labour market is another determinant; limited access to well-paying jobs and the prevalence of low-wage work perpetuate a cycle of poverty. Gender disparities further compound poverty, particularly for women who often face barriers to equal rights in property, receiving equal pay, and are sometimes subjected to practices like child marriage, which can limit educational and economic opportunities. Exclusion based on ethnicity, disability or social stigma can restrict access to resources and services, leading to entrenched poverty.

A significant aspect of Bangladesh's labour market is its informality, which leads to a lack of job security, benefits, and legal protections for workers. Unemployment and underemployment are persistent issues. Among the youth, the NEET (not in education, employment, or training) rates are concerning, pointing to a generation at risk of being left behind. The labour force participation (LFP) among females remains low due to cultural norms and structural barriers. Workers face poor working environments, low wages, and little to no social security. Occupational rigidities, such as difficulty in transitioning between jobs or sectors, further exacerbate the situation. Lack of opportunities for productive and diversified employment means that workers are often stuck in low-value, labour-intensive jobs with little chance for advancement or skill development. This situation can be called the "low pay, low productivity, and low compliance" cycle.

Bangladesh's economic, social and institutional paradigms shape the pathways to poverty reduction. The economic paradigm is related to the pattern of structural transformation of the economy. Despite notable progress over the past five decades, the lack of economic and export diversification undermines the prospects of reduction in poverty and vulnerability in a sustainable manner. The policy regime, related to the pattern of structural transformation, has remained narrowly focused towards supporting a few sectors. There is a need for productive economic and export diversification supported by a broad-based policy regime.

The social paradigm refers to the pattern of social development. Over the past five decades, there have been some notable improvements in health and education. Success in health and education came with finding some low-cost solutions to addressing child and maternal mortality, and a rise in school enrolment. However, with the evolving demographic structure of the population and growing demand for high-skilled labour, the current and future outlooks remain bleak. Low public spending on health and education and inefficiencies in these sectors act as barriers to reaping the benefit of demographic dividends.

The institutional paradigm refers to the quality of institutions and the political economy of development. In Bangladesh, weak formal institutions, in the form of weak state capacity, weak regulatory regime, prevalence of corruption, crony capitalism and dominance of informal institutions, seriously undermine the scope for enhancing the capabilities of poor and vulnerable people. For example, the weak state capacity in mobilising tax revenue limits the state's capacity to spend high on health, education, and social protection. At the same time, high reliance on indirect taxes leads to a regressive tax system that affects poor people.

We can highlight three important aspects for sustainably addressing poverty in Bangladesh. First, there should be a meaningful solution to the ownership issue. The economic, social, and institutional paradigms for poverty alleviation have to ensure that both material ownership and the feeling of ownership among poor and vulnerable people are enhanced. Second, economic and social capabilities of poor and vulnerable households have to be enhanced through economic diversification, labour market reform, and investment in health and education. And third, the state has to effectively redistribute resources from rich to poor through taxes and social expenditures.

Europe must fight the far-right surge

Philippe Legrain,
former economic adviser to the president of the European Commission, is a visiting senior fellow at the London School of Economics' European Institute, and the author of 'Them and Us: How Immigrants and Locals Can Thrive Together.'

PHILIPPE LEGRAIN

Far-right populist parties performed exceptionally well in the European Parliament elections, finishing first in France, Italy, and three other countries. They won nearly a quarter of the seats in parliament, just behind the centre right.

With Europe already reeling from the war in Ukraine, the threat of a second Donald Trump presidency in the United States, stagnant living standards, strained welfare systems, and extreme weather events, nationalists pose a severe threat. These parties are often sympathetic to Russian President Vladimir Putin and downright hostile to green policies, migrants, and European Union institutions.

Mainstream pro-European parties have three broad options for responding: complacency, co-optation, or counterattack. Let's start with the case for business as usual. Many Europeans believe—incorrectly—that EU elections are inconsequential. Turnout is much lower than in national elections, and many people cast protest votes, often against governing parties.

Even so, pro-EU parties will still command a majority in the next parliament. The centre-right European People's Party (EPP), led by European Commission President Ursula von der Leyen, actually gained seats.

Moreover, far-right parties are deeply divided. They are split between two rival parliamentary groups, and some are unattached. They disagree on the Ukraine war, economic policy, LGBTQ rights, and, crucially, whether to work within the EU system or against it. Inevitably, such rifts dilute their influence.

But complacency is dangerous. The centre held only because it is defined ever more broadly, encompassing not only the EPP and the Socialists and Democrats (S&D), but also the classical and social liberals of Renew Europe and the Greens. Von der Leyen seemingly has enough votes in parliament to be re-elected as commission president—but only just. And anything can happen in a secret ballot. This hardly suggests a strong and stable pro-EU centre, especially because the EPP gained ground partly by campaigning against the bloc's green agenda.

More worryingly, the elections reordered the political landscape in key member states. Despite neo-Nazi tendencies and questionable ties to Russia and China, the extremist Alternative für Deutschland (AfD) finished second in Germany, ahead of Chancellor Olaf Scholz's Social Democrats (SPD). In France, National Rally won 32 percent of the vote, more than double that of President Emmanuel Macron's centrist allies—a crushing defeat that led Macron to call a snap election. Europe's two most powerful leaders are thus severely weakened, leaving the bloc potentially rudderless in the face of immense economic, security, and climate challenges.

The second option, then, is to accommodate the far right, a common outcome at the national level. Many centre-right parties adopt the far right's language and policies, notably on migration (as do some centre-left ones). In several member states, they even govern together.

At the EU level, pragmatists argue that some far-right parties can be brought into the conservative mainstream. The risk is that the far right co-opts the centre right, rather than vice versa. Consider how the EU's approach to asylum-seekers has shifted from then German Chancellor Angela Merkel's welcoming policy in 2015 to near-universal hostility now. Moreover, far-right parties can gain strength as their views become normalised, as evidenced by the victory of Geert Wilders' Party for Freedom (PVV) in last year's Dutch general election.

> Above all, embracing the far right can backfire spectacularly. Hungarian Prime Minister Viktor Orbán's Fidesz party, for example, once sat in the EPP; now he is a pro-Putin renegade who treats the rule of law and democratic rights with contempt.

Above all, embracing the far right can backfire spectacularly. Hungarian Prime Minister Viktor Orbán's Fidesz party, for example, once sat in the EPP; now he is a pro-Putin renegade who treats the rule of law and democratic rights with contempt.

That leaves the third option: fight the far right. Macron has opted to pursue this course by calling a snap legislative election. This is widely viewed as a high-stakes gamble, given Macron's unpopularity and the electorate's hostile mood. France could conceivably elect a far-right prime minister in a run-off vote next month. In that case, Macron would become a lame duck for his remaining three years in office.

But his position was severely weakened in any case, and his governing coalition, which lacks a parliamentary majority, was at risk of losing a no-confidence vote. By dissolving the National Assembly, Macron has regained the initiative, creating two possible paths for defeating the far right.

For one, the campaign may focus on voters' attention on the far-right threat, which could help Macron cobble together a parliamentary majority comprising left and right parties united in their desire to keep the National Rally at bay. Given Macron's unpopularity, this seems somewhat unlikely.

More plausibly, Macron could set up the far right to fail. Populists tend to perform best when they are outsiders challenging established parties, not wielding responsibility. Observe how Conservatives in the United Kingdom, having delivered on their Brexit promise, have been skewered by the reality of it, while the popularity of Wilders' PVV has already dipped now that it is in government.

If the National Rally wins a majority, or ends up leading a broader right-wing coalition, it would likely struggle with the harsh responsibilities of governing—such as difficult fiscal decisions—and whether and how to cooperate with EU institutions. Moderating its hardline policies could erode its anti-establishment edge; enacting them could plunge the country into crisis. Either way, this could undermine the popularity of its leader, Marine Le Pen, ahead of her likely presidential run. Better a far-right prime minister in 2024 than a far-right president in 2027.

Is it possible to escape from the seduction of smartphones?

NO STRINGS ATTACHED

AASHA MEHREEN AMIN

A week or so ago, I was scrolling through my newsfeed when I found an interesting title of an episode of Al Jazeera's popular show, The Stream: "Why are Gen Z and Millennials ditching their smartphones for dumb phones?" It immediately caught my attention; I couldn't help notice the irony of clicking on a programme about young people weaning themselves off their smartphones while I was devouring my smartphone's content of the day. It was a bit like a non-member eavesdropping into an Alcoholics Anonymous group made up of a generation considered being literally born in the era of smartphones. I mean, being from Gen X would put me in their parents' (I refuse to say grandparents) category, and what could I, who spent most of her youth in the analogue days, find anything in common with them, right? Well, actually, quite a lot.

It was uplifting and sobering to see that these young people are smart enough to realise the need to opt for ways to take back control of their lives, to "live in the moment" and improve their social skills. The wisdom of a 24-year-old who switched to a dumb phone because he had spent 15 years of his life with a smartphone, blew my mind, "I don't hate smartphones—I just feel I'm too immature to use it."

There's no point in denying that I am totally dependent on my phone for practically everything—being in touch with loved ones, colleagues, acquaintances, the tailor, AC Moinul (guy who fixes the air conditioner), the news, and, of course, my daily fill of mindless scrolling and reel-watching. In fact, my partner and I play a vicious mind game of trying to make each other feel guilty by saying "You really spend too much time on your screen" just when either of us are in the middle of our smartphone fix. We deny and claim that "I just picked it up" to check if there was any breaking news or important message from our daughter who lives in a different time zone. But deep down, we know the ugly truth: the bug of relentless connectivity to some world or the other has infected us, and there seems to be no cure.

It's not that we don't know that we are abusing this amazing, smart device that feeds us whatever it thinks we need to be fed with. We know that if we look at the screen just before hitting the bed, the bright screen fools our brain into thinking it is daytime, and hence wakes it up more instead of allowing it to get ready for a few hours of much-needed respite. There is scientific evidence that the unpredictability of what will come next on the screen gives the brain high levels of the feel-good hormone dopamine, which makes us want more and more of these hits. Now I know why I can't even look at the book I have been trying to read since January, and instead go back to watching bits and pieces of Friends or endless reels on contraptions to get the perfect jawline.

But let's get back to the topic of the show. Apparently, young people are realising the damage they are causing themselves by being ruled by the smartphone. Gen Z, the generation born into this technology, has no other idea of, say, socialising, except through social media. Face-to-face interaction or even talking on the phone feels alien to them. Social media addiction or "problematic use of social media," whatever you may call it, is a cause of worry not just for parents and guardians but for young people themselves. Studies have found that too much time on social media (which is usually through their smartphones) or any kind of screen time can have serious side effects such as anxiety, not being able to interact face to face, having difficulties concentrating, insomnia, constant headaches, and severe mental health problems such as anorexia and suicidal thoughts. So how can people, especially teenagers and young adults, get out of the irresistible lure of the smartphone?

It is a lifestyle issue, said Jose Briones, one of the panellists introduced as an advocate of digital minimalism and offline living who actually switched to a "dumb" flip phone for basic functions like text and call. He recommended using a smartphone during work hours (since for many people work requires them to be on their devices) and switch to a dumb phone after work.

Another panellist, Shayonee Dasgupta, said she had taken great lengths to detox herself from her smartphone, which was causing her anxiety. Since even disabling apps did not work (as she would reinstall everything right after) she installed an app that would impose a heavy monetary fine whenever she violated her screen-time limit. The prospect of losing so much money incentivised her to keep within the limit.

But is there a healthy limit for screen time? Journalist and author Sophia Smith Galer argued that the idea is too generalised, and that the healthy limit for screen time really depends on how individuals use it. For some people, those four hours of screen time may be very productive, while for others it may actually be harmful. Parents and guardians have sued companies for what they consider promoting harmful content to their children, and there is credible evidence to support this view. According to Sophia, the technology can be intentionally harmful, and she proposed that the algorithmic feeds should be altered for the better. That would put the onus on the companies, and only legislation can make them think of public interest over profits.

Data privacy is a constant worry around social media and smartphone use—something that we still have not been able to solve. Thus, the trend to turn away from smartphones even if it's for a certain period and turning to their dumb predecessors may be catching on, especially in advanced countries where the awareness level regarding these harmful effects is high.

In Bangladesh, however, smartphones still rule, and for many it is a status symbol. You will find very few people, especially teenagers and young adults—regardless of economic backgrounds—who consider their smartphones as their most precious possession. For many of us, it is like a body part we never want to be out of sight. But we, too, are facing the fallout from overdependence on these devices, especially overconsumption of the content they offer, social media in particular. Taking cues from discussions like the one on The Stream, which, by the way, shows the good side of online technology, we can take back the power from our controlling, devastatingly alluring, smartphones.

What does the new budget imply for menstrual health?

Maisha Zaman
is a contributing writer at The Daily Star. She can be reached at maisha.zmm@gmail.com.

MAISHA ZAMAN

Amid the controversial tax increases on some essentials in the recently revealed proposal for the FY2024-25 national budget, one positive initiative by the government has been to continue exempting VAT and supplementary duty (SD) on the import of specific raw materials required to produce sanitary pads and diapers for the second consecutive year.

However, two critical questions prevail: i) has the VAT exemption helped to reduce period poverty in the country?; and ii) has society progressed in terms of normalising menstruation?

To answer these questions, let's first look into the definition of period poverty, which is "the lack of access to safe and hygienic menstrual products during monthly periods and inaccessibility to basic sanitation services or facilities as well as menstrual hygiene education."

An analysis of the initiatives listed in the Menstrual Hygiene Management (MHM) platform in Bangladesh, mentioned in the latest technical brief on menstrual hygiene management by icddr,b (2022), shows that 18 organisations implemented 51 interventions across 27 districts. However, only four projects lasted more than a year. Moreover, only 36 percent of the interventions disseminated menstrual products, 22 percent focused on menstrual product development, and 19 percent on policy reformation. Despite the usage of disposable menstrual products or clean, reusable materials among adolescent girls being above 60 percent and 50 percent, respectively, only nine percent practised adequate menstrual hygiene.

A more recent baseline survey by Inspira Advisory and Consulting for Plan International Bangladesh in Bhola and Satkhira districts found that among 168 cloth users, 88.7 percent of respondents used old clothes (kameez, saree, bed sheets, etc) to manage their menstruation, reusing them for three to six months. Although most of the respondents preferred using disposable sanitary pads, they lacked access due to significant distance to pharmacies. Dirty toilets, too much crowd, inadequate space, lack of privacy, and lack of water and soap in the toilets were cited as the top reasons for menstruating girls missing schools. Affordability of sanitary pads has not been mentioned. The report further highlights that 81.2 percent of mothers believed menstruation implies the flow of impure blood from the bodies, and most girls obtained knowledge about menstruation from their mothers.

Despite some noteworthy initiatives to improve menstrual health, such as the Strengthening Women's Ability for Productive New Opportunities (SWAPNO) project by UNDP, which empowers marginalised rural women in Kurigram to produce and sell sanitary pads, the extent and reach of such initiatives by different organisations need more research.

Organisations are increasingly becoming aware about enhancing access to and knowledge of menstruation and menstrual products. However, unless the government reforms policies and invests more in capacity-building, the progress of remarkable initiatives by various public and private sector organisations is likely to remain slow. Most relevant policy documents, except the National MHM Strategy 2021 and the National Strategy for Adolescent Health 2017–30, lack the mention of menstrual hygiene management. Such lacking can beget lesser actions towards breaking stigma surrounding menstruation, potentially hindering efforts to break the stigma and reduce period poverty in the country.

The Centre for Policy Dialogue (CPD) made some recommendations in March this year, prior to the presentation of the proposed budget, suggesting that the total tax incidence (TTI) on imported raw materials used for the production of sanitary napkins should be zero, along with an exemption on all forms of VAT, customs duty (CD), SD, advance income tax (AIT), and regulatory duty (RD). They also recommended reducing the tax on imported sanitary pads to 31.93 percent in FY2024-25 while ensuring tariff protection for domestic producers.

The document further highlights government programmes with budget allocations of less than Tk 100 per beneficiary per month. For instance, the allocation is only Tk 22 per month for improving the work environment in the ready-made garment (RMG) sector and only Tk 48 per month for maternal, child, reproductive and adolescent health. Given that the average price of sanitary pads ranges from approximately Tk 55 to over Tk 500, they continue to remain unaffordable for marginalised communities, who don't receive adequate investment and resources and therefore monetary freedom to spend on menstrual products.

VISUAL: SHAIKH SULTANA JAHAN BADHON

Furthermore, limited research in Bangladesh on period poverty and menstrual health and hygiene primarily focus on adolescent girls. Research on the extent to which working women, transgender individuals and non-binary people face period poverty is amiss. There is also a dearth of research on issues such as the feasibility of alternative products such as menstrual cups and whether men have become more sensitised to menstruation. The last National Hygiene Survey was conducted in 2018, and the latest research currently available covers only a few districts or regions in the country. This renders us from a more comprehensive view of menstrual needs in the country, especially in terms of the impact the VAT exemption had in FY2023-24.

The aforementioned aspects should be carefully considered, and proactive measures must be taken to improvise the VAT exemption strategies. Government bodies and regulators need to ensure these improvements are effectively reflected in future budgets.

As the saying goes, time is of essence, and therefore utilising resources effectively can significantly improve the lives of menstruators in Bangladesh.

Bangladesh put on an all-round effort to keep their Super Eight chances in their own hands following a 25-run win over Netherlands yesterday in the teams' T20 World Cup match at the Arnos Vale Ground in Kingstown.

SCORES IN BRIEF

Bangladesh: 159-5 in 20 overs (Shakib 64 not out, Tanzid 35, Mahmudullah 25; Aryan Dutt 2-17, Paul van Meekeren 2-15)

Netherlands: 134-8 in 20 overs (Sybrand Engelbrecht 33; Rishad Hossein 3-33, Taskin 2-30, Mustafizur 1-12, Sakib 1-23, Mahmudullah 1-6)

Result: Bangladesh won by 25 runs

Player-of-the-match: Shakib Al Hasan

All they required was for Shakib Al Hasan to provide that spark. The Bangladesh ace all-rounder turned up with the bat in what was a significantly better showing from the top-order, and in the Powerplay effort as well. In the end, the Tigers needed their bowlers to shine as they turned back the tide after the Dutch were in a decent position in chase.

Shakib hit his first T20I fifty in 19 innings and paced himself well enough to hold the innings together during an unbeaten 46-ball 64. Along with Tanzid Hasan Tamim, Shakib picked up 54 runs in the first six overs despite the Tigers losing two wickets.

After Tanzid departed to a 26-ball 35, Shakib allowed the rest of the batters to pivot around him, with Mahmudullah Riyad scoring an important 25 as Bangladesh later picked up 47 runs in the last five overs to notch 159 for five.

"It was important for someone from top four to bat through the innings. Happy to contribute. It was a tough pitch at the start; we held our nerves. [It] was a challenging total, not a winning one, but bowlers chipped in perfectly," Shakib said at the post-match presentation after being handed player-of-the-match award.

Netherlands were 104 for three in 15 overs and appeared to be coasting towards Bangladesh total before Rishad Hossain turned the game around. Sybrand Engelbrecht, in particular, was going great guns before he miscued a Rishad delivery that turned and bounced, leading to a top-edge before Tanzim Sakib took the catch. In that very over, Bas de Leede danced down the track, only to be beaten by turn, before Liton Das's sharp reflex got Bangladesh truly back in the game.

Mustafizur Rahman then did what he does best, producing 17 dot balls in his four overs and conceding 12 runs for a wicket as Tigers killed off the game slowly. Shakib credited Rishad and Mustafizur's effort. The surface at Arnos Vale Ground was an unknown quantity for both sides. Shakib said they had to keep wickets in hand so that they could accelerate at the back end.

"Rishad and Fizz, the way they bowled, took the game away from Netherlands," he said.

"Hardly any international game was played here in the last 4-5 years. So, we didn't know what a good score was and had to keep wickets till 14-15 overs and take it from there. 160 in a World Cup game is always tricky. Netherlands had their moments. Ten runs an over on this ground in the last 7-8 overs, wind going in one way, made it tough to defend. But credit to bowlers for pulling it off," he added.

The Tigers' bowlers have had the opportunity to bowl first in both their first games but when asked to defend in the death overs, the sharpness and skill of the bowlers were exhibited. However, a better batting effort would help the side gain momentum as Bangladesh now look to ensure a Super Eight berth with a win over Nepal in their next game.

Rishad turning the tide with turn

SHABAB CHOWDHURY

Bangladesh are not accustomed to seeing what leg-spinner Rishad Hossain is dishing out in the ongoing T20 World Cup.

One cannot only be spellbound by the 21-year-old's game-changing wizardry but must also be charmed by his congruity with orthodoxy in his craft, especially at a time when being orthodox is deemed as the doom for most spinners, particularly in the 20-over format.

In that quest to further put sheen on his limited skillset and solidify his stature as a leg-break bowler, Rishad seemed to have found the missing link in his arsenal – the ability to get his leg-breaks to turn.

With this addition, at least in the first three matches of the T20 World Cup, he has become a real trump card for the Tigers and ardent fans of the country's cricket have tasted a proper serving of what a leg-spinner brings to the table.

Rishad stamped his importance in the side as a difference-maker with his latest exploits against the Netherlands -- a crucial tie in Bangladesh's path to the Super Eights.

The task at hand for the Netherlands in the game after the 14th over was to get 56 runs off 36 deliveries in pursuit of Bangladesh's 159-run total, with the score at three down for 104.

The Dutch had skipper Scott Edwards and Sybrand Engelbrecht well-set in the middle, having put together a 42-run stand and skipper Najmul Hossain Shanto brought on Rishad to personify the role of a leggie.

He tossed one that turned away sharply from Engelbrecht and the batter could not help himself which led to his dismissal. A ball later, he looped one in that drifted towards Bas de Leede and to his surprise, turned away sharply. The right-handed batter was lured into the shot and lost track of his back leg as Liton Das whipped off the bails in a flash.

He came back to the bowl the 18th and picked another wicket, finishing with three for 33, to cap off a memorable day for Bangladesh which will be remembered for Rishad's game-changing acumen.

The 21-year-old had shown what he's made off earlier in the tournament as well, when he turned the match on its head against Sri Lanka by picking up two in an over in contrasting styles.

The first was the typical leg-spinner's wicket where Charith Asalanka fell by trying to take Rishad on and the way he took the next wicket was nothing less than a dream sight for fans of Bangladesh cricket as he bowled a ripper that turned away from leg-stump, took the outside edge of Wanindu Hasaranga's bat and found its way into the hands of first slip.

The key component that has stood out is Rishad's ability to get his leg-breaks to turn. Before coming into this World Cup, fans and experts alike had come to terms with this key limitation of his.

Rishad's strength lies in his accuracy, the elevation from which he releases the ball, the ability to extract bounce and a natural drift. But right from the onset of this tournament, he has, almost magically, added the ability to turn the ball.

Against Sri Lanka, Rishad caught everyone's attention when he registered an average turn of 3.6 degrees, which at that point was the most in that ground in the tournament.

Many, including his mentor Sohel Islam, have credited the type of wickets in the USA for the turn.

"The turn is not an issue. From what I've seen, it's his accuracy. Turn depends on the surface. If the surface is sticky then turn will be more and if it is flat, turn will be less. The main thing is whether he is being able to get bounce and drop the ball," Sohel told The Daily Star.

But getting this amount of turn cannot only be due to the surface. It might be small tweaks he has made under the supervision of Mushtaq Ahmed who himself was a legendary leg-spinner.

Whatever the reason behind Rishad's new found turn, Bangladesh are reaping the benefits of it. The fans are witnessing something they had never seen before in the Bangladesh national team. They've had to be in awe of leg-spin legends of other nations but are beginning to see samples of leg-spin artistry from one of their own.

'Approach and attitude': Booters' bright takeaways

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh's qualifying campaign of the FIFA World Cup 2026 left little room for an optimistic postmortem, but forward Rakib Hossain reckons that the men in red and green have shown improvement in two aspects: a never-say-die "attitude" and "approach" in playing a comparative attacking brand of football than before.

The charges of Javier Cabrera returned home from Qatar yesterday after drawing curtains in Tuesday's 4-0 loss to Lebanon, leaving them with a solitary point from six Group I encounters in the second round.

Although an encouraging show in 2023 SAFF Championship had expectations escalated, Bangladesh conceding a whopping 20 goals quantified a lacklustre campaign.

Moreover, they displayed a polarising performance in their home and away fixtures -- significantly worse in the latter since they only allowed four goals in home fixtures -- against vastly superior opponents in Australia, Palestine and Lebanon.

For Rakib, "a change of team attitude has been the biggest achievement" despite unfavourable outcomes.

"Our target was to finish third, but silly mistakes made us suffer," Rakib said.

The 25-year-old forward believes that Bangladesh could rectify mistakes if they get to play much stronger oppositions on a regular basis, especially abroad where the playing field offers a faster pace than familiar conditions at home.

Rakib, however, remains hopeful that "something good awaits" his side in upcoming SAFF Championship and Asian Cup Qualifiers.

Christian Pulisic fires a low free-kick past Alisson as the U.S held Brazil to a 1-1 draw in a friendly in Orlando on Wednesday in a final tune-up for both sides ahead of the Copa America. Following a goal from Real Madrid forward Rodrygo in the 17th minute, Pulisic helped the U.S draw level and avoid a defeat against the record five-time world champions for only the second time in 20 matches.

Chance to jump-start the German machine

REUTERS, Berlin

Germany begin their quest for a first major title in a decade as the Euro 2024 hosts play their Group A opener against Scotland on Friday to kick off the tournament and what the country hopes will be a month-long party for visiting fans.

Germany have won four World Cups and three European Championships but their stellar tournament reputation has been somewhat tarnished with a series of failures since their 2014 World Cup victory in Brazil.

They went out of the next two World Cups in the group stage, their worst showing in over 80 years, and exited the last Euros in the round of 16.

With the tournament on home soil, there is only one outcome that will satisfy Germany's fans, who are desperate for the success they once took for granted: winning the title.

Despite their 2022 World Cup disappointment, a string of terrible results since, including a 4-1 home defeat to Japan back in September, and a change of coach a month later, the Germans still have their eyes on the big prize.

Coach Julian Nagelsmann, who took over in October 2023, made that clear only days before the tournament. "The normal ambition: we want to win it," Nagelsmann said of the team's goal.

His team are banking on a mix of hugely talented young players, including Jamal Musiala and newly-crowned Bundesliga champion Florian Wirtz, and experienced veterans such as 2014 World Cup winners Manuel Neuer, Thomas Mueller, and Toni Kroos.

The big question remains their goal-scoring ability with Kai Havertz, far from a natural number nine, being their first-choice striker. Burly Borussia Dortmund forward Niclas Fuellkrug will be on the bench.

They will need to underline those big ambitions against the Scots, who are playing in back-to-back European Championships for the first time since 1996.

Scotland, clear underdogs, are hoping for an early upset that could help guide them through the group stage for the first time in 11 international tournaments.

Apart from success on the pitch, the host country is also banking on a wave of enthusiasm from their own fans as well as an estimated 2.7 million visitors for the June 14-July 14 event.

Large fan zones have been set up across all major cities, including Berlin's massive fan space, stretching from the iconic Brandenburg gate far into the west of the city.

The fan zones were an overwhelming success during the 2006 World Cup in Germany, helping to fuel the party atmosphere of that tournament, dubbed locally the 'summer fairytale'.

Conditions are not quite the same this time, with more than one in four Germans having no interest in the Euros, and security being top of the agenda.

Thousands of police will be deployed around the clock in an attempt to head off potential threats from Islamists, hooligans, violent individuals, and cyberattacks.

FINAL
July 15, Monday,
1:00 am

Euro 2024, beginning in Germany on June 14, is a mouth-watering prospect, as France and England lead the heavyweight contenders for a tournament which will be played out in some of the continent's finest stadiums across a football-mad nation.

The setting for the month-long competition is important, given the underwhelming nature of the last Euros three years ago, held all over the continent rather than in one country, and played before limited crowds during the Covid pandemic.

This time all fans will descend on 10 stadiums in Germany, many with memories of the unforgettable summer of 2006 when the country last staged a major tournament.

That 2006 World Cup was won by Italy, who come into this European Championship as title holders, but it also saw Germany emerge again as a force to be reckoned with after years in the doldrums.

Back then there were question marks about the host nation's chances, yet they reached the semifinals.

There are similar doubts this time surrounding Julian Nagelsmann's team, given Germany have exited the last two World Cups in the group stage and lost in the last 16 at the last Euros.

However, it would be foolish to talk down the three-time European champions too much given the players at their disposal.

There are good reasons why France and England are widely seen as the favourites to raise aloft the Henri Delaunay trophy at Berlin's Olympic Stadium on July 14.

France are Europe's top-ranked nation and have been in the last two World Cup finals. Their team has evolved since Qatar in 2022 but the quality at their disposal, beyond Kylian Mbappe, is fearsome and they are eager to win a first European Championship since 2000.

It is not always the case that everything goes to form. But if it does, and France and England top their groups, they will be on a collision course to meet in the semifinals at Signal Iduna Park.

England carry the burden of never having won the Euros. Beaten on penalties by Italy in the 2021 final, Gareth Southgate's team lost a nail-biting quarterfinal to France at the last World Cup.

The two men who could give them the edge are Harry Kane and Jude Bellingham.

Kane will be at home in his surroundings having just scored 44 goals in his first season for Bayern Munich.

Munich's Allianz Arena hosts the first semifinal. The other semifinal venue was Bellingham's home ground for the three years he spent at Dortmund, but he comes to the Euros after a fine first campaign at Real Madrid, fresh from winning the Champions League.

Absent from the last two World Cups, Italy will be in Germany to defend their European crown, despite losing twice to England in qualifying.

The Azzurri are in a group with Spain, semifinalists at the last Euros but who have not won a major tournament knockout game in 90 minutes since Euro 2012.

There may be as many as eight realistic potential champions, including 2016 winners Portugal, still led by Cristiano Ronaldo, even though he is now 39.

Belgium and the Netherlands will hope to make an impact too, but the Euros -- the third edition since expanding to 24 teams – is richer for the presence of less-fancied nations.

Albania, under the Brazilian Sylvinho, appear at only their second Euros, while Georgia make their debut.

Managed by former France and Bayern Munich defender Willy Sagnol, and led by Napoli winger Khvicha Kvaratskhelia, they will be worth watching.

Their tournament starts on June 18 against Turkey in Dortmund.

AT A GLANCE

- Euro 2024 will be the 17th edition of the competition and only the second occasion that the tournament will be hosted by Germany after West Germany hosted the tournament in 1988.
- Italy's triumph in the 2020 edition – their second European Championship - meant the Azzurri became the fourth side to have won the competition more than once after Germany (3), Spain (3), and France (2).
- Ten nations have won Europe's most elite international prize. Russia (as the Soviet Union) won the inaugural edition in 1960 beating Yugoslavia 2-1 in the final.
- Spain became the first team to win consecutive European Championships, in 2008 and 2012 respectively.
- Only on three occasions has a host nation gone on to win the title, with the latest side in that regard being France back in 1984. Spain (in 1964) and Italy (in 1968) are the other two sides to have triumphed on home soil.

- The tournament has seen 22 penalty shootouts overall. The first shootout took place in the 1976 final between Czechoslovakia and West Germany. It included one of the most iconic penalties ever scored as Antonín Panenka disguised a delicate chipped effort into the goal to secure Czechoslovakia the title.
- Netherlands hold the record for netting the most number of goals in a match. They thrashed Yugoslavia 6-1 in 2000 which remains the only time a team has scored six in a European Championship game.
- Cristiano Ronaldo tops the all-time scoring charts in European Championship history with 14 goals, five clear of second-placed Michel Platini. Ronaldo's goals have come across five different editions while Platini scored all of his nine goals in France's title-winning 1984 edition. Platini holds the record for most goals in a single edition.
- Ronaldo also holds the record for most appearances in Euros with 25 in total.
- Austria's Ivica Vastic became the competition's oldest goal-scorer at 38 years and 257 days when he converted a penalty in stoppage-time against Poland in the 2008 edition. Cristiano Ronaldo, aged 39 and set to feature in his sixth European Championship, will be eyeing to make that record his own.
- At 40 years and 86 days, former Hungary goalkeeper Gabor Kiraly, who played in the 2016 edition, became the oldest player to feature in the competition. He also garnered a lot of attention for goalkeeping wearing his grey sweatpants.

FIVE PLAYERS TO WATCH

JUDE BELLINGHAM (ENGLAND)

Fresh from helping Real Madrid to La Liga and Champions League glory in his first season in Spain, Jude Bellingham turns his attention to trying to end England's 58-year wait for major tournament glory.

The 20-year-old is part of a star-studded array of attacking talent alongside Harry Kane, Phil Foden and Bukayo Saka.

Bellingham played in a deeper role at the 2022 World Cup but he has thrived in the more advanced position given to him by Carlo Ancelotti this season, scoring 23 goals.

Victory at the Euros could also position Bellingham as the leading candidate to win this year's Ballon d'Or -- awarded to the world's best player.

KYLIAN MBAPPE (FRANCE)

Speculation over Kylian Mbappe's future has finally been put to bed, with the forward making his way to Real Madrid from PSG.

The 25-year-old has faced accusations that he has wasted some of his prime years in his homeland.

After becoming the first teenager since Pele to score in a World Cup final to help France to victory in Russia in 2018, he became the first player since 1966 to net a hattrick in the 2022 World Cup final which Les Bleus lost to Argentina on penalties.

But Mbappe also has a score to settle at the Euros. He missed the crucial penalty in France's shock last 16 exit to Switzerland three years ago, having failed to score in the coronavirus-delayed tournament.

FLORIAN WIRTZ (GERMANY)

Florian Wirtz carries the hopes of the home nation after playing a starring role in Bayer Leverkusen's unbeaten German league and cup double.

Germany have suffered a rare fallow period, bowing out at the group stage of each of the past two World Cups and the last 16 at Euro 2020.

Wirtz, named the Bundesliga's player of the season, offers hope that a new generation can rejuvenate the fortunes of the three-time European champions under Julian Nagelsmann.

Both a goalscoring threat and creative hub, Wirtz, 21, netted 18 goals and provided 20 assists as Leverkusen reached the Europa League final on top of their domestic dominance.

CRISTIANO RONALDO (PORTUGAL)

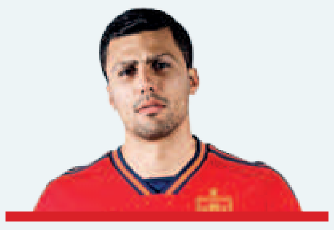
Cristiano Ronaldo continues to defy Father Time as he prepares to take part in a record sixth Euros at the age of 39.

Already the all-time top goalscorer in the comeptition, with 14 goals, the five-time Ballon d'Or winner is still setting new scoring landmarks in Saudi Arabia.

Ronaldo broke the Saudi Pro League record with 35 goals in his first full season in the Gulf.

Portugal have been in supreme form, winning all 10 of their Euro qualifiers.

However, coach Roberto Martinez must decide whether to trust in Ronaldo or to go with a younger, more mobile focal point to his attack such as Diogo Jota or Goncalo Ramos.



RODRI (SPAIN)

Manchester City's FA Cup final loss to Man United was Rodri's first defeat for club or country since March 2023, excluding penalty shootouts.

In a Spain squad lacking the star names of the past, the 27-year-old is now the standard bearer.

"He's the best midfield player in the current world by far," said City coach Pep Guardiola, himself a former midfielder.

Rodri's tenacity out of possession and poise on the ball will be the foundation on which Luis de la Fuente can build.

The three-time European champions will need it as they are in the toughest-looking group alongside defending champions Italy, World Cup semifinalists Croatia and Albania.

Fake refrigerants seized at Ctg port

MOHAMMAD SUMAN

Chattogram Customs House confiscated 62,000 suspected substandard refrigerant gas-filled cylinders at the port.

An intelligence agency recommended intercepting the shipments from China, customs officials said.

An intelligence report noted that poor-quality gas for AC and refrigerators posed health risks and can lead to accidents.

Numerous importers received shipments of refrigerant valued at Tk 400-500 crores at the port by providing false declarations, said the report.

The products are of extremely low quality and manufactured by a fraudulent company, the report added.

On papers, the confiscated cylinders were brought from a Chinese company named FORANE which maintains international standards. However, the confiscated cylinders were labelled FORAN and they resembled genuine FORANE cylinders, according to the detention report from customs.

The actual company's cylinders are priced at $7-8 each, whereas the fake cylinders cost less than $2.

Mohammad Fyzur Rahman, commissioner of Chattogram Custom House, said, "More than 10 shipments were confiscated during the clearance process. Additionally, release of approximately 40 consignments have been temporarily halted. It has been determined that counterfeit goods were brought under false declarations."

"Further steps will be taken based on the advice of the Directorate of Explosives," he added.

Importers are required to follow the Explosives Policy-1991 and obtain prior approval from the directorate.

Similarly, the importers also have to follow the Bus, launch terminals see huge rush of homegoers

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

In spite of the rain, the capital's bus and launch terminals, as well as the Kamalapur Railway Station, began to fill up with passengers as thousands made the journey to their village homes yesterday, the last working day for government employees before the Eid-ul-Azha holidays began.

The rush of people heading home for Eid is expected to peak tomorrow after all the ready-made garment factories closed for the holidays, according to the police and transport operators.

Eid will be celebrated in the country on Monday.

Heavy rain posed challenges for the homegoers trying to reach the bus and launch terminals and railway stations.

People got stranded at different points of the capital during the hour-

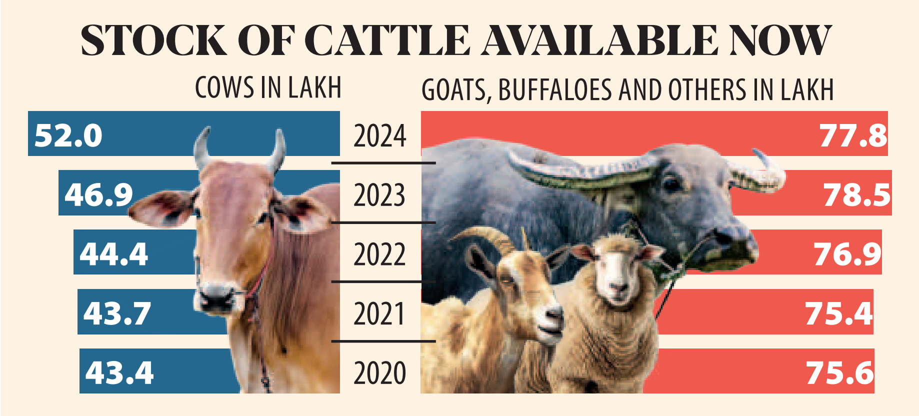
Record number of sacrificial animals up for Eid sale

Traders anticipate low sales due to inflationary pressure on the middle class



SUKANTA HALDER

A record number of sacrificial animals are up for sale this Eid-ul-Azha due to the surplus of the animals, which were left largely unsold during last year's Eid.

The number was over 1.25 crore in 2023 and crossed 1.29 crore this year, according to Department of Livestock Services (DLS) data.

Of the animals, there are 53 lakh cows and buffaloes; 76 lakh goats and sheep; and 1,850 other mammals, it said.

The DLS data said there is a demand for 1.7 crore sacrificial animals this year.

According to businesspeople, this year's is the highest number of sacrificial animals for Eid-ul-Azha in the history of Bangladesh, which is why they would not be sold at prices as high as previous years.

Tk 29.40 lakh looted from bank's vault

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Bogura

Robbers looted Tk 29.40 lakh after breaking into the vault of Matidali sub-branch of IFIC Bank in Bogura Sadar upazila early yesterday.

Quoting bank officials, Saihan Olliullah, officer-in-charge of Sadar Police Station, said the robbers entered the first floor of the two-storey building through the roof access and got into the branch breaking its locks.

Seeking anonymity, a police official said there were three CCTV cameras inside the branch. Two masked men entered the bank around 2:30am and covered the cameras with tissue paper.

Branch Manager Fahmida Firoz declined to comment when asked about the security at the branch.

Contacted, Snikdho Akhtar, additional superintendent of Bogura police, said, "Only four people are operating the branch -- manager, cashier, cleaner, and a watchman who is on duty during the daytime."

The branch did not have any nightwatchman, he said.

Police said two bank officials kept the money in the vault Wednesday. When they reached work yesterday morning, they found the vault broken and the money taken.

Filing of a case in this connection is underway, said police.

On January 26, robbers took away Tk 9 lakh from a sub-branch of NRBC Bank at Pallimanga under Sadar upazila breaking into its vault.

Police are still investigating the case.

Israeli forces strike deeper into Rafah

30 more Palestinians killed; Hamas urges Blinken to put 'direct pressure' on Israel for permanent ceasefire

- Gaza death toll rises to 37,232

Israeli tanks advanced deeper into the western area of Rafah, amid one of the worst nights of bombardment from air, ground, and sea, forcing many families to flee their homes and tents under darkness, residents said yesterday.

Residents said the Israeli forces thrust towards the Al-Mawasi area of Rafah near the beach, which is designated as a humanitarian area in all announcements and maps published by the Israeli army since it began its Rafah offensive in May.

The Israeli military denied in a statement it had launched any strikes inside the Al-Mawasi humanitarian zone.

The Ezzedine Al-Qassam Brigades, the armed wing of Hamas, said its fighters were battling Israeli troops on the streets of the same area, reports AFP.

The Israeli military said it was continuing "intelligence-based, targeted operations" on Rafah, saying forces in the past day had located weapons, and killed Palestinian gunmen in close-range combat.

The military said it had struck 45 targets across the Gaza Strip from the air, including "military structures, militant cells, rocket launchers, and tunnel shafts".

The top world court, the International Court of Justice, in May issued a binding ruling for Israel to halt any offensive in Rafah and elsewhere that could bring about "the physical destruction" of the Palestinians.

Israel responded that it had not "and will not" engage in such operations against the Palestinians, reports Reuters.

At least 37,232 Palestinians have been killed and 85,037 have been injured in

1.5m pilgrims reach Makkah as hajj begins today

AGENCIES

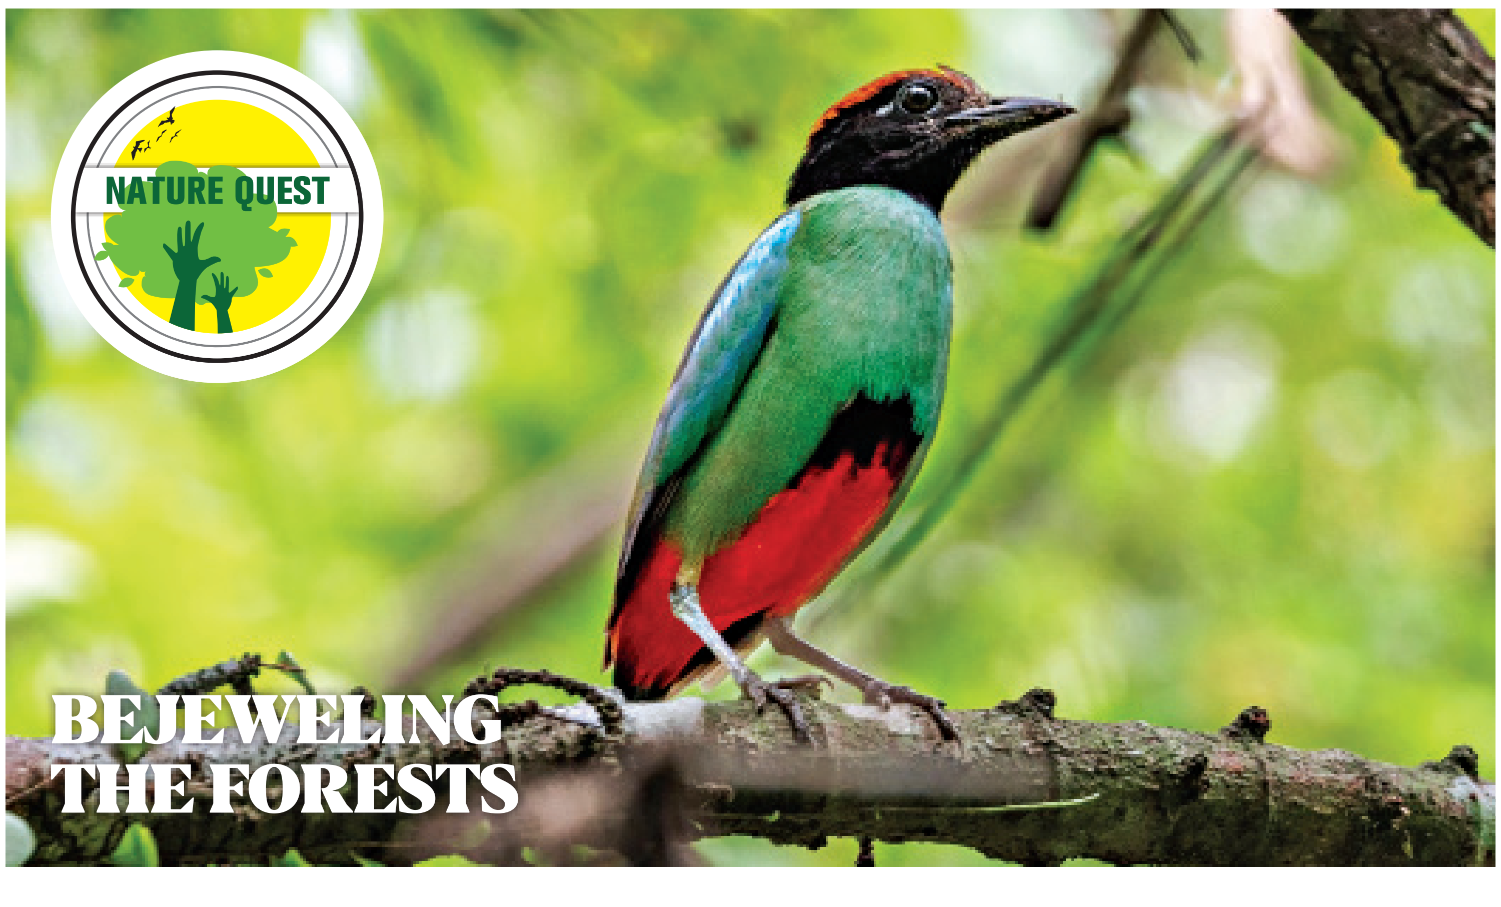
More than 1.5 million Muslims will begin the annual hajj pilgrimage in the Saudi holy city of Makkah today.

Crowds of worshippers have already begun to gather in Makkah in the days ahead of the hajj, the focal point of the Islamic calendar.

Saudi officials said they expect the number of pilgrims this year to exceed those in 2023, when more than 1.8 million people performed hajj.

The pilgrims included 4,200 Palestinians from the occupied West Bank who arrived in Makkah earlier this month, according to the Palestinian Ministry of Awqaf and Religious Affairs.

Palestinians in the Gaza Strip were not able to travel to Saudi Arabia for hajj this year because of the Israeli offensive in the enclave that began eight months ago.



A western hooded pitta spotted in the Hazarikhil Wildlife Sanctuary in Chattogram. It's one of Asia's most frequently observed and familiar pitta's and it's no surprise that its range spans from eastern to southeastern Asia and maritime southeast Asia, where it lives in different kinds of forests, plantations and other cultivated areas. As lowland species, it's easily identified throughout its range due to the striking colours: emerald green body plumage, dark head, bright blue wings and a dash of red in the underbelly. Though it is abundant in its range, a slow decline in its population shows that within a decade or so, it might become a vulnerable species. Spotted from April to August during its breeding season, this bird highlights the sanctuary's dense forest and undergrowth as a vital habitat, underscoring the importance of preserving such natural environments and celebrating the region's rich biodiversity.

US, Ukraine ink 10yr defence deal

REUTERS, Italy

US President Joe Biden and Ukraine President Volodymyr Zelenskiy signed a 10-year bilateral security agreement yesterday aimed at bolstering Ukraine's defence against Russian invaders and getting Ukraine closer to NATO membership.

The deal, signed on the sidelines of the G7 summit in Italy, aims to commit future US administrations to support Ukraine, even if former President Donald Trump wins November's election, officials said.

"Our goal is to strengthen Ukraine's credible defense and deterrence capabilities for the long term," Biden said at a joint news conference with Zelenskiy.

He said the G7's message to Russian President Vladimir Putin is "You cannot wait us out. You cannot divide us." The group of rich nations also agreed to a $50 billion loan for Ukraine backed by profits from frozen Russian assets.

The US-Ukraine security deal is a framework for a long-term effort to help develop Ukraine's outdated armed forces and serve as a step towards Ukraine's eventual NATO membership, according to the text.

The Ukraine president called the agreement historic, saying it is a bridge toward his country's eventual NATO membership. "This is an agreement on security and thus on the protection of human life," he said.

Zelenskiy has long sought NATO membership, but the allies have stopped short of taking that step. The Western alliance regards any attack launched on one of its 32 members as an attack on all under its Article Five clause.

In the event of an armed attack or threat of such against Ukraine, top US and Ukrainian officials will meet within 24 hours to consult on a response and determine what additional defense needs are required for Ukraine,

Hasina to visit India on June 21

STAR REPORT

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina will visit New Delhi on June 21-22.

PM's Press Secretary Md Nayeemul Islam Khan confirmed it to The Daily Star last night.

The decision comes just a week after the PM's visit to India to attend the swearing-in ceremony of Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi.

According to sources in the Bangladesh High Commission in New Delhi and Indian Ministry of External Affairs, Hasina and Modi will have a one-on-one meeting followed by a delegation-level meeting on June 22 at the Hyderabad House in New Delhi.

She is supposed to return home that day.

A diplomatic source in Dhaka told The Daily Star yesterday, "The decision for a bilateral visit to India is somewhat sudden, but leadership of the two countries wanted to have the visit now after the elections in both countries."

The source said the leaders of the two countries want to advance the existing relations that have

BNP revamping party, wings

MOHAMMAD AL-MASUM MOLLA

The BNP has started reorganising the party to inject vigour and form a strong base to relaunch its anti-government movement.

The party decided to revamp the organisation after evaluating the "success and failure" of its movement centring the January 7 national election.

As part of the move, the party dissolved the convening committees of its Dhaka south and North city units on Thursday night. The BNP also announced dissolution of the convening committees of its Chattogram and Barishal city units.

The central committee of Jatiyatabadi Jubo Dal, led by President Sultan Salahuddin Tuku and General Secretary Abdul Monayem Munna, has also been dissolved.

Party sources said the move was made to relieve those leaders who failed to wage a movement centring on the January 7 national polls, and to bring "tested and young" leaders into the party's leadership.

The BNP and some other political parties boycotted the polls.

The sources said that after the

The International Monetary Fund will discuss releasing $1.15 billion in the third instalment of its loan to Bangladesh during its board meeting on June 24. This is part of the IMF's $4.7 billion loan programme for the country.

The date for the meeting was fixed yesterday. Bangladesh officials said they are hopeful that the loan proposal will be approved since the country has met all conditions except one set for the release of the third tranche.

In the board meeting, the multilateral lender will assess Bangladesh's progress in meeting the conditions set in December last year.

EID RUSH

People suffer as highways clog up

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

As thousands of Eid holidaymakers left Dhaka yesterday, many suffered on roads due traffic congestions on three major highways and at an exit point of the capital in the morning.

Traffic situation improved in the afternoon, but vehicles moved slowly in some parts of two major highways in the evening.

Many passengers complained that some bus operators charged them extra fares taking advantage of the Eid rush.

Some said they had to wait for several hours to board buses even after buying tickets at higher prices.

Most of the trains left Kamalapur Railway Station on schedule.

SUFFERING IN MORNING

People leaving Dhaka using Mayor Hanif Flyover faced tailbacks in the morning.

Monirul Islam Bhuiyan, a banker, said he boarded a shuttle bus of a transport company in Kalabagan at 10:00am.

"It is now 1:30pm and I am still stuck on the flyover. I don't know how long it will take to reach Chattogram," he told this newspaper.

He reached Narayanganj's Signboard area at 2:00pm.

From Paduar Bazar to Chandina of Cumilla, a 7km stretch, vehicles moved slowly around 6:00pm, reports our Cumilla correspondent.

According to highway police, congestion happened after workers from Denim Processing Plant in Chandina blocked the highway around 11:00am, demanding arrear wages.

The blockade was withdrawn around noon, said Ahmed Sanzur Morshed, officer-in-charge of Chandina Police Station.

People bound for southern districts suffered delays on the Dhaka-Mawa Expressway due to a 6km tailback at the Mawa end of the Padma Bridge toll plaza.

Scenes from a bazaar

RBR

Just a few kilometres off the city boundaries is a greener Dhaka. The colours and tempo of a busy market intrigues me with wafts of tea brewing in a soot-laden old kettle in a tea stall.

It is the people who make such bazaars come alive -- their everyday rituals resembling the background scene of a movie.

I was crossing through one such bazaar on the outskirts of Dhaka, early on a weekend morning. It felt like I was watching a motion picture, where everything moved at a slow, ritualistic pace.

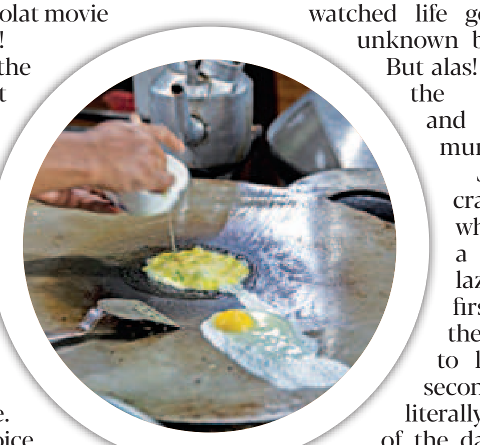
A group of beautiful women from the "bede" (snake charmers) community, caught my attention.

Hot pink, saffron yellow, and green sarees with hibiscus flowers tucked in their high buns -- these pretty ladies were decked up in jewellery. Rings on their toes, big dangling nose rings, and a pin stuck in their septum.

Their colourful glass bangles jingled while their silver chains with fish or snake pendants made them look naturally beautiful.

As always, they were raising money for an orphan's wedding. To make me believe their cause, they invited me to a Friday afternoon wedding on their boat.

This was my Chocolat movie moment, right there!



At 7:00am, the shabby market was buzzing with activities. Cooks in makeshift hotels beside the big banyan tree were busy serving orders. One hotel cook made the trunk of the old tree his support wall, where he set up his stove. My breakfast of choice was the obvious egg roll and a steaming cup of sugary milk tea.

The paanwallah with his assortment of jolly tins was making a sweet khili or a single betel leaf wrapped with sweet mouth fresheners for me, the treat was on the house for taking his pictures.

I was the odd one out in this "movie scene", a mere bystander envying their simple, easy life that was a shade of every colour of blue, black, and pink.

If given the choice, I could have watched life go by in that unknown bazaar forever. But alas! I had to break the magic spell and return to my mundane city life.

Just at the crack of dawn, when the sky is a hue of lapis lazuli, the crow's first cry brings these bazaars to life in a split second, almost literally rising out of the darkness of the night.

Thanks to the Padma Bridge, going on such drives or day trips has become much easier than manoeuvring through city traffic.

Drives to places like Bhanga Bazar for a cup of their fusion brew of tea and coffee in thick milk, or popping at least five to six piping hot roshogollas of Khoka Miyar Mishti shop in Tetul Tolar Mor in Faridpur.

If you are lucky, you might even stumble upon a weekly bazaar or haat in an open space surrounded by old trees.

These pop-up bazaars are the liveliest in the late afternoon and take up an almost fair-like atmosphere. These bazaars have everything ones heart could fancy, from people selling home-grown fresh vegetables, country chicken eggs, ducks, moa and narus, and handmade wares like cane baskets or pankhas.

I love how men sit with a glass box full of local sweets under the shade of a tree, sharing the space acharwallahs or kulfiwallahs.

I love watching people. I love the green, the cool summer breeze on my face. A few kilometres off the city boundaries is a greener Dhaka like you have never seen.

To the people of Dhaka, I suggest you sometimes venture out of the monotony and traffic of the city to discover all the little joys sitting on its outskirts.

3 Bangladeshis killed in Saudi Arabia road crash

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Chandpur

Three Bangladeshi migrant workers were killed in a road accident in Saudi Arabia on Thursday. They were residents of Chandpur's Faridganj and Haimchar upazilas.

The deceased were identified as Sabuj Chowkidar, 38, of Paschim Bishkatali village of Faridganj upazila, Md Sabbir, 21, of Charbhanga village of Haimchar upazila and Md Rifat, 20, of Kamalapur village of Haimchar upazila.

The accident occurred around 9:00am (local time) on Thursday when they were going to their workplace from Afif, a city in Saudi Arabia.

Sabuj's father Jamal Chowkidar said they received information about the accident at 4:00pm on Thursday.

Later, they were taken to a local hospital where doctors declared three people, including Sabuj, dead around 10:00pm, he said quoting relatives staying in Saudi Arabia.

Sabuj was driving the car at the time of the accident, he added.

Families of the victims are urgently calling for the cooperation of the departments of the government concerned in bringing the bodies of their sons.

AFP, Paris

France's left put up a united front yesterday, vowing a "total break" with President Emmanuel Macron's policies if it wins historic polls, while far-right figurehead Marine Le Pen pledged a "national unity government" if her party emerges victorious.

President Emmanuel Macron on Sunday stunned France by calling snap legislative elections for June 30, with a second round on July 7, after Le Pen's far-right National Rally (NR) scored more than double the number of votes of his centrist alliance in last week's European elections.

After four days of intense negotiations, left-wing leaders including the hard-left France Unbowed (LFI), the Socialist, Communist and Green parties said late on Thursday they had agreed on an election alliance called the New Popular Front.

Yesterday, they unveiled a joint manifesto, whose headline measures included jettisoning Macron's controversial immigration and pension reforms if they win the polls.

The complaint said the accused stole three computers and a monitor from the office.

Sarwar was appointed as the manager by a committee formed by the district administration to manage the confiscated property and deposit the proceeds to a bank account.

The accused include Sajeeb Majumder, 33, Subrata Roy, 23, and Animesh Sen, 30, of Rajoir in Madaripur; and Bilpob Baul, 40, and Sanjoy Baul, 28, of Gopalganj town.

Of them, Biplob and his nephew Sanjoy, who live near the resort, earlier told reporters that the former inspector general of police often forced religious minorities to sell their properties.

According to the complaint, CCTV footage shows three men entering the office of the resort on Wednesday night and stealing some object.

Two members of the management committee, Bijon Kumar Nandi, fisheries officer, and Abdul Quader, deputy director of the agricultural extension department, said the faces of the suspects were not seen in the footage.

They added that the individuals were accused based on suspicion of several employees of the resort.

Besides, the complainant said he had gone to bed when the alleged theft happened.

Contacted, Sanjoy said, "We have been falsely accused because we spoke to the media against former IGP Benazir and other government officials. We are not poor. Why would we steal computers?

"Fear has gripped our family. Maybe we should leave the country."

Subrata, another accused, said he had not been anywhere near the resort in the last one month.

deepened over more than a decade, especially in trade and connectivity.

One of the major points could be on the Teesta water sharing deal that could not be signed despite all preparations in 2011 because of the opposition from West Bengal Chief Minister Mamata Banerjee.

Also, from regional perspectives, Bangladesh faces the Rohingya crisis that has worsened because of intensification of conflicts between the Myanmar military and the Arakan Army in the bordering Rakhine State.

"The details of the bilateral visit was yet to be prepared," a foreign ministry official told this correspondent.

Hasina is likely to visit Beijing on July 9-12.

People suffer as highways clog up

Ziaul Islam, in-charge of Mawa Traffic Police Outpost, told our Munshiganj correspondent that vehicles were caught in a snarl-up on the expressway early yesterday after a goods-laden truck broke down near the toll plaza. The truck was removed from the expressway after around five hours.

Kanchan Kumar Sinha, in-charge of Hashara Highway Police Station, said traffic became normal around 3:00pm.

Another traffic congestion was seen on the Dhaka-Tangail highway at the east end of the Bangabandhu Bridge. Vehicles moved slowly on this part of the highway for about five hours since early yesterday, causing suffering to the Eid holidaymakers.

Traffic was slow moving on a 20km stretch from the east end of Bangabandhu Bridge to Rabna Bypass in Tangail sadar upazila from 5:00am, said passengers and transport workers.

Sajedur Rahman, in-charge of Elenga Highway Police Outpost, told our Tangail correspondent that traffic situation deteriorated around 6:00am when a cement-laden truck overturned on the highway in Pauli area of Kalihati upazila.

The situation started becoming normal after the truck was removed from the highway around 8:30am, said the police official.

A huge pressure of vehicles on Nabinagar-Baipail-Chandra highway and Abdullahpur-Baipail road led to traffic congestions in some places, said Ayub Ali, officer-in-charge of Savar Highway Police Station in Dhaka.

Rush of vehicles led to a 3km congestion, stretching from Gabtoli to Baliarpur area, on Dhaka-Aricha Highway, Ayub told our Savar correspondent in the evening.

TRAIN SERVICES

A large number of people left Dhaka by trains yesterday and their journeys back home were largely hassle free.

More than 30 trains left Dhaka as of 7:00pm and only two of them ran behind schedule, Shah Alam Kiron Shishir, divisional commercial officer (Dhaka division) of Bangladesh Railway, told The Daily Star.

Rajshahi-bound Silkcity Express departed the capital one hour late while Chattogram-bound Chattala Express was one and a half hours, he said.

Departure of Rajshahi Commuter was delayed by two and a half hours.

Many passengers expressed satisfaction at the railway services as almost all trains left Kamalapur Railway Station on time.

IMF board to meet on June 24

Bangladesh could not meet the condition set for foreign currency reserves.

As per the loan conditions, the target for net international reserves (NIR) in December last year was $17.78 billion. However, a recent IMF review found the NIR was $16.73 billion at that particular time.

The NIR is defined as reserves assets minus reserve liabilities. Reserves liabilities are all foreign exchange liabilities to residents and nonresidents, including commitments to sell foreign exchange arising from derivatives and all credit outstanding from the IMF.

Bangladesh Bank and finance ministry officials said the country has met five other conditions, including a maximum limit of Tk 90,520 crore for the primary budget deficit in December. The government saw a budget surplus of about Tk 50,000 crore at that particular time.

The tax revenue collection target was set at Tk 1,43,640 crore for the first six months of the current fiscal year, but the government collected over Tk 1,62,000 crore.

The social spending target was set at Tk 30,990 crore for the same period, but the country spent more than Tk 55,000 crore.

For capital spending, the target was set at Tk 22,280 crore. However, Bangladesh spent about Tk 36,000 crore during the same period.

Bangladesh also met the two other targets -- maintaining a ceiling on reserve money and repaying foreign debt.

Ahead of releasing the third tranche of its loan, an IMF mission, led by Chris Papageorgiou, visited Dhaka from April 24-May 8 to review the programme performances.

In a media statement after the review, the IMF said its staff and the Bangladesh authorities have reached a staff-level agreement on the policies needed to complete the second review of the authorities' programme.

"The review is pending IMF Executive Board approval. Upon the Board's approval, Bangladesh will have access to SDR871 million [about $1,152 million] in financing," read the statement.

The Bangladesh authorities have made significant progress on structural reforms under the IMF-supported programme, including the implementation of a formula-based fuel price adjustment mechanism for petroleum products, it added.

The IMF also welcomed Bangladesh Bank's "bold actions" to realign the exchange rate and simultaneously adopt a crawling peg regime with a band.

Following the liberalisation of retail interest rates, IMF also said additional tightening of monetary policy should help alleviate any inflationary pressures resulting from the exchange rate reform.

On May 26, Finance Minister Abul Hassan Mahmood Ali told reporters that Bangladesh would get the third instalment by June.

The IMF approved the $4.7 billion loan in January last year. Bangladesh has received more than $1 billion in two instalments.

Tunisia sentences five over missing migrants

AFP, Tunis

A Tunisian court has sentenced five people to prison for organising an illegal migrant sea crossing that resulted in 18 deaths or disappearances, a spokesman said yesterday.

The boat carrying the migrants, all Tunisians, went missing off the coast of the southeastern city of Zarzis during an attempt to reach Italy in September 2022.

The five Tunisian defendants, including two still at large, received prison terms ranging from four to 10 years on Thursday night, said Lassad Horr, spokesman for the Medenine court.

The incident sparked protests and a general strike in Zarzis. President Kais Saied later ordered an investigation to uncover what happened.

The court spokesman said yesterday that a boat, two cars and a GPS device had been seized as part of the investigation.

BNP revamping

polls, party high-ups evaluated the movement outcome and its leaders' role and decided to reorganise the party based on the evaluation report.

"Movement, organisation, and election are interrelated. The move to reorganise the party is to strengthen the party's organisational capacity and to intensify the movement," BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir told The Daily Star.

He, however, said the process of dissolving committees and forming new ones is a routine task carried out by a political party.

BNP leaders said party acting chairman Tarique Rahman started the process following its post-election report.

He held a series of meetings with the leaders, including the latest one with the Dhaka city unit leaders on Thursday.

"He [Tarique] told the meeting that new committees will be formed and he sought cooperation from all," said a senior leader, wishing not to be named.

BNP standing committee member Goyeshwar Chandra Roy said dedicated and competent leaders would be included in the new committees.

Sources said new faces will be included in those committees which are yet to expire. However, those who failed to carry out their duties during the movement will be dropped.

"The party's acting chairman already has a list of such failed leaders," Goyeshwar said.

The BNP enforced hartals, blockades, and waged a non-cooperation movement to press home its one-point demand-- resignation of the government and parliamentary polls under an interim administration.

The government rather cornered the opposition party through pressure, arrest, and implicating top and mid-ranking BNP leaders in numerous cases, said party leaders.

Babu confesses meeting hitman

The duo then met in a vehicle on the Bhanga Expressway in Faridpur on May 17 to settle how the blood money will be paid.

They also exchanged photos of murdered MP Azim. The meeting was held in the vehicle of Amanullah. Babu then assured him of paying a portion of the blood money on May 23.

The Detective Branch of Dhaka Metropolitan Police disclosed the summary of Babu's interrogation in the investigation progress report to a Dhaka court yesterday.

Mahfuzur Rahman, assistant commissioner of the DB, also investigation officer of Azim abduction case, appealed for recording Babu's confessional statement.

Following the petition, Metropolitan Magistrate Mohammad Jasim recorded his statement. The court later sent Babu, also a cousin of Aktaruzzaman, one of the masterminds of the murder, to jail.

Besides Babu, three others -- Amanullah, his nephew Tanvir Bhuiyan, and Celesty Rahman, a friend of Aktaruzzaman -- earlier gave confessional statements in the case. They are now in jail.

A court source quoted Babu as saying that Azim was elected lawmaker from Jhenaidah-4 (Kaliganj) three times in a row.

Saidul Karim Mintu, general secretary of Jhenaidah AL, who is close to Babu, did not get the party ticket for the national polls. That's why a plan was made to clear his path to party nomination.

The source said Mintu, who is now on an eight-day remand in DB custody, tried to get the party ticket from the constituency in the last two national polls, but was not able to secure it due to Azim.

In 2022, Azim also wanted to become district AL general secretary. For this, there was a rivalry between the two.

Even on June 5, Babu filed a general diary with Jhenaidah Sadar Police Station, alleging that his three mobile phones were stolen, but those were with Mintu, investigators said.

Mintu gave Babu the idea so that police could not get the trace of communications between Babu and Amanullah.

Mintu even joined different programmes to get the AL ticket for the by-election in the constituency even before the government declared the seat vacant, sources said.

Ashraful Alam, Kaliganj municipality mayor, told The Daily Star, "The district general secretary has long been trying to get the AL ticket."

Azim went to Kolkata on May 12 and stayed at a friend's home for a night. He left the following day, saying that he would visit a doctor.

On May 22, India and Bangladesh police said the lawmaker was murdered.

Harun Or Rashid, additional commissioner (DB) of the DMP, said Mintu had a desire to become a lawmaker from the Jhenaidah-4 constituency.

"Amanullah worked for Akhtaruzzaman as the coordinator of the killing and Babu worked for Mintu to maintain communication with the killers," he added.

HOMEWARD BOUND

Clockwise from left, people throng the Sadarghat launch terminal to travel to the southern districts for the Eid holidays yesterday afternoon. Meanwhile, the Kamalapur Railway Station has been a hive of activity with people heading towards their hometowns. Many even had to take drastic measures like boarding a train through windows. Besides, desperate to go home, people tried to get on bus in the middle of the road in Shanir Akhra area.

Cattle sales yet to gain momentum

HELEMUL ALAM and SHAHEEN MOLLAH

Despite Eid-ul-Azha being just two days away, the cattle markets of Dhaka city have not yet gained momentum due to a lack of customers. Till yesterday evening, a good number of sacrificial animals, especially bulls, were present at all 16 cattle markets in Dhaka, but customer turnout was notably low until 5:00pm.

During visits to the Kamalapur and Kachukhet cattle markets, contrasting situations were observed. Kachukhet was flooded with bulls, while Kamalapur had 20-30 percent fewer bulls, according to traders and customers.

Government data shows 1.29 crore sacrificial animals are available this year, an increase of 4,44,034 from last year, with an excess of 22.8 lakh cattle compared to the demand.

One thing common though was a thin presence of buyers, despite yesterday being a holiday.

Government data shows 1.29 crore sacrificial animals are available this year, an increase of 4,44,034 from last year, with an excess of 22.8 lakh cattle compared to the demand.

This year, around 52 lakh cows, 1.60 lakh buffaloes, 68 lakh goats, 7,67,743 sheep, and 1,850 other animals are up for sale.

Sentu Bepary, a cattle trader from Meherpur, said, "Seven of us cattle traders brought 37 bulls to the Kamalapur cattle market four days ago, but have only sold one so far due to the low presence of customers."

Mannan Bepary, who brought 12 bulls from Sirajganj to Kamalapur, disagreed with the government statistics. "In our area, many cattle farmers did not raise bulls this year due to the high price of cattle feed and last year's losses," he said.

He noted that the number of bulls at the Kamalapur market is 30 percent less compared to last year's.

"We hope the sales will peak on the last day before Eid. However, last year's experience was very bad with many bulls remaining unsold or being sold at low prices on the last day," Mannan added.

Ismail Hossain, another trader, blamed the high prices of cattle this year on the expensive cattle feed. Others echoed him.

Shamshul Islam, a trader at Kachukhet who brought six bulls from Kishoreganj, expressed fear of incurring losses like last year. "I faced a loss of Tk 30,000 last year and hoped for a profit this year, but the market's situation doesn't look promising," he said.

Nurul Islam, a customer from Bhasantek, said the current prices are similar to last year's.

Dhaka's unused slaughterhouses

Designated spots lie idle, city corporations blame indifference of residents

HELEMUL ALAM

Unsafe and unsanitary animal slaughter practices often mar the Eid-ul-Azha celebrations in Dhaka.

With sacrificial animals being slaughtered in thousands on Dhaka streets, blood and other waste accumulate on them, which takes hours, if not days, to be removed. The situation further worsens if it rains during the day.

Though both Dhaka city corporations built four permanent slaughterhouses to address these issues, they remain largely unused due to residents' preference for traditional neighbourhood slaughtering and the logistical shortcomings of the designated facilities.

For the last four years, Dhaka South City Corporation has not provided logistical support for transporting animals to slaughterhouses on Eid day. Dhaka North City Corporation did not provide this service last Eid.

A VISIT TO SLAUGHTERHOUSES

During a recent visit to the DNCC slaughterhouses at Mirpur-11 and Mohammadpur Krishi Market, this correspondent found slaughter animals without any health checkups.

Meanwhile, the DSCC slaughterhouses at Kaptan Bazar and Hazaribagh, alongside the Mohakhali slaughterhouse of DNCC, were all found shut.

Construction of the Kaptan Bazar slaughterhouse, which began in 2018 and was supposed to be completed in 2019, is still ongoing.

Despite completing construction in September 2022, DSCC has failed to start operations at the Hazaribagh slaughterhouse. The project cost was Tk 79.71 crore.

The Mohakhali slaughterhouse, built around seven years ago, remains locked with no initiatives to make it functional.

WHAT AUTHORITIES SAY

The DSCC slaughterhouses are equipped with semi-mechanical equipment, according to a DSCC official. The upgraded design will enhance sanitary conditions and increase daily slaughtering capacity nearly fourfold compared to conventional slaughterhouses.

Hazaribagh will handle up to 1,200 cattle daily, while Kaptan Bazar's capacity will be around 600 cattle a day, he said.

The capacity for goats at each facility is about twice that of cattle.

Another DSCC official said 98 percent of the work on the Kaptan Bazar slaughterhouse has been completed, and they aim to complete the project by June 25.

The total project cost is around Tk 36.50 crore.

Meanwhile, the Hazaribagh slaughterhouse remains non-operational as DSCC failed to receive satisfactory bids, said DSCC state officer Md Moniruzzaman.

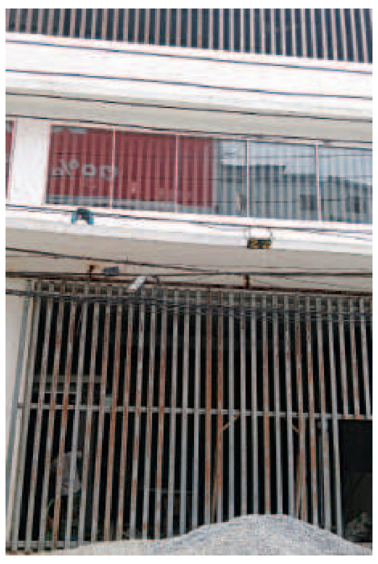
DSCC invited two tenders, with lease prices set at Tk 8.56 crore initially and Tk 6.15 crore later, but no offers were received.

"We are waiting to revise and lower the rate to attract bids for its operation and are preparing for another tender," Monir said.

Another DSCC official said while many organisations show interest, they lack prior experience in large-scale meat production and management.

DNCC Mayor Md Atiqul Islam said the Mohakhali kitchen market, near the Mohakhali slaughterhouse, was converted into a Covid-19 hospital during the pandemic. He noted that the slaughterhouse has not been used since then. "People are not interested in bringing their animals to slaughterhouses. However, I recognise the need for a modern slaughterhouse. We are holding stakeholder meetings in this regard," he said.

He said poor response during previous Eids is the reason why the service of designated slaughterhouses was not provided last Eid.



The slaughterhouse in Mohakhali remains unused while the one at Kaptan Bazar (right) lies incomplete. Meanwhile, Hazaribagh slaughterhouse is still unopened.

Blacksmiths busy ahead of Eid

FM MIZANUR RAHAMAN

Blacksmiths in Chattogram city are passing a busy time ahead of the Eid-ul-Azha, making and sharpening tools for sacrificial animals.

Visiting several blacksmith shops in the port city's Tin Pooler Matha, Riazuddin Bazar, Lal Dighi's Jail Road, Muradpur, Choumuhuny, Bakalia-Kalamia Bazar, Halishahar-Boropol, and EPZ areas, this correspondent observed the local blacksmiths working for long hours to meet the demand.

People are visiting the shops in numbers to buy or sharpen machetes, choppers, cleavers, and butcher's knives of different sizes for a hassle-free Eid.

Additionally, the demand for tools for making kebabs and steaks, including skewers, is also on the rise, said traders.

This year, the price of these iron tools is comparatively higher than last year due to the ongoing market situation, they added.

"We have been preparing for Eid-ul-Azha since May 1. The demand for these tools usually rises five days before Eid. Price and quality depend on customers' demands and materials," said Pravat Karmakar, a blacksmith in Sagorika of Pahartali area.

"The price of knives starts from Tk 150 to Tk 850 per piece, depending on the size, while cleavers are priced between Tk 450 and Tk 1,200 depending on quality of iron," he added.

"We are selling some ready-made items as most people use these tools for a single day. We also have some tools prepared based on the customers' designs. From six-inch knives to 24-inch knives, you can buy all varieties from us," said Ajoy Karmakar, 60, whose shop is in Nayabazar area.

Rashed Islam, a seller at Golam Rasul Market, said alongside traditional iron tools, the demand for imported knives is also notable.

Ready-made sharp tools are also being sold by hawkers on the roadsides or on vans, while some vendors are going from door to door to sharpen knives and other tools.

"The knife sharpening business will continue round the clock till Eid day. We earn Tk 800-1,000 daily during this time," said Aziz Mia, 65.

ARSA commander held in Cox's Bazar

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Cox's Bazar

Rab claimed to have arrested a commander of Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army (ARSA) along with a G3 rifle in Ukhiya upazila of Cox's Bazar on Thursday night.

The arrestee, Mohammad Zakaria, was a resident of F-17 block in Balukhali Rohingya Camp-10, said Lt Col HM Sazzad Hossain, commanding officer of Rab-15, at a press briefing yesterday.

Acting on a tip-off that ARSA members smuggled firearms from Myanmar for subversive activities, Rab raided the camp and arrested Zakaria, he said.

Rab recovered the G3 rifle and five rounds of ammunition from the Ghati Beel area in Palongkhali union.

During primary interrogation, Zakaria admitted that ARSA members acquired the weapons, looted during recent conflicts in Myanmar, and smuggled those into Bangladesh.

Zakaria concealed the weapon in Camp-10. He is also accused in several cases filed with Ukhiya Police Station and has been arrested twice earlier.

Local BCL leader relieved of post

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Lalmonirhat

A BCL leader has been relieved of his post for alleged involvement in "crimes and anti-organisational activities" in Lalmonirhat.

The BCL central committee took the decision against Rashed Zaman Bilas, president of the district unit of BCL, at a meeting on Thursday and issued a notice to this end yetsterday, said central committee president Saddam Hussain. The Daily Star has a copy of the notice.

BCL general secretary Sheikh Wali Asif Inan said, "We are embarrassed due to his [Bilas] activities."

BCL sources said Bilas is accused in several criminal cases, including extortion. On June 9, Bilas along with his accomplices allegedly extorted Tk 2.4 lakh from a cattle trader.

The trader filed a complaint with Lalmonirhat Sadar Police Station, accusing five people including Bilas, said OC Omar Faruk. The complaint was turned into a case yesterday.

Meanwhile, villagers formed a human chain at Bhadai in Aditmari, demanding justice. Bilas could not be contacted over phone despite repeated attempts.

Work begins to breathe life into dying Ichamati

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Pabna

The long-awaited project to rejuvenate the Ichamati river began in early June under the supervision of Bangladesh Army, bringing joy to the people of Pabna.

Earlier, the Water Development Board (WDB) initiated the "Rejuvenating River Ichamati" project with a budget of Tk 1,554.90 crore. The project was later handed over to the Army Engineering Division.

"We have started dredging operations in the Madhpur-Jagannathpur area of Santhia upazila, Pabna, under the supervision of the Bangladesh Army Engineering Division," said Shudhangshu Kumar Sarkar, project director.

This three-year project involves dredging 110km of waterways. This includes 33.772km of the main river, 44.072km of connecting canals, 20km of the Sutikhali river, and 12.37km of Varara canal to restore water flow.

Sarkar, who is also the superintendent engineer of WDB Pabna, said, "Dredging of the main river will be conducted first, and then other works will begin."

In addition to dredging, the project includes constructing a 10km retaining wall, 10km of drainage, 23 new bridges, 56 ghats for boats, and a 10km walkway. The project also plans to plant 42,310 trees along the riverbanks.

A visit to the Madhpur-Jagannathpur area a few days ago revealed rapid progress in the dredging work.

The 82-kilometre-long Ichamati River, which originates from the Padma and reaches Hurasagar in Bera upazila, flows through the district headquarters of Pabna. However, it has been severely affected by encroachment and pollution over the decades.

"The people of Pabna have been striving to protect the Ichamati river, essential to their livelihoods," said SM Mahabubul Alom, founder of Ichamati Rokhkha Andolon.

After the project was approved by the Ecnec last October, the work was handed over to the Army Engineering Division, according to WDB.

Encroachers have occupied land forging documents in their names over the past few decades. The WDB has identified 1,053 illegal structures on the Ichamati.

Encroachers have filed a series of cases, with 73 cases still pending in court.

"The Ichamati will be dredged according to the CS map, and illegal structures will be removed as per court directions," said Md Mosharaf Hossain, assistant director of WDB Pabna.

Water level of 26 rivers rising

Flood, erosion fear grip shoal residents in Lalmonirhat, Kurigram

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Lalmonirhat

Water level of 26 rivers including the Brahmaputra, Teesta and Dharla is rising in Kurigram and Lalmonirhat districts following rain and flow of upstream waters.

Many low-lying areas and shoals in the districts have already become inundated since yesterday morning, even as the water level has yet to cross the danger level.

The residents of the riverbank and shoal areas are living amid fear of flooding and erosion.

According to officials of the Water Development Board, the water level of Teesta has increased by 30cm and was flowing around 85cm below danger level at Doani Point of Teesta Barrage in Hatibandha upazila of Lalmonirhat yesterday morning.

Meanwhile Dharla's water level rose by 29cm at Shimulbari point of Lalmonirhat Sadar upazila and was flowing 180cm below the danger line, and Brahmaputra was flowing 169cm below the danger level at Chilmari Point in Kurigram.

"Teesta's water started entering the houses in our village this [Friday] afternoon. The yards and tube-well are now submerged under water. If water level rises more, we would have to move elsewhere for shelter," said Achiya Bewa, 67, of Gobordhan shoal under Aditmari upazila of Lalmonirhat.

Sohrab Hossain, 60, of the same village echoed her.

Shunil Kumar, executive engineer of BWDB in Lalmonirhat, said, "The water level may rise further but for now there is no threat of flooding. Since the Brahmaputra river is flowing below the danger level in downstream, Teesta's water is receding rapidly."

No traffic jam on roads ahead of Eid

Says Quader

BSS, Dhaka

Road Transport and Bridges Minister Obaidul Quader yesterday said there is no traffic congestion on the country's roads and highways despite the pressure of vehicles during the Eid journey.

He made the remark while speaking at a press conference at the Awami League president's Dhanmondi political office in Dhaka.

Quader, also the AL general secretary, directed the authorities concerned to discharge their duties so that nobody can set up cattle markets on roads.

"Sacrificial animal-carrying vehicles and cattle markets may cause some traffic congestion... it is difficult to avoid sufferings when it rains. Attention should be paid to performing responsibilities and surveillance should be increased to prevent untoward accidents and loss of life on roads," he said.

About the remand of an AL leader over the killing of lawmaker Anar, the AL general secretary said it is not right to call anyone a criminal before a case is filed and the verdict is declared.

Dev projects, dust pollution go hand in hand in Khulna

DIPANKAR ROY

Khulna city residents are suffering immensely as dust pollution has taken an alarming turn over the last couple of years due to several ongoing development projects.

Despite repeated calls from city dwellers, the Khulna City Corporation and Department of Environment are yet to take any measures in this regard.

According to the Air Quality Index, Khulna's air was extremely unhealthy from March till the first week of June.

KCC is working on a Tk 823 crore project to develop the city's drainage system alongside a Tk 607 crore road development project. Besides, several other projects of road department, electricity department, Khulna Wasa, Khulna Development Authority, and Public Works Department are also ongoing.

Usually, city corporation authorities are tasked with repairing and renovating roads after any development work. However, KCC and Khulna Wasa have been passing blame on each other for not fixing the roads afterwards.

Visiting different KCC areas, including BIDC Road, Zero Point, Kuet Bypass Road, Rupsha Shipyard Road, Abu Naser Bypass Road, BIWTA Road, and Sonadanga Bypass Road, this correspondent found almost all the roads in an awful state with dust accumulating everywhere.

"The roads are dusty, and moving vehicles cause the dust to rise and pollute the air. It becomes difficult to see and breathe. The dust also enters our homes all the time," said Tipu Kibria, a resident of Zero Point area.

Nittananda Saha, who runs a confectionary shop near Notun Rasta intersection, said his business has been adversely affected due to the dust pollution.

"Hundreds of lorries use BIDC Road to load oil from the three state-owned oil companies and cause dust pollution. Like mine, at least 200 shops on the road under Wards 6, 7, 12, and 15 are facing similar ordeals,'' he added.

The situation is particularly dire on Sonadanga Bypass Road, which is being used by around 400 long-haul buses daily.

The road is completely engulfed in dust, no longer has bitumen cover, and is riddled with numerous potholes.

"If there were sufficient waterbodies in KCC areas, that could have reduced air pollution. Also, lack of coordination among the authorities concerned further adds to the menace," said Prof Abdullah Harun Chowdhury of Environmental Science department at Khulna University.

"On some occasions, the same roads were dug several times before being left unattended, without repairs, for months," he added.

Md Anisur Rahman, KCC chief conservancy officer, said they procured two road-sweeping trucks, which will be equipped with water tanks for spraying.

"We generally do not use these machines at construction sites," he added.

Md Arefin Badal, deputy director of DoE in Khulna, said, "We need a comprehensive plan to minimise air pollution."

Sheikh Ashraf Uz Zaman, president of Greater Khulna Development Samgram Coordinating Committee, demanded immediate repair of the roads and drains.

Contacted, KCC Mayor Talukder Abdul Khaleque said, "Two big projects are being implemented on around 600 roads and 325 drains in 31 wards for the past two years, which deteriorated the city's air quality. Almost all works are about to be completed."

Khulna Wasa and KDA did not finish their repair work on time. The service-providing agencies must consider the sufferings of city dwellers before taking up development projects, he added.

RANGABALI UPAZILA

Fish enclosures at the expense of Darchira

SOHRAB HOSSAIN, Patuakhali

Some local influential people in Rangabali upazila of Patuakhali have been setting up fish enclosures grabbing a section of the Darchira river.

The Darchira flows through the upazila to join the Agunmukha river along the Bay of Bengal.

About 1,000 acres of the Darchira river bank have been occupied and fenced for fish enclosures in Char Tozammel, Char Emerson, Char Halim and Char Ganga areas of the upazila, said an employee of the upazila land office, wishing anonymity.

The encroachers have been using excavators to make makeshift dams on the river mouth for restricting water flow and digging earth for constructing the fish enclosures, said locals.

Visiting the river bank areas in Bara Baishdia union recently, this correspondent saw several fish enclosures have been set up using makeshift fences to prevent water from washing away the enclosures during tide. Some pasture lands on the river bank were also seen dug to make more enclosures.

Nuruzzaman, a local resident, said several complaints have been made to the upazila administration in this connection but no step has been taken yet.

Mojibur Rahman, Bellal Gazi, and Riaz Howladar of the area, who are allegedly among those involved in grabbing the river for fish enclosures, claimed that they did so on their own land on the river bank like many others in the area.

Lincoln Bayan, Barishal divisional coordinator of Bangladesh Environmental Lawyers Association, said grabbing the river at its origin to make dams and construct fish enclosures will eventually obstruct its natural flow of water and gradually lead the river to its demise.

Such activities cannot be allowed and the river must be saved at any cost, he added.

Contacted, Rangabali upazila nirbahi officer Mizanur Rahman said several drives have already been conducted to stop the illegal activities.

"Necessary action will be taken against the culprits by identifying them, and the encroached river bank areas will be recovered," he added.

Mamun and his wife were injured.

In Feni, a man was killed as a truck hit him while he was walking along Feni-Noakhali regional road in Silonia Bazar area.

Md Ferdous, 40, from Alampur village in Daganbhuiyan was declared dead at a local hospital, said police.

Meanwhile, another man was found dead at Fathepur in Feni Sadar around 2:00am.

He was going to his village home in Shariatpur to celebrate Eid.

Police suspect that he might have been killed after being hit by a vehicle on the highway.

The OC said they are investigating the incident.

G7 hammers China over Russia ties, 'harmful' trade

AFP, Bari

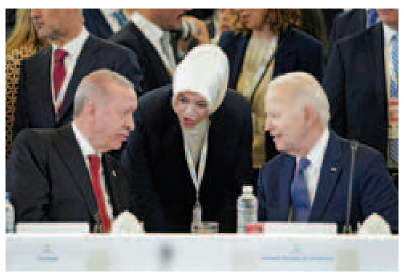
G7 leaders meeting in Italy yesterday hardened their tone against China, warning Beijing to stop sending weapons components to Russia and play by the rules on trade, according to a draft summit statement.

China has been a key focus of the Group of Seven talks in Puglia, amid souring trade relations between Beijing and the West and concerns that its supplies of equipment to Moscow are fuelling Russia's war in Ukraine.

"We call on China to cease the transfer of dual-use materials, including weapons components and equipment, that are inputs for Russia's defence sector," according to a draft statement seen by AFP.

The Group of Seven also took aim at what it called "dangerous" incursions by China in the contested South China Sea, where worries of a military escalation between Beijing and its neighbours are rising.



"We oppose China's militarisation, and coercive and intimidation activities in the South China Sea," the statement read.

After a first day dominated by Ukraine, US President Joe Biden and the leaders of Japan, France, Germany, Canada, Britain and host country Italy turned their focus to the world's second-largest economy, a superpower whose oversized influence on geopolitics and global trade cannot be underestimated.

"G7 countries are on the same page vis-a-vis China," a Japanese government source told AFP.

Thursday's talks, attended by Ukrainian President Volodymr Zelensky, were marked by a strong show of G7 support for Kyiv, with an agreement to use profits from frozen Russian assets to provide a new $50-billion loan to Ukraine.

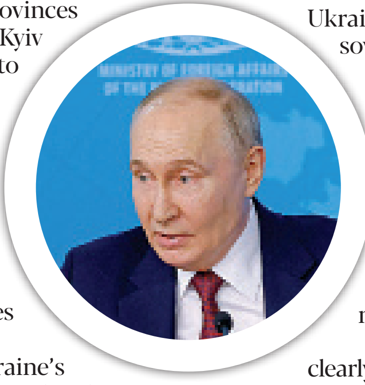
Putin demands more Ukraine land to end war

Kyiv, Nato swiftly reject Russian peace proposals

AGENCIES

President Vladimir Putin said yesterday Russia would end the war in Ukraine only if Kyiv agreed to drop its Nato ambitions and hand over the entirety of four provinces claimed by Moscow, demands Kyiv swiftly rejected as tantamount to surrender.



On the eve of a conference in Switzerland to which Russia has not been invited, Putin set out maximalist conditions wholly at odds with the terms demanded by Ukraine, apparently reflecting Moscow's growing confidence that its forces have the upper hand in the war.

He restated his demand for Ukraine's demilitarisation, unchanged from the day he sent in his troops on February 24, 2022, and said an end to Western sanctions must also be part of a peace deal. He also repeated his call for Ukraine's "denazification", based on what Kyiv calls an unfounded slur against its leadership.

Ukrainian presidential adviser Mykhailo Podolyak told Reuters that Putin's conditions were tantamount to proposing that Ukraine admit defeat and sign away its sovereignty.

There was "no possibility to find compromise" on the basis of what Putin had proposed, he said.

Nato chief Jens Stoltenberg slammed conditions set out by Putin for initiating Ukraine peace talks, calling them a proposal for "more aggression, more occupation," reports AFP.

The timing of Putin's speech was clearly intended to pre-empt the Swiss summit, billed as a "peace conference" despite Russia's exclusion, where Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky seeks a show of international support for Kyiv's terms to end the war.

Heavy rain, floods kill 6 in Sikkim

2,000 tourists stranded

REUTERS, Guwahati

At least six people have been killed this week and 2,000 tourists stranded in India's Himalayan state of Sikkim in landslides and floods after heavy rainfall, officials said yesterday.

Another four people have been killed in Nepal's Taplejung district, which borders Sikkim, after a landslide following rains swept away the house in which they were sleeping, officials there said.

Heavy rains triggered landslides at several locations in Mangan district in Sikkim.

S Africa's ANC brings opposition into government

REUTERS, Cape Town

The African National Congress and its largest rival, the white-led, pro-business Democratic Alliance, agreed yesterday to work together in South Africa's new government of national unity, a step change after 30 years of ANC rule.

Once unthinkable, the deal between two sharply antagonistic parties is the most momentous political shift in South Africa since Nelson Mandela led the ANC to victory in the 1994 election that marked the end of apartheid.

"Today, South Africa is a better country than it was yesterday. For the first time since 1994, we've embarked on a peaceful and democratic transfer of power to a new government that will be different from the previous one," DA leader John Steenhuisen said in a televised address.

"From today, the DA will co-govern the Republic of South Africa in a spirit of unity and collaboration," he said, adding that multi-party government was the "new normal".

"We will be supporting President Cyril Ramaphosa in his election for the president of the republic of South Africa," Steenhuisen said, during a pause in the opening session of South Africa's seventh parliament since the advent of post-apartheid democracy.

Earlier, Chief Justice Raymond Zondo had opened the first sitting, swearing in MPs in batches ahead of planned votes on the election of a Speaker, Deputy Speaker and the President.

Junta orders evacuations around Sittwe

AFP, Yangon

Myanmar's junta has ordered thousands of people living outside a state capital threatened by ethnic rebels to leave their homes and head into the city, residents said yesterday.

Sittwe city is one of the few holdouts for junta troops in western Rakhine state, where the military has lost swathes of territory to the Arakan Army (AA) in recent weeks.

The AA, which says it is fighting for autonomy for the state's ethnic Rakhine population, has vowed to capture Sittwe, home to an India-backed deep sea port and around 200,000 people.

Residents of 15 villages around Sittwe were given five days to leave their homes and move to the state capital, a resident of one of the villages told AFP.

"The army threatened to shoot and kill if they found someone after the deadline" which expires today, she said, requesting anonymity due to fear of arrest.

games, art projects, and interactive sessions, offering them a rare opportunity for social interaction and physical activities.

Ananda is an initiative of "Compassionate Korail," a community palliative-care centre run by the Palliative Care Society of Bangladesh (PCSB) since 2019.

This centre, also known as "Momotamoy Korail," offers home-based palliative care, essential medicines, assistive devices, and monthly food supplies to 304 patients, including 27 children, with conditions like cerebral palsy, congenital heart defects, cancer, and Down syndrome.

Dr Noorjahan Begum, senior specialist at Evercare Hospital and team leader at Momotamoy Korail, highlighted the struggle of children with cerebral palsy and other genetic disorders.

"Without proper medical support, they often remain bedridden and suffer continuous bouts of epilepsy. Meanwhile, limited access to medication exacerbates their conditions, resulting in severe physical disabilities such as rigid limbs due to lack of therapy."

Her study on caregivers for children with cerebral palsy in Korail found that over 97 percent of the caregivers are women, with 88.6 percent being mothers and 8.6 percent grandmothers. Around 80 percent reported that other family members rarely assist in caregiving.

Prolonged caregiving to children with mobility impairments significantly reduce the quality of life for primary caregivers, leading to higher levels of stress and conflict, which in turn impacts the quality of care and family relationships.

Realising their need for assistance, Momotamoy Korail proposed bringing the children to the centre for a few hours every week to provide relief to their caregivers and also give the children a change in environment.

After multiple meetings with guardians and community volunteers, the Ananda programme started in February 2023.

Every Saturday since then, all the 27 children, four at a time, are brought to the centre.

Every child receives personalised care from PCAs and volunteers, supported by a dedicated caretaker who ensures their hygiene and provides meals, including nutritious hotchpotch and fruit snacks.

"We maintain a registry book for parents to sign when dropping off and picking up their children. Feedback has been positive so far, and participation is entirely voluntary," said Dr Noorjahan.

AH Sabbir, a physiotherapist at the centre, noted positive outcomes, stating, "Many babies who previously didn't receive physiotherapy are now actively participating as the toys, games, nursery rhymes make it more engaging for them.

"We've seen improvements in their motor development; children with weak neck control can now hold their heads up, those who were unable to sit properly can now do so, and some are even learning to walk. Additionally, their cognitive development is progressing. Initially, they would sit quietly in fear, but now they have overcome that and interact with each other with ease."

Samia's mother, Fatema Begum, was reluctant at first to send her daughter to the centre due to concerns of unfamiliarity and the constant need for assistance.

"But after I saw familiar PCAs taking care of them and dedicated individuals for cleaning, I agreed. In the beginning, I would go and check on her often out of worry. But now, I have complete trust. This allows me to get with household chores and errands.

"It's great to see my daughter enjoying herself with others and making progress with her therapies. Parents like us, who struggle to provide even the basics, could never afford such facilities for our children."

Dr Noorjahan highlighted the primary challenge -- shortages in human resource, as it requires a constant supply of dedicated volunteers.

Dr Nezamuddin Ahmed, former chairperson of the palliative medicine department at Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujib Medical University and an advisor at PCSB, said, "Ananda might seem like a drop in the ocean, but it showcases how community initiatives can make a big difference for children with cerebral palsy, or other incurable chronic health issues, especially when government resources are limited.

"We should customise services to fit local needs rather than adopting models from wealthier nations, considering our lower per capita health expenditure."

Border killings continue despite BSF promise

and stronger stance against it."

ASK data show 31 people were killed in BSF shootings last year, up from 23 in 2022. In 2021, 18 were killed in BSF firings.

The latest border killing was reported on June 9 when a Bangladeshi was shot dead by BSF along Jamtala border in Cumilla's Burichang upazila. Bangladesh shares a 4,096km long border with India, the fifth-longest land border in the world. A large part of the border remains unfenced, while some border points are known for illegal entry and smuggling of various items, including drugs and cattle.

BSF often claims that its members open fire in self-defence, although this has been rejected by rights bodies and victims' families who say that is not always the case.

Kirity Roy, secretary of Banglar Manabadhikar Suraksha Mancha (MASUM), a rights organisation based in West Bengal, told The Daily Star that they found evidence that in several cases the BSF's self-defence claim was fictitious.

According to the MASUM's April report, a Bangladeshi youth was killed in BSF firing near Lalmonirhat border on March 25, while he was smuggling cattle into Bangladesh. BSF personnel first shot him with a shotgun and then with a rifle.

At that time, 19-year-old Liton Miya was 75m inside Indian territory. He was hit by pellets and bullets on his chest and abdomen. But in the BSF complaint, they claimed that they did not fire to kill Liton.

In its March report, the rights body mentioned another Bangladeshi Rabiul Islam alias Tuklu, 34, was killed by BSF personnel along Dahagram border of Lalmonirhat's Patgram upazila on January 28.

It was reported that on his head, Rabiul was trying to smuggle a bag containing 50kg of sugar into Bangladesh. He was alone as stated by villagers. It is evident that he was not in the position to attack BSF members, MASUM said in the report.

Prices go up ahead of Eid

Tk 3,300-4,200 per kg, up from Tk 3,200-4,000.

Rahim Sheikh, a trader at Duaripara Bazar in the capital's Mirpur, said prices of essential commodities increased in the wholesale market, and this had an impact on the retail market.

"Consumers will see retail prices fall if wholesale prices fall first. But for that to happen, the government needs effective monitoring of the supply chain," he said.

Riaz Uddin, who was shopping at Kawran Bazar, said the high prices of essentials had forced him to cut down on monthly shopping.

He said he spent Tk 10,000 on essentials such as fish, meat, and vegetables before Eid-ul-Azha last year, but this year, he could only afford to spend Tk 8,000.

"I was forced to cut costs. Otherwise, if I had spent Tk 10,000 like last year on fish, meat, and vegetables, I would not be able to afford the rest of the essentials that I need."

Eyamin Sultana, who works at a private company in the capital and lives in Mirpur, echoed those sentiments.

"There is no product in the market that has not gone up in price. Every week, when I go to the market, I see that the price has increased. This is intolerable," she said.

"Due to increases in prices, I am buying less than necessary," she added.

"Every year, the prices of some products automatically increase before Eid. The government should investigate this matter seriously. Common people are not doing well at all," she lamented.

Sales ahead of Eid-ul-Azha this year are far lower than last year, Monwar Hossain, a retail trader of Yasin General Store at Kawran Bazar, one of the largest kitchen markets in the capital.

"Sales are down about 15 to 20 percent," the trader claimed.

"The demand for some products increases a lot ahead of Eid-ul-Azha. As a result, a supply-demand gap is created. This is why the prices of these products are increasing now," he said.

"We have not increased the prices of any commodity, including soybean oil," said Taslim Shahriar, deputy general manager at Meghna Group of Industries, one of the biggest commodity importers and processors in the country.

He blamed retailers for the increase in prices.

World Cup largely thanks to their shock win over 2009 champions Pakistan.

The two teams will receive a point each meaning the USA will progress to the Super Eights along with Group A winners India who are due to play Canada on Saturday in what is now a dead rubber

Only the top two teams from the four groups advance to the Super Eight. The USA beat Canada in the tournament opener before stunning Pakistan in a match that went to a Super Over.

The Super Eights qualification also ensures direct qualification into the next T20 World Cup for USA. The next edition will also have 20 teams like this one, with 12 automatic qualifiers: the two co-hosts - India and Sri Lanka - as well as the other teams in the Super Eight in 2024, and the three highest-ranked teams outside of these on the ICC's T20I rankings as of June 30, 2024. The remaining eight spots will be decided through the ICC's regional qualifiers pathway.

The early exit, meanwhile, is a bitter disappointment though for Pakistan, who were beaten finalists in the tournament two years ago.

"We stayed at a hotel and had to spend a lot of money," she added.

Luna Akhter, a student of Cox's Bazar Government College, said the government should provide sea trucks for St Martin's residents as the usual route through the Naf has been abandoned.

Meanwhile, the sound of shelling in Myanmar's Rakhine state rocked Teknaf on Thursday, and the sight of a warship in the Naf caused panic in some neighbourhoods.

Teknaf Upazila Nirbahi Officer Adnan Chowdhury said the ship was in Naikhongdia, Myanmar.

Residents of St Martin's said there were three Myanmar warships close to the island.

Mohammad Hashem, a resident of Dailpara on the island, said, "I have never seen Myanmar warships so close. Troops are firing weapons from the ships and we are hearing explosions. We are very scared."

BETTER WORK, BETTER LIVES

Elevating the RMG Industry in Bangladesh

Better Work Bangladesh Programme, a partnership between the International Labour Organization (ILO) and the International Finance Corporation (IFC), in collaboration with The Daily Star and The Daily Prothom Alo, organized a roundtable titled 'Better Work, Better Lives: Elevating the RMG Industry in Bangladesh' on May 15, 2024. The event was supported by the Ministry of Economy, Trade and Industry (METI) and the Government of Japan. Here is a summary of the discussion.

Better Work, Better Lives:
Elevating RGM Industry in Bangladesh
15 May 2024

Mahfuz Anam, Editor & Publisher, The Daily Star

The goal of this roundtable, along with the Better Work Bangladesh project, is to foster a sustainable, ethical, and profitable RMG sector. Acknowledging the global significance of sustainability and the enduring importance of ethics, The Daily Star pledges to deeply engage with these principles.

We are achieving development at an impressive rate with a high degree of inclusiveness. However, the more we examine these issues, the more we realise the weaknesses in our efforts. Roundtables like this, and collaboration with institutions like the ILO, are our way of addressing these shortcomings. The ILO has had an influential impact on Bangladesh's policymaking regarding labour rights and many other fundamental issues. I assure you, this will not be a one-off event. We will follow up with our own editorial initiatives and our ongoing commitment to a sustainable Bangladesh.

Tuomo Poutiainen, Country Director, International Labour Organization (ILO)

Over the past decade, dedicated efforts to enhance safety, health, and human resource management system have positioned Bangladesh's garment sector as one of the most competitive and compliant industries globally. This sector now has the capacity to address social and environmental issues effectively in the future. Better Work collaborates with the government, enterprises, and industry associations like BGMEA and BKMEA to demonstrate, recommend, and endorse feasible practices at the enterprise level. These efforts are increasingly being adopted by businesses in Bangladesh.

Other industries aiming to expand into global markets should draw inspiration from the achievements of the garment industry and adopt similar methods and programmes. Bangladesh has the potential to excel in various sectors, including food and agriculture, manufacturing, pharmaceuticals, and furniture making, by fostering a comparable understanding of social and environmental compliance. Discussions involving industry representatives, academia, trade unions, workers, and policymakers are essential for sharing experiences and promoting the adoption of these measures across different industries.

Dr Khondaker Golam Moazzem (Keynote Speaker), Research Director, Centre for Policy Dialogue (CPD)

The garment sector has made significant strides in occupational safety and has reached new heights compared to before the Rana Plaza disaster. This is undoubtedly an achievement, but there are still areas that need improvement. Weaknesses remain in workplace safety, labour rights issues, and overall worker well-being. Additionally, new challenges are emerging, the most important being the graduation from LDC status. This transition moves the sector from a preferential competitiveness environment to a non-preferential one. Adapting to this new environment is crucial.

In this context, Better Work has served as a bridge between the desired improvements and the progress made over the last decade. It has significantly supported the RMG sector in enhancing overall occupational safety standards, fostering social dialogue, promoting worker well-being, and advancing gender equality.

The Better Work programme was launched in 2014, introducing a completely new package of elements previously unknown to Bangladesh. This joint initiative of the ILO and IFC has now completed its first decade.

Over the past decade, it has covered 470 factories, including 50 brands and 1.3 million workers, representing one-third of all RMG workers. Notably, 51% of the beneficiaries are female. This demonstrates the significant and high-quality support the programme has provided to factories.

The programme has significantly contributed to worker well-being, reduced non-compliance, and improved overall worker satisfaction and livelihood. For instance, workers in Better Work factories receive 5.4% higher base pay and are 5% more likely to be paid on time, averaging an additional BDT 450 per month.

The programme includes a mix of large, medium, and small factories, making it representative of the industry. It has also addressed various non-compliance issues effectively, such as a 22% decrease in overtime limit violations, a 20% decrease in failures to provide overtime notice, a 56% decrease in failures to provide weekends, and a 21% decrease in failures to compensate for overtime.

Well-managed factories that treat workers well report a better working environment and remuneration. Consequently, 66% of workers in Better Work factories report being satisfied or highly satisfied with their working environment.

What are the key programmes of Better Work? Firstly, it focuses on social dialogue and grievance mechanisms, encouraging dialogue and oversight. This is particularly important as dialogue is often lacking at the factory level.

One significant achievement has been the nearly 50% reduction in non-compliance rates in bipartite committees and factories between 2018 and 2022. These committees now demonstrate higher compliance.

Better Work's focus on women's representation has led to nearly a 50% increase in women's participation in committees over the last five years. However, there is still room for improvement in enhancing the effectiveness of these participation committees.

Over the last decade (2014-2022), non-compliance in this domain has decreased to 35%. These sustained improvements signify a significant reduction in non-compliance, with nearly 100% compliance in periodic emergency drills in Better Work factories, indicating the effectiveness of these measures.

Owners, employers, directors, and garment manufacturers often ask how they benefit from providing these services to workers. The advantages are clear: ensuring labour rights has led to a 55% increase in export revenue and a 50% rise in export volume for these factories.

Better Work offers special programmes like the Gender Equality Returns Programme, helping women advance into supervisory roles with increased pay.

While Better Work hasn't achieved everything, it has set a benchmark for other factories and sectors to adopt good practices. Future efforts should focus on improving occupational safety, promoting social dialogue, and enhancing grievance mechanisms. Gender equality and skill development also need more attention.

Factories engaged in these initiatives deserve better incentives from buyers and the government. Policy reforms, driven by collaboration between the government, employers, and workers, may be necessary.

In conclusion, Better Work has the potential to expand and thrive in the garment sector and beyond by continuing to promote responsible business practices and high standards for labour and social conditions.

RECOMMENDATIONS

To adapt to LDC graduation, the RMG sector must improve competitiveness, efficiency, productivity, labor rights, and address social and environmental concerns.

A comprehensive database of workers in the RMG sector needs to be established.

Trade unions must be permitted in every garment factory to address workers' issues.

Best practices from the Better Work Programme should be implemented in other factories. A database can compile these practices and their impacts.

Further improvements are required in areas such as workplace safety, worker well-being, and gender.

Promote social dialogue to resolve disputes and find solutions at the factory level

Prioritize upskilling workers for evolving industrial technologies.

Create attractive employment opportunities to retain women in the RMG workforce.

Strengthen participation committees and grievance mechanisms, and boost women's involvement in these committees and supervisory roles.

Establishing Industry-Based Training (IBT) Centers within the industry is crucial for developing specialized skills

Ashraf Ahmed, President, Dhaka Chamber of Commerce & Industry (DCCI)

The primary focus of Better Work Bangladesh is to enhance productivity, attract better wages, and create a more conducive business environment by improving management practices on the factory floor. These practices involve fostering an environment where employees are heard, grievances are addressed, and opportunities for improvement are embraced, reshaping the organisational mindset over time.

Treating employees with respect and addressing their concerns boosts productivity, even without wage increases. This enhances the organisation's output capacity, leading to tangible results.

The challenge is not about investment but about effectively implementing management practices and training programmes that resonate and drive awareness. Disseminating these practices across thousands of factories in various sectors requires raising awareness and providing training at the junior management and supervisor levels, tailored to the factory environment. Better Work Bangladesh should focus on a cascade model for knowledge transfer to address this challenge effectively.

Shahidullah Badal, General Secretary, Industrial Bangladesh Council (IBC)

There are 160 factory-level registered unions, but only 60 of these unions are functioning, which is a very low number. Forming a union at the factory level remains a significant challenge. The Better Work Programme has created opportunities for forming trade unions; therefore, more factories should be brought under this programme.

At the policy level, a database should be developed to track the various activities of factories under the Better Work Programme. This database should also analyse both participating and non-participating factories. The government should take the initiative in creating and maintaining this database. The inspection system also needs to be strengthened. It is crucial to focus on capacity building and skill development. Promoting social dialogue is essential to address disputes and find solutions. The automation-driven transformation is resulting in many workers losing their jobs. Therefore, they need to become familiar with and knowledgeable about these new technologies through skill development.

Mohammed Zahidullah, Chief Sustainability Officer, Dulal Brothers Limited (DBL)

DBL has established Industry-Based Training (IBT) centers, accredited by NSDA, within its spinning mill and garments factory. These centers focus on providing hands-on training on live industry problems, offering a more practical learning experience compared to traditional TVET institutions. More industries should adopt IBTs, potentially with government support.

The proportion of female employees in the RMG industry has declined over the years, from 80% to around 50-55%. To retain female workers, the RMG industry must create more attractive employment opportunities.

By 2030, we need to reduce our carbon intensity, primarily through renewable energy. Space constraints in Bangladesh limit rooftop solar expansion, so government support is crucial. The government aims for 40% renewable energy by 2041, and a public-private partnership could help achieve this. The government could provide land while the private sector handles financial investment. Meeting climate goals is essential for continued growth.

Firoz Chowdhury, Assistant Editor, Prothom Alo

The media cannot operate in isolation; it is our responsibility to accurately cover events as they unfold. Prothom Alo diligently reports both the positive and challenging aspects of the RMG sector regularly. Over the past decade, this sector has undergone significant transformation. Following the Rana Plaza incident, there were concerns that the entire industry would suffer irreparably. However, we have since prioritized compliance, ensuring rigorous standards are met. Nonetheless, there remains a crucial need for a comprehensive data bank on the areas of progress where Better Work has intervened. Media professionals often encounter challenges due to the lack of sufficient data. As members of the media, we strive for access to accurate information to deliver authentic news.

Laetitia Weibel Roberts, Deputy Programme Manager, ILO

Emphasizing lifelong learning is integral to developing a skilled workforce—a perspective that underscores our vision for the sector. Promoting worker upskilling, currently lacking, must be a priority as we anticipate industry advancements. We've witnessed marked improvements in reducing noncompliance, enhancing productivity, and bolstering worker satisfaction.

Firstly, we aim to foster greater factory ownership to diminish reliance on the Better Work framework and curtail non-compliance. The second prong of our strategy involves capacity building and partnerships, aiming to reshape service delivery to industry partners. Central to this effort is extensive capacity building, encompassing training, trainer development, and course refinement. The third aspect focuses on the evolution of Better Work's business model and our future operations. To achieve this, we prioritize knowledge sharing through seminars, discussions, sharing best practices, and data dissemination.

Our focus now shifts to extrapolating the lessons learned beyond the RMG sector, marking an exciting phase of expansion and replication.

Shakil Chowdhury, Secretary General, International Trade Union Confederation-Bangladesh Council (ITUC BC)

Despite advancements in the RMG sector, much remains to be done. Our export volume in the RMG sector has increased by 15% in the last ten years, and revenue has risen by 55%, making us the second-largest exporter in the world. However, progress in forming labor unions and collective bargaining agreements has been insufficient.

A harmonious relationship between workers and employers is essential, and without unions, achieving better industrial relations is challenging. Addressing this issue and prioritizing policy changes, such as amending laws to facilitate trade unions, is crucial. The factory inspection mechanism also needs significant improvement. Many critical issues can be resolved at the primary stage if collective bargaining or trade unions are permitted in the RMG sector. Labor courts alone cannot address all issues; they must be resolved at the factory level, and having unions would make this possible.

Abdullah Hil Rakib, Vice President, Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BGMEA)

Initially met with skepticism, Better Work has succeeded due to the efforts of the IFC, ILO, and other partners. Factory owners have also played a key role, though more recognition and reward could further motivate improvements. The Rana Plaza incident served as a wake-up call for many of us, prompting significant improvements in fire safety and occupational health standards.

Many factories now want to join the Better Work program, inspired by its successful model. The government is urged to understand the project's benefits and collaborate to implement best practices at the industry level. Achieving a unified code of conduct—social, environmental, and governance-related—is essential. The government should support this through finance, awareness, and capacity building, while entrepreneurs need clear guidance. Engaging the entire ecosystem, from top-level to supervisory roles, is crucial for sustained progress.

Mohammad Hatem, Executive President, Bangladesh Knitwear Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BKMEA)

I greatly appreciate the Better Work Programme, and we're closely collaborating with them. But, factories participating in the programme are often obligated to fulfill the audit requirements of various buyers and brands as well. This becomes difficult for an entrepreneur. We support implementing all Better Work recommendations, but buyers and brands must accept them without adding extra audits or regulations. Additionally, fair and ethical pricing is an important aspect to consider alongside compliance.

Md. Abdur Rahim Khan, Inspector General, Department of Inspection for Factories and Establishments (DIFE)

Reflecting on the progress of Bangladesh's RMG sector over the last decade, it is evident that Better Work Bangladesh has been instrumental in driving significant improvements in labour rights and workplace safety. The progress encourages the industry to participate more in this approach.

It is also expected that both the government and workers will work together to ensure a better workplace and better implementation of the Bangladesh Labour Act (BLA) and Bangladesh labour rules. Given the graduation of Bangladesh from LDC status, the export-oriented industry, particularly the RMG sector, needs to increase competitiveness in the international market through ethical manufacturing practices and robust compliance standards.

Nahim Razzak, MP, Bangladesh National Parliament

Businesses must strive for excellence while simultaneously addressing compliance issues. The Bangladesh government is taking a strong, positive stance by consolidating labor and EPZ laws into a unified format, which has been agreed upon by all stakeholders and is nearing finalization. While the government can promote unions, it's also essential for RMG owners to support unionization. However, we must proceed cautiously with unionization efforts.

Despite being the world's second-largest RMG exporter and hosting the highest number of green factories, our industries often do not receive any extra payment for compliance. The ILO and IFC should advocate for fair treatment, and the media should spotlight this issue.

The Better Work model is replicable, but it doesn't need to be implemented in every factory. Instead, we can adopt and implement their best practices independently, learning from their successes.

Tanjim Ferdous, In-charge of NGO and Foreign Missions, Business Development Team, The Daily Star

Today's discussion focused on labour rights, compliance in the RMG sector, enhancement of labour standards, workplace safety, and ideal business practices. The conversation also highlighted the successes of the past decade, the development of the RMG sector, and the pivotal roles played by the Better Work Bangladesh programme. Recommendations for the next decade emphasised how to elevate our RMG sector to global competitiveness through policy, institutional, and operational changes.

How far does the gold syndicate's reach go?

Involvement of law enforcers, public officials must be investigated

The unexplained death of Jhenaidah MP Anwarul Azim Anar has brought some shocking truths to light, including details of a brazen gold smuggling operation in his constituency. According to a recent investigation by this daily, Anar had invented a "token" system that would allow carriers transporting illegal gold a free pass from law enforcement. In return, the latter would get a "handsome" cut. This daily interviewed a carrier who said there are dozens like him who pick up consignments from various districts and deliver them to the border, where other operatives smuggle them out to India. The border smugglers earn between Tk 1 lakh and Tk 2 lakh per consignment, while carriers receive a fixed monthly salary.

According to local sources, gold smuggling has been taking place through this border area over the last four to five decades. Azim has reportedly been involved in the gold trade since he was a student in 1986, assuming a leading role for the last 10 years. The three-time MP stood accused in 21 cases between 2000 and 2008, including murder, extortion, and smuggling of arms, explosives, drugs and gold (which subsequently got dismissed during the AL regime). We cannot help but wonder how a man of his "notoriety" could hold such an important position, and whether the ruling party was truly unaware of the scale of his involvement in criminal networks.

The slain MP may have been one of the kingpins of this smuggling syndicate, but the question still remains: who else is involved in the trade, and how deep does the involvement run? Most importantly, can we expect an independent investigation into the syndicate now, or will the kingpins continue to orchestrate the show from behind the curtains, with the same impunity they have enjoyed till now?

The government should be as worried as we are about the nexus among criminals, law enforcement and political leaders, and the possibility of complicity of more people within its own ranks in sustaining such criminal networks. In order to regain public trust as well as for its own sake, the government must initiate a thorough and credible investigation into the smuggling syndicate, beginning with identifying all those within the law enforcement and administration who have been actively aiding and abetting the process. Exemplary action must be taken against them, no matter their designation. Anar's murder and subsequent investigations have caused great damage to the country's reputation, and the government must respond with urgency and full transparency.

When childhood is devoid of play

Govt must address children's lack of playtime, dwindling playgrounds

As open spaces keep turning into high-rises in this fast-paced world, our little ones are being deprived of their most basic right: the chance to play to their hearts' content. A recent report, based on opinions of those aged 3-18 years, reveals that one out of three children does not have enough time to play, one out of five has no safe playing space, and one in three children with disabilities has no playmates. This is truly a depressing statistic and does not bode well for the future generation. While this is the global scenario, the Bangladesh government must think about how it has contributed to this crisis, as dwindling playgrounds and rising educational pressure, among other issues, are greatly depriving our children of the chance to play.

Against the backdrop of the first-ever International Day of Play, observed on June 11, we must address the difficult issues facing our children. Notably, school, coaching classes and homework are snatching away the precious time to play, and we must ask: must these youngsters be burdened with so much studying at this age? We acknowledge that education is a tool to escape poverty and climb the socioeconomic ladder, but play is also of utmost importance. According to experts, it is essential to develop intelligence, language and social skills, empathy, and creativity, while ensuring physical well-being. Unfortunately, due to our cut-throat society, parents often forget about these benefits.

In the last 22 years, the number of playgrounds in Dhaka has come down from 150 to only 24. So, even if they have the time, where exactly will our children go to play? According to the report, 97 percent of the children surveyed said play is important, 57 percent said they made friends while playing, and 45 percent got to bond with their caregivers during playtime. Only by taking their thoughts seriously can we work towards their welfare, but clearly we don't. As a result, they have been condemned to spend hours in front of digital screens for daily entertainment, which pose serious health risks. This has to change. The authorities, first and foremost, must ensure adequate playgrounds and a well-structured education system, so our little ones can play freely under the open sky.

Biman's frustrating legacy of misadventures

A CLOSER LOOK

TASNEEM TAYEB

In the country's aviation landscape, Biman Bangladesh Airlines and controversy have now become synonymous. From rampant corruption in every layer of its activities to gross misgovernance permeating all levels of decision-making—with ample evidence presented in various investigative reports—Biman is fully submerged in a stinky cesspool of controversies of various forms, scales and scopes.

Biman's recent decision to proceed with procuring Airbus aircraft, with the a reconstituted evaluation committee turning projected losses into projected profits based on illogical assumptions, has added more flesh to the body of accusations against the national flag carrier over mismanaged deals.

One would remember the 2014 lease of two EgyptAir aircraft for five years, which Biman could only put into use initially for one year, due to engine defects. Not only did it have to take separate engines on lease for Tk 177 crore, it also had to count staggering losses due to keeping them sitting idle. Between 2014 and 2019, Biman had to bear a loss of Tk 1,200 crore, with the expenditure of Tk 3,529 crore surpassing the Tk 2,329 crore revenue that the two aircraft had earned.

It seems Biman is about to make another loss-making venture by procuring the Airbus aeroplanes, as the projected profits are based on unrealistic assumptions, as stated earlier. First of all, to show a 20 percent jump in revenue, the 92 percent passenger cabin factor that Biman projected for these aircraft is inflated. On an average, the passenger load factor or passenger cabin factor of an aircraft is usually around 70 percent, depending on various factors, such as expenditure. Last year, the global passenger load factor was 81 percent.

The second fallacy in Biman's logic for profit is the route suggestion. While the national carrier says that the Airbus aircraft would be profitable in two routes only—the Dhaka-New York route, three times a week, with a stopover in Istanbul; and the Dhaka-Jeddah route with daily flights—Biman has apprently lost sight of the fact that it is not authorised by the US Federal Aviation Authority to fly in the NY route due to the Civil Aviation Authority of Bangladesh's operational irregularities identified in 2006.

Moreover, setting up an Airbus fleet would require Biman to create a completely separate and new supply chain, and logistics arrangement with trained manpower, as the current one caters to a predominantly Boeing fleet. This would involve crores in additional costs.

It has been suggested that this is more of a diplomatic move by the Bangladesh government, which is trying to move away from its dependence on US-made aircraft. Airbus is European-made: France, Germany, the UK and Spain are all involved in its manufacturing value chain, with the final parts assembled in Toulouse, France.

Whatever the reason may be, Biman cannot and should not be used for any other purpose other than ensuring its healthy and sustainable growth and creating a competitive edge for the country's aviation industry in the global marketplace. Biman is not a tool for diplomacy that can be used at the government's whim.

At a time, when the global airliners are rebounding from the economic shock caused by the Covid pandemic, braving headwinds, riding on the back of the booming aviation sector growth (according to the International Air Transport Association (IATA), air travel continued to bounce back in 2023, matching pre-pandemic levels) Biman keeps counting losses. Even in FY2022-23, the company chewed on a loss of Tk 25.91 crore in its main airline business.

A Prothom Alo report further reveals that Biman owes the "civil aviation authority huge sums of money for landing charges, boarding charges, leasing, surcharge as well as VAT and taxes on other charges." What is worrying is that it window-dressed its books to hide the losses. According to the same report, the liabilities were not shown on the past five years' financial statements, which also did not include a significant amount that Biman owes to Padma Oil Company in interest due to delayed payments. These were revealed in audit reports, and is unfortunately not a new phenomenon for Biman. Such findings have even been discussed in parliament, without making any meaningful impact on Biman or its operations. It continues to go wayward.

That Biman is a highly corrupt institution that thrives on shameless plundering of public money is no secret. It is mired in mismanagement and lacks good governance. While the officials draw hefty salaries and enjoy additional perks, their performance is mediocre at best. Even recently, Biman gave all its employees and staff members a five percent "special incentive," including for its retired officials and casual workers. Its losses are staggering, and on top of that the new expenses are expected to take a heavy toll on its books.

It is high time the government took immediate and stringent measures to address the matter of Biman's mismanagement and complete lack of accountability. The measures should ideally include a complete system overhaul, and the implementation of a well-planned Business Process Reengineering strategy to trim the fat, plug the gaps, and streamline the processes. Most importantly, Biman should be brought under a clearly defined governance framework with updated code of conduct, policies, and SOPs to ensure good governance practices. And the authorities must ensure that these policies, SOPs and code of conduct are implemented and applied to the dot.

This all depends on the intent and political will of the authorities. Do they have the willingness to introduce meaningful changes to how Biman operates, to transform it into a growing, profitable venture?

RTI kept alive mainly by rural, semi-urban citizens

There is conflicting feedback from our readers on the operation of the Right to Information (RTI) Act in the country. Some believe that in the existing political climate, there is little scope for the success of a law that seeks to empower citizens to probe into the government's inner workings. Others consider that by building incremental gains achieved through developing a close working relationship between government officials and citizens based on low-level RTI interventions, a culture of openness can be cultivated where deeper probes may be possible.

As a result, the upper echelons of society with a better understanding of how the government works have largely avoided the law. In contrast, those at the grassroots level with little knowledge about the intricacies of governance have used the RTI law to ensure that the government fulfils its responsibilities to the people.

Today, we bring to light several real-life instances that vividly illustrate the positive outcomes and growing influence of the RTI Act at the grassroots level. These success stories demonstrate how citizens, often with NGO support, have effectively used the RTI mechanism to address issues and bring about significant change.

In Nilphamari Sadar upazila, women patients who required ultrasonogram tests often had to get them done at private clinics despite the high cost. Those who could not afford them depended on the free services at the upazila hospital. However, they found the place unsafe, with no privacy during the process and no female nurse to perform it. One of the male nurses was insensitive and made the patients feel unsafe. Frustrated, two members of an RTI group in the area, Anupha Begum and Shahida Begum of Bahalipara village, took matters into their own hands. They submitted two separate RTI requests in March 2024 to the officer-in-charge of Nilphamari General Hospital, seeking information on measures taken by the authority for the safety and privacy of the patients at the upazila hospital during the ultrasonogram process. They also asked for the names of doctors, nurses, and technicians who were supposed to run the service. Within a month, the hospital authority responded, stating that safety and privacy measures had been introduced at the upazila hospital. A positive outcome like this served as loud publicity for the power of the RTI Act and the role of citizens in bringing about change.

In the same upazila of Nilphamari, some members of the local RTI group in Ramnagar Union felt that despite repeated government assurances, the services provided by the local community clinic were poor. The medicine it provided for free included only paracetamol, antacids and the like; the more expensive medication had to be bought from the market. So, some of the members submitted individual RTI requests to the upazila health office, asking for a list of services provided at the Ramnagar Community Clinic as well as a list of medicines supplied free of cost to the public by government hospitals and clinics. Shortly, replies came listing 59 free medical services and 42 types of medicines distributed by the institutions in a given period. The disclosures caused a stir in the community as many listed services existed in name only. Armed with the information, the group decided to mobilise the local population, ensuring that they knew what to demand from the authorities concerned.

In Dinajpur Sadar upazila, a local RTI group was surprised to find that the counter to deposit money in savings accounts, pension schemes or fixed deposits was kept open only from 10am to 10:10am in the city's main post office. No transaction was accepted after that period, and the number of persons served was limited to 10 only. It caused great hardship to the people, particularly those who were illiterate. So a member of the group, Astarul Alam, decided to submit an RTI request to the postmaster of Dinajpur asking for a copy of the official decision on the deposit counter's hours of operation, and the list of transactions performed by the said counter from April 24 to May 6 this year. Upon learning about the RTI request, the head of the post office directorate in the region directed the postmaster to provide the requested information urgently, copying his mail to other important postal officials in the district for their knowledge and necessary action. In his response to the applicant, the postmaster informed that all post office activities remained open from 9am to 4pm, including deposits, and provided the number of people served within the period specified by the applicant.

These examples illustrate the point we have made in these columns time and again: it is mainly through the efforts of ordinary citizens that the RTI Act has been kept alive and kicking across Bangladesh. Their efforts are not just about demanding better services and transparency, but also about expanding the scope of democracy in the country. Though not always met with friendly responses, their actions are a powerful testament to the strength and resilience of democracy. They also help with the proper implementation of many government programmes for the needy and underprivileged.

However, while they smoothen the path, it will be the responsibility of the more knowledgeable members of the civil society to take the law to greater heights, so that more sensitive governance issues can be brought into the purview of citizens' inquiry. This collective effort of the citizens is a true embodiment of the power of democracy, making them feel the significance of their role in the governance of their country.

Allowing private universities to offer PhD programmes can help curb the brain drain by allowing homegrown PhDs to flourish.

P for Private, P for PhD

BLOWIN' IN THE WIND

Dr Shamsad Mortuza
is professor of English at Dhaka University.

SHAMSAD MORTUZA

The University Grants Commission (UGC) has finally decided to empower private universities for PhD supervision and conferment. The decision, according to a report in this daily, came after "much debate and discussion." The Association of Private Universities of Bangladesh (APUB) has long demanded that institutions that have met certain criteria be allowed to offer PhD degrees. Only 56 public universities (according to the UGC), regardless of their research infrastructure or teaching strength, are eligible for this privilege.

Private universities began their journey in the 1990s, primarily as undergraduate teaching institutions, following the US model of four-year baccalaureate degrees. Soon, the universities felt the demand for graduate programmes in a country that perceives master's education as an automatic continuation of an undergraduate degree and a terminal degree. In phases, private universities began to apply for master's degrees for selected academic programmes. The fact that private universities are demanding approval for doctoral degrees is a sign of maturity. Then again, the reluctance to give that opportunity to a higher education sector that is operating within the law of the land is a sign that there is still public scepticism about the ability, accountability, and transparency of the private system.

As someone who has worked in both sectors, I find the proposed move not only timely, but also promising for our country's academic and professional landscape. It will harness the wealth of experience of retired public university professors and academics returning from abroad. At present, after retiring from a public university, a professor can no longer be the primary supervisor of a PhD candidate, irrespective of their international exposure, invaluable expertise, and professional networks. Many of them become full-time faculty members in the private sector. These seasoned faculty members can provide research students with exceptional mentorship, diverse perspectives, and cutting-edge knowledge that can enrich the academic environment in the country. Furthermore, the flexibility of private universities can encourage these experts to continue contributing to academia without the constraints of the public system.

However, it is essential to recognise that not all of the 100-plus private universities have the necessary infrastructure to become research-intensive institutions. Especially in the STEM sector, researchers often need access to labs and government resources. Private university researchers often lack access to some UGC funding provisions, including overseas conferences and research grants. Government policies also guide foreign donors and agencies, who prefer to collaborate with public institutions. Most private universities have not been able to establish a research culture due to systemic constraints.

The planned decision mentions that the UGC would consider the research strength and reputation of a private university before giving it the final nod. In this regard, I think a two-tier system similar to the Carnegie Classification in the US can be useful. This model would distinguish between basic teaching universities and advanced research universities, ensuring that only those with adequate facilities and resources undertake the rigorous demands of PhD programmes.

The benefits of this decision are manifold. First, it can help curb the brain drain by allowing homegrown PhDs to flourish. Many scholars who would have pursued their doctoral studies abroad can now conduct their research while staying close to their families. Moreover, research students can continue their teaching roles, similar to the teaching assistantship (TA) or research assistantship (RA) they would have held abroad, thereby gaining valuable experience and contributing to the educational ecosystem. Universities can consider reducing their teaching load in order to facilitate their research, which will ultimately help the institutions' ranking and accreditation bids.

Furthermore, this move can lead to significant economic benefits. By pursuing their PhDs locally, students can save significant amounts of foreign currency that they would otherwise spend on overseas education. The prospect of attracting foreign students to our PhD programmes is another advantage. By establishing high-quality PhD programmes, we can attract international students, enhance our global academic reputation, and foster cross-cultural academic exchanges. The competition for a PhD provision will encourage the local institutions to improve their international network and institutional infrastructure.

Until now, the top 10 private universities have focused on hiring faculty members with foreign degrees for understandable reasons. These include international exposure, quality of education and research, networking opportunities, and a global perspective. They can also enhance the institution's reputation by signalling commitment to excellence and international collaboration. However, the requirement for a local degree may deter some of our local scholars from choosing the difficult path of TOEFL/IELTS, GRE/GMAT, statement of purpose, and TAship/RAship while applying overseas.

As the custodian of both the public and private systems, UGC must ensure academic rigours as well as support local talent, creating a dynamic and enriching academic environment that benefits students, researchers, and the institution as a whole. Not everyone can afford to go abroad. Even if they do, the return on investment (ROI) for a PhD abroad has to be appealing. Suppose a PhD in an OECD country requires an investment of $30,000-$150,000 over three to seven years. We cannot expect a graduate earning a monthly salary of less than Tk 1 lakh to realise their investment. This practical reason accounts for a significant portion of the brain drain. Our neighbours in India, Pakistan, and Sri Lanka have therefore created a robust homegrown PhD system. They did so by making a PhD a prerequisite for becoming a university lecturer. The decision to permit the private system will produce enough research graduates to make such a system viable.

However, there are some potential risks. Our local researchers' lack of overseas exposure and limited access to cutting-edge resources and technologies could impede the quality of their research output. A robust research culture is needed. The creation of a network of PhD degree-granting entities, similar to the M25 Consortium in the UK, can facilitate resource-sharing and collaborative research. The UGC can develop a monitoring system to guarantee the quality of local research.

The commercial interests of some private universities present another significant challenge. There is fear that some dodgy ones might start selling certificates. Unfortunately, many public universities are equally guilty. The demand for PhD is created by many officials, civil and military bureaucrats, and other non-academics who pursue PhDs to decorate their CVs or for their post-retirement career prospects. This can be checked by tightening the supervision and examination. Dhaka University has made it mandatory for international examiners to provide external oversight and uphold rigorous academic standards. At the initial stage, the UGC can provide a co-supervisor from a public or international university to help the private university ease into the system during the pilot stage. The UGC's role in this transition will be pivotal. By approving the basic structure and curriculum of PhD programmes, it can ensure consistency and quality across institutions. This regulatory oversight is crucial to maintaining high academic standards and fostering an environment conducive to advanced research.

Granting private universities the authority to supervise PhD candidates and confer doctoral degrees is a progressive step that holds immense potential for our academic landscape. With appropriate regulatory frameworks and a focus on quality, this decision can transform doctoral education in Bangladesh, retaining talent, fostering innovation, and enhancing our global academic standing.

COW RUNNING AMOK IN A MARKET

It's not a 'moo' point

OF MAGIC & MADNESS

BADIUZZAMAN BAY

Every year, Eid-ul-Azha brings with it viral pictures or videos of human-cattle interactions that amuse some and bemuse others, but overall help to build anticipation for the more solemn occasion of cattle sacrifice. This year is no different. A video clip currently trending online features a runaway cow that—let's say for now—decided to go shopping. The clip begins with what appears to be an overturned auto-rickshaw in front of a shopping mall in Dhaka. The cow, visibly agitated, with its handlers trying to hold onto its reins, leaves them behind to chase a few onlookers before making a dash for the mall entrance. It gallops up the stairs. Once in, it runs past a row of shops, slips into one in the far corner, and briefly hides there, much to the bewilderment of the crowd.

ILLUSTRATION: SHAIKH SULTANA JAHAN BADHON

I must admit that I, like most people commenting on the video, was amused initially. After all, the short video is full of chaotic potential, with a side dish of humour served with a fitting music. Although sacrificial cows breaking loose on their way from *haat*s or lunging at perceived attackers is not an uncommon sight, it still prompts an amused reaction during every Eid-ul-Azha. Netizens, as always, had some funny ideas about why the runaway cow behaved the way it did in front of a shopping mall. Stuff of another Gabhi Brittanto, one quipped.

> While we share and laugh at these viral videos of 'cute chaos' caused by cows on our streets, they also bring to light a stark reality: the fast-vanishing space for animals in Bangladesh as people continue to encroach upon their habitats and animals, in turn, increasingly find themselves in human-dominated areas, leading to such bizarre encounters.

Interestingly, the gabhi (cow) in question seemed to calm down a bit toward the end, inside the shop, where it found a caring pair of hands stroking its head. Its earlier behaviour can be attributed to fear or irritation. The way sacrificial cattle are often hauled off to their eventual destinations, hemmed in by all sorts of people and vehicles, each louder than the other, can be overwhelming for the shackled animals. The poor cow probably had a similar experience, and its instinctive response was to try to flee to a safer location, away from the chaos, confusion, and beatings.

But there are bigger things at work here. While we share and laugh at these viral videos of "cute chaos" caused by cows on our streets, they also bring to light a stark reality: the fast-vanishing space for animals in Bangladesh as people continue to encroach upon their habitats and animals, in turn, increasingly find themselves in human-dominated areas, leading to such bizarre encounters. The cows—rounded up for human consumption, but often treated most inhumanely—thus serve as a metaphor for all the caged, abused, poached or displaced animals out there. Seen from their perspective, the story of animals invading human spaces (like shopping malls) is equally a story of humans invading natural spaces (like hills and forests). We only see one side of the story because it helps us sleep at night, secure in our own sense of self-worth.

But to call what's happening on the other side a "human-animal conflict" would be like, for lack of a better example, calling what's happening in Gaza an "Israel-Palestine war"—so one-sided has this so-called conflict been. From Cox's Bazar to the Chittagong Hill Tracts (CHT) to Sylhet to Gazipur to Mymensingh to the Sundarbans, our invasion of the natural spaces has been relentless and merciless. And the animals have only been reacting to it so far, and reacting rather unconvincingly.

It is no wonder, then, that the rate of deforestation in Bangladesh, according to an article by this daily, has been almost double the global average. In Cox's Bazar, for example, forests are rapidly disappearing, replaced by various projects and settlements. Often, these forests or forestlands, which serve as the natural habitats of numerous animals including critically endangered species, are being ravaged by government agencies themselves—the very institutions that are supposed to protect them—for development or commercial purposes.

The saga of CHT districts is equally depressing. Every other month, you come across reports of how the region, with its rolling hills and rich forests, is being degraded or stripped bare to make way for various infrastructure and commercial projects without any environmental consideration. This rampant development is literally a death sentence for the natural habitats of wildlife. Also at risk is the integrity of Indigenous communities who have lived in harmony with nature for centuries. Other forest and hilly areas in the country that historically served as natural habitats for animals are more or less going through the same ordeals. When a natural space is degraded like this, it is not just the species that face the risks of displacement. Its ecological balance, too, is disrupted.

Animals are not safe from uncontrolled human expansion in cities and other urban landscapes either, as parks and open spaces are being consumed by concrete structures. The occasional sighting of a monkey, bird or squirrel is a painful reminder of their shrinking habitats. Even the abject negligence with which animals living closer to humans, like street dogs and cats, are treated speaks of the ever-widening gap between the human and animal populations.

So, yes, when a cow wanders into a shopping mall where you think it has no business to be, it is not a moot or—as Joey from the TV show Friends would call it—"moo" point. It is the point: a clear, decisive statement on the need to end human cruelties and excesses in relation to our animal neighbours.

THE THRIVING ONLINE CLOTHING THRIFT SCENE and the youth behind it

ADRITA ZAIMA ISLAM and
ARANYO RISHI CHOWDHURY

Up until the advent of the Covid-19 pandemic, the concept of thrifting, or buying old, "pre-loved" clothes, was entirely foreign to us. Then, while doom-scrolling on Instagram, we began to come across online thrift stores selling unique pieces of surprisingly good quality. We were even more taken aback to learn that most of these businesses are run by students.

These young entrepreneurs are not only proving the do-ability of running a thriving business alongside studies but also inspiring countless other students to dip their toes into the rewarding world of entrepreneurship.

For Sunayra Subha Pushpita, the founder and co-CEO of Bangladesh Thrift, starting the business was initially a matter of earning some money after O levels. However, it turned out to mean much more. "We think running an online store can be a valuable experience for students, teaching them time management, multitasking, efficient decision-making skills, and providing them with early exposure to the world of business," she says.

PHOTOS: ORCHID CHAKMA

Something that sets thrift stores apart from mainstream retailers is that said retailers are seldom interested in catering to niche aesthetics. As online thrift stores are relatively small, owners can afford to invest in unique, out-there styles that appeal to only a small number of people, while still making worthy profit.

If a certain style of clothing is not available, chances are someone will take up the opportunity. "Back when I started in 2022, I noticed there were various thrift stores on Instagram selling Western clothes but not a single one selling traditional kameez or kurtis. There was a big gap in the market, and that's when I decided to be the first to open a thrift store for traditional clothes," said Adila Tasbi Labiba, a student at the Independent University of Bangladesh and the owner of Thrift Kameez.

Arshad Shawki and Sujana Kasfia, the co-founders of Mulberry, added, "We used to window-shop a lot, and oftentimes could not afford what we liked. Also, there was no exclusivity to the pieces created in bulk. When we started thrifting and transforming our wardrobes, people liked our sense of style. Naturally, the idea of opening a thrift store to sell these types of clothes made sense."

Many of these online thrift stores source their stocks from vintage markets overseas or domestic suppliers dealing in old and defective pieces. The circular nature of this practice lengthens the life cycle of the clothes, extending the time before they end up in a landfill.

The thrifting movement can thus be seen as a collective pushback against the impacts of fast fashion, catering to the growing environmentally conscious customer base in Bangladesh. Additionally, these clothes can be sold for a fraction of what they would cost brand-new, appealing to the younger customer base operating on a tight budget.

Adila speaks at length about her experience with juggling studies and a small business. "I started small and only dedicated time to Thrift Kameez during the weekends. Due to the huge response from my customers, I eventually started dropping in on alternate days," she shared.

She continued, "When it was getting difficult for me to manage it all on my own, my family helped me with packing and ironing the pieces." Thus, it can be observed that the work required to run an online thrift store is quite manageable if distributed amongst friends, family, or business partners. However, this depends on the scale of the sourcing and distribution operations, which is also quite versatile with a thrift store business.

It can be daunting to try to start a business as a student given the financial burden of it. However, Sunayra started Bangladesh Thrift with an investment of only 300 taka. Similarly, Adila's initial investment of 6,000 taka into Thrift Kameez came from Eidi she received from her relatives. The key to keeping the business running has been to reinvest profit back into the enterprise. Continuous reinvestment allows the business to grow, so it can, in turn, rake in enough profits for the entrepreneurs to remove a cut from it to pay themselves.

Due to online thrift stores requiring remarkably low initial investment, another young person, Ayela Amin, founder and owner of poptags and Janky, started out with Eid salami combined with 2000 taka loaned from her father, which amounted to a total initial capital of 7000 taka.

"With the 7000 taka, I bought 20 to 30 pieces, curated my collection, made my card, and designed and arranged packaging," shared Ayela.

When setting up a thrift store, challenges are frequent and complex. We say this not to downplay the financial issues that can come with running an online thrifting business, but to shed light on the relatively lower barriers to entry into these businesses.

Arshad, for instance, reflects, "Dhaka is an expensive place to live in, so saving up enough money to secure stocks in large enough quantities has been a struggle". However, the continued success of these ventures proves that it is not impossible to have a flourishing business. Due to the sense of individuality inherent to it, the sustainability of the practice, and the affordability, the world of thrifting is not only worth experiencing as a shopper but also as an entrepreneur.

Everything in life requires practice

SUMAIYA RASHID

There's a widespread misunderstanding that some things in life require natural skills or a one-time lucky break. However, nobody tells us how many aspects of life require practice. The reality is that life is a long-running practice session in which we actively seek to improve how we live and who we are – to achieve completeness in being.

Unless they possess natural talents, the majority of the population is aware that certain activities require diligent practice. This can relate to academics, sports, the arts, etc. What people might not acknowledge, or even know, is that maintaining good interpersonal relationships require practice as well.

Making friends, for example, is more than just a casual form of socialising; it is a skill that we carefully develop. To fully comprehend the subtleties of friendship, we should be able to separate deeper relationships from those that are surface-level and superficial.

This isn't to say that surface-level friendships are inherently bad, but investing our time and energy in maintaining deeper relationships can help improve our mental health alongside our day-to-day lives. We should also not hesitate to establish appropriate boundaries and recognise when someone has not earned the right to be our friend, all of which are necessary components of creating real connections.

Moreover, being a dependable support system for people when they need it is what defines friendship, which goes beyond simple acquaintance. Our ability to empathise, show compassion, and listen intently strengthens our moral fibre and enhances our interactions with others.

Respecting moral values like loyalty, honesty, and dependability not only makes relationships stronger but also increases personal growth for each of us. However, establishing clear expectations and boundaries is necessary to instil mutual respect and reciprocity in friendships.

Practicing introspection can help us be a good person in general. But with it comes the necessity of practicing how to recognise when someone hasn't earned that privilege of being close to us. We should also learn to accept our right to be angry and, eventually, how to handle complex situations or being more forgiving.

Much of life is muscle memory, and I've come to realise there are many more areas of ourselves to flex, stretch, and strengthen than those we're taught in Biology classes. Understanding that our virtues, like muscles, require regular workouts and reinforcement, facilitates continuous personal development.

In the pursuit of our personal growth, we should learn to accept the full spectrum of human emotions and create coping skills to get through life's obstacles. As we learn, our right to experience and express emotions, including anger, is important, as is channelling them in a healthy and constructive way.

Our individual experiences are influenced by a variety of circumstances, including privilege and structural barriers. Practice and self-improvement are worthwhile goals, but not everyone has the opportunity to pursue them. Social justice and inclusivity can only be advanced by acknowledging and resolving these differences.

As friends, parents, co-workers, and members of the community, we have a choice: either we sink further into our narrow self-interests, allowing our most creative abilities to stall and eventually undergo atrophy, or we put in the effort necessary to collaborate with others to more successfully achieve justice, healing, and joyful harmony.

The latter can seem more difficult and yield more risks. However, it can also bring about great comfort as well. So, with practice, the downsides can diminish and eventually become easier to navigate.

In the end, our lives are an ongoing practice – a path of ongoing learning, development, and self-discovery. One thing we can do to facilitate our journey through life is to remain open to the unique opportunities we come across, instead of focusing just on the results. We should strive to be the best versions of ourselves rather than striving for perfection through practice.

Tigers reap rewards of planned attack

ABDULLAH AL MEHDI

Bangladesh have been smart in picking the right bowler for the right moment so far in the ongoing ICC T20 World Cup and on Thursday against the Netherlands, when asked to defend a score for the first time in the tournament, the bowling unit flourished once more through the precise choice of bowlers according to situations.

Chasing a challenging but not improbable 160-run target, Netherlands were at one point running away with the game, needing 61 runs from 42 deliveries with seven wickets in hand.

After Taskin Ahmed had been hit for a humongous six in the 13th over, which went for 11 runs, the game was slipping.

Shakib Al Hasan, who had been a bit expensive in his first two overs, conceded just five in the 13th. That over raised the asking run-rate to 9.33, increasing the scoreboard pressure on the Dutch who had two set batters at the crease.

Skipper Najmul Hossain Shanto then handed the ball to leg-spinner Rishad Hossain for the 15th over, hoping to purchase some wickets.

Holding back Rishad's last two overs for this particular phase worked wonders for Bangladesh as the scoreboard pressure and Rishad's sharp turn broke the game open.

Rishad courageously tossed up deliveries to get purchase and Sybrand Engelbrecht only managed to top-edge the ball to point to depart for 33 off 22. Just one ball later, another flighted delivery saw Bas de Leede get stumped, beaten by the turn.

The two wickets allowed Shakib to bowl another five-run over, before Mustafizur Rahman's death bowling exhibition began.

Mustafizur, who bowled 17 dot balls in the innings, found bite on the surface with his cutters but it was his clever use of angles that really made him almost unhittable.

During the recently-concluded IPL, Mustafizur had been seen using the angle to slant deliveries across right-handers with MS Dhoni standing wide behind the stump. His pace variations and his wide angled deliveries proved too good for the Dutch batters.

Mustafizur is seemingly feeling more confident in using his variations in the death overs, as 46 percent of his deliveries in the death overs have been slower cutters since 2022.

Mustafizur has the joint second-lowest economy-rate among bowlers who have played at least three games at this T20 World Cup and picked up a minimum of four wickets.

With an economy of 3.91, he stands with OEG Baartman (South Africa) and PA van Meekeren (Netherlands) but unlike them, Mustafizur bowls at the death overs.

On Thursday, he bowled the 17th and the 19th over of the game, giving away just four runs, compared to Meekeren, who bowled the 15th and 17th over for his side, conceding 11.

The game was opened up by Rishad but defended by Mustafizur. Shakib, who said Bangladesh's score of 159-5 was challenging, but not a winning one, talked about the bowling plan.

"I think everyone is contributing here, especially the whole bowling unit," Shakib said when asked about Rishad's impact.

"Each of the bowlers are needed at different times in different situations. The way Mustafizur bowled and Taskin and Tanzim Sakib bowled with a new ball, naturally, these contributions are also needed to make another bowler bowl well," he added.

Almost hidden behind the marquee bowlers, part-time off-spinner Mahmudullah Riyad also played a crucial role for Bangladesh, removing the dangerous left-hander Vikramjit Singh in his only over of the match.

Clear and concise, Bangladesh's bowling unit has been decisive in their plans so far, which has put the team on course for a berth in the Super Eight.

Bangladesh brace for taxing Super Eight

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh are in poll position to reach the Super Eight stage of the ICC T20 World Cup after their victory over the Netherlands on Thursday and are set to be placed in Group 1 in the next phase, arguably the tougher of the two groups.

The Tigers currently have four points in three matches, having beaten Sri Lanka earlier and then losing to South Africa. A victory or a washout against Nepal in their final group-stage match on June 17 will seal their spot in Super Eight.

Even if they get stunned by Nepal, they would still qualify if Sri Lanka beat the Netherlands, or if the Lankans don't lose the match by a big margin or if the match gets washed out.

If Bangladesh get through, they will be in Group 1 alongside India, Australia and Afghanistan.

Although the group-phase is not yet over, Bangladesh's group and opponents are already fixed owing to the ICC's pre-tournament seeding of Super Eight.

The top two ranked teams in each group in the first round were allotted the first and second seeding ahead of the tournament, meaning finishing first or second in the group will not make any difference.

Bangladesh were originally not part of the pre-tournament seeding as South Africa and Sri Lanka were given the first and second spot from group D.

As Sri Lanka have been knocked out and South Africa are already through, Bangladesh are now vying for Sri Lanka's vacant D2 slot.

Because of this pre-tournament seeding system, the Tigers will have to take on two tournament favourites and a dangerous Afghanistan side in the Super Eight while in the other group, two associate sides—the USA and Scotland – are vying for spots alongside the West Indies and South Africa.

If given the choice, the Tigers would've definitely preferred to take South Africa's place in Group 1, but with that not being a possibility, they have to begin bracing themselves for the uphill challenge in Super Eight.

The matches against Australia and India are scheduled to be played at the Sir Vivian Richards Stadium in Antigua on June 21 and 22 respectively, a venue that has produced the two lowest aggregate scoring matches so far in the competition.

England decimated Oman in Antigua, bundled them out for a mere 47 and chased the total down in 3.1 overs while Australia skittled out Namibia for 72 and chased it down inside six overs.

It will be a challenge for the Bangladesh batters to withstand the Indian and Australian attacks in Antigua if sent to bat first. However, Bangladesh can also turn the tables on them with their bowling attack if they get the first crack with the ball.

Bangladesh will then face Afghanistan in Kingstown on June 24, the same venue where they beat the Netherlands.

In the Netherlands match, the pitch had something for the faster bowlers and some variable bounce early on but run-making was not that laborious afterwards.

Taking early wickets against Afghanistan, a team dependent on the top-order, and tackling their lethal spin attack will be the key for the Tigers. The Caribbean conditions should aid Bangladesh, however, given their tough draw in the Super Eight, the path to semifinals looks treacherous for the Tigers.

Moment of truth for defending champions Italy

AFP, Wuppertal

Italy kick off their European Championship title defence against Albania on Saturday as a new-look team tries to rebuild the reputation of one of the world's most important football nations.

Luciano Spalletti's Italy take on Albania in Dortmund in the first of three clashes in a fiendishly difficult Group B which also contains Spain and Croatia.

And those two later fixtures make Saturday's one hugely important, as with the four best third-place finishers in the six groups reaching the knockout stages, a win over Albania would give Italy a great chance of going through.

Italy come into the tournament in quietly confident mood, with delegation chief Gianluigi Buffon insisting that the Azzurri are "an underrated team" despite being holders and four-time World Cup winners.

Italy might be reigning champions but after winning the last Euros three years ago they missed out on qualification for a second straight World Cup.

Spalletti has been entrusted to guide his nation out of another bout of deep soul searching and he has done so by casting aside the team which became national heroes by beating England in the Euro 2020 final.

"I can see that we have players in the squad who will become future greats. They have the quality," Federico Chiesa said on Thursday in an interview with UEFA.

"We want to show what we're made of at the Euros. Let's see what we can do."

Spain and Croatia set for another battle

REUTERS, Dortmund

Spain and Croatia begin their Euro 2024 campaigns on Saturday with a rematch of last year's nervy UEFA Nations League final as they kick off the action in Group B, which also includes European champions Italy and surprise package Albania.

With memories of a heartbreaking shootout defeat by Spain still fresh in their minds, captain Luka Modric's perennial overachievers seem ready to again challenge the pre-tournament odds in their quest to finally win a major trophy.

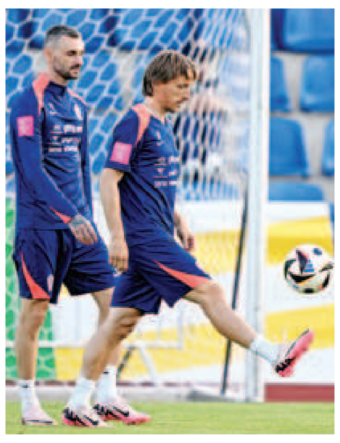
After reaching the 2018 World Cup final and making the semifinals four years later, the Nations League final loss to Spain was a tough pill to swallow.

It also raised questions of how long the country's 'golden generation' can keep on writing one of the great underdog stories in recent history.

Yet Croatia go into the tournament still relying on a midfield trio of Modric (39), Marcelo Brozovic (31) and Mateo Kovacic (30), who gave a taste of their competitive hunger on Saturday when they handed Portugal a 2-1 defeat in Lisbon.

The result did not reflect the visitors' dominance against Roberto Martinez's side, who were subdued despite being almost at full strength with Bruno Fernandes, Bernardo Silva, Vitinha and Ruben Dias in the starting 11.

The win gave Zlatko Dalic's side a boost for their Euro 2024 debut against old rivals Spain - one of the few elite teams giant-killers Croatia have regularly failed to slain.



Spain are partly to blame for Croatia's failure to hit the same World Cup highs at the European Championship in which their best result has been reaching the quarterfinals twice.

"We played them many times and we know what kind of football Spain like to play, they like possession and lulling the opposition to sleep," Croatia striker Ante Budimir told a press conference on Wednesday.

"They can be very quick and vertical at any time. As a team, they are nice to watch and easy to enjoy. (Midfielder) Rodri is very important for them. They have a lot of young players who can make a difference. A very talented and dangerous team..."

Since taking over the Spain job from Luis Enrique after the 2022 World Cup debacle, when they were knocked out in the last 16 on penalties by surprise package Morocco, manager Luis de la Fuente has been blending the country's young and ascending talent with experienced players very successfully.

Veteran defenders Dani Carvajal and Nacho, with Rodri in the middle and captain Alvaro Morata up front, provide the foundation and balance to allow Spain's skilled youngsters Lamine Yamal, Nico Williams and Pedri to create their magic.

Will that be enough to keep their winning run alive against gritty Croatia?

"We didn't come to Germany on vacation, on a tour trip, we are here to win and we'll do our best to do that," 16-year-old winger Yamal told reporters on Wednesday. "Saturday's game against Croatia is probably the most important of my career.

Resurrected England eye another win

England can't afford to drop any points against Namibia in their final Group B game of the ongoing T20 World Cup on Saturday at the Sir Vivian Richards Stadium in Antigua if they are to keep themselves alive in the Super 8 race.

The Jos Buttler-led side thrashed Oman in their last match on Thursday and will be full of confidence in getting the job done against Namibia but they can't relax or be complacent.

Even though a defeat against ICC associates member Namibia -- nine places below fourth-placed England in T20I rankings -- looks a bit unlikely, Buttler's men will be wary of their opponents as a loss in today's game will mean an automatic exit for the defending champions.

After a no-result in their opening match against Scotland and a heavy defeat to Australia in the second game, England found themselves in a 'must-win by a big margin' situation against minnows Oman.

Fortunately for the Three Lions, Adil Rashid (4/11), Jofra Archer (3/12) and Mark Wood (3/12) stepped up in a big way, sharing the wickets to bowl their opponents out for 47 runs in only 13.2 overs before Buttler scored a quickfire 24 off eight balls to lead the side to victory in just 3.1 overs, giving their net run rate a massive boost from -1.800 to +3.081, significantly above Scotland's +2.164.

A victory this weekend for England will see them draw level on five points with the Scots, who face Australia on Sunday. As long as England don't slip against Namibia and Australia do what is expected of them -- which is to beat Scotland -- England can hope for smooth sailing to the Super Eight.

What would also come as a relief to Buttler and Co is that Australia skipper Pat Cummins ruled out Thursday the prospect of Australia underperforming against Scotland in a bid to oust rivals England from the Twenty20 World Cup, saying it would be against the "spirit of cricket."

"I don't think you can (go into a game not trying to win) -- ever," Cummins said after Josh Hazlewood caused controversy this week when he said it would be in Australia's interests for reigning champions England to be out of the competition.

St Martin's finally gets supplies

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Cox's Bazar

A month's worth of supplies were taken to St Martin's Island by tourist ship Baro Awlia yesterday to ease the food crisis, officials said.

Some 150 people who had been waiting to return home on the island for at least nine days were taken there by the ship.

Amidst armed conflict in nearby Myanmar, barely any boat had travelled to and from St Martin's since June 6, resulting in an acute shortage of essential supplies.

Locals said over the last few days, gunshots were fired from across the border at trawlers and speedboats on the Naf river.

Yamin Hossain, additional district magistrate, said the government sent some food items and local traders took rice, onion, potato, fruits, and other essentials on Baro Awlia.

He added that the supplies will last for a month.

Rehena Akhter, who was on board the ship, said she, her husband and their three-year-old daughter went

Border killings continue despite BSF promise

10 Bangladeshis killed since March after BSF DG said they'd use non-lethal weapons

MUNTAKIM SAAD

Border killings continue despite India's Border Security Force's repeated assurance of bringing it down to zero.

At least 10 Bangladeshis were shot dead allegedly by BSF after its Director General Nitin Agarwal said the border force personnel are using non-lethal weapons with intent to minimise the causalities during the DG-level border conference held on March 10.

Of the deceased, four were killed in March, three in April, two in May, and another this month, according to data from the rights group, Ain o Salish Kendra (ASK).

According to ASK and media reports, 12 Bangladeshis, including a BGB member, have so far been killed by the BSF this year, raising questions about the effectiveness of the border force's measures.

"The border killings have been going on for a long time. This cannot continue, and it must be resolved immediately through discussion," ASK Executive Director Faruq Faisel told The Daily Star recently.

He said, "India also shares borders with China and Pakistan, but we don't see such killings there. This will continue unless the Bangladesh authorities take a logical

ESSENTIAL COMMODITIES

Prices go up ahead of Eid

SUKANTA HALDER

As Eid-ul-Azha approaches, consumers brace for a hike in the prices of essential commodities, a trend seen all too often ahead of Eids.

In the week leading up to Eid, commodity prices have risen in the capital and elsewhere in the country, straining consumers.

The recent price increase is especially painful because Bangladesh's average inflation rate has been above 9 percent for the previous two years.

During visits to several kitchen markets in the capital yesterday, it was found that the prices of soybean oil, onions, eggs, rice, garlic, ginger, cardamom, and bay leaves, among other daily necessities, had gone up compared to a week ago.

Meanwhile, data from the state-run Trading Corporation of Bangladesh (TCB) also showed a similar trend.

Depending on quality, fine rice was selling at Tk 68-78 per kilogramme (kg), up from Tk 60-78, according to various retailers.

On the other hand, the price of coarse rice has gone up to Tk 57-58 per kg.

On top of that, the runaway cost of cooking oil has also been hurting middle and lower-middle-income families.

Loose soybean oil was being sold at Tk 155-160 per litre, up from Tk 150, and bottled soybean oil was priced at Tk 170 per litre, up from Tk 165.

Local garlic was being sold at Tk 200-220 per kg, up from Tk 190-220, while ginger price was Tk 250-300 per kg, up from Tk 240-280.

Local onions were selling at Tk 85-90 per kg, up by about Tk 5, and four pieces of brown eggs was selling for Tk 52-54, up from Tk 50.

Bay leaves were being sold at Tk 200-300 per kg, up from Tk 150-200.

'Ananda' makes them smile

For Korail slum children with cerebral palsy, Saturday is a day of laughter and joy

NILIMA JAHAN

Over the past year, 12-year-old Samia's life has undergone a significant change. In the capital's Korail slum, the child was born with cerebral palsy, a group of neurological disorders that appear in infancy or early childhood and permanently affect body movement and muscle coordination.

As a result, she spent most of her childhood bedridden, unable to sit or turn from side to side on her own.

But, now, she looks forward to every Saturday because it is the one day she gets to live the life of a regular child that she was previously deprived of.

For the past year, she wakes up early every Saturday, has her breakfast, and puts on her favourite red frock while her mother styles her hair into two ponytails.

She then waits for the dedicated volunteers to pick her up in a wheelchair and take her to "Ananda", a daycare centre that essentially serves as a respite care centre.

Along with Samia, other children arrive by 10:00am and slowly settle in. They mingle, play games, sing nursery rhymes together, and engage in various fun-filled activities. They also receive essential physiotherapy before being given snacks and lunch, all of it free of charge.

According to the latest National Survey on Persons with Disabilities-2021 by the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics, the number of people with cerebral palsy in the country is approximately 136,800.

Around 96.34 percent of them have communication limitations; 96.64 percent lack balance; 89.32 percent have abnormal muscle stiffness or looseness; 90.97 percent have restricted hand or foot movement; 89.06 percent face behavioral issues; and 85.49 percent experience partial or full inactivity of hands or legs.

Children like Samia rely on dedicated volunteers or palliative-care assistants (PCAs) for support.

Israel hits Gaza as truce talks fail to progress

34 more Palestinians killed

AFP, Palestinian Territories

Israeli strikes hit Gaza yesterday as truce talks with Hamas failed to progress and tensions surged on Israel's northern border with Lebanon.

Witnesses reported the strikes in various parts of the Gaza Strip in the morning, particularly the centre. At Al-Aqsa Martyrs Hospital in the central city of Deir al-Balah, men gathered over the body of an 11-year-old boy who died during bombardment of nearby Bureij refugee camp.

In a black singlet, the child lay on a floor smeared with fresh blood, a white bandage covering the top half of his face, AFP images showed.

Israel's military yesterday said troops continued operations in central Gaza, where warplanes had struck a "militant cell" and "military structure" in the Zeitun area.

After projectiles were fired from northern Gaza into southern Israel on Thursday night, artillery and aircraft hit the launch sites, the army said.

At least 37,266 Palestinians have been killed and 85,102 have been injured in the offensive that began on October 7, the Gaza health ministry said in a statement yesterday. Some 34 Palestinians were killed in the previous 24 hours, the ministry added.

Fears of a broader Middle East conflict have surged again, with Lebanon-based Hezbollah fighters, who are backed by Iran, launching waves of rockets against Israeli military targets on Wednesday and Thursday.

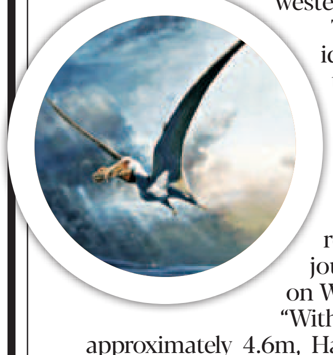
New pterosaur species discovered

CNN ONLINE

An amateur paleontologist has discovered a new species of pterosaur, a flying reptile that lived alongside dinosaurs around 100 million years ago.

Kevin Petersen, an avocado farmer and curator of the Kronosaurus Korner fossil museum in northwest Queensland, Australia, unearthed a number of fossilised bones in western Queensland in 2021.



These have since been identified as belonging to Haliskia peterseni, a new genus and species of pterosaur, according to a statement from a team at Curtin University in Perth, which led the research, published in the journal Scientific Reports on Wednesday.

"With a wingspan of approximately 4.6m, Haliskia would have been a fearsome predator around 100 million years ago when much of central western Queensland was underwater, covered by a vast inland sea and globally positioned about where Victoria's southern coastline is today," study lead author Adele Pentland, a PhD candidate at Curtin's School of Earth and Planetary Sciences, said in the statement.

The giant creature was the first vertebrate to evolve the ability of flight and lived alongside dinosaurs during the Mesozoic Era, which started around 252 million years ago.

Pakistan out as USA seal Super 8s spot

AGENCIES

The USA advanced to the Super Eights stage of the T20 World Cup on Friday when their match against Ireland was abandoned, an outcome which meant former champions Pakistan were eliminated.

Ground staff spent hours working to dry the wet outfield at Lauderhill but shortly after the umpires had inspected conditions a huge downpour ended any hope with the field quickly under water once again.

South Florida has suffered heavy rain and flooding and the game on Tuesday at Lauderhill between Sri Lanka and Nepal was also abandoned.

There were heavy showers earlier on Friday morning which added to the workload which all proved to be in vain.

Fans who had waited patiently inside the Central Broward Stadium were instructed to stay in the facility and in shelter due to thunder and lightning which accompanied the torrential rain.

The forgotten female footballers of Khulna

DIPANKAR ROY, Khulna

Wearing shorts and playing football -- these reasons were enough for some locals to attack under-17 female footballers of Super Queen Football Academy at Tentultala village in Khulna in July last year.

Instead of dribbling past opponents and scoring goals, some of them had tossed and turned in hospital beds for days to heal the injuries sustained from the attack.

The incident caused nationwide outrage, with one of the culprits swiftly detained. The rest were arrested nearly a month later after they threatened to burn the girls with acid for filing a case against them.

A wave of support followed. Voices from across the country rose in their defense, civil society rallied behind them and promises of funding poured in.

But like many issues in Bangladesh, this too became a victim of the news cycle's relentless churn. As new stories grabbed headlines, the plight of the Khulna Super Queen Academy girls faded from public memory.

"Deceived" by the initial support, these girls dreamt of returning to the pitch, one day wearing the red and green of the national team.

However, upon returning to the field, they found themselves abandoned.

The promises turned out to be empty, funding dried up, leaving them with no means to continue training.

Although those who claimed to support the girls forgot them, the ones who opposed their freedom never forgot.

Their ridicule continued. At least four girls were married off by their family to "save face before it's too late".

The others face a harsh reality. Some toil as domestic helpers, others labour in croplands for meagre wages, and one even drives an auto-rickshaw to make ends meet.

Football, their passion, their escape is now a distant memory.

The dreams they nurtured, the life they envisioned, are now just a faint echo, a cruel reminder of what could have been.

The activity of the football academy they trained in has completely halted.

Mongoli Bakchi, a stalwart of the academy, spent most days in the hospital bed among the injured. Her head, which she used to score numerous goals with powerful headers, was mercilessly targeted by the attackers.

"Even though club activities had resumed after July, everything stopped since last November," she told The Daily Star recently.

"We were forced to abandon football, but we still want to play and practice on the field," she added.

"Due to financial and social stigma, our football journey ended even before it could properly start. We were promised many things, including a mini stadium and special training, but now no one comes to check on us," she said.

Mongoli, who played in Khulna divisional team from 2018 to 2023, is experiencing a physical and mental breakdown after being off the field for the last seven months.

Her mother, Suchitra Bakchi, said, "I sent my daughter to play football with a dream, but now she spends idle time at home."

"To this day, the naysayers ridicule her. How can I shelter her from constant bullying?" she asked.

Sadia Nasreen, Jyoti, Ritu, Swarna, Puja, Devi, Sima, and Priti of the Super Queen football team were all regular players of the U19 divisional team, but have now left the game and are busy with other activities.

Sadia was assaulted along with Mongoli last year.

"The dream we had when we started playing football is no longer possible," Sadia said. "How can I play if I can't practice properly? We want a playground and training from our coach," she added.

Sadia is now trying to get admitted to other academies but that too seems quite impossible due to financial constraints.

Puja Roy, another promising player, refused to be locked away at home despite leaving football. She defied social stigma and took up the challenge of driving a battery-powered easy bike to support her family.

But fate seemed determined to crush these girls' spirits. Just last Friday, Puja's easy bike was stolen from Kadamtala intersection in Khulna city.

Her father, Arbindu Roy said, "I don't see any future for my daughter in sports. Seeing no alternative, Puja is now helping our family. But even that source of income has been snatched away."

Asharaful Alam Khan, former upazila chairman, used to fund the football academy. He even helped some of the players after the attack. However, he didn't want any of the players to join other teams, or even play at the divisional level, some of the players said, seeking anonymity.

Additionally, he didn't like the widespread attention the issue received after the attack and was concerned about the negative impact his support for girls' football could have on a portion of his vote bank. So he stopped funding, the sources said.

Asharaful could not be reached for comments despite repeated attempts.

Debashish Mondal, along with local sports organisers, established the Tetultala Super Queen football academy to provide training and opportunities for 30-40 girls who regularly practice football. He told The Daily Star that the club's practice is halted due to financial crises, and without collective support, the club cannot resume operation.

Coach Md Mostakuzzaman said it is painful to keep such promising players off the field. "The club was closed due to organisational weakness and financial crisis. Despite the need to get the girls back to the field, no progress is being made," he added.

Contacted, Advocate Saiful Islam, president of the Khulna District Football Association, said he will take all necessary measures to resume the club's activities soon.

ALL ACCUSED OUT ON BAIL

On July 30 last year, a day after the incident, Sadia Nasrin filed an attempted murder case with Batiaghata Police Station, naming four individuals.

However, the process to seek justice was not entirely smooth.

Sadia alleged discrepancies between her initial account and the police record of the case.

"I had told the police that we were attacked with sharp weapons, but the case record only mentioned physical assault. I applied for a correction. It was corrected only after media reports. Initially, the police did not want to take the case and even tried to file a robbery case against us on behalf of the accused," Sadia recounted.

At that time, the officer-in-charge of Batiaghata Police Station told The Daily Star that the "female players were attacked because they were being unruly".

The Daily Star published a report on this.

While the main accused, Nur Khan, was arrested, his wife Rangi Begum, son Salauddin Khan, and daughter Nupur Khatun were granted interim bail by the court until August 21 last year. Out on bail, they continued intimidating the girls with threats of acid attack.

Fearing for her life, Sadia filed a general diary on August 1.

The three were held for violating conditions of the bail following court order.

However, all four of the accused are now out on bail following a High Court order.

The trial is ongoing.

Bangladesh Mahila Parishad's Khulna district legal advisor, Advocate Jahanara Parveen, is currently representing the girls.

She told The Daily Star that charges against the accused have been framed, and the next hearing is scheduled for June 25 this year.

Wishing anonymity, a senior police officer at the district level said, "We provided long-term protection to ensure that the female players were not subjected to any further attack or harassment. Two police vehicles always accompanied them when they went to and from the field. Additionally, we stationed a vehicle at the house where they stayed and practiced at night for several months to ensure their safety."

"Since they are not practicing anymore and are not facing any threats, we are not providing security anymore," he added.

At least four girls were married off by their family to "save face before it's too late". The others face a harsh reality. Some toil as domestic helpers, others labour in croplands for meagre wages, and one even drives an auto-rickshaw to make ends meet.

Just a year ago, these footballers used to practise here regularly. However, faced with social stigma and financial constraints, they are now unable to follow their passion. The activities at the Super Queen Football Academy at Tentultala village in Khulna, where they practised and dreamt of glory, has now completely halted. AFTER THE RAIN

DESIGN: MAISHA SYEDA

I lost interest in everything I did in the following weeks. Those untrimmed eyebrows, slightly dimpled cheeks, the sheen on her forehead—all made me sleepless.

MIR ARIF

Again, I wasn't a poet, but words and sentences jumbled up seeing that small face, light make-up enhancing her beauty. A loose strand of hair cascaded down her cheek, framing her face. I had seen many of my female co-stars closely but found her face most beautiful. I was never accustomed to seeing such a thing. As I took the pen from her hand, I was shivering. God knows why, I didn't know what to write. I was so dazzled that I fiddled with the pen without signing anything. Perhaps she thought I was waiting to learn her name, perhaps I simply forgot how to write my own name. Hell, what would a person know who simply indulged in the privileges bestowed upon him? "I want an auto—" She gulped and couldn't finish the word, being nervous. For some moment I thought she was going to depart, leaving me as baffled as she was. Finally, she told me her name and her voice echoed off the walls and went straight into the deepest vault of my consciousness. It was like listening to a sonata, embodying love and pining in one great session. I took extra time to write the name on the snow-white tissue. Instead of leaving at that instant, she leaned forward, and the language of silence dictated us. I kissed her or she kissed me, or it was an effort from both. I can't be fully sure. Beads of sweat formed around her lips, shining like stars. I was so taken aback that I forgot to say anything out of courtesy.

Sweats, a little whiff of some cologne, varnished rail, her rattling fleet, a bangle on the wrist, black hair, the flashing light, the oncoming storm—is all I remember. I stood unmoved for a long time in that semi-darkness after she walked out into the rain. The last glimpse of her I had was through the glass window as I saw her friend pressing her arm in earnest, simultaneously rebuking her to know why she was so late. She told her nothing and the friend held out an umbrella, checking the time on her wristwatch. And the girl I kissed—and whose name I forgot—showed the friend something inside her purse that was enough to suppress the curiosity. I wondered if she told her about the silent kiss we both shared, the musical feelings we created. A brown Toyota Corona stopped in front of them. A white-capped driver rushed out, opened the door, and sped away. I stood alone, a wailing note in my heart, watching it pour outside, the trees dancing in the wind. One of the waiters eventually noticed me and showed me in, apologising for not knowing that I was to visit the club. He said something about phone calls and readying a table, but all I could hear was some noise. The music of that silent kiss was still so strong that I suppressed any other details in my mind.

I lost interest in everything I did in the following weeks. Those untrimmed eyebrows, slightly dimpled cheeks, the sheen on her forehead—all made me sleepless. I had no direction whatsoever in my life. Even in my dreams, I had a strong feeling for her when I saw the back of her. She was walking away in the rain or sometimes lying down on a bed with a book hiding her face. Oh, those frustrating dreams. I could never see her fully, her face never appeared once. It was always some limbs, legs or hands or lips or shoulders, but never her face. Even when I tried to forcefully imagine the face, I could only picture some outlines, more geometric in nature than a person's face. I gave up and turned to music, blasting symphonies in the evenings, then English, Bangla, and Hindi songs, whatever I fancied. S D Burman, Jagjit Singh, The Righteous Brothers, you name it. The songs and symphonies didn't improve my heart or feelings, only worsened them. I was racked with a desire to be loved, that I too, my small, insignificant self, could love someone back, was lovable. Yes, you are lovable. Pure nonsense—the hell I knew about love, raised in a loveless family, seeing parents fight and my father seldom coming home. I saw life only like a running track, a series of progresses and occasional rewards that it offered, only if one won. Falling in love with a girl whose face and name I couldn't remember was like going back to my adolescent years, that forever pining for things so pretty that inspired a child to love everything around him, wish good things for the world, bask in utopia, in other words.

I delayed my shootings; directors stopped by and were annoyed to reschedule. I even ignored the opportunity to work in a blockbuster melodrama where a blind genius tells his fawning lover how cruel fate befell him, how he couldn't achieve the greatest things in life due to an accident, which unbeknownst to him, was caused by the fawning heroine. Obviously, they picked their second choice, Razzak, for that role. I didn't care. I smoked cigarette after cigarette. I was frazzled, cheeks and eyes looking depressed. I had seen many beautiful girls throughout my career. Then I didn't see them anymore. I couldn't see anybody. It was as if the whole concept of love ended in one single individual, as if all my chases, contrary to my earlier belief, were to be doomed like this. Life was so unbearable without the presence of my beloved that I thought of harming myself, proving to myself how much I loved her. That absolute after-the-rain feeling never came back to me. That effect that I only experienced once in life was gone forever. I called the club for help, but without any name or facial description they failed to provide me with any leads, so one day I decided to do something desperate. I ran an anonymous advertisement on paper that read: To the girl I no longer know the name of. You were wearing a blue saree with a brocade blouse. You were two. I don't remember your face. One waiting out in the rain. Please drop a line to this address if you see this. I'm dying out of my breath for you.

I received no response from anybody. But several days later someone wrote a piece on the advertisement, calling me the city's new Romeo. It was so embarrassing, although the anonymous nature of the advertisement helped protect my reputation. The incident started to have some bearing on the public, with people sending me letters daily. So much so that my caretaker had to bundle them after sorting them by date, which I read carefully. It seemed that people claiming they were normal had a crazy side. One girl said she wasn't the girl I desired but she would take me to Paris, London, Bombay or any big cities in the world if we went on a date. Another offered a brand-new car and blue-collar job at her father's brokering house. A woman wanted to leave a loveless marriage to find happiness with someone like me even if she had to live out in the open or under a banyan tree for the rest of her life. The funniest was a poem with the same title the newspaper gave me where a girl told me how desperately she was in love with me, wearing a locket with my initials. Just imagine how crazy those people were. How would she even know my initials when I left no clues about my name? Anyway, one girl replied in a manner that I suspected might be the one I was in love with. After exchanging letters, I decided to meet her at the national museum. I asked my make-up artist to improve my appearance, to hide dark circles and puffiness around my eyes that gathered in months. I drove my Impala with the same excitement of the first day, thinking of the girl I was to meet and our secret kiss, a grafted memory, the beginning of my madness. I was at a loss as to what we could possibly talk about when we met. From my acting career, I realised it was easier to parrot dialogues in romantic scenes than to go on a date and tell a girl in an ordinary way the simple feelings of your heart. I knew the phases of our lives through the scripts and scenes I was challenged to embody—from a pining heart to a dying, ageing man, waiting for death. I saw it all, starring in many films in the past eight years, but in that car, thinking of my beloved, I forgot what I'd known. There would be no pretence, no acting as life itself called me for the first time in my wretched existence, to act with absolute honesty. And all I had to say was how much I loved her.

Undoubtedly, I was nervous. As I reached and saw the blue dot of beauty standing by the museum entrance—where we both agreed to meet—I was somewhat relieved to see the face of someone else—a completely different girl with a radiant face. I watched her carefully in case it was some stupid mistake on my end: lips slightly jutted out with a secret pout; sculpted cheeks and long black hair added an aura to her beauty. She even wore a blue saree and a blouse with a lace overlay, following the hints in my advertisement. She could have been the perfect girl for any man, except she wasn't the girl I sought. I turned back and drove back home without revealing myself, somewhat happy that I didn't have to express my feelings to a false person.

ESSAY

'Gayatri Sandhya' is a document of the broken dreams of our people

NASRIN JABIN

Selina Hossain is a celebrated novelist in the realm of Bangla literature. In the creative embrace of her work, all manner of deprivations, class discrimination, oppression, struggles, and achievements from the colonial era to the modern times have found a space. The subject matter of Selina Hossain's writings are multidimensional. The Language Movement, Liberation War, middle class struggle, the history as well as stories of women achieving the unachievable have not only bloomed thoroughly through her work, but have also reached a different level. Throughout an illustrious life of 76 years, her numerous works have made Bangla literature richer. She is a beacon of honesty in the pursuit of literature. She has always been vocal against all sorts of oppression and exploitation in society. The middle class lifestyle has been the central focus of her work, as has contemporary thinking, and analytical self reflection. Selina Hossain has foraged from life and nature the human struggle of establishing oneself. The necessities of time have forced her to examine Partition, the Language Movement, the mass uprising, and the Liberation War. The cultural significance of contemporary Bengali politics, social policy, and mass movement has been expressed through her novels time and again.

Selina Hossain's Gayatri Sandhya is a novel in three parts. It is a political novel about the period between 1947 and 1971. The novel was written about the history of dreams dreamt and dreams broken for a people who were vocally aware of their political rights. In 1994-95, she was awarded a scholarship from the Ford Foundation for Gayatri Sandhya, as well as the "Rabindra Memorial" award from the Indian Institute of Planning and Management. On September 27, 2019, she spoke about her perceptive feelings of Gayatri Sandhya in an event organised by Ekushey Academy Australia Inc., and captivated the audience. She was given the "Ekushey Academy Australia Honours 2019" on that day.

In Gayatri Sandhya, Selina Hossain painted on a large canvas, in minute and descriptive detail, the history of the years between 1947 and 1971. The family of Ali Ahamad had to leave their residence after Partition and settle in the Rajshahi area of modern day Bangladesh. The hearts of every member of the family bled. Where was the ever familiar, beloved land of their birth, asks the author. Hossain sheds light on how bifurcated their spiritual existence was after being forced to make a new home in Rajshahi. In Gayatri Sandhya, the writer tracks the course of history, using different characters as her guide on the path to a final conclusion. Selina Hossain once said, "I have written Gayatri Sandhya based on the socio-economic and political background of this country. In three parts, the novel starts from 1947. It ends with the context for the murder of Bangabandhu in 1975. The basic idea of this novel is the identity crisis we faced in the new nation called Pakistan after 1947. The protagonist of my novel was chased away from his country during partition simply because he was a Musalman. But then, in 1971, he was killed for being a Bangalee. The larger canvas of this novel is this socio-economic and political background, and I think this novel has various materials that will help the reader to think a bit differently."

‘TOOFANI’ NABILA

She earned immense popularity after portraying Hridi in the much-acclaimed film Aynabaji, in 2016. Masuma Rahman Nabila is now set to grace the screens after a long time, with Raihan Rafi's film Toofan. For the first time, the actress has paired up with Shakib Khan. She also shared the screen with Chanchal Chowdhury in this project, who was her debut film co-actor.

SHARMIN JOYA

Her career began with the television show Ebong Class Er Baire which earned her popularity as an anchor in 2006. She has since been seen in several television and OTT projects.

"The amount of love people poured into Aynabaji boosted my confidence. At that time, I thought I would take up more big-screen projects soon. Although I was getting offers for films, it always made me wonder if I could beat my previous performance. I even discussed with Amitabh Reza about a few of such offered projects, and he suggested that I should continue working because this is the only way to remain in the minds of the audience."

In the middle she got married in 2018. Besides anchoring, and acting in small screen projects, Nabila was away from the silver screen. During the pandemic, she became a mother. "Sometimes I feel the break was quite long, I shouldn't have been too selective! Now that I am returning with Toofan, I feel great, I am hopeful for the project."

Nabila shared that getting affiliated with the project took place very casually. "After the announcement of Toofan, there was a programme, where I was invited, and during that event, I met Rafi, and he invited me to his office. I was getting the vibe that he might talk about this project. The next day I went to his office, and I was impressed with the script, and this is how it all happened," she affirmed.

For 18 years, Nabila has been consistently hosting different programmes, and acting occasionally. When asked which persona does she prefer the most? She remarked, "I love to remain in front of the camera, be it through hosting or acting."

Anchors who turn to acting face some challenges, according to Nabila. "During the shoot, Rafi remarked that there is a common concept that anchors, being very 'prim and proper,' are not flexible enough in acting. I agreed because if I look back at my first film, I find myself stiff and I can see the persona of an anchor in that character too. However, with time, everyone improves and some notable examples prove anchors can be good actors as well!"

Working with the industry's superstar Shakib Khan, Nabila conveyed that her experience was amazing. "I never wanted to take the pressure of working with a 'megastar' or a 'superstar', because that would hamper my performance. As a co-actor, Shakib Khan is brilliant and very cooperative, and he definitely has an aura that can attract anybody. Additionally, he is quite friendly and has a great sense of humour."

Apart from releasing film in Eid, Nabila is already making preparations for the festival. "I am a very homely person, and I like to cook. I will be doing the promotions of the film, alongside spending the day with my family, and making delicious food for everyone. I hope the audience will enjoy our film this festival with their friends and family."

1-MINUTE REVIEW

THE FALL GUY

A romantic comedic approach to celebrating unsung heroes

Director David Leitch's rendezvous with the action-comedy genre of his latest release, The Fall Guy, following his famed turns with Deadpool, Atomic Blonde, and Bullet Train, is an ode to times that catered more to star power and less to narratives.

Starring Ryan Gosling and Emily Blunt, the film explores the romantic dynamics between director Jody Moreno (Blunt) and stuntman Colt Seavers (Gosling), both balancing life on and off film sets.

After a serious fall sidelines Colt for 18 months, he considers leaving his girlfriend Jody and the industry. However, when Jody's producer invites Colt to double for the renowned actor Tom Ryder (Aaron Taylor-Johnson) in Jody's directorial debut, he agrees.

Featuring actors Winston Duke, Teresa Palmer, and others, Drew Pearce's script shifts to mystery and more action when Ryder goes missing.

The film's key theme highlights the risks stunt performers take, often narrowly avoiding injury.

WHAT'S PLAYING

Welcome Home, Son

Radical Face's Welcome Home, Son was featured in a Nikon commercial that replicates a montage of sentimental and memorable videos that define people and who they are. The track was released in 2007 as part of their debut album, Ghost, which is based on the idea of houses retaining stories of what has happened in them.

Lending emotive vocals, Ben Cooper's poetic phrasing leaves the precise meaning open to interpretation, allowing listeners to find personal connections in the evocative yet ambiguous lyrics. The crescendo building to the bold piano melody in the chorus is a standout moment, filled with passion.

This sense of universality is part of the song's appeal. Welcome Home, Son is a powerful track that deftly taps into shared experiences and the longing for home.

WHAT'S ON THE GRAM

SIDHARTH MALHOTRA

With his swooning smile and gleaming eyes, Sidharth Malhotra already knows how to draw audiences' hearts. His fantastic fashion sense and naturally good looks only add more to his charm.

Recently, the Bollywood actor posted a picture on Instagram wearing an all-black ensemble paired with brow bar sunglasses.

The customised black sequined suit and loose-fitting trousers, designed for a possibly glitzy night out, make him look extra charming and have put him on our radar.

How helicopters took Dhaka's denizens to the skies

SUKANTA HALDER

AK Azad, chairman and chief executive officer of Ha-Meem Group and a member of parliament from Faridpur-3 constituency, used to visit his factories in his car once or twice a month around a year ago.

However, he now travels chartering a helicopter, enabling him to visit up to five factories in a single day.

"Due to traffic congestion and poor road conditions, I can only visit one factory a day if I travel by car. But with a helicopter, I can visit five factories a day. So, I use the helicopter more frequently now," he said.

Azad begins his journey from Dhaka at 8:30am, first visiting his factory in Kaliganj, then to a Maona factory, followed by a factory in Mirzapur. Afterwards, he travels to Ashulia, and finally to a factory in Tongi.

The entrepreneur started his business in 1984 with a small factory in Dhaka's Motijheel, equipped with 57 machines, after graduating from the University of Dhaka.

Now, Ha-Meem Group, one of the top textile and garment manufacturers in Bangladesh, has 39 business concerns in various sectors, mainly textile, garment, media and tea.

Azad said the head office staff often undermine those who work at the factory level, creating a gap between the two. He believes that factory visits allow for quick problem-solving.

"Sometimes there are issues in maintenance and production, and by visiting the factory, I can easily identify the problem and solve it," he said.

"Many times, I can make immediate decisions to solve basic problems at the factory level," he said.

Industry insiders say that investors and businesspeople from different countries who come to do business in Bangladesh often have to deal with traffic congestion.

Due to this, many exporters are now choosing helicopters as a means of transportation out of Dhaka.

Businesspeople are now regularly using helicopters to visit factories in cities such as Rangpur, Rajshahi, Chattogram and Sylhet, which are far from Dhaka, as well as in Narayanganj, Gazipur, Tongi, or Mymensingh, which are near Dhaka.

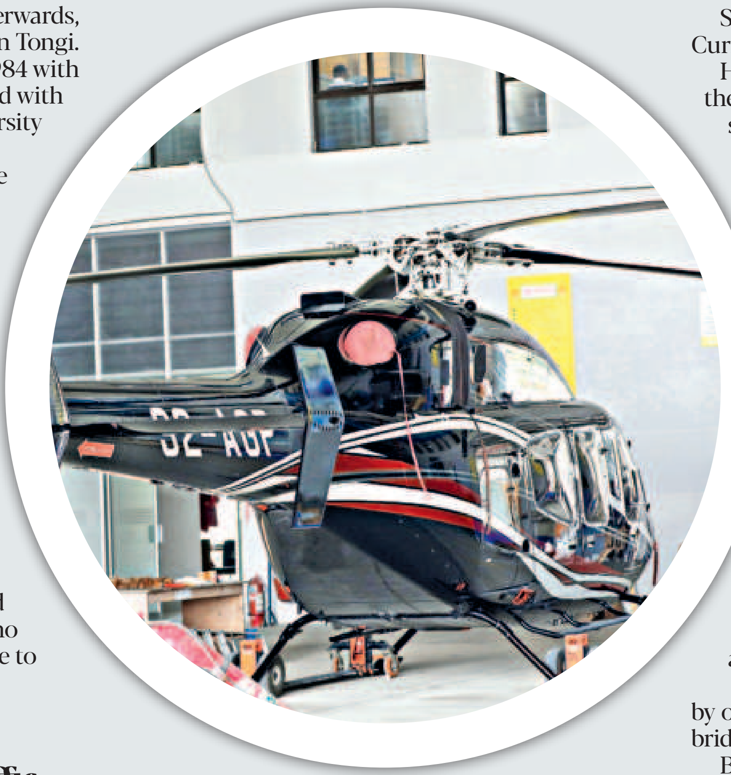
Many local businesses are availing these services from companies offering transportation through helicopters in the country.

Apart from this, many expatriates use helicopters to travel from Dhaka to their homes around the country, some for weddings, while others use them for pleasure trips.

Additionally, helicopters are rented out to political leaders for visits to different areas. Due to these reasons, the demand for travelling by helicopter in the country is increasing.

In 1999, South Asian Airlines launched the first commercial helicopter service in the country.

Due to increased demand, over 10 companies now have 36 helicopters, with most engaged in the private helicopter rental business employing about 400 people.



The companies are South Asian Airlines, Meghna Aviation, Beximco Aviation, Impress Aviation, Square Air, R&R Aviation, Bangla International Airlines, BCL Aviation, Bashundhara Airways and BRB Air.

Retired air force officers mainly work as helicopter pilots, according to the industry people.

According to the helicopter service providers, it costs Tk 70,000 to Tk 2.5 lakh per hour to fly by helicopter to anywhere in the country, with an additional 30 percent supplementary duty and a 15 percent value added tax.

Meghna Aviation, an enterprise of the Meghna Group of Industries, was established in 2011 and commenced its operations in 2012 to transport its customers to Meghna's manufacturing hubs.

Later, the company decided to expand the service by introducing modern helicopters for emergency services like emergency medical evacuation flights and chartered air transportation from remote areas in Bangladesh.

They have a total of six helicopters, including a brand-new double-engine Bell-429, a single-engine Bell-407GX, and Robinson-66 helicopters. Their investment is Tk 200 crore.

Md Monjur Alam, manager for Operation and Customer Service at Meghna Aviation, said when their company opened, it operated 20 to 24 flights a month. It has now increased to 70 to 80 flights a month.

He said garment company owners mostly use their service to transport foreign buyers to factories while many political figures also book helicopter rides.

Apart from this, many people hire helicopters for various urgent needs. It costs Tk 70,000 to Tk 2.30 lakh per hour to fly by helicopter to anywhere in the country, he said.

South Asian Airlines was formed in 1999. Currently, they have a total of nine helicopters.

Humayun Nasir, head of Flight Operations of the company, said various corporate groups avail services from them.

When their company opened, it operated 1 to 2 flights a month and there were no flights in some months. Now on an average, they operate 7 to 8 flights a day, he added.

Probashir Helicopter, a concern of Probash Time, registered with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies and Firms in 2023.

Rony Reja, chairman of Probashir Helicopter, said they are currently operating flights with three helicopters on lease, with expats being the main customers and preferring their service most of the time.

When he started the business, he operated 8 to 10 flights a month. Now it has increased to 50.

It costs Tk 70,000 to Tk 2.80 lakh per hour to fly by helicopter to anywhere in the country, according to Reja.

"We are getting great response from customers by offering various trips like Dhaka city tour, Padma bridge tour and marriage trip," he said.

Beximco Aviation started its journey in 2022 to provide air transport support to Beximco Group, obtaining an air operator certificate on December 1, 2022 from the Civil Aviation Authority of Bangladesh with an R-66 and a Bell-430 helicopter.

Gulger Hossain, chief executive officer of Beximco Aviation, said their two helicopters are used only for their own needs. One helicopter is always engaged every working day.

Three to five flights are operated through it for visits to their industrial sites by top management and foreign buyers, he said.

On the other hand, some companies have been forced to shutter their helicopter businesses as they could not keep up with the high cost of operation, according to industry people.

In 2000, Aero Technologies launched helicopter services commercially but shut down in 2008 after failing to attract customers.

In addition, Best Air started to offer helicopter services in 2002 and stopped a few months later. Nitol Aviation Service, a subsidiary of Nitol Group, has also been launched but currently it is inactive.

Meanwhile, Partex Aviation stopped their operations prior to the pandemic.

Demand for air ambulances on the rise

SUKANTA HALDER

The demand for air ambulances has grown steadily in Bangladesh in recent years due to rising affordability and entry of a number of operators.

Service providers have observed an increase in the use of helicopters to carry patients from far-flung districts such as Dinajpur, Cox's Bazar and Rangpur to Dhaka.

Before the latest spike, these areas used to see one or two flights per month. Now it has gone up to six or seven.

Helicopters began to be used to carry patients after chopper services were introduced in Bangladesh around the turn of the millennium, with demand slowly starting to increase from 2002 onwards.

Currently, six local companies provide domestic helicopter services, namely Meghna Aviation, Impress Aviation, Square Air, R&R Aviation, Bangla International Airlines Ltd (BIAL), and South Asian Airlines.

A customer has to pay Tk 1 lakh for a flight to the capital from nearby areas such as Faridpur. For flights to Dhaka from Dinajpur, Cox's Bazar or Rangpur, the fare can be as high as Tk 3.5 lakh.

Sometimes, the fare even surges to Tk 5 lakh as service providers can charge as they please, allege passengers.

> Service providers have observed an increase in the use of helicopters to carry patients from far-flung districts such as Dinajpur, Cox's Bazar and Rangpur to Dhaka.

Monjur Alam, manager of operations and customer service at Meghna Aviation, said there were two or three medical flights per month in 2018 but the number has now grown to 15 to 20.

An enterprise of the Meghna Group of Industries, the company initially purchased helicopters for its own commercial use.

It began renting them out in 2016 to recover costs. It has been offering air ambulance services since 2018 and has invested Tk 145 crore.

It has three helicopters specifically to provide air ambulance service.

Additionally, Meghna Aviation also has a modern ground ambulance equipped with all necessary life-saving equipment to provide medical services to patients, according to Alam.

The ambulance is staffed by two trained and licensed paramedics. The company also employs two medical professionals who have evacuated more than 500 patients over the past five years.

Impress Aviation, which was set up in 2013, provides services to the patients using a solitary helicopter, which is busy almost every day.

It currently operates 22 to 25 flights per month, 70 percent of which are for medical purposes, an official said.

It has invested around Tk 30 crore and employs 30 people, the official added.

Bangla International Airlines, a partnership between Union Group and PHP Family, offers charter helicopter services with two helicopters.

Shafiqul Alam, director for flight operations, said the company began operations in 2013 to meet its internal demand.

It later introduced the air ambulance service to offset costs.

Initially, it operated two to three flights for medical purposes per month, but now it has gone up to five or six, he said.

After the opening of the Padma Bridge in June 2022, the demand for air ambulances in districts adjacent to Dhaka has fallen as travel times to the capital have declined drastically.

"It is hurting the business," he said.

Another factor that may affect business are allegations from users that companies sometimes overcharge.

Mohammad Shariful Islam, a businessman in Thakurgaon sadar upazila, said people turn to air ambulances during emergencies.

But although they expect such services to be costly, service providers are charging fares without following any rules and, in some cases, preying on desperation, he claimed.

He recalled that when his wife became seriously ill due to heart and kidney diseases in January 2023, she was taken to a hospital in the northern district. Her condition worsened and the doctor advised them to admit her to a hospital in Dhaka immediately.

Frantically, Islam began searching for an air ambulance. He contacted a company, who quoted the fare at Tk 2.25 lakh, according to Islam.

He agreed and the helicopter was supposed to come the next morning to take the patient to Dhaka. The helicopter arrived, albeit later than expected, turning up at 2:00pm.

But at the last moment, company officials said the fare would not be less than Tk 5 lakh due to bad weather and other complications.

"I was forced to hire an air ambulance for Tk 5 lakh," Islam lamented.

So, the government should pay attention to fare-related issues, he added.

While data on the market size of the air ambulance business in Bangladesh is not readily available, industry insiders estimate that 10 companies operate around 36 helicopters.

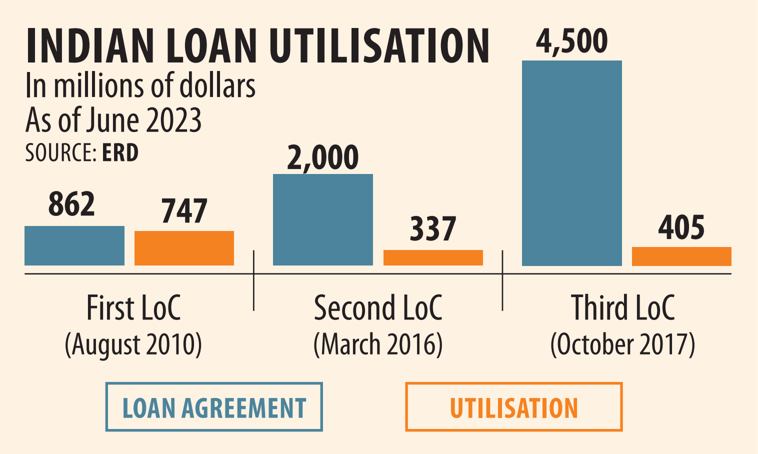
PM'S INDIA VISIT

Dhaka eyes fresh loans from Delhi

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

India may offer Bangladesh fresh loans under a new framework, as implementation of the projects under the existing loan programme is proving difficult due to some strict loan conditions.



The issue will be discussed during Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's official visit to India next week, a top finance ministry official said yesterday.

Hasina and her Indian counterpart Narendra Modi will have a one-on-one meeting followed by delegation-level talks on June 22 at the Hyderabad House, a state guest house, in New Delhi.

However, signing of any new loan agreement is unlikely during Hasina's visit, although an announcement to this effect may come in a joint communique, the official added requesting anonymity citing diplomatic confidentiality.

Over the last few months, Dhaka and New Delhi have been discussing a new loan framework and its amount and conditionalities, official sources say.

The discussion comes as Bangladesh faces challenges to utilise the existing conditional loans from India.

Since 2010, India committed $7.36 billion in loan to Bangladesh. Of this, Bangladesh has been able to utilise only $1.73 billion, or 23 percent of the commitment, till April this year.

The conditions of the existing Indian Line of Credit (LoC) are very strict. For example, around 65-75 percent of goods or services for each project must be procured from India, causing delay in project implementation, according to officials.

Appointment of Indian contractors along with bureaucratic red-tape on both sides also limits the project's progress.

Though Bangladesh signs project-based loan agreements with other development partners, in case of India, credit deals have been inked for a cluster of programmes under a framework.

This means, once a loan deal is signed, implementation period of all projects under that deal gets started. Also, as per the loan conditions, the Major shakeup in BNP, 'seniors kept in dark'

Tarique moves to take 'full control' of the party; 39 leaders given new positions

MOHAMMAD AL-MASUM MOLLA

BNP reshuffled its central executive committee yesterday, a day after dissolving some city units over their failure to make the anti-government movement a success.

A total of 39 party leaders got new positions.

This sudden reshuffle has caused commotion within the party as acting chairman Tarique Rahman is restructuring the committees, keeping the senior leaders in the dark, BNP insiders said.

They said the issue was not discussed at the meetings of the standing committee, the party's highest policymaking body.

According to the party charter, the acting chairperson will discharge all the duties of the chairperson in the absence of the latter.

And Tarique is now invoking that provision, said party sources.

The BNP charter gives the chairperson the authority to scrap any committee anytime, and the decision would be approved at the subsequent council.

The reshuffle brought younger leaders to important positions, while those with strong organisational abilities have been made advisers to the chairperson, BNP insiders said.

Some leaders who were selected for advisory roles believe they were assigned these positions as a form of punishment.

Apart from the executive body, BNP's

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday said a vested quarter is still hatching conspiracies against the government to isolate it from the people.

Recalling the artificial famine in 1974, Hasina said Bangladesh had a bitter experience that year when

EID JOURNEY HOME

Tens of thousands left Dhaka to celebrate Eid-ul-Azha with their families, with those heading north complaining of a dearth of transport, overcharging by bus operators and long tailbacks.

However, those who were headed to the eastern, northeastern and southern parts of the country had a relatively hassle-free journey as no traffic congestion was reported from major highways linked to those areas.

Bus passengers yesterday said they had to pay Tk 100 to Tk 400 above the fare set by the government.

For instance, the bus fare from Dhaka to Dinajpur is usually Tk 800. But Sarower Hossain had to pay Tk 1,100 yesterday for a ticket on the Shah Fateh Ali Paribahan from Mohakhali bus terminal.

"When I asked why the price was higher, the bus staffer did not answer," Sarower said.

Similar scenes were seen at Sayedabad and Gabtoli bus terminals.

Mujibar Rahman shelled out Tk 1,000 to buy a ticket of Meghna Travels to go to Betagi of Barguna -- Tk 350 more than normal. "I have no choice but to purchase this ticket as I have to go home for Eid," he said.

When the correspondent asked Mohammad Mintu, a staff of Meghna Travel at Sayedabad Bus Terminal, about overcharging, he said: "The bus will return to Dhaka empty, so we have to factor this in. That's why the extra fare is being charged."

Similarly, Rashed Rahman, a

India's authorities have sanctioned the prosecution of award-winning author-activist Arundhati Roy and former professor at the Central University of Kashmir Showkat Hossain under a stringent anti-terror law for allegedly making provocative speeches at an event in New Delhi in 2010.

The sanction to try Roy, the author best known for her novel "The God of Small Things" which won the Booker Prize in 1997, and Hossain under Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act (UAPA) was granted by Delhi's Lt Governor Vinai Kumar Saxena on Friday, officials in his office said.

Last October, Saxena had granted sanction to prosecute Roy and Hossain in the same case under section 196 of CrPC for commission of offences punishable under a milder law of Indian Penal Code:

Civic duties during Eid-ul-Azha

RBR

The sacrifice of animals on the occasion of Eid-ul-Azha commemorates a sacrifice, which symbolises utmost loyalty and complete submission to the Almighty -- this is the first part of the Eid rituals.

The second is to remember the important principle in Islam that "cleanliness is half of faith". However, the aftermath of Eid-ul-Azha is a messy affair.

I am afraid this is the truth.

This is an act which defies Islamic doctrines on cleanliness. These religious teachings benefit both society and us. It is up to Muslims to be aware of this guidance and learn and apply it anywhere and everywhere. Let us for once keep our environment clean and maintain proper hygiene.

For reasons only known to Dhakaites, they forget their civic sense. Our lack of civic sense baffles me hence my laments. The importance of a prompt clean-up after slaughtering animals is something we should not forget.

There is also an unspoken race to flaunt affluence. The street in front of luxury apartments becomes personal cattle grounds, where a minimum of 10 bulls are stationed. One can imagine the powerful stench of manure and urine produced.

Come Eid day, they are laid down on the very same street for the slaughter; the untidy, chaotic mess we tend to make on the open streets is beyond comprehension.

Patuatuli in Old Dhaka

Kudos to our mayors and city corporations that for the last few years they undertook prompt action to clean up after the rituals were completed. The city corporations have taken elaborate measures to make the city clean within hours of the slaughter. We do have slaughterhouses but they are ill-equipped to handle the Eid pressure and thus citizens take up the streets as their own.

The deployment of thousands of sanitation workers, along with the distribution of eco-friendly biodegradable polythene bags, bleaching powder, jute bags, and disinfectants show their commitment to maintaining cleanliness. Requisitions have been made for extra dump trucks, water tanks, and garbage trucks.

However, we as citizens must cooperate and dispose of our qurbani waste responsibly. It is also up to us to clean up the streets, garages, staircases and lifts with cleaning agents.

Eid-ul-Azha is very important if you consider the economic side of it. The cattle farms, and villagers target this festival while rearing the cows and goats. Cattle rearing is an expensive affair. I know a person working as a driver in this city, who takes cattle rearing as a side business. He buys cattle and lets his father at the village take care of it. Young green grass with grass hay, straw, silage, compressed and pelleted feeds, oils and mixed rations, and sprouted grains and legumes are fed to the animals. These villagers and farmers are struggling yet they target this festival to cover the cost.

Then this is the time when tanneries get to buy, in bulk, precious cowhide in the natural, unbleached form. There are other economic implications and business turnovers of this festival that cannot be ignored.

So, do not litter your streets and garages; treat your cattle well and help the business in one of the biggest Muslim festivals of the year.

Lightning strikes claim four lives

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Rangamati

At least four people were killed in separate lightning strike incidents in Rangamati's Langadu upazila yesterday.

The deceased are Rina Begum, 35, Bacchu Miah, 30, Ziaul Haque Shamshu, 40, and Obaidul, 30, confirmed Harun-or-Rashid, officer-in-charge of Langadu Police Station.

Locals said Bacchu, Ziaul, and Obaidul died on the spot after a lightning bolt struck their boat on the Kaptai Lake. They were travelling to Minabazar from Mainimukh Bazar around 5:00pm. They were residents of Bhasanaydam area.

Meanwhile, Akkas, who was also on the same boat, fell into the water and went missing during the lightning strike incident.

Earlier in the afternoon, Rina, wife of Atarakchara UP Chairman Tilar Ibrahim, died after a thunderbolt struck her in the yard of her house in Karalyachhari village, confirmed Atarakchara UP Secretary Al-Amin.

5 cops suspended over extortion allegations

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Five policemen from Narayanganj were suspended yesterday after a report broadcasted on a private TV channel accused them of extorting money from trucks transporting sacrificial animals for Eid.

They are Sub-Inspector Sheikh Nazrul Islam of Rupganj Police Station; and SI Md Asaduzzaman, and Constables Nazir Sheikh, Jugal Mondal, and Tanvir Hossain Akash of Narayanganj Police Lines.

In a press release, Enamul Haque Sagor, assistant inspector general (media) of police headquarters, said IGP Chowdhury Abdullah Al-Mamun reiterated that no members of the Bangladesh Police would be spared if found involved in criminal activities. The force maintains a policy of "zero tolerance" towards such misconduct.

A probe committee has been formed, led by Narayanganj district's additional police superintendent (crime), to investigate the matter. The committee will recommend departmental actions based on its findings.

The statement said stringent measures would be taken if allegations of bribery at livestock markets during Eid or any form of harassment were found to be true.

Immediate actions will be taken against wrongdoers, it added.

international affairs committee has also been restructured. Party sources said the move was made because of the previous committee's failure to maintain close ties with the western countries, China and India.

BNP standing committee member Abdul Moyeen Khan has been made the chief of the committee to strengthen the relationship with those nations.

Soon after the January 7 national election, Tarique started working on restructuring the party's executive committee. There will be significant changes in the full committee in phases, with the introduction of new members, said a BNP leader familiar with the issue.

"Young leaders loyal to Tarique Rahman will be given important positions," said a senior BNP leader wishing not to be named.

A number of mid-ranking influential BNP leaders said Tarique is in fact building his own circle by restructuring the committees to establish his absolute control over the party.

"He is doing this to make sure nobody challenges his decisions in future," said a BNP leader.

Many committees have already expired since the party held its last national council in 2017.

The BNP constitution stipulates that a council should be held every three years. However, restructuring of its committees are being announced through press releases.

"The issue of reorganising was discussed at the party forum, but we were not informed when and how it would happen," a senior leader told The Daily Star yesterday wishing anonymity.

Goyeshwar Chandra Roy, a standing committee member, said the decision on revamping the party was made earlier and is now being put into action.

On Thursday night, BNP dissolved the convening committees of its Dhaka south and north city units. It also announced dissolution of the convening committees of its Chattogram and Barishal city units.

The central committee of Jatiyatabadi Jubo Dal, led by President Sultan Salahuddin Tuku and General Secretary Abdul Monayem Munna, has also been dissolved.

Some BNP leaders, including Zahir Uddin Swapan, Mahbub Uddin Khokon, Mujibur Rahman Sarwar, Syed Moazzem Hossain Alal, and Ruhul Quddus Talukder Dulu, have been made adviser to the party chairperson.

Some party leaders said Swapan, Khokon, Sarwar and Alal have been punished through these appointments.

Syed Emran Saleh Prince and Shahiduddin Chowdhury Annie have been promoted to joint secretaries general from organising secretaries.

Meanwhile, Jatiyatabadi Chhatra Dal, BNP's student front, announced its full-fledged 260-member committee yesterday, about three and a half months after the formation of its partial committee.

Rakibul Islam Rakib and Nasir Uddin Nasir have been made president and general secretary of the new committee respectively.

As many as 41 leaders have been given the posts of vice president, one has been made senior joint general secretary, and 111 have been named as joint general secretaries.

private service provider, had to pay Tk 490 more for his ticket to Bogura on a Rozina Enterprise bus.

When the correspondent asked Kausar Hossain, a staff of the Rozina Enterprise counter at Gabtoli bus terminal, about the higher fare than the previous day, he said: "It's Eid time. So, we have no other option."

Despite paying higher fares, the journey home was not smooth and swift for northbound passengers by road.

In the early hours of yesterday, the Dhaka-Tangail—Rangpur Highway witnessed a 13-kilometre-long tailback due to the increased number of northbound vehicles and suspension of toll collection on the Bangabandhu bridge multiple times since Friday night.

The toll collection had to be stopped several times as several vehicles broke down on the bridge, said Ahsanul Kabir Pavel, executive engineer of the site office of Bangabandhu Bridge.

At 9:00am, there was a seven-km-long tailback on the Dhaka-Tangail—Rangpur Highway, Sajedur Rahman, the in-charge of Elenga Highway Police, told our Tangail correspondent.

"This is very normal during Eid rush," he added.

However, the traffic situation on the highway improved afterwards, with no tailback observed as of 6:00pm yesterday.

The Dhaka-Nabinagar-Chandra Road that connects with the Dhaka-Tangail-Rangpur Highway at Chandra intersection had gridlock from 4:00pm yesterday after the closure of garments factories in the area, reported our Gazipur correspondent.

The huge number of vehicles caused traffic congestion in Nabinagar, Baipail and Ashulia areas, Ayub Ali, the officer in charge of Savar Highway Police Station, told our Savar Correspondent at 7:00pm.

Many people were seen desperately looking for vehicles as the number of passengers outnumbered the vehicles in the areas.

The traffic congestion on the Dhaka-Tangail-Rangpur Highway held up the buses, said Subhankar Ghosh Rakesh, joint secretary of the Bangladesh Bus Truck Owners Association.

"So, the bus schedule was delayed by two to three hours on the route," he told The Daily Star yesterday.

However, no major traffic congestion was reported from the Dhaka-Mawa-Bhanga Expressway, Dhaka-Chattogram and Dhaka-Sylhet Highways, he said.

Those who caught the train, however, had a smoother journey home as almost all trains left the capital on time.

"Eid rush via railway reached its peak today. More people are coming to the station in the evening and it would be a big challenge for us to maintain a schedule at night," Shah Alam Kiron Shishir, divisional commercial officer (Dhaka division) of Bangladesh Railway, told The Daily Star at 6:30pm yesterday.

Over at the Sadarghat launch terminal, a huge crowd was seen in the evening after the garment factories broke for Eid yesterday afternoon.

As of 7:00 pm, 80 launches left the terminal.

Meanwhile, the mobile courts of Bangladesh Inland Water Transport Authority fined six launches a total of Tk 27,000 for various violations, including the absence of railings on stairs, illegal anchoring and overloading of passengers.

Among them, five launches were fined Tk 16,000 for lacking railings on stairs and Tk 1,000 for illegal anchoring at the capital's Sadarghat.

Additionally, one launch was fined Tk 10,000 for passenger overloading at Chandpur's Maju Chowdhury Hat launch terminal.

Eid will be celebrated on Monday in Bangladesh.

was investigating him, his wife and two daughters.

He did not mention which country he is currently in.

Benazir wrote to Bakhtiar Ahmed Khan, member (administration) of the club, saying, "Please be advised that I'm now out of the country along with my family for some urgent family needs. This incapacitates me to run the day-to-day business of the club which may prolonged [sic] for an indefinite period."

He requested Rubel Aziz, an adviser to the club, to be the acting president "until my return and resumption of the duties of the club president".

When contacted by this correspondent, Bakhtiar said, "Benazir Ahmed emailed me. He has asked Rubel Aziz to perform the duties of the [club's] president as he is staying outside the country."

The development was also confirmed by Prof Nizamul Haque Bhuiyan, an executive committee member of the club. The Daily Star has a copy of the letter.

Rubel, the person Benazir recommended to be the acting president, is a former president of the club. He is also the managing director of Partex Group.

The ACC on April 18 launched an investigation into allegations that Benazir and his family members amassed huge wealth through corruption.

Citing immigration police sources, The Daily Star earlier reported that Benazir and his family members flew to Singapore on May 4 night on a flight of Singapore Airlines.

The government authorities, including several ministers, had said they did not know about Benazir's whereabouts.

food grains purchased with cash were blocked from entering the country.

"An artificial famine was created at that time to isolate Father of the Nation Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman from the people. When they failed to do so, they made the August 15, 1975 incident to occur," she said.

The PM's comments came at a programme marking the inauguration of the three-month tree plantation programme of Bangladesh Krishak League at the Gono Bhaban.

Hasina, who is also the president of Awami League, said her party has been carrying out tree plantation programmes since 1985 following the footsteps of Bangabandhu to save Bangladesh from the adverse impacts of climate change.

She said BNP founder Ziaur Rahman had cut trees in the name of so-called development and his wife did the same thing in the name of anti-government movement in 2013.

She went on to urge the people to make a "Green Bangladesh" by planting trees in large numbers.

The premier reiterated her call for the people to grow more food by bringing every inch of land under cultivation.

She said her government had been able to acquire self-sufficiency in food production after assuming power in 1996.

"We have achieved success in food production due to extensive research in this sector."

Stressing the need for planned industrialisation, she said her government is building 100 economic zones across the country to protect arable land from unplanned industrialisation.

The PM said the government wants to bring irrigation completely under the solar power system.

"Initially, it might require some investment. But it would cut the overall cost in the long run."

At the function, the premier awarded several Krishak League leaders for their contribution to pursuing the nationwide tree plantation campaign.

Hasina planted three saplings at the Gono Bhaban on the occasion of the programme.

She said she has planted over 2,000 trees at the Gono Bhaban since assuming power.

Krishak League President Samir Chanda and acting general secretary Bishwanath Sarker Bitu also spoke at the programme.

This year, Krishak League has set a target of planting 52 lakh saplings across the country during its three-month programme.

Dhaka eyes fresh loans loan repayment period for all projects under the deal starts on the day the first tranche of the loan for a single project is released, according to official sources.

"It makes things difficult for Bangladesh," said one of the finance ministry officials.

Under the new framework, India will give an overall loan commitment and the two sides will sign project-based loan deals. It is expected to solve the problems around the loan repayment.

China has promised Bangladesh a $20 billion loan, but all the loan deals signed so far are project-based.

Finance ministry officials said that other conditions of the Indian loan will also be relaxed to make project implementation easier.

The existing interest rate of the Indian loan is 1 percent and the repayment period is 15 years, including five years of grace period.

The first Indian LoC of $862 million for 15 projects was signed in 2010 while the second loan agreement was signed in 2016 for $2 billion for 12 projects. The third credit deal was signed for $4.5 billion for a cluster of 15 projects.

There are 42 projects under the three LoCs. Of that, 14 projects have been completed involving $410 million or around 6 percent of the overall commitment in the first two credit deals. As per the deal, all project-related materials were procured from India.

The rest of the projects are construction-related, so they are taking time. Many projects have yet to start.

Eight construction projects worth around $2.73 billion are underway. Three projects have started the process of hiring consultants while seven projects are looking for contractors.

The delay has already pushed up the project cost. Many projects under the existing LoCs that are not in implementation phase will be transferred to the new framework, officials said.

Cattle prices STILL HIGH

HELEMUL ALAM and SHAHEEN MOLLAH

Though the price of sacrificial animals has dropped slightly due to a lack of customers, it remains high compared to the same time last year.

With only a day left before Eid-ul-Azha, the number of buyers was still low, despite a large supply of bulls.

High inflationary pressure on the middle- and lower-middle classes is believed to be behind the poor turnout at different cattle markets in Dhaka.

In the fiscal year 2022-2023, the average inflation rate was 9.02 percent. However, many traders remain hopeful for a surge in customers on Saturday night and Sunday, the last days before Eid-ul-Azha.

"I have purchased a bull for Tk 92,000, which is still high as sellers are not willing to reduce the price," said Nafiur Rahman Asif, a resident of Wari.

Md Sakib Hossain, a resident of Malibagh, said, "I bought three bulls for Tk 9.5 lakh, which is high compared to last year."

Traders are unhappy as they were forced to reduce prices because of less customers. They said cost of rearing cattle was significantly high due to soaring fodder costs.

"I have already faced losses by selling six of my 28 big bulls as I am not getting satisfactory customers," said Abul Kashem Sheikh, who came to Kamalapur cattle market from Natore.

Rashid Mollah, a trader at Gabtoli who brought 24 bulls from Manikganj, said he sold six of his bulls for between Tk 1 lakh and 1.50 lakh, facing some loss.

"I am sensing more loss on the last day if I do not sell, so I have started selling without thinking about the profit," he told this correspondent.

Many residents are not sacrificing bulls this year. Ruhul Amin, a private job holder in Ibrahimpur, purchased beef from a meat trader instead.

"I will not sacrifice animals this year as the Tk 30,000 bonus I received is not enough due to the increase in my daily expenses," Ruhul Amin said.

Amzad Hossain, another trader at Gabtoli who brought two camels and five dumbas (sheeps) from Pakistan, managed to sell one camel for Tk 23 lakh and two dumbas for Tk 2 lakh each.

"I am asking Tk 26 lakh for each camel. I have two dumbas priced at Tk 2 lakh each, along with a big one for Tk 4 lakh," he said.

He also claimed to have spent Tk 30 lakh to bring the animals from Pakistan by aeroplane.

Meanwhile at Gabtoli cattle market, a bull weighing 38 maunds was priced at Tk 16 lakh.

"There is an expenditure of Tk 7 lakh, and I am considering selling it with a minimum profit due to poor customer turnout," said the owner.

ANIMAL WASTE

Cities plan quick disposal

STAR REPORT

The authorities of Chattogram, Rangpur, Mymensingh, Sylhet and Khulna city corporations are gearing up for prompt disposal of all wastes from sacrificial animals on Eid-ul-Azha.

The Eid-ul-Azha will be observed across the country on Monday.

CHATTOGRAM

The Chattogram City Corporation will deploy 4,500 conservancy workers and 322 vehicles to clean up a total of around 5,000 tonnes of wastes from 8:00am to 5:00pm on Eid day from six city zones, each led by a ward councillor, said Mobarak Hossain, chairman of CCC's Standing Committee on Waste Management.

A central monitoring cell led by CCC mayor Rezaul Karim Chowdhury has been formed to this end.

CCC panel mayor Gias Uddin said 20 tonnes of bleaching powder and 55,000 polythene bags have been allocated to 41 wards of CCC for distribution among people.

RANGPUR

Rangpur City Corporation has planned to clean sacrificial animal wastes within 12 hours.

A total of 66 slaughtering spots have been designated to the 33 wards under three zones of RCC, said mayor Mostafizar Rahman Mostafa.

Also, 42 waste-carrying trucks and 550 workers will be engaged in removal of wastes.

MYMENSINGH

In Mymensingh, 650 conservancy workers, 24 dump trucks and seven water vehicles will be engaged in cleaning wastes from a total 508 designated slaughtering spots in 33 wards from 2:00pm.

Residents have been distributed eco-friendly biodegradable bags, bleaching powder and disinfectants for cleaning wastes from the spots, said Mohabbat Ali, conservation inspector of MCC.

Their plan is to remove wastes within 12 hours, he added.

'Why fix prices if you can't enforce it'

Decry customers as govt fails to curb rising cost of essentials

SAJJAD HOSSAIN

FOOD PRODUCTS	FIXED PRICE (TK)	MARKET PRICE (TK)
Chili pepper	60.2	150
Garlic	120.8	220
Ginger	180.2	300
Cabbage	28.3	40
Onion	65.4	80
Beef	664.39	780
Potato	29	60

The government efforts to control rising commodity prices by setting fixed rates are failing, as essential items are being sold at much higher prices in Dhaka's major kitchen markets.

Despite the Department of Agriculture Marketing (DAM) setting fair prices for 29 products on March 15, consumers are still paying exorbitant prices for daily essentials. With Eid-ul-Azha approaching, prices have soared further.

During recent visits to Karwan Bazar, Kathalbagan, and Malibagh markets, traders were found openly flouting government-mandated rates.

Take the case of potato for example. Although the production cost of this vegetable is Tk 14 per kg and the retail price set by the government is Tk 29 per kg, potatoes were selling for Tk 60 per kg at Karwan Bazar.

Hamidul Islam, a private employee, managed to bargain the price down to Tk 55 per kg but still paid almost double the fixed price.

"Four days ago, I purchased potatoes at Tk 48-49 per kg. Prices have only soared since," Hamidul said.

Traders blamed higher wholesale costs and lack of supply. They said selling at government fixed rates would incur losses.

The price disparities are even more noticeable for other essential items.

Local garlic is being sold at Tk 220 per kg, 82.2 percent higher than the fixed rate of Tk 120.80. Ginger sells for Tk 300 per kg instead of Tk 180.20 (66.5 percent increase), chilli for Tk 150 against Tk 60.20 (149.2 percent increase), and cabbage for Tk 40 compared to Tk 28.30 (41.3 percent increase).

Other items like beef, lentil, chicken, and onions have also witnessed double-digit price hikes.

Although the government fixed the production cost of beef at Tk 588 per kg with a Tk 664 retail ceiling, it sells for Tk 780 at Karwan Bazar, nearly 18 percent higher.

"It's been three months since they fixed rates, but we see no intent to actually implement the directives on the ground," rued Shanaj Begum, a homemaker. "If they won't enforce the prices, why fix them at all? We are ultimately suffering for their failure and indecision."

Ghulam Rahman, president of the Consumers Association of Bangladesh, criticised the government's strategy, saying, "Commodity prices depend on market dynamics like production costs and the demand-supply chain. Fixed rates alone cannot control these unless by effective monitoring."

Masud Karim, director general of DAM, said, "Our directives are not fully implemented on the ground. Sellers don't follow them. We try to ensure they don't collect excess profits. We don't want to destabilise markets by any unwarranted intervention."

Customers feel the heat as spice prices spike

SAJJAD HOSSAIN

With consumers already feeling the pinch from soaring spice prices, the costs of many items have gone up further just before Eid-ul-Azha.

Over the past week, the price of coriander has surged from Tk 100 to Tk 360 per kilogramme at the capital's Karwan Bazar wholesale market.

Last year, coriander was sold at Tk 160 per kg ahead of Eid-ul-Azha, according to the Trading Corporation of Bangladesh.

The price of cardamom, a must have item for cooking meat during the festival, has shot up to Tk 4,000 from Tk 3,800 per kilogramme.

The price of cinnamon has increased by 1.70 percent to an average of Tk 600 per kilo while

Rise in 'extreme rainfall' behind flash floods in Sylhet

Study points to climate change

DWOHA CHOWDHURY

A recent research paper has identified single-day extreme rainfall events as the primary cause of recurring flash floods and waterlogging in the Sylhet region. The study found that climate change has significantly increased the frequency of these heavy monsoon rains in Bangladesh and northeast India.

Officials from the Bangladesh Meteorological Department and Bangladesh Water Development Board have observed this pattern in recent years. For example, on June 17, 2022, a flash flood submerged almost all of Sylhet and Sunamganj districts, triggered by a record rainfall in Cherrapunji, India, which is located just uphill from Sylhet.

On May 29, 634mm of rain in Cherrapunji caused another flash flood, submerging five upazilas in Sylhet the next day. More recently, a flash flood was triggered on Friday after 349mm of rain fell in Cherrapunji over 24 hours.

In Sylhet city, two recent waterlogging incidents were caused by extreme rainfall over a short period. On June 9, 220mm of rain fell within three hours, causing severe waterlogging. On June 13, 186mm of rainfall in six hours submerged many parts of the city.

The research, conducted by scientists from NASA Goddard Space Flight Centre, North Carolina State University, the Indian Institute of Tropical Meteorology, and Jahangirnagar University, was published in the Journal of the Royal Meteorological Society in February.

The study analysed extreme rainfall events, defined as 150mm or more in a day, from 1950 to 2021.

It found that while overall monsoon rainfall is decreasing, single-day extreme rainfall is increasing. These extreme rain events have become four times more common due to climate change.

Dipak Ranjan Das, executive engineer of BWDB in Sylhet, said, "Single-day extreme rainfall in Meghalaya, located right uphill from the region, is responsible for the recurring flash flood situation. The river system here cannot handle that much water in a short period."

A flood hazard mapping of the Surma River basin in Sylhet city by researchers from Shahjalal University of Science and Technology calculated the maximum peak discharge through the Surma river at Sylhet city as 321.35 cubic metres per second, indicating the river's limited capacity to manage excessive rainwater.

Prof AKM Saiful Islam of the Institute of Water and Flood Management at Bangladesh University of Engineering Technology said, "Haors (wetlands) and rivers are crucial for holding and discharging rainwater from upstream. However, ongoing development projects like road construction are disrupting these haors, prolonging the flood situation."

"Waterbodies and canals in city areas are being filled up, causing waterlogging due to excessive rainfall. Hillock cutting and tree felling are major reasons behind the filled-up waterbodies and canals," he added.

"As single-day rainfall events are increasing, we must act now to protect waterbodies. Otherwise, we will suffer more intensely in the future," he warned.

DNC seizes 7,250 yaba tablets from courier service

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Department of Narcotics Control (DNC) yesterday seized 7,250 yaba tablets from a courier service office in Dhaka's Kakrail.

DNC officials discovered the pills inside a parcel around 2:15pm, said DNC Assistant Director (Dhaka Metro-North) Rahul Sen.

The drive was conducted on information that a yaba consignment from Teknaf arrived at Kakrail via courier service in four containers, he said.

Rahul said the contraband drugs were hidden in different layers of flour, wheat, and rice powder inside the containers.

He further said the courier service company was supposed to send the package to Panchagarh via Dhaka.

No one was available at the phone number mentioned in the parcel, said the DNC official.

The authorities are investigating to identify those responsible for sending the yaba from Cox's Bazar. A general diary was filed with Paltan Police Station.

clove prices have soared by 13.68 percent to Tk 2,000 per kilogramme, as shown in TCB's daily market report.

Within a week, the price of both local and imported garlic has risen by Tk 10-20 per kilogramme.

Local garlic was sold at Tk 230 per kilogramme, and imported garlic at Tk 250 per kilogramme yesterday.

Ginger prices have also increased by Tk 40-60 per kilogramme, with imported ginger being sold at Tk 280-320 per kilogramme.

Talking to The Daily Star, wholesale traders said that the rise in spice prices is due to higher global market prices and an increase in the value of the dollar. As the dollar's value has risen, so have import costs.

Shamima Begum, a homemaker from Dhanmondi, said, "I am furious about the soaring prices of essential spices. It's becoming impossible to manage our household budget. "How are we supposed to cook for our families during festivals when prices are this high?"

Farida Begum, a private company employee, said she was frustrated by the high prices of garlic, ginger, and coriander. "These are basic ingredients for everyday cooking, and now they're almost unaffordable ahead of Eid."

Rahman Ali, a private job employee, said prices increase around Eid every year. "But no one seems to understand our pain," he added.

Md Enayet Ullah, president of Bangladesh Wholesale Hot Spice Traders Association, said, "Due to reduced cardamom production in India and Guatemala, the price of the product has increased in those countries. The rise in the dollar's value is also the reason for higher cardamom prices in the domestic market."

A total of 850 workers, 76 trucks and other waste-carrying vehicles will be deployed to clean up wastes from 141 designated slaughtering spots in 31 wards under KCC, said Md Anisur Rahman, chief conservancy officer of KCC.

SYLHET

The Sylhet City Corporation, facing an uphill task of cleaning animal wastes amid waterlogging in different areas following the recent flash flood, has not declared any pre-planned time frame but expects to clean and dispose of all wastes by the next morning after Eid.

"A total of 1,200 regular cleaners and 400 contractual cleaners will be engaged in waste clean-up. Residents have been distributed 40,000 bio-degradable bags for waste collection," said Lt Col (retd) Mohammad Aklem Abden, chief waste management officer of SCC.

SUNKEN-DECK LAUNCHES

Risky but still used on busy river routes

TANJIL HASAN, Munshiganj

On March 20, 2022, the Munshiganj-bound sunken-deck launch ML Afsar Uddin capsized after being hit by the Rupsi-9 cargo ship in Shitalakkhya River, resulting in 10 deaths.

The next day, the Bangladesh Inland Water Transport Authority suspended all 70 sunken-deck launches operating on six routes from Narayanganj. However, on April 24, 18 of these launches were permitted to resume operations, while 52 remained banned.

A sunken-deck launch is a type of boat with a lower deck where passengers sit, but this deck doesn't have compartments that can keep water out if the boat starts sinking.

This makes it risky because if there's an accident, it's harder to evacuate passengers, said Dr Mir Tareque Ali, a professor in Buet's navigation and mechanical engineering department.

"According to route permits, these launches should operate on calm rivers. Their current routes are not calm, making them unfit and unsafe," he added.

The accident in March 2022 was not an isolated incident. On April 4, 2021, the ML Sabit Al Hasan sank in the same area, causing 34 fatalities.

Despite this, at least 34 sunken-deck launches, including 31 old ones, continue to operate on busy routes, such as Munshiganj-Narayanganj.

According to BIWTA sources, the owners were given permission to operate till June 30 this year on the condition that they convert the launches from sunken-deck to high-deck within a year, a condition that has not yet been met.

ML Afsar Uddin, which capsized in 2022, is still in operation. While it typically carries over 100 passengers, it only has 11 buoys for passenger safety.

"After these old launches were banned, we hoped for modern launches, but that did not happen," said Mithun, a Narayanganj-bound passenger.

Previously, 5,000-6,000 passengers traveled these routes daily, but the number has significantly decreased. "Currently, six launches are running on the Munshiganj-Narayanganj route, down from 24. Due to fewer passengers, all launches will eventually stop operations," said Dil Mohammad, owner of the ML Afsar Uddin.

Badiuzzaman Badal, president of the Bangladesh Inland Navigation Passenger Transport Agency, Narayanganj Zone, said, "At least 80 percent of launches in Bangladesh have sunken decks. If the

Hit by bus, biker dies in Dhaka

4 more killed in two districts

STAR REPORT

A motorcyclist was killed after being run over by a passenger bus in Dhaka's Banani area yesterday afternoon.

The deceased was identified as Akkas Ali, 55, from Bogura.

A bus of Binimoy Paribahan hit the motorbike of Akkas when he was taking a U-turn from Banani's Road No-27 on his way to Uttara, said Kazi Shahan Haque, officer-in-charge of Banani Police Station.

Akkas went under the wheels of the bus and was dragged for a while, said police, adding that he died on the spot.

"We have seized the bus and detained its driver. Legal action will be taken soon," the OC added.

Meanwhile, four people were killed and seven others injured in two separate accidents in Mymensingh and Cumilla yesterday.

In Mymensingh, two people were killed and five injured after a Dhaka-bound truck collided head-on with a CNG-run auto-rickshaw in Bhaluka upazila around 5:00am, said Bhoraduba Highway Police Station OC Md Shafiqul Islam.

Abdul Halim Mondol, 40, from Dhanikhola in Trishal upazila, the driver of the three-wheeler, died on the spot. The other deceased, a man aged around 45, could not be identified immediately.

In Cumilla, two people were killed and two injured after a litchi-laden truck rear ended a parked covered-van on Dhaka-Chattogram highway in Suagazi upazila around 8:15am, said Mainamati Highway Police Station OC Ikbal Bahar Mazumder.

Their identities could not be known immediately. The injured -- the driver and helper of the covered-van -- were undergoing treatment at Cumilla Medical College Hospital.

Jobs abroad see 20pc drop in first 4 months

JAMIL MAHMUD

Foreign jobs dropped by about 20 percent in the first four months of this year compared to the same period last year mainly due to sharp decline in major markets of Malaysia and Oman.

Between January and April this year, workers' migration to other major destinations like Kuwait, the United Arab Emirates and Singapore also saw decline whereas Saudi Arabia and Qatar saw an increase.

These seven countries together hired 93.58 percent of the total 13.05 lakh Bangladeshi workers who migrated to various destinations last year.

> Over 3.22 lakh workers migrated abroad from January to April this year compared to 4.01 lakh workers a year ago, a decline by 79,606 workers.

According to Bureau of Manpower, Employment and Training data, over 3.22 lakh workers migrated abroad from January to April this year compared to 4.01 lakh workers a year ago, a decline by 79,606 workers.

Malaysia hired 1.01 lakh workers but the outflow dropped by 56 percent to 44,727.

Before closing its door indefinitely for Bangladesh and 13 other source countries from June, Malaysia recruited about 30,000 more workers in the previous month.

Pointing on Malaysia's intaking of workers from Bangladesh since 2022, State Minister for Expatriates' Welfare and Overseas Employment Shofiqur Rahman Choudhury recently said as of May 31 this year, of about 493,642 workers cleared by BMET, 476,672 could leave for Malaysia by the deadline.

Since the market's reopening, about 4.46 lakh workers have migrated to Malaysia.

On the other hand, Oman announced a temporary visa suspension in all categories for Bangladesh in October last year as an "increasing number of laid-off workers were illegally working there" without the full legal protection of their rights.

Affected by the suspension, the Middle East country saw only 302 workers entering there from Bangladesh this year.

In the first four months of last year, Oman recruited 56,184 workers from Bangladesh.

Although Oman recently lifted visa restrictions on several categories for Bangladeshi nationals, it was yet to lift the ban on work visas.

In a note, the Oman embassy said both authorities concerned in Oman and Bangladesh were working towards lifting the ban on work visas, which was in progress.

Among other major destinations, 1.69 lakh workers migrated to Saudi Arabia till April this year compared to 1.57 lakh workers during the same period last year.

The number of workers migrating to the UAE dropped from 29,069 last year to 26,192 this year, Kuwait from 9,222 to 9,121, and Singapore from 16,247 workers last year to 14,964 workers this year.

However, the number of workers migrating to Qatar saw a significant jump from last year's 8,291 to 24,936 this year.

On February 27, the state minister told parliament that the government has a work plan to send 60 lakh workers abroad in the next five years.

He said Bangladesh is sending workers to around 176 countries and a total of 99.9 lakh Bangladeshi people have been employed abroad in the last 15 years.

RAWHIDE TRADE

DMP chief for stern actions against extortion

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Stern actions will be taken against extortion and undue influence in the rawhide trade during Eid-ul-Azha, said Dhaka Metropolitan Police Commissioner Habibur Rahman yesterday.

The DMP will oversee the entire process of rawhide collection, storage, and marketing, said Habibur Rahman at a coordination meeting at its headquarters.

The meeting focused on strategies for securing vehicles transporting rawhides, ensuring smooth traffic flow, and preventing illegal activities.

The commissioner assured that measures will be taken to prevent the formation of any syndicates within the leather trade. The sale of rawhides on bridges or roads in areas such as Jatrabari, Hazaribagh, New Market, and Gabtoli will be prohibited, he added.

Additionally, intelligence surveillance will be in place to monitor and control salt prices, he said.

The DMP chief mentioned that checkpoints will be set up and patrolling will be intensified on all exit routes from Dhaka to prevent rawhide smuggling.

Rawhide-laden vehicles will be allowed to travel to Hemayetpur via Gabtoli, he said, emphasising that the hides must not leave their respective districts as directed by the inspector general of police.

Regarding security for city dwellers during Eid, the commissioner said safety measures, including checkpoints, patrols, foot patrols, and intelligence surveillance, will be implemented.

Coordination with local security guards will also be part of the strategy, he said.

FATHER'S DAY SPECIAL

'If I could embrace him one more time'

Fathers play a great role in a child's life. They are the shadow, guide, and often the most reliable friend one can have. Commemorating International Father's Day today, stars who have lost their father have expressed feelings that remain untold, and what they would say if they got another chance.

SHAH ALAM SHAZU

I would share all my good news with him: Apurba

Not just for any special occasion, I remember him every day. Whenever I receive good news, I wish that I could share it with him, but he is far away. My father was a simple man, and I have always said that he is my hero!

I was quite close to him, and we used to talk a lot about so many things. He left us so early, and there are so many things I want to share with him every day. Only a child who lost their father can understand the void.

I wish I could say 'baba' one more time: Chanchal Chowdhury

Whenever I went to my hometown, I used to hear baba's voice. Now that he is gone, I can't hear his voice, neither I can say the word baba. Without, him the house is empty.

My father was a teacher, and all of my siblings and I were his students. I have always tried to live with my father's ideals, and want to keep them until my last breath.

I have lots of things to share with my father, and it hurts that I cannot share anything with him now. A father sacrifices a lot for his children, and I pray for all the fathers in the world on this Father's Day, and wish that they always remain happy.

Aruna Biswas with her family

My father was my friend: Samrat

I miss him all the time. Baba was my friend and confidant. He had all the solutions to all of my problems. Baba was a family-oriented person and loved his family. He would spend quality time with us. After he retired from the film industry, all of his time was for the family.

Whenever we gather for a family programme, we deeply feel his absence. Even today, some of his friends come over to meet us, and at that time, we miss him more. If he were alive today, I would hug him and say 'I miss you all the time baba'.

I can still feel his presence: Aruna Biswas

I never want to forget my baba. He will always be in my thoughts. I can still almost feel how he smelled, walked, and talked and drank tea. Baba was a teacher and an actor. I took the initial acting lessons from him, as did many renowned actors in the country. He was known as 'Jatra Samrat' Amalendu Biswas. He was a freedom fighter, and sacrificed a lot for the country.

My father was a bookworm and he used to read all night and go for a walk early in the morning. After that, he would have a cup of tea and take rest. During that time, I used to wake up from sleep and run to his bed and lying on the bed with him and taking his smell was one of my favourite things to do.

Minar lends voice to Tollywood film 'Babli'

Minar Rahman, who made us fall in love with his melodious voice, will be lending his voice to Raj Chakrabarty's upcoming film, Babli.

The film is based on a novel by Buddhadeb Guha. For the first time, popular actor Abir Chatterjee and actress Subhashree Ganguly are set to star together in a film.

The first song from the movie, Dube Achi, was released yesterday. The song has been composed by Indraadip Dasgupta and written by Subrata Barishwala.

Mila drops another item song

From Bapuram Sapure to Chera Pal, Mila's songs have made us groove to her peppy songs and upbeat rhythms. For a long time, she was missing from the music scene but now she has made a roaring comeback with her second item song.

This Eid-ul-Azha, as part of G-Series' Eid surprise, Mila surprised her fans with special new song which was released, yesterday. Mila made her comeback with the song Tona Tuni. Not only did she sing, but she also wrote the lyrics and composed the music for the song. Maruf Chowdhury stars alongside her in the music video, which was directed by Ilzar Islam.

"Rupban was my first item song. I haven't been seen in a song of that genre since. Many a time, my fans have expressed interest in seeing me perform another item song, but no one could provide lyrics that resonated with me. Finally, I decided to write the lyrics myself and arranged the tune and music in my style," revealed the singer.

Rain likely on Eid day

warned of "short-term" flooding in the country's northern and northeastern regions due to heavy rainfall.

The northern, northeastern, and adjoining upstream parts of the country are expected to experience heavy to very heavy rainfall over the next 24 to 72 hours. As a result, the Surma-Kushiyara, Sarigowain, Someswari, Jadukata, and Jhalukhali rivers in the northeastern region may rise rapidly and cross the danger level at some places, according to the FFWC bulletin issued at 9:00am.

In that case, the low-lying areas of Sylhet, Sunamganj, and Moulvibazar may experience short-term flooding, it added.

At the same time, Teesta, Dharla, and Dudhkumar rivers in the northern region may also rise rapidly and cross the danger level at some places, resulting in short-term floods in the adjoining low-lying areas, the bulletin also said.

The major rivers in the northeastern region are already on a rising trend and may continue to rise in the next 72 hours, it added.

The water level of the Brahmaputra and the Jamuna rivers may also rise in the next 72 hours, according to the FFWC bulletin.

Meanwhile, the Teesta's water level is already rising quickly, and thousands of people who live along its banks and in its char areas fear that flooding may occur at any moment.

On Friday, authorities concerned opened all 44 sluice gates of the Teesta Barrage at Dalia Point in Nilphamari as the river was swelling due to incessant rain and the onrush of water from upstream India.

"It is alarming how fast the Teesta has been swelling since Friday evening! If this situation continues, flooding will occur in our area at any moment and damage our homes and cropland," said Aftab Ali, a resident of Charganai village in Rangpur's Kaunia upazila.

Mangoes from 4 continents in one single orchard

Africa, Australia and America]."

He established the Matri Bagan, including a nursery on a three-bigha land, with 150 mango plants.

A marketing graduate, Shibli aspires to develop his career as an agro entrepreneur with focus on fruit varieties, especially mangoes, from across the globe.

"Twenty-six mango varieties are already giving great output. The remaining 16 have been planted and will soon start bearing fruits.

"Whenever I learn about a new variety of mango from anywhere in the country, I rush there to get it! My dream is to turn my orchard into the only one in the country that grows the most variety of mangoes from around the world!"

Visiting Matri Bagan recently, this correspondent saw mangoes of different shapes and colours swinging from tree branches. Many were covered in fruit bags to ensure pests and birds do not affect them.

A lot of research also goes into the work to determine conducive atmospheres for each variety.

"The mangoes from different countries have different characteristics. But since we're growing them all in the same orchard, we're taking special care. We use the fruit bags also to ensure they get their proper shape and colour," Shibli added.

In his Matri Bagan, each tree -- mostly two to two and half years old -- bears at least 20-40kgs of mangoes.

"Though my orchard is new and the trees are young, we're satisfied with the production from each of them ... We'll get more yield from each tree as they get older."

Shibli gets orders from different supershops for mango supplies, "But I am not going for commercial sales yet. Maybe next year, if production increases. However, if someone separately wants to buy mangoes from me, I sell the foreign varieties at Tk 500-1,000 per kg."

Shibli also produces seedlings of various fruits by grafting the mother trees in his nursery. Including the 42 varieties of mangoes, there are 200 varieties of fruits growing in his nursery.

Grafting or graftage is a horticultural technique whereby tissues of plants are joined so as to continue their growth together.

Many fruit and plant lovers also buy saplings of different fruit varieties from Matri Bagan.

"When I began the nursery five years ago, I earned around Tk 70,000-80,000 a year from selling saplings. Now, with my varieties widened, I get Tk 40-50 lakh a year.

"Along with growing my agro business, I want to help people with job opportunities in my area through my orchard."

Speaking to The Daily Star, Sheikh Mehedi Hasan, a resident of Shahapar village in the upazila, said he often goes to Shibli's orchard to observe the beautiful mangoes from different countries.

"It's not possible for us to go to all these countries, but Shibli has at least made it possible for us to get the taste of mangoes from there! It's rare to get so many varieties in one single orchard."

A gold medalist farmer from the upazila, Md Sajahan Ali Badsha said, "It's not easy to grow fruits or crops from different countries on one single field, but Shibli has shown how to make it possible.

"Many farmers try to cultivate foreign varieties together but, in most cases, they don't succeed. What Shibli is doing will revolutionise the agro business."

Mita Sarker, agriculture officer of Ishwardi upazila, said, "Shibli is inspiring all those around him with this work. He is successful in grafting trees and also growing the fruits from so many countries. With time, all those varieties will be able to tolerate our weather and we can get more production."

Yamin Hossain, additional district magistrate, said, "Residents of St Martin's Island will not face any shortage of food as they have just received a month's worth of food supplies."

He also mentioned that special arrangements would be made to reach the mainland in the event of a medical emergency.

Meanwhile, as of last morning, there had been no sound of gunshots or explosions from the Myanmar side.

Aktaruzzaman by demanding a bigger cut from their gold smuggling racket, they said.

Amanullah, the main hitman hired by Aktaruzzaman, is a leader of Purbo Banglar Communist Party. In his confessional statement made on June 5, Amanullah said his party decided to kill him 26 years ago because of his involvement in smuggling and land grabbing.

Investigators said they are verifying the claims.

Tanvir Bhuiyan, who assisted the killing under Amanullah's command, mentioned in his confession that the lawmaker travelled to Kolkata after he was told that the business conflicts would be solved there.

Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan recently said, "We never said Azim was killed over gold smuggling. We have always been saying that the MP's constituency is a crime-prone area. We must know what happened there. We are investigating, we will tell you everything after the probe is done."

Intelligence officials say the puzzle can only be solved after Aktaruzzaman, believed to be in the US, is caught.

Bangladesh's National Central Bureau of the Police Headquarters sent a letter requesting Interpol to issue a red notice for Aktaruzzaman, said its Assistant Inspector General Ali Haider Chowdhury.

"Interpol has yet to respond. Considering the importance of the matter, we are trying again and again," he told The Daily Star yesterday.

Investigators hope that India can bring the key suspect back by using its extradition treaty with the US. The probe will be incomplete otherwise, they said.

Habibur Rahman, commissioner of Dhaka Metropolitan Police, yesterday said, "There is no interference in the investigation. We are investigating independently."

beaten South Africa in this format.

However, a comprehensive 25-run win against the Netherlands in their penultimate group-stage match has given Chandika Hathurusingha's men breathing space ahead of their game against Nepal, an opposition they beat by eight wickets in Chattogram in the only encounter between the two teams during the 2014 T20 World Cup.

Nepal, though, have come a long way since their maiden appearance in Bangladesh, having finished second behind Oman in the Asia Qualifiers ahead of the ongoing edition. The associate nation may not have registered a victory in their first three matches, but they showed they can create a lot of problems for any side on their day as they pushed South Africa to the brink on Friday but eventually succumbed to a heartbreaking one-run defeat.

Nepal skipper Rohit Paudel said he did not want to go home empty-handed and wanted to give their fans something to cheer about with a win against Bangladesh.

"We will play for pride. We wanted to beat a Test playing country. It didn't happen today, so we want to do that in the next game. The confidence that we got today, we want to carry that," Paudel said at the post-match press conference following the defeat against South Africa in Kingstown.

But Bangladesh would feel that they have passed the more difficult hurdles and would want to seize the golden opportunity of securing qualification.

Veteran all-rounder Shakib Al Hasan, who played a match-winning knock of 64 not out against the Dutch following a lengthy lean patch with the bat, certainly felt that way.

"Obviously, the match against Nepal is very important for us. If we win, we will go to the second round which will be a big achievement for us.," Shakib had said after the Netherlands victory.

Arundhati to face trial

153A (promoting enmity between different groups on grounds of religion, race, place of birth, residence, language and doing acts prejudicial to maintenance of harmony), 153B (imputations, assertions prejudicial to national-integration) and 505 (statements conducing to public mischief).

Under Indian Penal Code sections 153A, 153B and 505, a maximum sentence of up to three years is provided, reports our New Delhi correspondent.

However, section 13 of UAPA relates to unlawful activities for advocating, abetting or inciting any unlawful activity and is punishable with imprisonment of up to seven years.

It was alleged in the 2010 FIR that the accused had strongly propagated that Kashmir was never part of India and was forcibly occupied by the Indian armed forces and every possible effort should be made for the independence of the state of Jammu and Kashmir from the State of India.

The FIR was registered on a complaint by social activist Sushil Pandit on October 28, 2010, following the orders of the Court of Metropolitan Magistrate, New Delhi, they added.

It accused Roy and Hossain of delivering the "provocative" speeches at a conference organised under the banner of 'Azadi-The Only Way' on October 21, 2010, at the Little Theatre Group (LTG) Auditorium on Copernicus Marg in central Delhi.

Besides Roy and Hossain, those who delivered speeches at the conference in 2010 included Kashmiri separatist Syed Ali Shah Geelani, S A R Geelani (anchor of the Conference and prime accused in the Parliament attack case), and pro-Maoist cultural activist Varavara Rao.

However, the decision to try Arundhati Roy and Hossain under the tough anti-terror law has triggered a war of words between the opposition parties and the ruling Bharatiya Janata Party yesterday.

The Communist Party of India (Marxist) condemned the move and claimed that the move "defies logic except the fascist kind".

Senior Congress leader B K Hariprasad said, "Fascism thrives on crushing dissent, particularly from intellectuals, artists, writers, poets & activists. BJP manufacture crises daily to distract and overwhelm dissenters enabling them to divert attention from their failures. This assault on free expression & democratic values is unacceptable," Hariprasad posted on X.

N Korea building roads, walls inside DMZ: report

AFP, Seoul

North Korea's (DPRK's) military has been building roads and walls inside the Demilitarized Zone that separates it from South Korea (ROK), the Yonhap news agency reported yesterday.

The construction activities are taking place north of the Military Demarcation Line (MDL) that runs through the middle of the DMZ, the South Korean agency said, citing an military source.

The report follows an incident last week when South Korean forces fired warning shots after North Korean soldiers briefly crossed the MDL.

South Korean authorities said it was likely accidental, and Yonhap quoted a military spokesman as saying some of the North Koreans were carrying work tools.

"Recently, the North Korean military has been erecting walls, digging the ground and constructing roads in some areas between the Military Demarcation Line (MDL) and the Northern Limit Line in the DMZ," the military source said, according to Yonhap yesterday. It was not clear what they were building, the source told Yonhap.

When asked about the report, the South Korean military said in a statement that it was "closely tracking and monitoring the activities of the North Korean military", and that "further analysis is required".

South Korea's spy agency told AFP this week that it had detected signs that North Korea was demolishing sections of a railway line connecting the two countries.

UKRAINE-RUSSIA WAR

US VP announces $1.5b Ukraine aid; Sweden accuses Russia of airspace violation

World leaders were joining Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky in Switzerland yesterday for a summit on peace in his country, but with Russia staying away it is seen as the first step in a long process.

The Swiss hosts have sought to temper expectations at the two-day gathering, with an agenda laying the groundwork for a path to peace, with future summits envisioned, eventually involving Moscow.

The conference, convening exactly 100 countries and global institutions, comes at a perilous moment for exhausted Ukrainians and outgunned soldiers, more than two years since Moscow launched its full-scale invasion in February 2022.

More than 50 heads of state and government figure among the attendees, including all of the G7 leaders who have been meeting in Italy, with the exception of Biden.

The leaders of Britain, Canada, France, Germany, Italy and Japan are attending, as is the European Union chief and the leaders of Colombia, Chile, Finland, Ghana, Kenya and Poland.

Argentinian President Javier Milei and the presidents of Ecuador and Fiji were among the early arrivals.

Russia's BRICS allies Brazil and South Africa are meanwhile only sending an envoy, and India will be represented at the ministerial level.

China is absent, insisting it will not take part without Moscow's presence.

The summit aims to find paths towards a lasting peace for Ukraine based on international law and the United Nations Charter; a possible framework to achieve this goal; and a roadmap as to how both parties could come together in a future peace process.

US Vice President Kamala Harris shakes hands with Ukraine's President Volodymyr Zelensky during a meeting on the sideline of the Summit on peace in Ukraine in Stansstad yesterday.

US Vice President Kamala Harris announced more than $1.5 billion in aid in part for Ukraine's energy sector and its humanitarian situation as a result of Russia's 27-month invasion of Ukraine.

The $1.5 billion includes $500 million in new funding for energy assistance and the redirecting of $324 million in previously announced funds toward emergency energy infrastructure repair and other needs in Ukraine, the vice president's office said.

She also announced more than $379 million in humanitarian assistance from the State Department and the US Agency for International Development to help refugees and other people impacted by the war.

Harris, who will spend less than 24 hours at the gathering in Lucerne, Switzerland, will be standing in for President Biden at the event.

Elsewhere, a Russian SU-24 bomber violated Swedish airspace near the strategic Baltic Sea island of Gotland, leaving only after Sweden scrambled two JAS-39 fighter jets, Sweden's military said yesterday.

The incident on Friday occurred three months after the Scandinavian country became a full member of NATO, dropping two centuries of military non-alliance.

"The Russian actions are not acceptable and demonstrate a lack of respect for our territorial integrity," the head of Sweden's air force, Jonas Wikman, said.

China-Aussie ties 'back on track'

Says China PM Li

REUTERS, Sydney

Chinese Premier Li Qiang arrived in Australia yesterday, saying relations were "back on track" as he started the first visit by a Chinese premier to the major trading partner in seven years.

Australia is "uniquely positioned to connect the West and the East" and stands as "an important force of economic globalization and world multipolarity", Li said at Adelaide's airport, according to a statement from the Chinese embassy.

Bilateral relations are "back on track after a period of twists and turns", Li said.

During his four-day visit, Li will also visit the capital Canberra and mining states in Western Australia.

"A more mature, stable and fruitful comprehensive strategic partnership will be a treasure shared by the people of both countries," Li said.

The ebb in bilateral ties resulted in the suspension of A$20 billion ($13 billion) in Australian agriculture and mineral exports to China through last year.

Li arrived from New Zealand, where he highlighted Chinese demand for New Zealand's agricultural products.

S AFRICA ELECTIONS

Ramaphosa re-elected after coalition deal

REUTERS, Cape Town

The African National Congress and its largest rival, the controversial white-led Democratic Alliance, agreed on Friday to work together in South Africa's new government of national unity, a step change after 30 years of ANC rule.

Once unthinkable, the accord allowed President Cyril Ramaphosa to win a second term in office. He was re-elected by lawmakers with 283 votes.

The deal between two sharply antagonistic parties is the most momentous political shift in South Africa since Nelson Mandela led the ANC to victory in the 1994 election that marked the end of apartheid.

The ANC lost its majority for the first time in an election on May 29 and spent two weeks in talks with other parties.

The National Assembly had earlier elected a DA lawmaker as deputy speaker, after choosing an ANC politician as speaker, the first concrete instance of power sharing between the two parties.

The DA wants to scrap some of the ANC's Black empowerment programmes, saying they have not worked and have mostly benefited a politically-connected elite. It says good governance and a strong economy would benefit all South Africans.

Ramaphosa first came to power in 2018 after his predecessor Zuma was forced out under the cloud of corruption allegations.

Under his watch South Africa suffered from record power cuts, the economy languished and crime remained rife. Unemployment is at almost 33 percent.

SOUTH CHINA SEA ROW

New China rules allow detention of foreigners

AGENCIES

New Chinese coast guard rules took effect yesterday, under which it can detain foreigners for trespassing in the disputed South China Sea, where neighbours and the G7 have accused Beijing of intimidation and coercion.

Beijing claims almost the entirety of the South China Sea, brushing aside competing claims from several Southeast Asian nations including the Philippines and an international ruling that its stance has no legal basis.

From yesterday, China's coast guard can detain foreigners "suspected of violating management of border entry and exit", according to the new regulations published online. Detention is allowed up to 60 days in "complicated cases", they say.

Meanwhile, the Philippines filed a claim with the UN yesterday to an extended continental shelf (ECS) in the South China Sea, a waterway where it has had increasingly confrontational maritime disputes with China.

The Philippines sought to register its entitlement to an extended continental shelf in the West Palawan Region facing the South China Sea. The submission, cleared by President Ferdinand Marcos Jr, follows a comprehensive technical and scientific study of continental shelf in the West Philippine Sea, the foreign ministry said.

Earlier, the Group of Seven bloc on Friday criticised what it called "dangerous" incursions by China in the waterway. "We oppose China's militarisation, and coercive and intimidation activities in the South China Sea," read a G7 statement at the end of a summit on Friday.

Singapore oil slick closes beaches on resort island

REUTERS, Singapore

Beaches on Singapore's Sentosa island were closed yesterday after an oil spill spread from a nearby shipping terminal to the tourist haven south of the city-state.

The oil spill had spread from Pasir Panjang Terminal, less than 10 km from the island popular with tourists and locals, after a Netherlands-flagged dredger struck a stationary Singapore-flagged bunker vessel on Friday afternoon.

The Maritime and Port Authority of Singapore said patches of oil were observed off Pasir Panjang Terminal and along Tanjong, Palawan, and Siloso beaches. It said it has deployed 16 oil spill response craft to contain the oil spill.

"There is no impact on navigational traffic. Berthing operations at Pasir Panjang Terminal remain unaffected," the authority said.

Let this Eid be one to remember

We wish our readers and patrons a safe, happy Eid!

As we prepare to celebrate this year's Eid-ul-Azha, it is crucial to reflect on the deeper meanings behind its rituals: sacrifice, sharing, and unity. We cannot overstate the significance of these values at a time when our nation is going through multiple challenges ranging from economic turmoil and rising inflation to democratic decline and environmental degradation.

Firstly, the spirit of sacrifice is more relevant than ever. Our nation has faced significant trials recently. Many of our fellow citizens have been severely affected by the rising prices of essentials, making it difficult for them to afford basic necessities. Reportedly, prices have gone further up in the week leading up to Eid—which is not unusual during festivals—but for a people seeing the average inflation rate hover above 9 percent for the past two years, it means more painful adjustments. Moreover, many in the coastal regions are yet to recover from the devastating effects of Cyclone Remal and recent floods. In such times, it is crucial to extend our hands to those in need—a burden shared is really a burden halved. This is, however, not to take away from the responsibilities of the government which must roll out special measures to help the most vulnerable.

Speaking of sharing, it is also vital to remember our workforce, particularly those in the garment and textile industries, where the issue of unpaid wages and bonuses continues to be persistent. Reportedly, many factories have not properly fulfilled their financial obligations to workers. Ensuring that workers receive their rightful earnings not only upholds justice but also allows them to celebrate Eid with their families.

The movement of home-bound people across the country also demands continued monitoring. With millions traveling to their home districts, it is essential to ensure their safety on the roads. We have seen too many tragic incidents mar the festivities in previous years. Already, we have had reports of some accidents and also of a surge in bus fares, which speaks to the lack of regulations in transport sector. Many have also suffered on major highways and at exit points in the capital due to traffic congestions. Therefore, the authorities must take all necessary measures to manage traffic, ensure compliance of traffic/transport rules, and prevent accidents throughout the holiday period.

We also feel obligated to highlight the importance of cleanliness and hygiene, especially considering the risks of dengue as rainfall events become more frequent. Both citizens and the municipal/local authorities must ensure prompt and proper disposal of animal waste following the sacrificial rites. We also urge on-duty law enforcement officials to ensure that the festive atmosphere is not marred by any untoward incidents. Together, through sharing and caring, we can all make this Eid an enriching experience for everyone.

Khulna's brave girl footballers need help

Govt and society must ensure their dreams are not crushed

We are disturbed to know that a group of under-17 female footballers of the Super Queen Football Academy in Khulna have stopped playing the game they are so passionate about, as per a report by this daily. Last year, these girls were viciously attacked by locals who considered the idea of girls playing football to be against the traditional norms of society. They sustained serious injuries, and there was widespread media coverage and outrage at the time. But although many promises were made then, these inspiring women were later forgotten. They are now facing financial hardship and social stigmatisation. Consequently, their practicing days have been rudely cut short, and their dreams of playing for the national team someday are all but over.

Reportedly, four of the footballers had to be married off in order for their families to save face, while the others had to make ends meet by working in croplands or as domestic workers; one of them used to drive an easy bike which was stolen.

In a society still plagued by the misogyny of certain groups, for girls to play any outdoor sport is difficult enough. But withstanding these challenges, these footballers managed to join the academy to become professional footballers. For that, the Tentultala Super Queen Football Academy deserves our praise and support for providing opportunities to around 30 to 40 girls. That they have had to suspend training because of financial constraints should prompt the government, members of the society, and corporations to come forward and provide all-out support for this academy. The authorities should also provide financial assistance to the girls who come from underprivileged backgrounds.

That said, it is disturbing to know that those accused of the vicious attack are out on bail now. Some of them are even threatening the girls with acid attacks. The police, too, have stopped providing them with protection with the excuse that since the girls have stopped practicing, they don't need security anymore.

The government must make sure that the accused are punished, that the police provide necessary protection to the girls, and that the latter can continue practicing their favourite sport without intimidation or humiliation. We have a collective responsibility to encourage women in sports and nurture these budding sportswomen, who are willing to fight all odds just to play. The accolades won by our women cricketers and footballers both at home and abroad are evidence of the positive results of such collective support.

Disinformation is a destabilising force for the capital market

MOHAMMAD JAHIDUR RAHMAN

Disinformation can be defined as proven false information that is created and disseminated with the intent to deceive, while misinformation is inaccurate information given without malice. Distorted information, whether misinformation or disinformation, is a pivotal factor in today's financial landscape.

An article on an Indian news platform boldly stated on May 14 that hackers from their own country were likely responsible for the hacking of billions of dollars from the Bangladesh Bank reserves this month. The report claimed to be a follow-up on the investigation of the incident, stating that security agencies of both Bangladesh and India were investigating the massive digital theft.

The heading and the report were written in a way that struck the relevant financial stakeholders in Bangladesh like a thunderbolt. This happened at a time when the country's stock market was already in a volatile position due to several issues, including an increase in the central bank policy rate, the introduction of a six-month moving average rate of the treasury bill to make the interest rate of lending competitive, the introduction of a crawling peg in determining the exchange rate of foreign currency, and the probable withdrawal of the waiver in capital gain taxes.

The increase in the central bank policy rate makes borrowing from the central bank costlier for commercial banks by raising the cost of funds. Simultaneously, making the lending rate of commercial banks competitive forces lending to brokerage houses and merchant banks to become more expensive.

A significant number of foreign investors quit the Bangladesh stock market after the dollar price started to increase in early 2022. Typically, an increase in the dollar price encourages foreign investors to bring more investments, as it allows them to convert their home currency into a larger volume of local currency, enabling them to purchase a larger volume of stocks. However, in this case, the fear of further devaluation of the local currency caused them to wait. At the same time, existing foreign investors were losing money when they tried to repatriate their investments, as the local currency's depreciation reduced the amount of foreign cash they had originally invested.

On May 8 this year, the central bank introduced a Crawling Peg Exchange Rate System for spot purchases and sales of US dollars, setting a Crawling Peg Mid-Rate (CPMR) at Tk 117 per US dollar. Scheduled banks may purchase and sell US dollars freely around the CPMR with their customers and in interbank deals. The jump in the dollar rate from Tk 110 to Tk 117 caused panic among local investors in the stock market, fearing more disinvestment by foreign investors as experienced before.

To mitigate the longstanding foreign exchange crisis, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) extended their loan support on the condition of complying with some reform strategies in the financial sector, one of which is the withdrawal of concessions on income tax, VAT, and tariff. A Statutory Regulatory Order (SRO) dated July 1, 2015, granted individual investors an exemption from paying capital gains tax on listed stocks, mutual funds, bonds, and debentures. To comply with the conditions given by the IMF, there was a buzz in the market that the National Board of Revenue (NBR) was planning to withdraw the exemption of the capital gain tax facility from the next fiscal year, which has already been proposed in the national budget of FY 24-25.

All these factors contributed to the decline of the stock market index. Following this, the disinformation about the central bank reserve heist emerged with malicious intent to further deteriorate the market condition, forcing marginal investors to sell their portfolios at a lower price.

The news was published on a low-profile Indian news portal which was registered on November 26, 2022—a registration that is set to expire on November 26, 2024. The portal, with only 6.3k followers, clearly lacks the credibility to be making such sensitive financial claims.

Any reduction in forex reserves pushes the dollar price up. In the context of the current deteriorating situation in the stock market, this disinformation about the reserve heist acted like the addition of fuel to a fire.

Misinformation or disinformation have been found to increase abnormal stock trading activity and stock price volatility by more than 50 percent and 40 percent respectively in the United States, according to research published in 2019. Research from 2020 suggests that they can also be used to promote specific stocks, resulting in speculative trading campaigns. There has yet to be a study for the Bangladesh market determining the volatility rate caused by different forms of misinformation or disinformation. A survey in 2012 found that 15.79 percent of respondents believed that price fluctuations in the Bangladesh stock market were due to the spreading of fake news. This report, however, does not include the quantitative outcome of volatility caused by misinformation or disinformation. A 2023 study revealed that stock prices of targeted firms respond to fake news even if its informational content is non-existent. Negative false news items have significant short-term negative effects on returns in the US and European markets.

Misinformation and disinformation pose significant risks to the financial sector. Key risks include market volatility, stock price fluctuations, panic selling, poor investment choices, erosion of trust, economic slowdown, operational risk, reputation damage, compliance complexity, policy missteps, increased scrutiny, and higher costs. Addressing these risks requires a coordinated approach involving fact-checking and verification processes, enhancing media literacy, regulatory measures, public education, and technological collaboration.

FATHER'S DAY

Understanding the person and the parent

Sumaya Mashrufa
is sub-editor at The Daily Star.

SUMAYA MASHRUFA

In a culture where parents are often put on a pedestal, it seems redundant to have designated days to remind ourselves of the people who made us. We are constantly reminded of that regardless. In recent times, Mother's Day has gained momentum here and become more of a mainstream idea.

Here, even if people know of these days, they are still more of an idea than something one actually celebrates. And in a country where there are so many woes and hardships, one perhaps cannot but cynically look at it. However, there can be a scope for localisation that isn't sponsored by a neoliberal profit-making scheme.

Father's Day can be a chance to look at fathers to see what's really going on with them. This is also an attempt to articulate how it feels to seek reconciliation when fathers are no longer with us.

Growing up, for the longest time, I didn't identify my father as a man. He was just my father, and then there was this world of men—men who, in my opinion as a teen, were mucking up my every plan to be gloriously sixteen, seventeen. While I was frowning trying to figure out why a girl is the worst enemy these men can have, and why my laughter and joy was the bane of their existence, my father ceased to exist. And he remained just that, my father, for a ridiculously long time.

And then, it hit me—my father was a man.

I don't think parents realise how powerful they are. It truly boggles my mind how people remain so nonchalant and do not see that if there is anything miraculous left, it is that they can just decide to bring another human being into this world. That is a power akin to that of being able to say, "Let there be light." So, no wonder it doesn't register easily that these people you call Amma and Abba are people too, that they are human beings whom some other folks once decided to bring into this world, that one's father is just a man, made in this culture with language that wouldn't let him be a full human being.

I'm sure it is somewhat true for every culture, but living in a country such as ours, the relationship between a father and a daughter is a very strange one. The majority consensus for the daughters of Bangladesh is that beware of men. Newspaper articles, TV screens and cinemas all come as precautionary messages of what can happen to you as a girl. Here, fathers have a very panic-inducing job to do.

They are the representative of the clan of men. They have a working knowledge of what array of members their clan consists of. They fear the members they don't know well. While I was growing up, I thought women feared men. I had no idea how much men fear men, too.

While I was diagnosing myself and the society out there, I saw my father. A man who had me when he was at my age. He had seventeen years to talk to me. I'm sure he thought he had time. There's no need to even mention that I thought we had time. Time was still a concept that proposed infiniteness.

It is a little harder, though not impossible, to reach reconciliation with fathers who are no longer here. Especially if one loses their father at an early age, one becomes quite a detective. It's like their life is spread in front of you and the last entry on the diary has been made. Now make what you want to make out of it. You cannot interrogate, you cannot interview, and no one is going to talk back. You just have to take versions of events from eyewitnesses and examine the existing entries and reach a point.

Reconciliation is needed because the rapture of life tears us apart and bars us from seeing the stage where there is forgiveness and compassion.

Because I couldn't reach my father, quite subconsciously, I developed this habit of looking at as many fathers as I could. It was a hobby, like collecting stamps; I would collect memories of my female friends with their fathers.

I've seen some wonderful fathers in my lifetime, and I saw some truly horrible ones too. I have no unrealistic romanticisation of fatherhood. In my brain, they are not kept on pedestals. I also understand that being a good father does not equal being a good husband. And I have reached that point where I see fathers as men who were taught to put on a brave face and stride, who tried to be the fathers we deserved, and when they failed, couldn't cry.

So, there was this daughter in Washington, Sonora Smart Dodd. At age 27, she had the idea for Father's Day. Her father was a Civil War veteran who raised her and her five siblings alone after their mother died in childbirth. The first Father's Day was celebrated on June 19, 1910, the month of her father's birthday.

Though I don't buy into this very Americanised way of celebration and all that it entails, I do like this story. I try to imagine Sonora's father as well. He always comes in the image of Jo March's father in The Little Women. And I want to give them a hug, from our house to theirs.

In the hurry to hide true emotion in humour, I digress. I should crack a joke right about now! I want to say Happy Father's Day to Darth Vader. I want to say the most famous son is Jesus Christ. And while my brain seeks denial of grief in humour, I see my father laughing. I see him talking to my older brother, my brother reading Kahlil Gibran's poem "On Children" in a very intentional way—

"You are the bows from which your children as living arrows are sent forth."

I see my father hiding shadows of sadness in his eyes, I see him smile.

And even after knowing how it would make us both cringe, to my beautiful, brilliant father, I say, "Happy Father's Day, Abbu!" You tried your best, you can put your armour down now, and be the joyful little boy you always wanted to be.

Benazir's corruption: The crisis of accountability

Kallol Mustafa
is an engineer and writer who focuses on power, energy, environment and development economics. He can be reached at kallol_mustafa@yahoo.com

KALLOL MUSTAFA

The year was 2018. On August 30, the results of Transparency International Bangladesh's (TIB) "Corruption in Service Sectors: National Household Survey 2017" were released. According to the survey, the country's law enforcement agencies (LEAs) ranked in the highest position in terms of the experience of corruption by surveyed households. Of the households that received services from them, 72.5 percent were victims of different forms of corruption.

The Bangladesh Police Service Association (BPSA) rejected the TIB survey results in a statement issued on September 11, 2018. The statement, sent by the additional deputy commissioner of Dhaka Metropolitan Police, also the office secretary of the Police Service Association, alleged that the TIB's survey report "identified the police as a corrupt institution based on preconceived notions." It was also claimed that, "In case of any unlawful behaviour of the police, proper legal action is taken after investigation."

The story of identifying the LEAs as the "most corrupt sector" in the TIB survey and subsequent rejection by the BPSA came to my mind in the wake of the recent allegations of massive corruption against former police and Rab chief Benazir Ahmed. Documents from the Anti-Corruption Commission (ACC) show that Benazir and his family bought at least 204.5 acres of land between 2009 and 2023. Of these, 112 acres were purchased during his tenure as inspector general of police (IGP) and Rab chief.

Was Benazir Ahmed's purchase of such a vast amount of land while he was head of police and Rab consistent with the legitimate income he was earning? Is it not an illegal act to force people to sell land by intimidation? Where was the process of "legal action" claimed by the BPSA when Benazir was engaging in such unlawful behaviour day after day as a senior officer in the police force? Why was Benazir's corruption exposed only after his retirement, and not when he was in office?

Not only was no action taken against Benazir's massive corruption and abuse of power when he was in office, he was also being given one reward after another. This is not only an internal problem of the LEAs. The entire government, including the ministry of home affairs, is also responsible here.

The Public Security Division of the home ministry honoured him with the Integrity Award 2020-21. But ACC data shows that he and his family bought nearly 87.9 acres of land in 2020 and 2021. The Integrity Award is supposed to be given to someone who meets the standards of scrupulousness and honesty. Where were those standards when Benazir was given the award? Apart from the Integrity Award, Benazir was awarded the highest medal of the police force, Bangladesh Police Medal (BPM), a total of five times between 2011 and 2019. With so many intelligence agencies in the country and so much surveillance, is it at all believable that the authorities, including the LEAs, were not aware of his illegal activities? How dysfunctional could a country's institutional system be that the person who was involved in massive corruption was rewarded time and again, instead of being punished?!

VISUAL: STAR

The government and law enforcement agencies claim that Benazir Ahmed's corruption is his personal responsibility, that no agency or ministry will take responsibility for him. The problem with this type of claim is that when Benazir was committing the crimes, he held important positions in the agencies concerned. Moreover, he used his administrative powers and even members of the agencies under his control for his personal benefit. For example, according to a report published in The Daily Star, during his tenure as IGP and Director General of Rab, Benazir Ahmed purchased over 600 bighas of farmland by intimidating the Hindu community in the Gopalganj Sadar Upazila, and Rajoir Upazila of Madaripur. Benazir engaged a police officer named Taimur Islam to buy the land. Taimur used to go to the land owners on Benazir's behalf and pressure them to sell the land at reduced prices, threatening them that they would lose the land anyway without getting any compensation if they did not sell that to Benazir. Benazir also engaged several police and Rab officials to supervise the construction work of one of his resorts until he went into retirement in 2022. How pathetic is it that a man whose responsibility was to protect citizens has instead used his power against vulnerable populations for his own gains?

He used his official powers not only to grab land, but even to make passports as a private employee while still in service. Government officials cannot travel abroad without prior approval. Moreover, using an official passport creates various complications in case of investing and obtaining residence permit abroad. To avoid these complications, Benazir had repeatedly renewed his passport as a private employee while still in service. At one point in 2016, as reported by Daily Jugantor, when the passport directorate objected to the renewal of Benazir's passport as a private employee while he was the director general of Rab, the directorate was forced to give the passport under pressure from the Rab headquarters.

Would it have been possible for a person to do these kinds of corruption and irregularities for years if he was not in important positions in LEAs and if the authorities had not promoted and awarded him? Then, on what grounds can the authorities now avoid responsibility for his misdeeds? The incident of Benazir Ahmed's irregularities, corruption and abuse of power demand special attention because it is not just a case of Benazir's irregularities as an individual, it is also a question of checks and balances of the power and accountability of Bangladesh Police and Rab as institutions.

Benazir's case clearly shows that it is possible for top police and Rab officials to abuse power for personal gains without any accountability. They can invest in land and businesses in violation of government service rules, use police force members for personal or family business, buy land at a low price by intimidating the vulnerable communities, and travel abroad with a fake identity. What is the guarantee that such blatant abuse of power and corruption are not still being practiced by some other powerful officials?

Even after media reports about Benazir's illegal wealth started to appear, there were allegations that the authorities were not proactive enough. The Kalerkantho report on Benazir Ahmed's illegal assets was published on March 31, the ACC decided to form a committee to investigate his illegal assets on April 18, and following the ACC's application, the court ordered the seizure of his assets and bank accounts on May 23. But before that, Benazir withdrew money from the bank, sold many assets, and left the country with his family on May 4. There was no action from the ACC or any department of the government to prevent Benazir from going abroad while the investigation was going on. So, what is the guarantee that his departure abroad did not happen as part of his understanding with the authorities?

This question has arisen because during the consecutive tenures of the Awami League government, Benazir Ahmed held three of the most important positions in law enforcement. He was Commissioner of DMP from October 2010 to January 2015, Director General of Rab from January 2015 to April 2020, and IGP from April 2020 to September 2022. There are questions about how much of his behaviour in these positions was that of a professional law enforcement officer, and how much was of a ruling party politician. Besides, many "crossfires" and "gunfights" occurred during his tenure as the Rab and police chief, for which the responsibility rests on him as well as the government. Investigating Benazir Ahmed's corruption is not enough. The allegations of violations of human and democratic rights against him should also be investigated, and he should be brought back to the country and punished. It is also important to uncover who were the beneficiaries of Benazir's corruption and what irregularities were legitimised through them. The most important thing is that the crisis of accountability of various institutions of the government that was exposed through the Benazir incident is also addressed.

Is there a problem with the world of cricket?

MADIHA ATHAR KHAN

A post on X (formerly known as Twitter) which gained popularity on other social media platforms as well reads, "If you want to promote cricket in the USA, then make India and Pakistan play a 5-match T20I series over there. Don't spoil the biggest cricketing event in the world for the heck of it." There are other posts about the low-scoring pitch in New York with many voicing the sentiment that these are not good enough to play T20 matches on.

The brand image of cricket as a sport has been shaped by the role played by batters. If you ask most cricket fans about their favourite matches or performances, chances are that they will name an unforgettable batting innings. Inadvertently perhaps, batters have assumed the roles of main characters in the team, bowlers the supporting characters, and the fielders have become silent extras. The advent of T20 cricket has only heightened this effect.

The Indian Premier League (IPL) has also set the tone for what to expect from T20 matches. People are accustomed to nearly every match being a 200-plus run stunner where the team batting second nearly achieves the target. There should be no trend set in a sport, to the extent that every match reads like a scripted performance. But when there is such a long tournament played in one country that has perfected its business model by securing eyeballs on every game, they are incentivised to create exactly that. This situation has prompted even the biggest names in the game like Virat Kohli to say that he does not want to see matches where the bowlers have no room to make an impact.

Just because the New York pitch—which has quite an interesting backstory of being constructed in Adelaide and then transported to New York—has failed to produce any of those high-scoring matches, people have been quick to criticise it. It begs the question: what actually is the true essence of cricket?

Have we become so used to only one style that we have lost the ability to appreciate cricket's many variations? The dialogue on social media makes it seem like cricket fans have solidified what they expect cricket to be and are only satisfied when those expectations are met. After all, T20 demands a short attention span and its promise has always been to deliver immediate gratification. This has also rendered Test cricket inadmissible in the race to remain relevant under modern entertainment conditions. But cricket fans with a bigger appetite for what cricket has to offer are well aware of what the 5-day format can yield: slow-burn thrillers, unpredictable pendulum swings, grit, determination, and the awe that displays of rigorous discipline can inspire. In the same vein, low-scoring T20 matches where bowlers dominate and the matches go down to the wire encapsulate much of the thrill that we may otherwise be missing out on.

All this is not to say that there isn't a problem with cricket at the moment. But I don't think we are pointing our fingers in the right direction. Along with the quality of New York pitches, people have also raised issues with the inclusion of 20 teams in the T20 World Cup. Granted, this results in some matches where the quality of cricket from both sides is sorely unmatched but surely, we can all see the bigger picture here. If every year is going to be saturated with multiple major cricket tournaments, we might as well invite a bigger pool of teams to partake in it. Cricket fans should rejoice at the prospect of the sport gaining wider popularity in other nations.

An issue with cricket right now is the number of major tournaments taking place close to each other. This does not give the teams that need it, the time to reflect, course-correct and implement changes. The ICC Men's ODI Cricket World Cup 2023 ended in November of last year. With only seven months in hand, the teams had to prepare for the T20 World Cup. If we take a look at a five-year period in the cricket cycle, year one would see an ODI World Cup, year two would have a T20 World Cup, year three might have less fanfare but it could feature an ICC Champions Trophy, and possibly an Asia Cup (which would include all the teams where cricket is the most popular), year four would see another T20 World Cup and then the ODI World Cup in the fifth. What that has led to is a simple continuation of momentum (or lack thereof). The teams who have been doing well continue to do so, and the struggling teams see little to no change.

As Bangladeshi fans, we have been immersed in bitterness and disappointment at the state of our cricket team despite their access to proper resources. We outsiders don't have any role to play in making changes but what can help us is to gain some perspective. There are teams such as Pakistan and Sri Lanka who are arguably faring worse than us currently in international cricket. West Indies did not even qualify for the last ODI World Cup. All of these three teams are former World Champions and have regressed at a more appalling rate than us. This is not meant to be a consolation for the Bangladesh team but rather an evaluation of the overall state of cricket and the system in place that has allowed teams like India, Australia, and England to remain at the top, often at the cost of others.

Having said that, there is undeniably always room for uncertainty in cricket, especially in T20s. This is the format in which the quality of cricket matters less than how well you can take advantage of the shorter match time and create upsets. This is also an opportunity for smaller teams to make their mark, while teams like Pakistan, New Zealand, and England in this edition of the World Cup are either already eliminated or struggling to qualify for the next stage.

There are other teams like the Netherlands, Ireland, and the USA of late, who despite not being regarded as serious contenders of the game and not having access to the same cricket resources, display firepower and an intention to prove themselves that is really commendable. They perform with a hunger to prove themselves, probably because it is that much harder for them to get their foot in the door. Much like in other areas of life, the underdogs are scrappy, making the most of what's available to pursue their passions. It is only fair that teams varying greatly in rankings become regular participants in major cricket tournaments. The problems presented by cricket can be offset by the changes that are being introduced. Normalising pitches that are more bowler-friendly and being more welcoming to different cricket teams can build a more exciting future for the sport.

Antidepressant discontinuation: what you need to know

If you or someone you know is considering stopping antidepressants, it is crucial to understand potential withdrawal symptoms. A recent study published in The Lancet Psychiatry sheds light on this issue, providing valuable insights for patients and healthcare professionals alike.

The study, which is the most comprehensive of its kind to date, analysed data from over 20,000 patients across 79 studies. It found that approximately one in six to seven patients (15%) experienced withdrawal symptoms directly related to stopping antidepressants. These symptoms, which include dizziness, headache, nausea, insomnia, and irritability, can be challenging but are not a sign of addiction.

Furthermore, about 3% of patients experienced severe withdrawal symptoms, leading some to restart antidepressant treatment. Though not inevitable, these symptoms can vary depending on the antidepressant used.

Importantly, the study highlights the need for open communication between patients and doctors when considering discontinuing antidepressants. Joint decision-making and careful monitoring are essential to ensure a smooth transition and minimise any potential discomfort.

While previous studies have suggested higher rates of withdrawal symptoms, this new analysis provides a more accurate picture. It distinguishes between symptoms directly caused by medication cessation and those influenced by patients' or practitioners' expectations.

Ultimately, the goal is to provide patients with evidence-based information to make informed decisions about their treatment. If you are considering stopping antidepressants, speak with your healthcare provider to discuss your options and develop a plan that prioritises your well-being. Remember, you are not alone, and support is available every step of the way.

Chronic and recurrent pneumonia in children: A changing paradigm of a common disease

DR AHAD ADNAN

Pneumonia is a major respiratory problem in children, both in terms of the number of occurrences and the cause of death. The word, more specifically termed “pneumonitis', implies inflammation of lung cells. When the destructive process is at its peak, it thickens your respiratory membrane, resulting in problematic respiration along with fever, cough, and distress.

Conventionally, people believe that only various organisms can cause pneumonia, despite the existence of several non-infectious mechanisms that are alarmingly on the rise. Among the organisms are bacteria, viruses, fungi, and parasites, with the former two being the most common and originating from both community and hospital settings. The typical course of the disease involves an improved course with or without antibiotics, along with some supportive measures like oxygen therapy, etc.

If a child really has either recurrent or persistent pneumonia, we need to evaluate him/her thoroughly. We must clarify some important histories related to other similar diseases. Pulmonary tuberculosis (TB) should definitely come to mind at the top of the list, especially in our country. TB is somehow difficult to diagnose in children due to non-specific clinical features, difficulty in collecting samples to investigate, and the organism's scarcity.

We should take a history of weight loss, an evening rise in temperature, a persistent cough, less alertness, vaccination, and, most importantly, recent TB contact. Device-induced sputum and stool for GeneXpert are among the most commonly used samples for detecting TB organisms.

Many children used to vomit their feeds, especially liquid feeds, spontaneously or after coughing. Most of them have reflux disease, which drains the vomit from the digestive and respiratory paths and creates repeated pneumonia. We advocate for the mother to feed the babies in a sitting or semi-sitting posture rather than lying, to offer small, frequent feeds, to prepare semi-solid to solid feed in place of whole liquid feed, and also to avoid rigorous shaking after meals. Some long-term medications help with these conditions as well.

A congenital heart defect may be a co-problem or primary culprit for recurrent or persistent pneumonia, mainly due to feeding problems and vomiting. Sometimes the aspiration of a foreign body into the respiratory tract ignites a long-lasting lung pathology. We used to have a history of chocking, violent coughing during feeding, eating seeds or nuts, and also playing with small, rounded objects.

In recent times, we have observed a lot of children with congenitally deficient immunity. If a child presents with at least 4 ear infections, at least 2 serious sinus infections, or at least 2 pneumonias, along with 2 or more months on antibiotics with little effect in a year, recurrent abscess, oral thrush, fungal infection, deep-seated infection, the same family history, and poor growth, we must think of primary immunodeficiency (PID). A PID panel assay will confirm the diagnosis.

These challenging patterns of pneumonia force the paediatric pulmonologist to use non-conventional, newer investigative techniques like fibre optic bronchoscopy. It serves both diagnostic and therapeutic purposes. Genetic testing and immune panel studies are also of critical use.

Last but not least, the old-school investigating technique, culture, and sensitivity test are crucial in detecting specific organisms and determining the appropriate antibiotic to use. More emphasis should be given to such recurrent or pneumonia cases to ensure a healthy lung and a better world.

The benefits of epidural pain relief during labour

A recent study published in the PubMed investigated the impact of epidural pain relief during labour on serious health issues for mothers. The research included over 500,000 women who gave birth in Scotland between 2007 and 2019.

About 22% of these women opted for an epidural during labor. The study found that mothers who received an epidural were less likely to experience severe health issues after giving birth. In fact, they had a 35% lower risk of facing serious problems compared to those who did not receive an epidural. Additionally, they were less likely to need critical care.

Interestingly, the benefits of epidurals were even more pronounced for certain groups. For example, women who needed epidurals for medical reasons saw greater protection against severe health issues. Similarly, mothers who delivered their babies prematurely also benefited more from epidurals.

The study's findings highlight the potential importance of epidural pain relief during labour, especially for women at higher risk of complications. By making epidurals more accessible to these groups, healthcare providers may be able to improve maternal health outcomes and ensure safer childbirth experiences.

Overall, the research suggests that epidurals play a significant role in reducing the likelihood of serious health problems for mothers during and after childbirth. However, to fully understand the extent of their benefits and how to optimise them for different populations, further studies may be necessary.

WORLD BLOOD DONOR DAY 2024

20 years of celebrating giving: thank you, blood donors!

On World Blood Donor Day, celebrated on June 14, 2024, WHO, its partners, and communities across the world united behind the theme: 20 years of celebrating giving: thank you, blood donors!

The 20th anniversary of World Blood Donor Day is an excellent and timely opportunity to thank blood donors across the world for their life-saving donations over the years and honour the profound impact on both patients and donors. It is also a timely moment to address continued challenges and accelerate progress towards a future where safe blood transfusions are universally accessible.

The campaign's objectives are as follows:

- Thank and recognise the millions of voluntary blood donors who have contributed to the health and well-being of millions of people around the world.
- Showcase the achievements and challenges of national blood programmes, and share best practices and lessons learned.
- Highlight the continuous need for regular, unpaid blood donation to achieve universal access to safe blood transfusions.
- Promote a culture of regular blood donation among young people and the general public, and increase the diversity and sustainability of the blood donor pool.

Key messages:

- Safe blood saves lives.
- Blood is needed by women with complications during pregnancy and childbirth, children with severe anaemia, often resulting from malaria or malnutrition, accident victims, and surgical and cancer patients.
- Regular blood donation by a sufficient number of healthy people is needed to ensure that blood will always be available whenever and wherever it is needed.
- While the need for blood is universal, access to blood is not.
- Blood shortages are acute in low- and middle-income countries.
- Every single blood or plasma donation is a precious lifesaving gift; regular donation is the key to building a safe and sustainable supply.
- The wide participation of the population in regular blood and plasma donations ensures that everyone can access blood and plasma proteins when they need them.
- Ensuring the safety and well-being of blood and plasma donors is critical; it helps build commitment to regular donations.
- Thank you, blood donors. Your selfless donations have had a profound impact on the lives and well-being of hundreds of millions of people, as well as their families and communities across the world.

HPV vaccine: a game changer in preventing cervical cancer

The HPV vaccine has been available to girls aged 12–13 since 2008, and catch-up programmes are available until age 19. Previous research showed that vaccinated women had significantly lower rates of cervical cancer, but uptake of the vaccine was lower in areas with more economic challenges.

A study published in the BMJ looked at the impact of the HPV vaccine on cervical cancer and precancerous changes in England. The study analysed data from the National Health Service's cancer registry between 2006 and 2020. It found that among women who received the HPV vaccine, the incidence of cervical cancer dropped by 83.9%, and the incidence of precancerous changes (CIN3) dropped by 94.3%. These benefits were even greater for women vaccinated at a younger age.

Interestingly, while more cases of cervical cancer still occurred in economically deprived areas, the relative reduction in cases was similar across all social classes. This means that the vaccine was equally effective in protecting women from cervical cancer, regardless of their socioeconomic background. This study highlights the importance of HPV vaccination in preventing cervical cancer and reducing health inequalities.

It emphasises that simple interventions like vaccination can have significant health benefits for individuals and communities. The researchers and editorialists urge healthcare professionals and policymakers to work together to ensure that more than 90% of girls and boys receive the HPV vaccine, thereby maximising its impact on public health.

New Zealand pacer Tim Southee after consolation win against Uganda

Will Shanto's willow stop snoozing?

ASHFAQ-UL-ALAM

Bangladesh's campaign in this year's ICC Men's T20 World Cup has been refreshingly devoid of any off-field drama surrounding captaincy, thanks to Najmul Hossain Shanto who has taken the captaincy mantle on his stride and has done a commendable job so far.

That being said, in a playful attempt to spark some off-field spice, here's a whimsical conspiracy theory: Bangladesh have two Shantos playing in the marquee event.

At one end, there is captain Shanto, a smart leader who has been brave with his use of bowlers, excellent with his on-field decisions, has taken a number of gutsy calls, and almost all of his gambles have come off.

At the age of 26, leading the team for the first time in an ICC event as a fulltime captain, Shanto has shown the wits of a seasoned veteran and has been rightfully showered with praises for it.

But at the other end stands the batter Shanto, who looks fidgety, indecisive, unsure whether to press on or grind it out in the middle.

Since arriving in North America, he has batted six times, including a warm-up match against India, and has made three, 36, zero, seven, 14 and one, in that order -- the last three off which have come in the T20 World Cup.

It's not like Shanto has been struggling against a particular type of bowling either.

He has been dismissed twice against off-spinners, stumped against the USA's Steven Taylor and caught at slip to the Netherlands' Aryan Dutt, lost his stumps to India's Mohammad Siraj, got caught trying to pull South Africa's Anrich Nortje and gave a straight-forward catch to extra cover against Sri Lanka's Nuwan Thushara.

The only time he got going was the 34-ball 36-run knock against the USA in the second T20I of the three-match series last month, which ended with a run-out dismissal.

Realistically, had Shanto not been the captain of the team, his place in the starting eleven would have been under serious threat.

But while batter Shanto has been a liability for the team so far, captain Shanto has been indispensable. Most notably, his use of leg-spinner Rishad Hossain has been inspiring, arguably the key move in Bangladesh's winning encounters against Netherlands and Sri Lanka.

Giving Shakib Al Hasan just one over and completing his quota with three overs from Mahmudullah Riyad against South Africa was another inspired decision, one that paid dividends.

In a team where former captains like Shakib and Mahmudullah are in the middle, Shanto has emerged as the clear leader on the field; always communicating with the bowlers from mid-on.

But even his excellent captaincy is not enough to hide his blushes with the bat.

Liton Das, who also came into the tournament with questionable form, contributed in the win over Sri Lanka with a steadfast 36 off 38 balls while Tanzid Hasan Tamim gave glimpses of his abilities at the top with a flashy 35 off 26 balls against the Dutch.

Shanto is the only top-order batter who is yet to play an effective knock and, with Bangladesh in pole position for Super Eight, it is imperative that the skipper regains his groove.

Next up for the Tigers are the spirited Nepal, who pushed South Africa to the limit before conceding a one-run loss.

A win will seal Bangladesh's position in the next round among India, Australia, and Afghanistan -- arguably three of the best bowling attacks in the competition.

For Shanto, the match against Nepal is an opportunity to get some runs under his belt and get off the mark in leading the team from the front with the bat. If he fails to do so, who knows, the ludicrous conspiracy theory proposed above could gain some steam.

Nepal's near-upset chimes CHARM OF CRICKET

AGENCIES

In a match decided by the slimmest of margins and filled with twists and turns, Heinrich Klaasen's decisive run-out from the final ball secured South Africa's unbeaten record at the ICC Men's T20 World Cup and eliminated Nepal from Super Eights contention in a thrilling one-run victory in St Vincent yesterday.

Needing two runs from the final delivery to keep their Super Eights hopes alive, Nepal's Gulsan Jha was run out at the non-striker's end by Klaasen, as the match seemed destined for a Super Over.

This heartbreaking conclusion was particularly harsh for Nepal, who had been the superior team for much of the contest. Their spinners dominated South Africa, restricting them to 115 for seven, and their top-order batsmen were in control, reaching 85 for two in the 14th over with the required rate well within reach.

Despite the narrow loss, Nepal captain Rohit Paudel expressed pride in his team's performance. "I feel like the way we played today shows that we belong here," Paudel said.

Nepal's efforts, backed by their spirited fans who continued to flock in numbers, did not go unnoticed. South African legend Dale Steyn commended the atmosphere created by the vocal and invested Nepalese fan base at the Arnos Vale Ground, which had seen international action return after almost ten years in Thursday's nail-biter between Bangladesh and the Netherlands.

"It would've been the talk of the tournament if Nepal had gotten over the line," Steyn said on ICC's Digital Daily show, hailing the match as the tournament's best so far. "It was fantastic, and they deserved to win. This was the match of the tournament. The matches have gone down to the wire in the USA, and now in the Caribbean, we've seen nail-biting thrillers. I saw people crying in the stands; it shows how much it means to them, and that's what cricket is all about."

The disappointment of a narrow loss and early exit should be hard to overcome for the Himalayan nation. However, on a global platform which could set the fate of an emerging team on course for prosperity, Nepal's near-upset against a top-tier team like South Africa has undoubtedly demonstrated their potential and belonging on the global stage.

There have been six instances of one-run wins in Men's T20 World Cup: South Africa (SA) vs New Zealand (NZ), Lord's, 2009; NZ vs Pakistan (PAK), Bridgetown, 2010; India (IND) vs SA, Colombo, 2012; IND vs Bangladesh, Bengaluru, 2016; Zimbabwe vs PAK, Perth, 2022; SA vs Nepal, Kingstown, 2024.

Teams with multiple 1-run wins in T20Is: SA (5), England (2), IND (2), NZ (2), Ireland (2), Kenya (2).

England out to dispel Euro doubts

AGENCIES

England's attacking arsenal sees them start Euro 2024 as the bookmakers' favourites to end a wait since 1966 to win a major tournament, but doubts persist over the Three Lions ahead of Sunday's opener against Serbia.

Gareth Southgate's men have won just one of their last five matches -- a run that includes a 1-1 draw with North Macedonia and a shock 1-0 home defeat to Iceland in their final warm-up match before flying out to Germany.

England are still expected to cruise through a group that also includes Denmark and Slovenia.

The biggest question over England's credentials to be European champions is at the back as injury has robbed Southgate of his settled back four from previous tournaments.

Harry Maguire failed to make the squad due to a calf problem, while Luke Shaw is included as the only natural left-back despite not having played any minutes for club or country since February.

John Stones is therefore even more crucial as the one experienced centreback at international tournament level, but the Manchester City man has also been dogged by fitness problems this season.

Kieran Trippier, a right-back by trade, is set to start against Serbia at left-back.

Crystal Palace's Marc Guehi is the leading candidate to partner Stones for his first major tournament start.

England's defensive deficiencies have already been exploited by Brazil, Belgium and Iceland in 2024.

And Serbia have the firepower to hurt them with their powerful strike pairing of Aleksandar Mitrovic and Dusan Vlahovic.

Vlahovic, who has scored 18 goals in 38 outings for Seria A side Juventus this season, is drawing inspiration from Iceland's 1-0 victory over England in a friendly at Wembley last week.

"No one is invincible," Vlahovic said ahead of Sunday's match in Gelsenkirchen. "We looked at the match against Iceland and there are things that can be copied from them, because they beat them at Wembley in front of 80,000 people. Everything is possible."

Southgate's paucity of options at the back are compensated by the abundance of weapons in attack. The quartet of Phil Foden, Jude Bellingham, Bukayo Saka and Harry Kane is the envy of Europe.

However, Southgate is still to find the right balance to help them perform on the international stage to the same level as they have for their clubs this season -- the quartet scored a combined 114 goals in club football in the 2023/24 campaign.

Germany strike balance, promise resurgence

REUTERS, Munich

Germany's young attackers sent a clear message that they are ready to lead the team into a new era, with 21-year-olds Florian Wirtz and Jamal Musiala putting on a sparkling display in their country's opening 5-1 Euro 2024 win over Scotland on Friday.

The two wingers scored the opening goals in the Group A victory, while Kai Havertz, 25, converted a penalty and substitutes Niclas Fuellkrug and Emre Can scored in the second half against the reeling 10-man Scots.

But it was Wirtz and Musiala who drew the eyes of the expectant, yet anxious, home fans who had been chastened by Germany's underperformance in the past decade - with the team going out of successive World Cups (2018, 2022) in the group stage and losing in the last 16 at Euro 2020.

Wirtz underlined his status as one of European football's most exciting young talents with his goal, having already tested goalkeeper Angus Gunn in the opening minutes of the match.

His 10th-minute strike was a perfect example of his play this past year, with 11 goals and 12 assists for Bundesliga champions Bayer Leverkusen, ghosting in at the edge of the area to power the ball home, despite Gunn getting a hand on it.

It meant Wirtz became the youngest scorer for Germany at a Euros at 21 years and 42 days old, beating the previous record of Havertz who was 22 when he scored at Euro 2020.

Musiala, who grew up in England and played for their youth team but then opted to represent the nation of his birth, got a much cleaner strike when he smashed the ball high into the net nine minutes later having been teed up by Havertz in the box.

The forward, given the prestigious No. 10 shirt by Julian Nagelsmann, is only 67 days older than Wirtz and ran Scotland's defence ragged with his deft technique while travelling with the ball, which has earned him the nickname "Bambi".

While stalwarts like keeper Manuel Neuer, 38, and captain Ilkay Gundogan, 33, are still in the starting lineup, there is a sense of a passing of the torch, particularly in the attacking area of the pitch where Germany have struggled in recent years.

They are ably helped by the precision passing of 34-year-old Toni Kroos. The midfield maestro, who will retire from playing after the tournament, had a 99% passing accuracy rate during his 80 minutes - though tougher opponents will come.

He has won a glut of titles at club level with Bayern Munich and Real Madrid and was part of the Germany team that won the World Cup in 2014. But helping to win their first Euro title in almost 30 years at home would be a perfect climax to his career.

Nagelsmann, who made history on Friday as the youngest coach at a Euros aged 36 years and 327 days, eclipsing Slovenia's Srecko Katanec, could have found the perfect balance between youth and experience to take his country to glory.

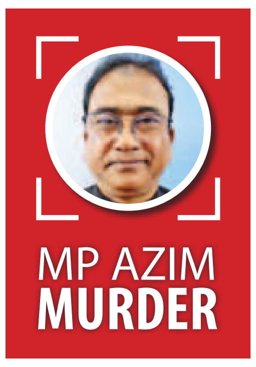
Political feud now comes into focus

MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN



Not only gold smuggling, political rivalry may have also been a key reason behind the murder of Jhenaidah-4 lawmaker Anwarul Azim Anar, investigators have said.

Two top leaders of Jhenaidah Awami League, Saidul Karim Mintu, the general secretary, and Kamal Ahmed Babu, the welfare affairs secretary, have been arrested. The former is currently on an eight-day remand while the latter is in jail after confessing to his role in the murder.

Referring to Babu's confessional statement made on Friday, investigators say that both AL leaders promised to pay the assailants.

Mintu desired to replace Azim as the lawmaker, they added.

After India and Bangladesh police on May 22 said Azim had been killed, Babu and Mintu visited the slain lawmaker's house and offered condolences to the grieving family members, they said.

The announcement of his death came 10 days after Azim went to Kolkata and remained traceless for over a week.

Besides, Azim made an enemy of his partner

Rain likely on Eid day

STAR REPORT

The Met office predicts rain in several divisions this week, including tomorrow, when Eid-ul-Azha will be celebrated across the country.

Light to moderate rain or thundershowers accompanied by gusty winds are likely to occur at most places in Rangpur, Mymensingh, and Sylhet divisions on Monday and Tuesday, said a weather bulletin from the Bangladesh Meteorological Department (BMD) yesterday.

Besides, parts of the Chattogram, Rajshahi, Dhaka, Khulna, and Barishal divisions may also experience light to moderate rain or thundershowers this week, it added.

The rainfall activity may gradually increase till Thursday, the BMD bulletin added.

Meanwhile, a weather bulletin from the Flood Forecasting and Warning Centre (FFWC) yesterday

Israel bombed and shelled Gaza yesterday, witnesses and first responders said, with fallout from the war bringing a resurgence of tensions to the Lebanon border and Yemen.

The bombardment came a day before Eid-ul Azha as most of the Muslim worldwide prepare to mark the occasion starting from today.

In the ninth month of the Israeli offensive on Gaza, the Civil Defence agency in Gaza City said they recovered 10 bodies from three separate homes after Israeli airstrikes pounded those.

In Rafah, in Gaza's far south near Egypt, witnesses reported clashes between militants and Israeli troops in the city's west, and artillery fire towards a refugee camp in the city centre. AFPTV images showed streets largely deserted.

The United Nations says about one million people have been displaced from Rafah since early May, when Israel began ground operations in the Palestinian enclave.

Israel's military has also been operating in central Gaza, where on Friday at a hospital in Deir al-Balah city a middle-aged man wept over the body of a younger man. Blood soaked through a white cloth around his neck.

Israel's offensive has killed at least 37,266 people in Gaza, mostly civilians, according to the health ministry in the Hamas-ruled territory.

Fears of a broader Middle East conflict have surged again, with Lebanon-based Hezbollah fighters, who are

ST MARTIN'S ISLAND

Crisis eases after essential supplies arrive

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Cox's Bazar

The food crisis on St Martin's Island has eased up after a tourist ship from Cox's Bazar delivered food and other essential supplies to the island early yesterday.

"The marginalised people are now being given the rice that was brought to us under the government's food assistance programme," said Mujibor Rahman, chairman of St Martin's Island.

"The prices of essential food items have now dropped as traders have brought a month's supply of food and necessities," he added.

However, locals are still unable to leave the island because communication with the mainland has been suspended for 10 days.

The chairman said if any medical emergencies arise, the administration will make special arrangements to establish communication with the mainland.

Over the last few days, several trawlers and speedboats had been fired upon from across the border when they reached the estuary of the Naf River.

American Red Palmer, Australian R2E2, Japanese Miyazaki, Brunai King Mango, Ivory Coast's Red Ivory, Thailand's "King of Chakapat" and many more – as many as 42 varieties of mangoes from four different continents can be found in one single orchard in Dhulti village of Pabna's Ishwardi upazila.

How? All thanks to young entrepreneur Mehedi Hasan Shibli.

A recent university graduate, Shibli has been collecting seedlings of fruits of foreign varieties, especially mangoes, since 2019. As a college student, he had an innate passion for expanding his orchard, which now is a profitable business.

"I first collected 19 varieties of mangoes and cultivated them at my orchard 'Matri Bagan' in 2019. Within a year, the plants began giving fruits, inspiring me to further develop my garden and nursery.

Tigers' chance to seal Super Eight spot

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh will be confident of making it to the Super Eight stage of the Twenty20 World Cup for the first time since 2007 as they square off against winless Nepal in the last match of Group D in the early hours on Monday.

The match will get underway at 5:30 am (Bangladesh time) at the Arnos Vale Stadium in Kingstown, the capital of Saint Vincent and the Grenadines.

The Najmul Hossain Shanto-led side are in pole position to go through to the next round -- behind group winners South Africa -- with two wins out of three. They started the campaign with a crucial two-wicket win against former champions Sri Lanka before going down by four runs against the Proteas – a result they would be looking back with some regret for some time to come, especially given that the Tigers have never

Wild horse species returns to the Kazakh steppes

AFP, Arqalyk

After a few hesitant steps following a long flight from Prague, three Przewalski horses galloped off for the first time into the Kazakh steppe -- the native habitat of this endangered species.

The horses emerged after being locked in containers for 20 hours and are the first of 40 which are to be released into the wild in this vast Central Asian country over the next five years.

"We have been waiting for this moment for a very long time," Albert Salemgareyev from the Association for the Conservation of Biodiversity in Kazakhstan told AFP.

"A lot of work has been carried out in recent months in order for the Przewalski horses to come to Kazakhstan."

The project run by the Prague and Berlin zoo is aimed at preserving this species of stockily built horse with large heads which share a common ancestry with modern domestic horses but are genetically different.

1.6m marooned in Sylhet flood

Major rivers swell amid heavy downpour

DWOHA CHOWDHURY and MINTU DESHWARA

Eid has not brought joy to many in the Sylhet region as homes of more than 1.6 million people were flooded and nearly 30,000 had to move to shelter centres.

Many families with children and elderly left their inundated homes and took shelter on roads with nothing but plastic sheets to protect them from rain.

"Flood water entered my home the night before the Eid. As the water rose, I left the earthen hut with my grandchildren and waded through knee-deep water to this road," 60-year-old Mosammat Begum, who was by the Sylhet-Bholaganj road in Tukerbazar area, told The Daily Star yesterday.

Her three grandchildren, aged less than 10, were with her under a shed the family built with plastic sheets and sticks by the road.

"We can see our hut from here. There is chest-high water inside. It may collapse anytime. Our food and belongings are already damaged," said the woman whose son is a farm worker.

Many families were seen by the side of roads in Sylhet, Sunamganj, Moulvibazar and Habiganj over the last two days.

On Sylhet-Tamabil and Sylhet-Bholaganj roads, people took shelter on empty trucks and lorries.

In vast areas and hundreds of inundated villages, dinghies are the only means to go from one place to another in monsoon.

Since many poor families do not have one, they are not able to move to government shelters.

Samad Ahmed, a farmer of Meghargao area in Sylhet's Companiganj, said he, his wife and children went to a primary school near their village the day before Eid, but it was already overcrowded.

"Then we went to a kitchen market where a shopkeeper let us stay in his shop," he said.

In Sylhet district, almost 75 percent of areas, including 23 wards of the city and 1,548 villages in 13 upazilas, have been

Air pollution caused most deaths in 2021

2.36 lakh people died in Bangladesh, says global study; children under 5 years particularly vulnerable

MOHAMMAD AL-MASUM MOLLA

Air pollution has become the leading cause of death in Bangladesh, outpacing fatalities from high blood pressure, poor diet and tobacco use, found a new study.

In 2021, at least 236,000 lives were lost in Bangladesh due to air pollution, according to the fifth edition of the State of Global Air report, which was released yesterday.

In contrast, there were 200,000 deaths linked to high blood pressure, 130,100 deaths linked to tobacco use and 130,400 deaths linked to poor diet.

Children in Bangladesh are particularly vulnerable to air pollution: the country ranked fifth globally in 2021 in the total number of deaths among children under the age of five due to air pollution.

As many as 19,000 children under five years old died due to air pollution, said the report, which was produced by the State of Global Air Initiative, a collaboration between the Health Effects Institute (HEI) and

Landslides kill 9 in Ukhiya camps

Seven of them Rohingyas; refugees being evacuated from hilly areas amid heavy rain

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Cox's Bazar

At least nine people, including seven Rohingyas, were killed in landslides, while another Rohingya died after the wall of his house collapsed on him, due to torrential rain in Cox's Bazar's Ukhiya yesterday morning.

Confirming the number of deaths, Mohammad Samsuddouza, additional refugee relief and repatriation commissioner, told The Daily Star that while landslides occurred in several camps, the deaths took place in camps one, eight, nine, 10 and 14.

Around 1.2 million Rohingyas have been living in 33 camps of Ukhiya and Teknaf of Cox's Bazar, most of them since 2017 after fleeing persecution by the Myanmar military.

"So far, 10 bodies have been recovered," Samsuddouza said, adding that two of the dead are locals. He also said refugees living in the risky, hilly areas are being evacuated.

Atish Chakma, deputy assistant director of Cox's Bazar fire service, said the landslides began early Wednesday and continued till 7:00am.

"We first received a message around 3:00am about several landslides at camp-9. We recovered two bodies there and then conducted another rescue operation at camp-10, where four members of a family were killed around 6:00am. At least 10 people have died."

Hamid Ali, a Rohingya of camp-10, said the hill near his house suddenly collapsed around 6:00am, killing the four family members.

"If tarpaulin was used on the hills slopes, the deaths could have been avoided."

According to sources of the Office of the Refugee Relief and Repatriation Commissioner, one person, whose wall had collapsed, died in camp-1; two were killed

SCORCHING HEAT

Hajj death toll surges past 900

AFP, Riyadh

Friends and family searched for missing hajj pilgrims yesterday as the death toll at the annual rituals, which were carried out in scorching heat, surged past 900.

Relatives scoured hospitals and pleaded online for news, fearing the worst after temperatures hit 51.8 degrees Celsius (125 Fahrenheit) in Makkah, Islam's holiest city, on Monday.

About 1.8 million people from all over the world, many old and infirm, took part in the days-long, mostly outdoor pilgrimage, held this year during the Saudi summer.

An Arab diplomat told AFP that deaths among Egyptians alone had jumped to "at least 600", from more than 300 a day earlier, mostly from the unforgiving heat.

flooded, directly affecting over 8.25 lakh people, said Deputy Commissioner Sheikh Russel Hasan.

While poor people are the most vulnerable, the comparatively well-off farmers also lost their stored grain to the flood.

In Sunamganj, homes of 5.6 lakh people have been flooded as the Surma flowed 145cm above the danger mark in Chhatak, 43cm in Sunamganj town and 21cm in Derai.

Deputy Commissioner Mohammad Rashed Iqubal Chowdhury said new areas were flooded yesterday.

Officials in Moulvibazar said nearly half of the district was flooded, affecting 1.93 lakh people.

Urme Binte Salam, deputy commissioner of Moulvibazar, said, "As more rainfall is in the forecast, we are preparing for an even more devastating flood."

In Habiganj, homes of thousands of people have been flooded and more villages are at risk as rivers have been swelling since Wednesday night.

The floods are caused as the Surma, Kushiyara, Manu, Dhalai, Kalni, and Gowain rivers have swelled, said Bangladesh Water Development Board officials.

In Sylhet, the Surma was flowing 94cm above the danger level at Kanaighat and 36cm in Sylhet city; the Kushiyara was 56cm above in Zakiganj, and 99cm in Fenchuganj; and the Gowain was flowing 5cm above in Gowainghat.

In Moulvibazar, the Juri river was flowing 199cm above the danger level in Juri; the Dhalai was 23cm above in the town; and the Kushiyara 20cm in Sherpur.

In Habiganj, the Khowai River in Chunarughat's Balla was flowing 131cm over of the danger level with 75cm in Habiganj's town and 21cm in Sayestaganj. The Kushiyara was also flowing 21cm above the danger level in Baniachang's Markuli with Kalni-Kushiyara 31cm in Ajmiriganj.

Officials say the rivers are swelling due to torrential rains in Meghalaya, which is upstream from Sylhet. The Indian Met office yesterday morning said it rained 111.4mm in Meghalaya's Mawsynram and 109.8mm in Cherrapunji in just 24 hours.

Besides, Sunamganj town saw 100mm rainfall, Habiganj 115mm, Sylhet city 94mm, and Moulvibazar's Sherpur 75mm.

The Met office in Bangladesh forecasts heavy and very heavy rains in Sylhet division, starting from today.

Officials said many areas were at risk of landslides.

US forces destroy eight Houthi drones in Yemen

AFP, Washington

American forces destroyed eight drones belonging to the Houthi rebels in Yemen over the past 24 hours, the US military said later on Tuesday.

The Houthis have been targeting vessels in the Red Sea and Gulf of Aden since November 2023 in attacks they say are in solidarity with Palestinians during the ongoing Israel offensive in the Gaza Strip.

The United States and Britain have carried out strikes in Yemen aimed at degrading the Iran-backed rebels' ability to carry out the attacks, while there is also an international military effort to intercept drones and missiles fired at ships.

fighting in Rakhine State, will feature prominently during the delegation-level meeting between Hasina and her Indian counterpart Narendra Modi.

The Bangladesh premier is scheduled to reach New Delhi in the afternoon tomorrow. On June 22, she will hold the delegation-level meeting centring on a new phase in the bilateral relationship, a diplomat told The Daily Star yesterday.

The two countries are finalising several agreements and memorandums of understanding that may be signed during Hasina's tour of India.

TEESTA PROJECT

The issue of funding for the "Teesta River Comprehensive Management and Restoration Project" will feature prominently in the talks, according to diplomatic sources in Dhaka and New Delhi.

The agreement was finalised in 2011, but could not be inked due to opposition from West Bengal.

The Economic Relations Division sought a $983.27 million loan from China to implement the Teesta project, which includes river dredging, setting up reservoirs and building townships along the river.

On October 13, 2022, then-Chinese ambassador to Bangladesh Li Jiming said his country was serious about implementing the project, but also had a sense of reluctance due to sensitive issues surrounding it.

During a visit to Dhaka on May 9, Indian Foreign Secretary Vinay Mohan Kwatra told Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud that India was interested in financing the Teesta project.

On June 13, Hasina told the parliament that the government was considering a proposal for a detailed feasibility study for the Teesta project as China's evaluation pointed out that there was a lack of detailed proposals on land development and water navigation.

"Our government needs to know whether India would sign the Teesta water sharing agreement because the river restoration and management project would depend on this," said Faiz Ahmad, a former ambassador of Bangladesh to China.

India and China also can fund different components of the project, said Ahmad, also a former chair of the Bangladesh Institute of International and Strategic Studies.

A diplomat in New Delhi said the two prime ministers will also discuss the renewal of the Ganges Water Sharing Treaty that was signed in 1996. The treaty is set to expire in 2026.

MONGLA PORT

India is keen to manage the Mongla river port, which is crucial for better connectivity between Kolkata and India's north-eastern states, said a diplomatic source in New Delhi.

According to a report in India's The Economic Times, India has shown interest in managing Mongla port as it aligns with the country's broader strategy to counter China's expanding influence in the region.

It should not be an issue if Bangladesh gives the port handling work to India, Ahmad said.

"Japan is already working on Matarbari deep sea port, and China can manage the Payra Port in Patuakhali. But we need to be careful so that we don't upset anyone by satisfying another," he added.

India is also keen to develop an alternative network of railway routes through Bangladesh to connect its northeast with the rest of the country. This would reduce India's reliance on the existing route through Siliguri, according to a report by The Times of India.

"Detailed negotiation on such projects is needed to know whether Indian trains will run on Bangladesh's territory and whether Bangladesh's trains can use India's territories," Ahmad said.

According to sources, India may in principle approve the supply of electricity from Bhutan to Bangladesh using its power grid.

India is also likely to push for defence equipment sales to Bangladesh under the $500 million line of credit.

Bangladesh will seek smooth supply of essentials like wheat, sugar and onions from India.

The two leaders may also announce the launch of formal negotiations for a comprehensive economic partnership agreement (CEPA), said Bangladesh foreign ministry sources.

The issue of border killings will also be on the agenda.

Air pollution caused most deaths in 2021

the Institute for Health Metrics and Evaluation's Global Burden of Disease project in partnership with Unicef.

India tops the list with 169,000 deaths in children under 5, followed by Nigeria (114,000), Pakistan (68,000) and Ethiopia (31,000).

"In the last 20 years, we have talked a lot about air pollution but when it comes to action, we rarely see any action -- even the interventions that we saw are very insignificant," said Abdus Salam, one of the reviewers of the study.

The study focuses on the danger of both indoor and outdoor pollution and the vulnerability of children due to indoor air pollution in Bangladesh, said Salam, a professor of chemistry at Dhaka University.

As much as 36 percent of preterm births in Bangladesh in 2021 were linked to exposure to air pollution.

Air pollution impacts children's health in many ways -- from pregnancy through early childhood -- through impacts on newborns including preterm birth, as well as through lower respiratory infections and asthma in children,said Pallavi Pant, head of global health at HEI.

The study found South Asia to be the most polluted region in the world in terms of air: about 18 percent of the total deaths in the region are linked to air pollution.

Bangladesh also featured in the top 20 countries with the highest outdoor PM2.5 exposures.

More than 92 percent of the country's population live in areas that exceed the least stringent interim target for PM2.5 (35 μg/m3) from the World Health Organisation, the report said.

Exposure to household air pollution caused by the use of solid fuels for cooking is also linked to the development of cataracts, a debilitating disease that affects many across South Asia, Pant told The Daily Star.

Across South Asia, residential solid fuel use continues to be an important contributor to outdoor PM2.5, together with energy, industry, agriculture and transportation sectors.

"It is promising to see progress including reductions in PM2.5 levels and exposure to household air pollution over the last few years. However, exposures to various pollutants remain high in much of South Asia, and the data brings into focus the need for sustained and science-based local and regional action to improve air quality," said Pant, who oversaw the report's release.

While there is a silver lining with the stabilisation and even reduction of annual average PM2.5 levels of air pollutants at the national level, another threat looms large: ozone pollution, according to the report.

For the first time, this year's report includes exposure levels and related health effects of nitrogen dioxide (NO2), including the impact of NO2 exposures on the development of childhood asthma.

Since 2000, deaths linked to exposure to ozone have more than doubled, with 15,000 deaths in 2021 compared with 6,200 deaths in 2000.

Traffic exhaust is a major source of NO2, which means densely populated urban areas, particularly in high-income countries, often see the highest levels of NO2 exposure and health impacts.

That figure brought the total reported dead so far to 922, according to an AFP tally of figures released by various countries.

Mabrouka bint Salem Shushana of Tunisia, in her early 70s, has been missing since the climax of the pilgrimage on Saturday at Mount Arafat, her husband Mohammed told AFP yesterday.

Because she was unregistered and did not have an official hajj permit, she was unable to access air-conditioned facilities that allow pilgrims to cool down, he said.

"She's an old lady. She was tired. She was feeling so hot, and she had no place to sleep," he said. "I looked for her in all the hospitals. Until now I don't have a clue."

Facebook and other social media networks have been flooded with pictures of the missing and requests for information.

Those searching for news include family and friends of Ghada Mahmoud Ahmed Dawood, an Egyptian pilgrim unaccounted for since Saturday.

"I received a call from her daughter in Egypt begging me to put any post on Facebook that can help track her or find her," said one family friend based in Saudi Arabia.

In addition to Egypt, fatalities have also been confirmed by Jordan, Indonesia, Iran, Senegal, Tunisia and Iraq's autonomous Kurdistan region, though in many cases authorities have not specified the cause.

A second Arab diplomat told AFP yesterday that Jordanian officials were looking for 20 missing pilgrims, though 80 others who were initially reported missing were located in hospitals.

An Asian diplomat told AFP there were "around 68 dead" from India and that others were missing.

"Some (died) because of natural causes and we had many old-age pilgrims. And some are due to the weather conditions, that's what we assume," he said.

After talks, Putin drove Kim around in a luxury Russian limousine. They then switched places and Kim drove Putin. Later, they watched a concert together.

Putin accused the United States, South Korea and Japan of raising tensions on the Korean peninsula and said North Korea had a right to strengthen its own defences.

Kim said the pact would expand cooperation in politics, economy and defence, calling it "strictly peace-loving and defensive" in nature.

"Our two countries' relations have been elevated to the new higher level of an alliance," Kim said.

At the start of their summit, Kim expressed "unconditional support" for "all of Russia's policies", including "a full support and firm alliance" for Putin's war with Ukraine.

Putin said Moscow was fighting the hegemonic, imperialist policy of the United States and its allies, Russian media reported.

"We highly appreciate your consistent and unwavering support for Russian policy, including in the Ukrainian direction," Putin said.

The countries' partnership was an "engine for accelerating the building of a new multi-polar world", North Korea's state news agency KCNA said.

Russia has used its warming ties with North Korea to needle Washington, while heavily sanctioned North Korea has won political backing and promises of economic support and trade from Moscow.

The United States and its allies say they fear Russia could provide aid for North Korea's missile and nuclear programmes, which are banned by UN Security Council resolutions, and have accused Pyongyang of providing ballistic missiles and artillery shells that Russia has used in its war in Ukraine.

On the third day of Eid, thousands thronged Dhaka's parks, historic places and other recreation centres. The National Zoo in Mirpur was abuzz with children's laughter and excitement. The capital yesterday was relatively empty as people have just started to return from their hometowns after spending time with family members. Meanwhile, a welcoming rain in the afternoon drenched the city.

The combined efforts of Dhaka residents and the two city corporations saw most part of the capital cleaned up within three days of Eid-ul-Azha.

Residents were also encouraged to dispose of animal wastes properly and keep surroundings clean with bleaching powder, and they were seen following the instructions in many areas.

"After sacrificing our cattle, we cleaned up the slaughtering area and left the wastes bagged by the roadside, which was then collected by conservancy workers quickly," said Mujahidul Islam, a resident of Shyamoli area.

Masum Ali of Narinda area echoed him.

Earlier, the two Dhaka mayors announced that they would ensure the city to be completely cleaned soon after the Eid.

Dhaka South City Corporation Mayor Sheikh Fazle Noor Taposh promised to clean DSCC areas within 24 hours and Dhaka North City Corporation Mayor Atiqul Islam announced to do so within six hours.

According to the city corporations' public relations departments, DSCC completed cleaning up 23,958 tonnes of

Eid vacation puts Dhaka at dengue risk

Many under-construction buildings, offices, educational institutes turn into breeding sources of Aedes mosquitoes

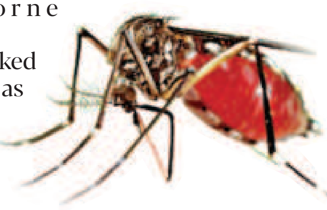
While Dhaka has worn a deserted look, giving some respite to the dwellers from traffic jams and usual hassles, the six-day holiday for Eid-ul-Azha has increased the risk of spreading dengue in the city.

During this time, many under-construction buildings, empty houses, offices, and educational institutes in the capital have turned into breeding sources of Aedes mosquitoes, causing the mosquito-borne disease to spread.



Experts asked city dwellers as well as city corporations to take effective measures, as intermittent rains during this time may exaggerate the situation.

Many under-construction buildings became breeding grounds because the owners or developers preserved water on the newly constructed roof to strengthen it.

A recent pre-monsoon survey by Directorate General of Health Services (DGHS), conducted from April 17 to April 26, found a high density of Aedes mosquito larvae in 29 wards of Dhaka South City Corporation and 12 wards of Dhaka North City Corporation.

Among the Aedes larvae-positive houses, 42.33 percent are high-rise buildings, 21.6 percent are individual houses, 21.6 percent are under-construction buildings, 12.74 percent are semi-concrete houses, and 1.73 percent are open spaces.

Among Aedes breeding sources, 18 percent were found in plastic drums, 15 percent in floors with retained water, and 14 percent in plastic buckets.

Meanwhile, according to DGHS data, at least 40 people died of dengue, while 3,218 were hospitalised across the country till yesterday morning.

"The chances of increasing new breeding sources are heavy as the holidays span around a week, which is a suitable time to create a new generation of Aedes mosquitoes," said Entomologist GM Saifur Rahman.

Full-scale rawhide trade yet to start

Tanners point at rain, delay in animal sacrifice

Full-scale rawhide procurement across the country has yet to begin due to rainfall and subsequent delays in animal sacrifices.

Tanners and merchants expect the salt-applied rawhide sales to gain momentum on Saturday, as seasonal traders are preparing them to be sold to the major haats after procuring most rawhide without salt from the field level.

Nearly 85 lakh pieces of cowhides are expected to be sold in 42 designated major haats across the country this year, said Aftab Khan, president of Bangladesh Hide and Skin Merchants' Association.

Khan also said nearly 20 percent of animals were sacrificed after two days of Eid due to inclement weather and rainfall, delaying the arrival of rawhide from the countryside.

In recent years, most of the rawhides have been bought either directly by tanners or by their appointed agents across the country. As a result, the traditional rawhide trading system through merchants has broken down.

"We have already bought eight lakh pieces of rawhide from Dhaka and its adjacent areas," said Shaheen Ahmed, president of Bangladesh Tanners Association (BTA).

Shaheen also said rawhides will be processed in rationing at the Savar Tannery Industrial Estate (STIE) in Hemayetpur, where the Central Effluent Treatment Plant (CETP) is situated.

The estate's capacity is not high enough to accommodate and process all the rawhide at a time, he added.

Annual production capacity of 140 running tanneries at STIE is 900 million cubic feet, while around 400 million cubic feet are produced there per year, he said.

However, during Eid ul Azha, over 200 million

ROHINGYA REPATRIATION

Current conflict in Myanmar may stall the process

WORLD REFUGEE DAY

While the World Refugee Day is being observed today across the globe, Rohingyas living in Cox's Bazar are still passing days amid uncertainty regarding their repatriation to Myanmar.

Around 1 million Rohingyas, most of whom had fled to Bangladesh facing persecution by Myanmar junta forces in 2017, have been living as refugees at camps in Cox's Bazar for the last seven years.

The ongoing armed conflict in Myanmar may stall the process of their repatriation, feared Rohingyas in Cox's Bazar.

Fierce clashes between Myanmar junta forces and rebel Arakan Army have been going on in Rakhine state along the Bangladesh border since February this year.

The Arakan Army has captured a vast part of the state including the areas once populated by Rohingyas before they faced persecution and displacement in 2017.

Many Rohingyas at Cox's Bazar camps are worried about a safe and dignified return to their homeland.

Mohammad Hossain, who lives in Camp-1, is one of them.

"Amid the ongoing clashes in Myanmar, I am not sure how our repatriation process might progress, while many of our brothers and sisters are in great danger there," he said.

Mohammad Zubair, chairman of Arakan Rohingya Society of Peace and Human Rights, said they want to be repatriated under the agreement with the junta government, not with the Arakan Army.

However, without a treaty with the Junta government, the agreement would not be valid, he also said.

cubic feet of rawhide are collected just within a week, which is half the entire year's production, he said, adding, "So, the rawhide will be tanned in three months and merchants and tanners will preserve them by applying salt during this period."

However, local tanners are compelled to sell the tanned hide mainly to Chinese traders at nearly 60 percent lower than international price level because of poor compliance at STIE.

The BTA chief also said they are selling the tanned hides at 70 cents per square foot, down from US $1.50 per square foot a few years ago, as the sector has been affected following the pandemic and Russia-Ukraine war.

The association has set a target to procure 80 lakh pieces of rawhide this year, 10 lakh lower than the previous one, said Shaheen at a press conference in the capital yesterday.

Robiul Alam, president of Dhaka District Hide Merchants Association, said around 25 percent of rawhide will get damaged this year due to not preserving them on time.

Currently, the CETP can treat 25,000 to 30,000 cubic metres of liquid waste per day. But during Eid-ul-Azha, the generation of waste climbs to 40,000 cubic metres as the number of rawhides shoots up.

Md Golam Shahnewaz, managing director of Dhaka Tannery Industrial Estate Waste Treatment Plant Company Limited, which runs the CETP, said various upgrades have been done to increase the CETP's capacity, and two ponds have been excavated for solid waste removal.

This will help curb the pollution caused by the rawhide processing, he added.

wastes within around 10 hours and DNCC cleaned up 20,105 tonnes of wastes in around six hours.

Visiting different areas in the capital on the second day of Eid, this correspondent found Agargaon, Farmgate, Kawran Bazar, Bangla Motor, Shahbagh, Segun Bagicha, Paltan, Gulistan, Wari, Tikatuli, Doyagonj and Gandaria areas clean.

The residents of those areas said they heightened their sense of responsibility towards managing sacrificial wastes this year compared to previous occasions.

"The city corporation provided poly-bags to residents and sanitation workers for waste collection. Individuals who did not receive poly-bags from the city corporations later purchased bags themselves and collected the wastes," said Rezaul Hasan, a resident of Agargaon Taltola area.

Some residents even took it upon themselves to clean the bloodstains left from animal sacrifices.

"Through proper planning, we managed to complete the task successfully on the first day, and even after sacrifices continued on the second day of Eid," said DSCC Mayor Taposh.

DNCC Mayor Atiqul expressed gratitude to the residents for their cooperation in cleaning up the wastes within the scheduled deadline.

However, animal wastes were still seen emanating bad odour in a few areas of the capital including Dinanath Sen Road in Gandaria, Dayanath intersection, Bangshal Road, and Sutrapur's Kagajitola area, where cattle markets were set up.

In this regard, Taposh said, "People sacrificed the animals at different times as per their conveniences. Therefore, after we cleaned up in different areas, many people disposed of wastes from animals slaughtered later. These are isolated incidents. The remaining wastes will be cleaned too."

Bikes, 3-wheelers

"It's very unfortunate that lately, motorcycle accidents have become more frequent. Looking at the accident data, motorcycles account for the highest number of accidents, followed by easy bikes. Reckless driving also plays a significant role. We can't ignore this. I urge the secretary (concerned) to expedite the formulation of a policy," he said.

The minister further mentioned that the lack of regulation for millions of three-wheelers and motorcycles is disrupting order on the roads, highlighting the urgent need for a policy.

Quader also noted that while the Eid journeys on roads have been relatively smooth, the return trips remain a concern.

"We must prioritise discipline to reduce road accidents," Quader said.

ASI among 4 bullet-hit in Narsingdi clash

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Narsingdi

Four people including a policeman suffered bullet wounds in a clash in Narsingdi Sadar upazila yesterday morning.

The incident took place around 11:30am at Najarpur, said Md Tanvir Ahmed, officer-in-charge of Sadar Police Station.

The injured are Joy Banik, assistant sub-inspector, Saiful Islam, Dawod Mona, and Faruk.

Mahmudul Kabir Bashar, resident medical officer at Narsingdi Sadar Hospital, said the four injured were released after treatment.

According to police and locals, there has been a longstanding dispute between two locals -- Ismail Hossain, vice-president of Najarpur union Awami League unit, and Shah Jahan Mona, former organising secretary of the same unit -- over establishing supremacy in Alipura area under Najarpur union.

Due to the dispute, their supporters locked into a clash yesterday.

Police rushed to the spot to control the situation but the four including ASI Banik suffered bullet wounds, the OC said. Additional law enforcers have been deployed in the area, he added.

"No one filed any complaint yet. We are investigating the incident and will take further steps after the probe," he said.

Some were given chance to loot: Rizvi

UNB, Dhaka

BNP Senior Joint Secretary General Ruhul Kabir Rizvi yesterday alleged that some individuals have been given the opportunity to loot in the name of "so-called" development.

"Some people have grabbed the land and property of ordinary poor people," he alleged.

The BNP leader said this while speaking at a demonstration in front of the BNP's Nayapaltan central office, demanding unconditional release of party Chairperson Khaleda Zia. He said the prime minister used to say not to spare anyone involved in corruption, but her government allowed former IGP Benazir Ahmed to leave the country.

"We don't know how much money Benazir's family has amassed here and abroad," he added.

He also said the prices of utility services and all commodities have risen due to the anti-people policies of the government.

He mentioned that people who went to their village homes to celebrate Eid-ul-Azha faced serious ordeals due to poor electricity supply.

"We want to return home with dignity and recognition of our ethnicity," Zubair said.

Visiting the camps arranged by the UNHCR recently, this correspondent witnessed the plight of Rohingyas living there in densely packed makeshift shelters made using tarpaulin and bamboo.

The heat wave was unbearable living under the tarpaulin, even though the camp area is now much greener compared to previously, said Mohammad Solim of Camp-4.

Over 2,500 hectares of forest land in Ukhiya and Teknaf had been cleared for building the Rohingya camps and to provide firewood for cooking.

To stop the deforestation, cylindered gas was later distributed among around 200,000 Rohingya families in the camps.

Simultaneously, under a reforestation project, greenery returned to around 700 hectares of land in the camps, according to UNHCR.

According to Unicef data, around 3 lakh Rohingya children now have access to education up to grade 10 taught in the Myanmar curriculum.

Per capita ration for Rohingyas was cut into phases from $12 to $8 per person per month 2023, before it rose to $10 in 2024.

Around 5,000 Rohingya youths have been provided life-skill trainings including sewing, plumbing, electrical, masonry, etc.

"We are happy that the Bangladesh government has given us safe shelters. However, we don't want to be burden to Bangladesh. We want dignified repatriation to Myanmar. We feel our lives are stuck in these dense camps," said Maulana Abdul Hamid, a Rohingya from Camp-1 East.

the treasury. However, I cannot say how many idols there are in total."

Recently, one Vishnu idol was found on April 13 and two more on May 17 and May 20 in Munshiganj. The discovered idols were deposited in the Munshiganj District Treasury. According to the news published in various newspapers, at least 12 idols were recovered from different places of Sadar and Tongibari upazilas of Munshiganj in 11 years from 2013 to 2024.

Afroza Khan Mita, regional director of the Department of Archaeology, said, "The Department of Archeology has written letters to the district administrators of all districts to know how many statues, inscriptions or other antiquities are there in the district treasury."

"After receiving information from them, we will arrange for the preservation of the antiquities through the court. Arrangements will be made to exhibit one or two idols at Idrakpur Fort Museum in Munshiganj," she added.

"This season of litchi has posed significant challenges due to adverse weather conditions and early harvesting. However, higher market prices have provided some relief to farmers," said Nuruzzaman.

For example, Mosaddek Hossain from Dinajpur Sadar upazila is selling Madrazi and Bombay litchis at Tk 350 to Tk 400 per 100 pieces, Bedana at Tk 8,000 to Tk 10,000 per 1,000 pieces, and China-3 litchi at Tk 12,000 per 1,000 pieces at the Kalitola market.

However, wholesale buyers from Dhaka, Cumilla, Bhairav, Ashuganj, Barishal, Khulna, Rajshahi, and Chattogram have expressed dissatisfaction with the high prices.

Officer in Tangail revealed that around 21,000 acres of encroached forest land had been recovered through drives till December last year. The drives are continuing, according to officials.

At present, social afforestation is being done on around 30,000 acres of the forest land.

Meanwhile, several organisations, including Bangladesh Forest Industry Development Corporation, Bangladesh Forest Research Institute, Bangladesh Army, and Bangladesh Air Force, have been granted permission to use a total of 15,342 acres of the forest land for various purposes in Madhupur, Ghatail, and Sakhipur upazilas.

Now, the natural forest remains on less than 40,000 acres. Environmentalists, however, claim the amount of remaining natural forest is even less than 20,000 acres.

Prof Asm Saifullah, a teacher of environment science and resource management department at Mawlana Bhashani Science and Technology University, said the Sal forest sustained significant damage over the years and prompt measures are necessary to restore it.

Contacted, Sajjadur Rahman, DFO in Tangail, said they are doing their best to protect the forest despite having a limited workforce and logistics.

"Cases were filed to reclaim around 14,000 acres of grabbed forest lands and the process to recover the rest is on. We need support from all concerned to this end," he added.

He said if there were monitoring cells to look after this, then the risk would be less. "But unfortunately, there is no such monitoring," he added.

Everyone who will return after vacation needs to carefully destroy all breeding sources and containers carrying stagnant water, Saifur also said, suggesting they use mosquito repellent to kill adult mosquitoes after getting into the house.

Similarly, educational institutions and offices must also take necessary initiatives to kill adult mosquitoes before starting activities, he said.

The city corporations can play a vital role here and spray mosquito repellent at educational institutes before classes start following a long vacation, Saifur said.

"Creating more awareness in this regard is very necessary, as dengue is a sustainable problem in Bangladesh," he added.

Saifur warned that the number of infections may increase after the vacation, and said city corporations will have to intensify their mosquito control activities.

Entomologist Kabiru Bashar said Aedes mosquitoes will breed at construction sites and under-construction buildings as construction activities are stopped for some time, so the buildings adjoining those sites and buildings are at very high risk and will have to be careful.

Residents of under-construction sites or buildings will have to take the initiative to destroy the breeding sources, he said, adding that kerosene or bleaching powder should be applied to stagnant water to kill Aedes larvae.

Idrakpur Fort: a museum without artefacts

TANJIL HASAN

Abdur Rahman Mustakim, a student from Narayanganj, visited the Idrakpur Fort Museum in Munshiganj with his relatives on Tuesday. While he was impressed by the fort itself, he was deeply disappointed by the museum's lack of antiquities.

"I traveled a long way expecting to see many traditional artefacts unearthed in Munshiganj," he said. "But there is nothing traditional in the museum. I expected something better."

Other visitors, including madrasa student Naeem, teacher Mizanur Rahman, and homemaker Sonia Akhtar, shared similar sentiments. They all demanded that the antiquities found in Munshiganj be exhibited at the fort museum.

Idrakpur Fort is a Mughal structure. According to the Archaeological Survey Report of the Department of Archeology (published in April, 2000), Mughal Subedar Mir Jumla of Bengal built the fort in 1660 as an outpost to guard the water route to Dhaka against the raids of the Portuguese and Mogh pirates.

The fort stands on the northern bank of the dried up Ichamati river in Munshiganj, 24 kilometers south-east of Dhaka.

Since the British era, the fort has been used as the residence of the sub-divisional officer and later, after independence as the residence of the district commissioner.

The fort complex also housed the district jail.

In 1993, the residence of the DC was shifted from the fort to a new place. After that, the jail was also shifted to a new building.

On March 19, 2022, the Department of Archeology established the Idrakpur Fort Museum in the old jail building. But there is nothing in the museum except some pictures and terracotta replicas. While visitors are enamoured by the more than 400-year-old fort, the museum leaves them bitterly disappointed.

Meanwhile, various ancient statues have been discovered at regular intervals in Munshiganj. But none of those artefacts are on display in local museums.

Sufi Mustafizur Rahman, professor of Archeology at Jahangirnagar University, said, "The Vishnu idols found in Munshiganj recently are from the 19th century. They are invaluable resources made of black basalt stone. Since there is a museum in Munshiganj, these idols should be kept there."

Omar Sharif Fahad, assistant commissioner (treasury branch) of Munshiganj District Administration office, said, "There are some idols in

Sal forest shrinking fast

Tree felling, land grabbing continue unabated

MIRZA SHAKIL, Tangail

The Sal forest under Madhupur National Park in Tangail is disappearing at an alarming rate due to unabated tree felling and grabbing of land.

According to the Forest Department, the Sal forest -- scattered across several districts including Gazipur, Tangail, and Mymensingh -- has a total area of 1,21,000 hectares, around 2.4 percent of the country's forest area.

In Tangail, the Sal forest cover is the largest in Bangladesh. In 1925, it was spread across more than 1,22,876 acres of land in Madhupur, Sakhipur, Ghatail, Mirzapur, and Kalihati upazilas, of which 58,206 acres were part of the reserve forest.

It was once home to diverse flora and fauna -- including tigers, bears, peafowl, and langurs.

Over the years, the decimation of the natural forest has allegedly been going on right under the nose of the authorities concerned.

In fact, a section of unscrupulous forest officials and community forest workers are assisting those destroying the forest in exchange for unethical personal benefits, locals alleged.

Around 25,000 people, including those belonging to ethnic minority communities, live in 41 villages in the vicinity of the forest in Madhupur upazila.

Around 26,048 acres of the forest have been grabbed in Sakhipur upazila and around 19,861 acres in Madhupur, according to the Forest Department's data.

"A section of foresters are helping vested groups to grab, clear, and turn a large part of the natural forest into commercial fruit orchards in the name of social afforestation," alleged Prince Edward Mangsang, a local resident.

Lawyer Jhon Jetra, a leader of the local Garo community, said compared to the extent of damage caused to the forest, the foresters' efforts are inadequate.

Meanwhile, hundreds of acres of the forest have been razed in at least 50 fire incidents in and around the forest in April and May this year. In most cases, miscreants set fire to the forest to collect firewood or to clear forest land for grabbing, locals alleged.

The Forest Department, however, blamed local population growth and their dependence on forest resources for their livelihoods as reasons for the forest destruction.

"Some locals are involved in tree felling and forest land grabbing. The forest guards find it difficult to take action against them with a limited workforce," said Abdul Hamid, ranger of Dokhala Range in Madhupur National Park.

Around 26,048 acres of the forest have been grabbed in Sakhipur upazila and around 19,861 acres in Madhupur, according to Forest Department's data.

Eid festivities cut short litchi season

PHOTO: STAR

KONGKON KARMAKER, Dinajpur

Although litchi is grown all over the country, the little red round spheres of sweetness coming from Dinajpur are renowned for their taste and flavour.

However, Dinajpur's litchi is experiencing a challenging season this year.

The season for litchi typically lasts between 45 and 60 days from the start of its harvest. However, this year's season is expected to be shorter as growers expedited harvesting to avoid transportation hassles before and after Eid-ul-Azha.

Mominul Islam, a wholesale trader in Dinajpur's Kalitola litchi market, expressed concerns about demand decreasing after the Eid festival as consumers' attention will be elsewhere during the festival.

Additionally, the suspension of truck services during Eid will complicate litchi transportation, prompting growers to hasten their harvest to ensure timely sales, said traders.

Despite the challenges, the litchi markets in Dinajpur are bustling.

According to Department of Agricultural Extension (DAE) officials, harvesting usually begins at the end of May and lasts for at least two months. This year, however, harvesting started about a week earlier, leading to an ample supply in the market.

Dinajpur's largest litchi markets, located around the Kotwali Police Station and New Market, are vibrant with activity.

Wholesalers from across the country are purchasing litchis in bulk and transporting them to their respective regions.

Some wholesalers even buy directly from the orchards.

The adverse weather conditions, including severe heat and lack of rain, have significantly impacted this season's litchi yield. According to Nuruzzaman, Deputy Director of the Dinajpur DAE, last year's production was around 30,000 tonnes.

Although this year's yield is lower, specific figures are unavailable. With over 5,500 hectares dedicated to litchi cultivation, varieties like Bombay and Madrazi have shown resilience, while Bedana and China-3 varieties have seen yields drop by 50 percent due to the prolonged heatwave and drought-like situation.

Besides, the large number of litchi orchards were affected by storms that hit several times this season.

The film's title song, Laage Ura Dhura, composed by Pritom Hasan with vocals by Pritom Hasan and Debosrie Antara, has particularly caught fire, trending on YouTube and further fueling interest in the movie. Rescue boat in dire need of rescue

MINTU DESHWARA

At a time when a life-saving equipment is so much in need, a rescue boat worth several lakhs has just been lying neglected in Sunamganj's Tahirpur upazila for nearly two years.

Local people, however, pointed to a lack of monitoring to the vehicle by the authorities concerned.

Aiming to deploy in the remote areas where rapid relief is crucial, two rescue boats, including Tangua-Sunamganj-1, was handed over to Sunamganj district in 2022.

But sadly, one of those vital resources Tangua-Sunamganj-1 is currently facing destruction due to mishandling of the authorities concerned.

In 2021, Ministry of Disaster Management and Relief built 60 such rescue boats for haor areas and different coastal districts.

Of those, eight boats were handed over to different districts the same year.

The following year, the other 52 rescue boats were handed over to different upazila and district headquarters, including two in Sunamganj Sadar and Tahirpur upazila.

During the flood in 2022, rescue boat Tangua-Sunamganj-1 was used for various purposes like distributing public and private relief among the flood affected and displaced people.

But since the recession of the flood water, the important life-saving equipment has been left abandoned in utter neglect.

While talking, a number of locals said after the flood in 2022 the boat was first anchored in the Boulai river in front of Shah Arefin Auto Rice Mill for a few days and then shifted to opposite to Tahirpur Police Station.

The rescue boat, which remained abandoned at the same place since then, went under water after the recent rainfalls.

The huge canopy of the 54-feet-long and 12.5-feet-wide boat has been torn down, while most part of its body, including the engine, is submerged under water.

Moreover, rusts have covered various metal parts of the boat due to prolonged exposure under the open sky.

One of the local residents Sadikur Rahman said though bought at a significant cost rescue boat Tangua-Sunamganj-1 is being destroyed due to the carelessness of the authorities concerned.

Tahirpur Sadar Union Parishad Chairman Junab Ali said during the flood in 2022 the rescue boat was used to send relief materials to thousands of flood-affected people in haor areas.

But it is so sad that such an important state resource is being squandered due to carelessness of the concerned people. Tahirpur Upazila Project Implementation Officer (PIO) Muhibur Rahman said maintenance work of the rescue boat will be very done soon.

This life-saving equipment is on the verge of ruin, thanks to the negligence of the authorities concerned. The photo was taken from in front of Sunamganj's Tahirpur Police Station.

Impactful Sakib needs

according to ESPNcricinfo.

Be it through words or his actions, Sakib has not made a secret of how he wants to operate in this tournament.

"I just want to be aggressive and execute my plans," Sakib had said after the Nepal win -- a game in which the right-arm quick was rewarded with the player of the match award for his career-best figures of four for seven and was also levied a 15 percent fine for code of conduct violation, relating to the confrontation he had with Nepal skipper Rohit Paudel during a fiery opening spell.

Interestingly, the inclusion of Sakib, who has now turned into one of the main heroes behind the Tigers' progression to Super Eight, was the major talking point following the T20 World Cup squad announcement. He was left out of the main 15 in the initial squad submitted to ICC, but a bold call from the Gazi Ashraf Hossain-led selection panel saw him make the cut ahead of Mohammad Saifuddin.

And even though he has not been majorly used in the death overs -- a phase where the selectors had predicted Sakib to be much more effective than Saifuddin – the youngster rose to the task of accepting the challenge of bowling with the new ball, something he has not done very often in white-ball cricket.

Generally, a skiddy customer for his slightly slingy action, Sakib has made use of the slow and turning surfaces in the Caribbean and the USA during this World Cup. The way he had two of the Nepal batters caught at point, and castled Quinton de Kock after trapping South Africa opener Reeza Hendricks in front of his stumps showed how his skiddy deliveries, getting slightly lower-than-usual bounce off the surface, can be a lethal weapon for the Tigers throughout the tournament.

Sakib was made to bowl four overs at a stretch against Nepal, and he ended up bowling 21 dots -- the highest number of dots in a T20 World Cup game till that point -- while giving away just one extra to give Bangladesh exactly the type of start they desperately needed in a game where they had to defend a paltry 106-run total.

What augurs well for Bangladesh is that Sakib is not having to do it all on his own -- with Mustafizur Rahman doing his job of bowling miserly at the death while also taking crucial wickets, Taskin Ahmed living up to his reputation, and young leggie Rishad Hossain setting the stage alight with his turn and control. And Bangladesh will hope for it to be the case for the remainder of the tournament, starting with the encounter against title contenders Australia in Antigua tomorrow.

and enhancing resource efficiency. Together with IFC, we are paving the way for a more resilient textile sector."

The partnership between IFC and EPIC Group will help the latter reduce its environmental footprint significantly, targeting a 65 percent reduction in GHG emission per garment produced by 2030 compared to the 2019 benchmark.

The textile sector contributes around 6-8 percent of total carbon emissions annually, out of which Asia accounts for about 60 percent.

At the same time, the sector is a critical source of growth in Bangladesh, generating around 85 percent of its export earnings, and is the second-largest employment generator in India, accounting for approximately 18 percent of the manufacturing jobs.

In addition to financing, IFC is providing EPIC Group with advisory support to help the company develop its environmental, social, and corporate governance capacity, as well as to meet its gender targets.

"IFC is committed to supporting a robust textile and apparel value chain across Asia," said Riccardo Puliti, IFC vice president for Asia and the Pacific.

The investment announced on June 17 builds on IFC's existing relationship with EPIC Group. IFC previously supported EPIC Group with advisory services on greener production and decarbonisation through the Global Trade Supplier Finance programme.

EPIC Group has been a pivotal force in the apparel industry with facilities in Bangladesh, Jordan, Ethiopia, Vietnam, and soon India, IFC said in the statement.

Established in 1985, EPIC Group is a trusted manufacturer and supplier to global retailers, offering advanced manufacturing, design, creativity, replenishment, and inventory management solutions.

Nvidia eclipses

Nasdaq to record highs, some investors worry that unbridled optimism about AI could evaporate if signs emerge of a slowdown in spending on the technology.

"It's Nvidia's market; we're all just trading in it," said Steve Sosnick, chief market strategist at Interactive Brokers.

Nvidia has also become by far the most traded company on Wall Street, with daily turnover recently averaging $50 billion, compared to around $10 billion each for Apple, Microsoft and Tesla, according to LSEG data. The chipmaker now accounts for about 16 percent of all trading in S&P 500 companies.

Nvidia's stock has nearly tripled so far this year, compared with a rise of about 19 percent in Microsoft shares, with demand for its top-of-the-line processors outpacing supply.

Tech giants Microsoft, Meta Platforms and Google-owner Alphabet are competing to build out their AI computing capabilities and add the technology to their products and services.

An insatiable appetite for Nvidia's AI processors, viewed as far superior to competitors' offerings, has left them in tight supply, and many investors view Nvidia as the greatest winner to date from surging AI development.

Israel may have violated

Witnesses and the civil defence agency in the Hamas-run Gaza Strip reported Israeli bombardment in western Rafah, where medics said drone strikes and shelling killed at least seven people, reports AFP.

The Israeli military has announced a daily humanitarian "pause" in fighting on a key road in eastern Rafah, but a UN spokesman said days later that "this has yet to translate into more aid reaching people in need".

The Rafah border crossing between Gaza and Egypt has been shut since Israeli troops seized its Palestinian side in early May, while nearby Kerem Shalom on the Israeli border "is operating with limited functionality, including because of fighting in the area", said UN deputy spokesman Farhan Haq.

"Fighting is not the only reason for being unable to pick up aid ... The lack of any police or rule of law in the area makes it very dangerous to move goods there," he said.

The health ministry in Hamas-run Gaza said yesterday that at least 37,396 people have been killed in the territory during more than eight months of offensive. The toll includes at least 24 deaths in the past 24 hours, a ministry statement said.

The offensive has sent tensions soaring across the region, with violence involving Iran-backed Hamas allies, reports Reuters.

The Israeli military, which has traded near-daily cross-border fire with Lebanon's Hezbollah since October, said late Monday that "operational plans for an offensive in Lebanon were approved and validated".

Yesterday, the military said its warplanes had struck Hezbollah sites in southern Lebanon overnight, while reporting a drone had infiltrated near the border town of Metula.

Russia ups attacks after 'lull': Kyiv

AFP, Kyiv

Russian forces have escalated attacks near Toretsk, a frontline town in eastern Ukraine that has remained relatively calm over recent months of fighting, officials said yesterday.

Ukrainian forces lacking critical manpower and arms have struggled to hold the line in the eastern Donbas region, which the Kremlin claims is part of Russia.

The military said in a briefing late Tuesday that Russia had "intensified" its assaults near Toretsk and "launched five assault operations at once," targeting surrounding towns and villages.

Military analysts reported Russian advances towards Toretsk.

One resident of the town, 67-year-old Oleksandr told AFP journalists by telephone that he had experienced an uptick in Russian bombardments, corroborating official reports.

India floods, heatwaves kill 11 people

Four buried alive in landslide

REUTERS, Guwahati

India was battling extreme weather yesterday that caused severe heatwaves, landslides and floods, killing at least 11 people this week, among them a woman and her three daughters buried alive in a northeastern state, officials and media said.

The capital, New Delhi, sweltered through its hottest night in six years on Tuesday, with hospitals in the city of 20 million reporting at least five deaths from heatstroke this week, the Times of India newspaper said.

Floods and landslides triggered by incessant rain in the northeastern state of Assam killed at least six people on Tuesday night, officials said.

"A landslide buried a woman and her three daughters alive," a disaster management official said.

"Their house was on a slope, and they died on the spot around midnight," he said, adding that the bodies were retrieved after a three-hour search operation by rescuers. "A three-year-old was killed too."

Billions across Asia are grappling with extreme heat this summer, in a trend scientists say has been worsened by human-driven climate change.

Israel ready for 'all-out war' in Lebanon

Say officials after Hezbollah releases threatening drone footage of the Israeli port city of Haifa

AGENCIES

Israel is ready for an "all-out war" in Lebanon and has plans approved for an offensive targeting Hezbollah, officials said.

The claims from Israel's foreign minister and military late on Tuesday followed Hezbollah's release of threatening drone footage. The climbing tension conflicts with United States efforts to avert an escalation amid months of low-level hostilities across the Israel-Lebanon border.

The nine-minute drone footage of the Israeli port city of Haifa filmed in daytime, showed civilian and military areas, including malls and residential quarters, in addition to a weapons manufacturing complex and missile defence batteries.

More than 400 people have been killed in Lebanon over the past eight months, with 25 deaths in Israel.

Israel's Foreign Minister Israel Katz responded vehemently in a post on X, calling out Hezbollah chief Hassan Nasrallah for boasting about filming the ports of Haifa, which are operated by foreign companies from China and India.

"We are very close to the moment of decision to change the rules against Hezbollah and Lebanon. In an all-out war, Hezbollah will be destroyed and Lebanon will be severely hit," he wrote.

Later, the Israeli military said in a statement that Ori Gordin, head of its Northern Command, which includes the front line with Hezbollah, has approved plans to mount a ground assault across Israel's northern border, reports Al Jazeera online.

"As part of the situational assessment, operational plans for an offensive in Lebanon were approved and validated, and decisions were taken on the continuation of increasing the readiness of troops in the field," it said.

Israel and Hezbollah have been engaged in border fighting since the start of the offensive on Gaza on October 7. The confrontation is increasingly expanding, with both sides saying they are ready to go to war. Nasrallah has said in the past that Hezbollah will only stop its attacks if Israel halts its invasion of Gaza.

Hezbollah recently said that it has carried out more than 2,100 military operations against Israel since October 8 in what it says is an effort to support Palestinians.

More than 400 people have been killed in Lebanon over the past eight months, with 25 deaths in Israel. At least 90,000 people have been displaced in Lebanon, and more than 60,000 have been forced from their homes in northern Israel.

Taiwan 'won't bow' to China's pressure

Says President Lai

AFP, Taipei

Taiwanese President Lai Ching-te said yesterday that China was attempting to force the self-ruled island into submission but that it would not bow to pressure.

China claims Taiwan as part of its territory and has said it will never renounce the use of force to bring it under Beijing's control.

In recent years, Beijing has upped military and political pressure on the Taipei government, with the latest show of force coming three days after Lai's inauguration, when China conducted war games around the island.

Speaking at a press conference marking his first month in office, Lai said: "The annexation of Taiwan is a national policy of the People's Republic of China".

"In addition to military force, they have increasingly employed non-traditional methods of coercion to try to force Taiwan into submission," he said.

"However, Taiwan will not bow to the pressure. The people of Taiwan will resolutely defend national sovereignty and uphold the democratic and free constitutional way of life," he added.

US lawmakers meet Tibet's Dalai Lama

Pressure China on talks

REUTERS, Dharamsala

A group of US lawmakers who met the Dalai Lama in India yesterday said they would not allow China to influence the choice of his successor, comments expected to anger Beijing, which calls the exiled Tibetan spiritual leader a separatist.

The remarks come as Washington and Beijing seek to steady rocky ties while India pushes China to secure lasting peace on their disputed Himalayan frontier, four years after a military clash strained ties.

The lawmakers also signalled that Washington would pressure Beijing to hold talks with Tibetan leaders, stalled since 2010, to resolve the Tibet issue, with a bill they said President Joe Biden would sign soon.

Although Washington recognises Tibet as a part of China, the bill appears to question that position and any change would be a major shock to Beijing, analysts said.

The bipartisan group of seven, led by Michael McCaul, a Republican representative from Texas, who also chairs the House foreign affairs committee, met the Nobel peace laureate at his monastery in the northern Indian town of Dharamsala.

"It is still my hope that one day the Dalai Lama and his people will return to Tibet in peace," McCaul told a public reception after the meeting.

Italy coastguard recovers six migrant bodies

Over 60 reported missing

AFP, Rome

Italy's coastguard said yesterday it had recovered six bodies after a migrant boat sank this week off the southern coast with more than 60 people reported missing, including many children.

Twelve people were rescued after the sailing boat sank around 120 nautical miles off the coast of Calabria overnight Sunday-Monday, although one of them died after disembarking.

GUARDIA COSTIERA

Italy's ANSA news agency reported that she was a 25-year-old woman of Iraqi origin.

The coastguard said yesterday it continued to search the area around the semi-submerged boat, which is still visible, on sea and in the air.

"Following the searches carried out so far, six lifeless bodies have been recovered," it said.

ANSA said they were four men and two women.

Doctors Without Borders (MSF) has been helping the survivors, who reported that 66 people had been missing after the shipwreck, "including at least 26 children, some of them a few months old".

Shakilla Mohammadi, cultural mediator for the medical charity, on Tuesday said those rescued were "traumatised, their pain tangible".

"I talked to one young man who had lost his girlfriend," she said.

"Entire families from Afghanistan are believed to have died. They left Turkey eight days ago and had been taking on water for three or four days," she added.

Biden relaxes visa rules in election-year move

REUTERS, Washington

US President Joe Biden on Tuesday announced a sweeping effort to provide a path to citizenship to hundreds of thousands of immigrants in the US illegally who are married to US citizens, an election-year move that contrasts sharply with Republican rival Donald Trump's plan for mass deportations.

At a White House event, Biden criticised Trump for separating migrant families at the US-Mexico border and using incendiary language about immigrants in the US illegally, including comments that they were "poisoning the blood of our country."

"It's hard to believe it's being said, but he's actually saying these things out loud. And it's outrageous," Biden said. "I'm not interested in playing politics with the border or immigration. I'm interested in fixing it."

The new Biden program will be open to an estimated 500,000 spouses who have lived in the US for at least 10 years as of June 17, officials said on Tuesday. Some 50,000 children under age 21 with a US-citizen parent also will be eligible.

Biden, a Democrat seeking a second term in the November 5 presidential election, took office vowing to reverse many of Trump's restrictive immigration policies. But faced with record levels of migrant arrests at the US-Mexico border, Biden has toughened his approach.

Earlier this month, the president barred most migrants crossing the US-Mexico border from requesting asylum, a policy that mirrored a similar Trump-era asylum ban and drew criticism from immigration advocates and some Democrats.

Chad ammo depot blaze kills nine

Dozens hurt

AFP, N'Djamena

A fire that tore through a huge military ammunition depot in Chad's capital N'Djamena killed at least nine people and wounded dozens more, officials said yesterday, warning the toll could rise.

The blaze, which started late on Tuesday, sent powerful blasts into the night sky and exploding ordnance shook buildings miles away.

Chad's Health Minister Abdelmadjid Abderahim told journalists that the toll was in danger of rising as many of the 46 wounded were in an "extremely serious" condition. A visit to the scene yesterday revealed unexploded shells and other munitions scattered on the ground.

Government spokesman Abderaman Koulamallah said the cause was not "criminal" but an investigation was under way.

Fast-moving floods in Sylhet raise alarm

Tens of thousands plunged into a crisis as flooding intensifies

The Eid holiday has not been the joyful experience that people in Sylhet and neighbouring areas had probably expected it to be thanks to the evolving flood situation there. The region was just beginning to recover from the flash flood that hit on May 29 and lasted until about June 8. But any relief experienced was short-lived, as a second wave of flooding has hit the region amid Eid celebrations after torrential rains combined with onrush of water from upstream India. Reportedly, large parts of Sylhet and Sunamganj districts have been inundated, affecting lakhs of residents. With a forecast of continued rainfall over the next two days, the situation is likely to worsen further.

Sylhet is particularly vulnerable. According to the district administration, 21 out of the 42 wards in the city have been flooded. Additionally, floodwaters have entered 102 unions in all upazilas of the district, inundating a total of 1,323 villages. The situation in Sunamganj is no better, as major rivers in the two districts continue to swell. With many vital roads submerged, and neighbourhoods under knee-to-waist-deep water, life has come to a standstill. Power outages and communication disruptions could further complicate the situation. Many are predicting a repeat or even exacerbation of the devastating flood Sylhet had experienced in 2022. Driving this fear is the fact that in the first 18 days of this June, Sylhet recorded more rainfall than the entire month of June in 2022. The total rainfall by the end of this month might exceed 2,000 millimetres, according to an estimate, setting a new record.

We don't need a reminder of the sufferings that this may result in. The authorities are doing what they can to help the affected but, clearly, they need to do more, both short-term and long-term. Beyond Sylhet, there are risks of flooding in a number of districts in Rangpur, Mymensingh, Barishal and Chattogram divisions. June, thus, is increasingly becoming a month of hardship caused by rains and mountain runoff. This is a challenge that goes beyond regular flood preparations, and with typical safeguards like embankments and polders too prone to damage, we must consider our long-term future. There is an argument, increasingly pertinent, about whether relying on what worked in the pre-climate-change era can stand up to the more intense flooding seen these days. Should we continue to try containing the formidable rivers and deltaic nature of Bangladesh through often-fragile structural defences, or should we go for a blended approach that balances the restorative and destructive powers of floods through proper adaptations?

We must explore these questions, and pursue solutions, with a more open mind. Right now, the priority is to respond properly to the fast-moving floods, particularly in Sylhet division, and minimise damage and suffering. The authorities must ensure that those stranded by water receive shelter, food, and drinking water.

We can't afford to lose UAE labour market

Govt must deal with irregularities in overseas recruitment

After the recent freezing of recruitment of Bangladeshi migrant workers in Malaysia, the possibility that job opportunities in the United Arab Emirates (UAE) might also be shrinking for our citizens is quite worrying. Losing a market like the UAE, from where we received the highest amount of remittance in the first 10 months of the ongoing fiscal year, would deal a severe blow to our remittance inflow, not to mention the many thousands whose lives rely on it.

According to a report by Prothom Alo, after Saudi Arabia, the UAE has the largest base of Bangladeshi migrant workers. In fact, more than 17 percent of our migrants are employed in the UAE, as per an estimate by the Bureau of Manpower Employment and Training (BMET). Between July 2023 and April 2024, we received more than $3.65 billion in remittance from the UAE—the highest from any destination country. Meanwhile, workers in Saudi Arabia sent $2.16 billion during the same period.

However, employers in the UAE are reportedly growing reluctant to recruit Bangladeshi workers due to fraudulent activities on our end, raising the chances of us losing a strong source of foreign currency. According to industry insiders, some unscrupulous manpower agents and agencies have been abusing a post-Covid provision enforced by the Gulf country that allows workers to enter the country on a tourist visa and then convert it to work visa through the recruiters. This has led to many workers getting cheated and stranded in the UAE with no work. Employers, too, don't want to risk getting fined for recruiting illegal workers.

It is a familiar story: fraudulent activities by agencies led to Malaysia freezing recruitment of Bangladesh workers, too. Over the past several years, many issues regarding overseas recruitment have been flagged and irregular activities regularly reported, with demands for appropriate remedies, yet the authorities have done little in this regard. Their inertia is leading us towards the potential loss of another key labour market, especially at a time when we need the precious dollars to replenish our dwindling reserves. It is, therefore, high time the authorities stopped dilly-dallying, and did what's necessary to overhaul our overseas employment sector by getting rid of rampant corruption and mismanagement.

On June 20, 1975, Steven Spielberg's thriller Jaws was released in theatres, and it was a huge success, essentially creating the genre of summer blockbusters.

Is the budget just another attempt at 'youthwashing'?

The recently proposed budget has been disappointing for job seekers, especially the youth. People expected allocations favouring jobs and quality education for young people, yet the announced national budget fell short in both aspects.

According to a recent citizen survey entitled "New Government, National Budget and Citizens' Aspirations" conducted by the Centre for Policy Dialogue, three top priorities were decent jobs (22 percent), quality education (17.5 percent) and social protection (12 percent). Among those who prioritised decent jobs, almost half wanted reduced unemployment, while one-third wanted increased job opportunities. This year's budget didn't reflect these priorities.

This is all the more surprising considering that the Awami League's 2024 election manifesto listed "ensuring job-oriented education and employment for youth" as the second most important focus. Moreover, one of this year' election campaign slogans was "The Power of Youth—Prosperity of Bangladesh." A decade ago, the 2014 Election Manifesto of Awami League also made bold claims that, "..illiteracy will fade away, educated and trained human resources will abound, [and] unemployment will be reduced to zero with crores of young people getting employed."

In fact, in the last 15 years, more than a dozen plans, policies, acts and rules have been introduced concerning the youth. The National Youth Policy 2017, National Skills Development Policy 2011, the Seventh Five Year Plan 2016-2020, the Expatriate and Overseas Employment Policy 2016, and the Overseas Employment and Migrants Act 2013—all have acknowledged and addressed the issue of youth employment. The A2i project has promoted the idea of the smart youth of Smart Bangladesh while the Department of Youth Development of the Ministry of Youth and Sports also has published a supplementary report entitled "Smart Youth, Prosperous Country, Bangabandhu's Bangladesh." Since January 2020, we have also adopted a specific plan of action for the implementation of the National Youth Policy 2017.

So why does a pro-youth budget still remain elusive? One explanation might be "youthwashing."

Speech writers and political event organisers are more than happy to make lofty pro-youth promises and encourage youth participation for the sake of good publicity and annual reports. Yet when it comes to delivering on promises, they are missing in action.

Youthwashing is on the rise. Take for instance the 2024 election manifesto of the Awami League. It painstakingly catalogued the government's achievements in youth development—over 13 million young individuals were provided with skill development training and close to a million young people are engaged in self-employment. We are told that, owing to various motivational programmes, training, self-employment projects, youth loan schemes, and poverty alleviation initiatives, there is a sharp decline in the unemployment rate from 6 percent in 2009 to 3.6 percent in 2022.

Yet, the reality is that the majority of our unemployed population is between 15 and 24 years old. Not only does Bangladesh have a double-digit youth unemployment rate of over 10 percent, the rate of people not in education, employment, and training (NEET) is also nearly double the global average of 21.7 percent.

According to Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics data, the share of youth aged 15 to 24 years who fall into the NEET category has increased from 28.9 percent in 2017 to 39.88 percent in 2022. Paradoxically, university degree holders also continue to suffer from a high rate of unemployment. But this is not a new phenomenon. A 2014 comparative study jointly conducted by theBritish Council and the Economist Intelligence Unit reported that nearly five out of every 10 graduates in Bangladesh were unemployed against approximately three out of 10 in India and Pakistan. Given the high NEET rate, Bangladesh's youth labour force is shrinking.

Therefore, an editorial in this paper from June 9, 2024, rightly concluded that the proposed budget for FY 2024-25 offers no hope or way out for the Bangladeshi youth.

Just like "greenwashing"—a practice by large corporations and governments to market their activities as sustainable or environmentally friendly, when in reality they do more harm than good—youth concerns in our national policy agenda have become increasingly tokenised for narrow political gains. Each year, we're presented with new empty slogans like "The power of youth, the prosperity of Bangladesh" (Tarunner shokti, Bangladesh er shomriddhi).

Various youth forums and groups have also proliferated, and our government has given space to these groups and forums in various national events. On paper, youth concerns are well-recognised in government policy and planning documents. Yet, they are not met with concrete actions, at least in the decisions that matter. Youth inclusion is yet to bring meaningful changes when it comes to employment and skills.

The so-called "youth inclusion" in planning documents on the one hand, and implementation failure of these plans and budgetary exclusion of youth concerns on the other raises serious questions about the true priorities of our lawmakers. Does the youth agenda have any value beyond serving as cheap ingredients for political campaigns?

Or is youthwashing only a symptom? Perhaps the broken interlinkage between education and employment despite the propaganda of youth power as the driver of prosperous Bangladesh is reflective of a more fundamental gap in policy making, i.e., the lack of credible and accountable political leadership.

That said, youthwashing is not unique to Bangladesh. Similar to exploiting the green agenda for popular publicity and rhetoric, politicians in authoritarian regimes are increasingly exploiting young people's voices but doing so in a performative way while de facto paying little attention to them, or failing to act on concerns raised by this group. But this practice is likely to be particularly costly for Bangladesh given that our first demographic dividend window will close between 2030 and 2042. Youthwashing must be resisted as a strategy for political elites to cover up underinvestment in education and employment.

Globally, the youth has had a long legacy of facilitating social transformation processes through active involvement in democratic uprisings. Future-focused movements such as fighting climate change have also attracted young voices who are collectively campaigning to save the planet and protect their future. Recognising their transformative potential, international development partners are also supporting concrete measures for youth policy development to facilitate young people's access to rights and social opportunities. The UN, too, recognises youth action as key to SDGs such as Quality Education, Decent Work and Economic Growth, and Reduced Inequalities. Given this recognition, young people must collectively bargain for their future and hold governments accountable for delivering jobs and quality education.

Bangladeshi policymakers, therefore, must not underestimate the youth's ability for public action, as evidenced in the nationwide protests demanding fair, quota-free access to public sector jobs in 2018. At a time of gradual democratic backsliding worldwide, the growing practice of using young people as popular propaganda tools must be challenged. Politicians must be held accountable for their election-time promises of reducing youth unemployment. We must not forget that young people are the main stakeholders of the Smart Bangladesh Vision 2041 as well as the Delta Plan 2100. It is time for them to take charge of the public campaign for the formulation of a "national youth budget" as well as a national strategy for youth employment.

WORLD REFUGEE DAY

A call for true solidarity with the Rohingya community

Hasina Rahman
is country director of The International Rescue Committee.

HASINA RAHMAN

This month, UNHCR, the UN Refugee Agency, published its flagship Global Trends Report, which has not brought any immediate hope to the world.

The report published on June 12 in Geneva found that forced displacement rose to 120 million in May 2024, marking the 12th consecutive annual increase—a result of ongoing crises and newly emerging and evolving conflicts. The figure would make the global displaced population equivalent to the 12th largest country in the world, around the size of Japan. One in every 69 people, or 1.5 percent of the entire world's population, are now forcibly displaced.

This is nearly double the one in 125 people who were displaced a decade ago. The increase to 117.3 million at the end of 2023 constitutes a rise of 8 percent, or 8.8 million people compared to the end of 2022—and is a continuation of the year-on-year increases over the last 12 years.

When every day, more people are facing forced displacement globally, the world's attention is rapidly shifting from one crisis to another. And unfortunately, globally, the focus on the Rohingya crisis is fading.

It has been seven years since the massive influx happened in 2017 and the Rohingya community was forced to flee their homes and leave their country—Myanmar—to come to Cox's Bazar for safety and survival. Since then, they have been enduring dire conditions in the camps. The entire population depends on relief and food aid. Young people are facing challenging situations, spending their time idly without quality life experiences. We can't imagine how their lives are in the camps.

In the last couple of months, around one million Rohingya have endured extreme heat waves, two fire incidents, and a cyclone. During the fires, many lost their shelters and had to live under the open sky. During the heat wave, they lived in tarpaulin shelters.

Besides these disasters, women and adolescent girls are experiencing difficult day-to-day realities. More than 80 percent of them face gender-based violence by their intimate partners. Child marriage is prevalent. They have limited access to justice and very often do not seek it. The safety and security situation in the camps is inadequate. Women and girls constantly live in fear.

A few days ago, I met Ramicha, a young girl in the Rohingya camps who loves creating henna art. When her neighbours ask her to apply henna, she feels happy to adorn the hands of young girls and women. She loves being appreciated for her art. Like Ramicha, over 400,000 children are living in the Rohingya camps. Despite the lack of things to do, children have found many ways to continue to laugh and live.

The Rohingya camps are examples of how, despite significant efforts from the Bangladesh government and international community, it is still far from sufficient to meet the basic needs of displaced people. The global scenario is not any better than this.

This is the situation in which the world will observe World Refugee Day on June 20, 2024. This year's theme, "Solidarity with Refugees," calls for actionable support beyond mere words. Solidarity means keeping our doors open, celebrating their strengths and achievements, and reflecting on the challenges they face.

We urge the global community to truly demonstrate solidarity with the Rohingya community, who are facing very difficult challenges every day in refugee camps.

International stakeholders, the philanthropic community and private sector actors should increase financial aid to these people so that more sustainable and impactful support can be provided.

While food, health care, safety, and fundamental rights must be provided, we must prepare them for the next phase of their lives. Education, livelihoods and skills development are crucial now to develop the young Rohingya population so that when they voluntarily return to their country, they will have the suitable skill sets to contribute economically and socially.

Recently, the conflict inside Myanmar has reached a new height. These conflicts are bringing countless human tragedies, and it must be brought to an end. The global community should put more effort into ending this conflict and bringing peace to Myanmar so that all the displaced people can return to their homes and live safe and dignified lives.

By taking these tangible steps, the global community can move beyond rhetoric to enact meaningful changes, embodying true solidarity with refugees and honouring their resilience and contributions.

The stakes are too high for the world to fail Palestine is executive director of the US-based Muslims for Peace, Justice and Progress, and the Bangladesh-based Women for Good Governance.

Ruby Amatulla

RUBY AMATULLA

Martin Luther King Jr said that injustice anywhere threatens justice everywhere. That warning has never been so relevant as today, when the global powers are themselves violating the rule-based world order established after the Second World War, with goals to avoid wars, maintain peace, uphold human rights, and assure security and justice to every nation-state and every people in this global society.

The horrible genocide in Gaza has slaughtered over 37,000 people—two-thirds of them women and children, injured over 85,000, and buried alive countless people under the 220,000 collapsed buildings in the tiny strip of land just 25 miles long and about five miles wide. This ethnic cleansing, and the crimes against humanity are being carried out with the full military and political support of none other than the US—once the architect, founder, and supposedly the de facto defender of the international rule of law. Such a monstrous injustice to a defenceless and long-persecuted people who endured ethnic cleansing by the settler colonial state, Israel, for the last 75 years under the patronage of the West, especially of the superpower of our time, is undoubtedly giving messages to the entire world that the "might is right" policy of the dark ages is back, and no one is safe.

The Rohingya genocide in 2017 occurred in Myanmar while global powers watched. Russia invaded Ukraine in 2022 and inflicted scorched earth destruction, mass murders, and inhuman atrocities. There are other examples of massive human rights violations by global powers. If the global community does not take measures to hold them accountable, the ultimate victim of this dangerously irresponsible pattern will be humanity in its entirety.

Washington's polished mask is removed, and its ugly and rotten state is exposed to the world as it repeatedly counters and vetoes resolutions at the UN General Assembly and the Security Council, cares little about world opinion, undermines the verdicts of the International Court of Justice (ICJ) and opposes the International Criminal Court's requests for arrest warrants against top Israeli officials including the Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu. These actions are sending alarms to the rest of the world that the world order based on universal principles is becoming dysfunctional. It is utterly disgraceful that the US Congress has invited Netanyahu to speak before a joint session.

Realising the stakes of the failure to address the current Gaza genocide, millions of people are coming to the streets to protest. They know that politicians and decision-makers operate in a socio-political environment that must be changed by the people.

It is a dangerous signal to many states and non-state actors who struggle peacefully and within the law because they believe the international community will effectively address their issues. However, as they see the present hopeless state of affairs, these people and organisations often resort to illegal and violent means, abandoning peaceful resistance.

On the other hand, authoritarian regimes and predatory elites all find encouragement in a lawless world in which they can promote their vested interests by exploiting, subjugating, and victimising countless people. The alarming rise in authoritarian regimes and dysfunctional democracies in the world is an outcome of vicious geopolitics created by the global and regional powers under the heavy influence of predatory elites.

The US President John F Kennedy warned the world, "Those who make peaceful revolution impossible will make violent revolution inevitable."

This explains the desperate events of October 7, when Hamas attacked Israel. All peaceful means have been systematically blocked for decades.

As Ilan Pappe, a renowned Israeli historian, clearly exposed in his work: terrorism did not exist among the Arabs in the Middle East. Terrorism was introduced to the region by the Zionist forces by creating fierce organisations like the Hagenah in 1920, the Irgun in 1930, the Stern Gang, and others later, all to terrorise the Palestinians to drive them out of their homes and homeland, where their forefathers had lived for centuries. The project of establishing a settler colonial state started more than one hundred years ago when the Palestinians were persecuted as these Jewish terrorist organisations were trained and armed by Britain and funded by the wealthy Zionist elites of Europe. Arabs were no match for the Zionist forces.

Israel was created in 1948 after destroying half of Palestine, perpetrating 31 massacres, and driving 750,000 Palestinians—then half of the population of the land between the Jordan River and the Mediterranean Sea—out of their homes and homeland to make space for the immigrant Jews from Europe.

Four decades later, after the Hagenah was created to terrorise the Palestinians, the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) was created in the mid-1960s. The Palestinians waited patiently and peacefully, hoping the international community would address their issues. When the oppression continued, violent resistance started its course from the state of utter hopelessness and frustrations for which the inaction or inadequate actions of the global community were responsible.

During the last few decades, especially since 9/11, the "War on Terror"—a two-decade-long Western military onslaught without addressing the root causes of grievances and inhuman sufferings of countless people of the region—has been enormously painful, deadly, unjust, and in the end most counterproductive.

These are all tactics and agendas of transnational predatory elites to exploit, subjugate, and vilify targeted people to serve their mutual vested interests. The Palestinians are the worst and longest victims of this heinous agenda.

The people in the top positions of the military-industrial complex of Western powers and big businesses are the strongest allies of the pro-Israel elites, who all collude with each other to consolidate their collective power, establishing "strangleholds" on many Western governments, most dangerously on the US government. It's not only the Palestinian people, but the whole world—directly or indirectly—who is a victim of this corrupt and repugnant state.

Today, the world is again at a crossroads. The enormously powerful transnational elites and their alliances are hijacking Western democracies and the international rule of law. On the other hand, the people of this global society are ever more determined to establish their rights and dignity. Two mega-confrontational forces are dangerously approaching each other—one for the rule of law and justice and the other for authoritarianism, exploitation, and subjugation of the masses.

Europe's might-right policy caused the two most devastating wars of the 20th century, bringing the world to its knees. That is why, right after WWII, the world leaders reached a consensus to establish the new world order in 1945. The international rule of law recognises the equal rights of all nation-states with respect to their sovereignty, territorial integrity, and security. Since the UN adopted the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in 1948 to mandate each member-state to uphold the rights, new optimism and vigour swept the world. As a result, 36 countries became independent during the post-WWII period, ending the colonial era.

The global rule of law ensures our collective well-being, freedom, and dignity. We, the people, are threatened when these universal ideas are undermined or trampled. The people of this global society are the stakeholders, and consequently, we all must fight to preserve, protect, and defend the world order that aims to help us achieve justice and peace.

Israel's fanatic and extremist government has already conflagrated the Middle East, a region where the global powers and the regional powers are increasingly getting entangled, each moving in their own way, failing to see the bigger picture and pushing the world "sleepwalking" into World War III.

A people-to-people global movement to restore the rule of law, reclaim democracies from the mouth of monstrous forces, and establish good governance that upholds human rights and sustains stability worldwide is the paradigm shift that is needed now, an imperative necessity for a healthy global community.

When violence hits home

Death of Bangladeshi youth in America is a Boston-based Bangladeshi writer. She works at Harvard Kennedy School and is currently pursuing a micro-master's in data and economics at Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT).

Sarzah Yeasmin

SARZAH YEASMIN

The police killings of Win Rozario and Sayed Faisal, Bangladeshi American youth, have been devastating for the diaspora. In both incidents, killing came as a response to a mental health crisis. Both Faisal and Win were shot as a response to non-criminal calls, when they needed help. The instances of non-criminal domestic disturbance calls ending in police killings are numerous. The American Public Health Association posits that police violence limits the minority community's ability to achieve good health outcomes. The rampant and poignant crisis of police killings is a case of double jeopardy for the Bangladeshi American community: the Bangladeshi community's help seeking behaviour is limited as mental health and help seeking are generally discouraged and stigmatised in a system that is disinclined to provide social support and health services particularly to communities living on the margins.

VISUAL: SHAIKH SULTANA JAHAN BADHON

Shahana Hanif, the first Bangladeshi American member of New York City Council and a leading progressive voice in the community, mentioned how there are many Bangladeshis serving the law enforcement establishment at different levels and before police killed Win, there was a dearth of critical discourse on police violence on minority communities. She mentioned that police officers are trained to de-escalate but they continue to harm communities of colour. The crisis for the community is intensified further when the city continues to cut funding for social services and go above and beyond to fund the police.

Bangladeshi Americans make up one of the fastest growing low-income communities in cities like New York. The long history of documented immigration of Bangladeshis goes way back but the recent profile of the Bangladeshi migrant community is defined by the migration pattern starting in during the third wave of Bangladeshi immigration post 1981, when more working-class Bangladeshis started migrating to major urban centres. This community experiences acute health disparities and neglect, coupled with high rates of discrimination and low social support—added to the stressors of being in a recently settled immigrant household. Lack of meaningful access to resources also derails help seeking in the community. Win's and Faisal's deaths should not be moments of reckoning for the Bangladeshi community only, but for the whole of America as the processes that led to these heartbreaking outcomes sit on matrix of systemic bias, neglect, discrimination, inequality, and model minority mindset where "positive" stereotypes of Asians as hardworking, docile and apolitical migrants pushes the South Asian and Bangladeshi diaspora in the United States to excel at the expense of meeting their needs.

The negative verdict on Faisal's case is not surprising: a Massachusetts judge found that the officer was justified in shooting Faisal. Oftentimes the rationale of self-defence, police being responsive to their training rules, overvaluation of police witness and narrative over non-police witness play pivotal roles in decision making. Bringing a criminal charge resulting in an ultimate criminal conviction in cases of police killings is an uphill battle—with bottlenecks on every step of the legal system that confirm systemic bias and provide broad impunity to the police.

Police also receive privilege under criminal law as they have special justification for use of deadly force. There are also broader political and cultural issues around law enforcement, guns and safety advanced by special interest groups, police unions and politicians that need to be considered to comprehend the intricacies around police violence. If the police officer "reasonably" believes that use of lethal force must be used to prevent harm to self or others, then that is seen as enough of a justification for violence resulting in death. The cost of police killing is not as well documented, but it is mainly borne by the victim's family and the health care system, in some cases the city government if the case reaches a settlement—very small percentage of claims ever reach settlement. Killing comes at a minimal cost to the police department as many cases are squashed in the administrative reviews and procedures. The officers responsible for killing are usually put on paid administrative leave or modified duty and are eventually reassigned. If there are any sanctions on the police officer, they are usually recorded as disciplinary expenditure on the police department budget—not categorised as cost related to the use of lethal force.

Law enforcement officers can only use life threatening force when responding to a threat or use of deadly force. Win had a pair of scissors and Faisal had a knife. Would holding a knife or a pair of scissors in the presence of police officers armed with high calibre weapons count as using deadly force? What relative capacity of harm do these weapons possess compared to a gun used by a trained police officer with far more capacity for harm and damage? Knife is considered to be a weapon of deadly force under the twenty-one-foot rule which posits that the holder of a knife can cover a distance of 21 feet in the time it takes to fire two shots. All such minute technicalities and rules stand in favour of the police officer who decides to use force. Did Win's and Faisal's reaction triggered through unaddressed mental health issues constitute grave danger for the police? Did the victims substantially provoke police's use of lethal force?

Pointing a weapon or something that reasonably looks like a weapon is seen as one of the most common triggers for the police to use their firearm. One detail about police misconduct is important to note: any police misconduct is counted as a single act of applying deadly force—if the first shot from the police's gun is seen as justified, then that covers all subsequent shots and use of force and justifies any additional aggression. Liam McMahon shot Faisal a total of six times—and regardless of how many times the police would shoot, if the first shot is concluded as a justified shot, so are all the shots, even though death rate is much higher in cases where multiple shots are fired. Number of gunshots has a predictive value for death. Therefore, there is no disincentive for the police officer to use additional force or shoot additional times that lead to deaths.

> Bringing a criminal charge resulting in an ultimate criminal conviction in cases of police killings is an uphill battle—with bottlenecks on every step of the legal system that confirm systemic bias and provide broad impunity to the police.

Recent innovations in monitoring police conduct are only making incremental and gradual changes. In my conversation with Tanvir Chowdhury, President of Bangladesh Association of New England, he mentioned how pleading for justice for Faisal pushed the Cambridge police to improve their policies, wear body cameras and led the city to consider alternate social service for emergency response. Regardless of minor innovations, issues of poor governance remain unaddressed, and the police continue to have major control over visual evidence. Public who film violence also put themselves at risk of being subjected to police misconduct—ultimately undermining non-police public witness narrative.

According to the US Bureau of Justice Statistics, the main reasons for the police wearing body cameras is to improve officer safety and reduce liability of police departments. However, small scale experimental studies have shown that the use of body cameras has the potential to improve police conduct. Video evidence has been pivotal for garnering public reaction, but it does not guarantee ease in bringing criminal charges or prosecution. Evidence would also not weigh in as much in instances where there are irregularities in disclosure. The bone chilling last moment of Win's life is recorded, the public can hear his mother repeatedly pleading to the police not to shoot her son. It is yet to be seen how public reaction and the video evidence of violence shapes the investigation and verdict in Win's case, but it has the potential to boost and prolong the campaign for justice. It was only in 2020 that Section 50-a of New York City's Civil Rights Law, which kept disciplinary records of police officers hidden from the public, was repealed after almost a decade-long fight. Any change is hard-won. While the avenue for criminal prosecution might be exhausted with the ruling in Faisal's case, Tanvir sees possibilities in civil litigation. The way Faisal was portrayed in the media in the aftermath of his undue death, caused his family severe distress. It is critical to pursue justice in the face of this gridlock to continue to honour and humanise our people.

Should the police be left out of the public safety plan then? Officers receiving training in de-escalation are quick to resort to lethal force, would calling the police for help entail an inevitable deadly outcome? Police violence, brushed off as a non-issue for the Asian and Bangladeshi community in America, has hit hard and hit home this time. For now, the only promise of change can be found in Win's and Faisal's families and communities that continue to fight for justice.

THE SHELF

Book-to-screen adaptations to look forward to in the second half of 2024

‘The Lord of the Rings: The War of Rohirrim’ will revolve around Helm Hammerhand, the legendary king who ruled Rohan about 183 years before the events of the ‘LotR’ trilogy, and focus on his struggle against the Dunlendings.

ADRITA ZAIMA ISLAM

The first half of this year has treated us with some truly amazing book-to-screen adaptations like Feud: Capote vs. The Swans, A Gentleman in Moscow, and Ripley. The second half is also unlikely to disappoint. Here are some book-to-screen adaptations to pack the rest of your year with.

House of the Dragon (Season 2)
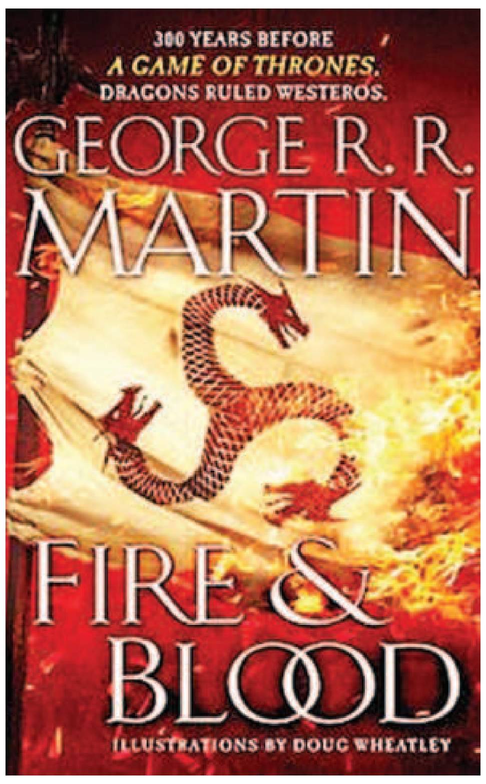
HBO, 2024
The first season of House of the Dragon left us in the thick of the brutal succession wars, the Dance of Dragons, that eventually led to the disastrous downfall of House Targaryen. The second season is set to pick up with the two warring sides scrambling to secure the alliances of the different noble houses in an attempt to solidify their positions. The final season of Game of Thrones and, in many ways, the first season of House of the Dragon (parts of the latter based on Fire & Blood by George R.R. Martin) left much to be desired. One can only hope this iteration will plunge fans back into the enthralling, gory world that we have come to know and love.



The Lord of the Rings: The War of Rohirrim
Warner Bros. Pictures, 2024
Peter Jackson’s The Lord of the Rings trilogy, based on the books by J.R.R. Tolkien, was revolutionary. It paved the way for fantasy adaptations in contemporary film media. Now, more than two decades later, we are about to be immersed back into Middle-earth by means of an animated film. The Lord of the Rings: The War of Rohirrim will revolve around Helm Hammerhand, the legendary king who ruled Rohan about 183 years before the events of the LotR trilogy, and focus on his struggle against the Dunlendings. The movie will expand upon events touched upon in Tolkien’s The Two Towers. An exact release date has not been announced yet.

The Uglies
Netflix, TBA
Scott Westerfeld’s Uglies series has had a cult following for nearly two decades. Set in a future, dystopian world where the government mandates cosmetic surgery on every citizen when they turn 16 to transform them into “Pretties”, Uglies explores themes of autonomy, individualism, societal segregation, and appearances. After years spent in development hell, the film has finally been announced to be released some time this year.

The Watchers
Warner Bros. Pictures, 2024
The best sort of horror, in my opinion, is always the claustrophobic kind. That was the primary appeal of John Krasinski’s A Quiet Place. The Watchers, adapted from A.M. Shine’s eponymous novel, promises a similar brand of horror. The film follows a group of people stranded in a bunker in the middle of a forest in Ireland, trying to keep themselves safe from mysterious creatures dubbed “The Watchers” as the tensions within the group edge towards boiling over. The movie was released on June 7, 2024.

The Sandman (Season 2)
Netflix, TBA
Based on the comic book series by Neil Gaiman, the first season of The Sandman was a masterful demonstration of how to adapt a story to a different media without compromising the integrity of its source material. The series follows Morpheus, the personification of Dream, and his adventures across various realms and his interactions with different characters. Unlike many other comic-based media, The Sandman does not indulge in the villain-of-the-week trope. It has a rich universe packed with fascinating characters and intricate lore that keeps the viewers wanting more. Season 2 is sure to follow in that same vein. A release date has not been announced yet.

INTERVIEW

A LOOK AT AAPI representation in tech with Kyla Zhao of ‘Valley Verified’

TASHNUVA SUMAIYA ISLAM

This week, Kyla Zhao, the author of Valley Verified (Penguin Random House, 2024), graced us with an exclusive interview to give us insights into the changing trends in Asian American literature. It follows the story of Zoe Zeng, a modern Gen Z woman navigating career challenges when she switches from being a high-end fashion columnist to a tech employee in Silicon Valley. As the story unfolds, the readers get to know more about women in the tech industry and the difficulties they face behind the glitz of Silicon Valley.

As a woman in the tech industry herself, Kyla shared her experience as a young employee and the challenges many women face in the workplace and the changing tides in Asian American books.

In this part of the world, a lot of people don’t know about the Asian American Pacific Islanders (AAPI) Month. Can you brief our readers on this event and its significance?
This lasts throughout the month of May, and is more of a concept in America. I’m not sure if it’s much of a concept in other western countries. Basically, it celebrates the AAPI community, our contributions to the world, and representation in the media. There wasn’t a lot of diverse representation in the past, and whilst it’s still not an ideal situation, we are starting to see a lot more coverage in the media of the AAPI community. That’s really heartwarming.

Has the statistics for Asian representation changed over the years or is it still lacking in many ways?
We’re definitely still in the minority. I think there has been a slight improvement in the numbers over the past decade, but we’re nowhere close to where we should be yet.

However, one thing I’ve started to see is that we are creating a variety of AAPI stories. In the past, one well-known work of Asian-American literature was The Joy Luck Club (1989) by Amy Tan. I adore the book and think everyone should read it. But many people started to think that’s the only kind of Asian story that could be told–it has to be an immigrant story which is quite sad and focuses on family trauma. For sure, those stories are valid because they speak about a very important part in a lot of Asian people’s lives. But we’re seeing Asians can also be part of joyful, uplifting, and upbeat stories. I think having variety in representation is incredibly important.

A lot of your audiences are Gen Z right now. How is the Gen Z female reader diaspora different from the readerbases we used to see while we were growing up?
I think Gen Z has invented the phenomenon of ‘girl boss’. Right now, there’s a trend on TikTok and social media to reclaim your girlhood. There’s a lot more willingness to move past the traditional roles of what women are supposed to look like and what they’re supposed to do. It’s still far from the ideal situation because I think a lot of Gen Z feminism is eurocentric. But, I think we’re starting to realise women can do whatever they want. If they want to go into the workforce, they can. If they want to be the girl boss, they can. They also can stay home and be a homemaker. Each approach is equally valid.

Literature or sadism: The bleak picture of trauma in ‘A Little Life’

ALIFA MONJUR

There are few novelists as cruel as Hanya Yanagihara—and in A Little Life (Doubleday, 2015), her pen draws blood. Nine years on, the controversy of the 800-page character study of an irreparably broken protagonist is still ablaze with accusations that it sadistically exploits trauma for profit.

A Little Life begins deceitfully enough, with four friends moving to New York after graduating university but as it tracks their lives for the next several decades, Jude St. Francis emerges as the black-hole centre of the story. At first, Jude is reserved and distant, a darkness amidst the friend group’s cosmic kaleidoscope of buzzing parties, dingy apartments, and bloodthirsty ambition. An enigma who divulges nothing, his friends know nothing about him, not even his ethnicity or how he really got the injury which frequently debilitates his legs.

But soon, with a growing ferocity, the reader is pulled into a horrific truth about Jude. Marred by an inconceivable childhood trauma that is he is unable to process, let alone confess or heal from, Jude sinks deeper into disturbing self-harm and self-hatred over the decades.

Yanagihara, a former Condé Nast Traveler editor, is a travel writer. She trades in storytelling that is so richly descriptive that the reader is transported to the deepest, darkest depths of Jude’s mind.

Jude’s character is written in such excruciating detail that you can practically feel him bleeding into the ink on the page; your own head echoes each self-loathing thought, every twisted conclusion. You sit powerlessly beside him on the bathroom floor as he slashes his own skin; you are locked in the room with his monstrous abusers as he relives childhood trauma.

A LITTLE LIFE
HANYA YANAGIHARA

ILLUSTRATION: MAISHA SYEDA

The intense connection that Yanagihara successfully creates between Jude and the reader is a rare literary feat. Written almost completely in third person, the reader does not become Jude but becomes someone who deeply cares and worries for him. And it is precisely this written excellence that earns A Little Life its controversy. At what point is writing so expressive, so raw, that it makes a dangerous spectacle of human suffering?

Equipped with a powerful reader-protagonist union, Yanagihara plays a cruel game. She dangles the hope of Jude’s recovery temptingly, only to snatch it away each time.

In the end, nothing will save Jude—not success, money, friendship, romance, not even parental love. He will fear those who love him unconditionally and will never believe he is worthy of genuine human connection. Being adopted at age 30 will not console the pain of being an orphan and the terrifying power he commands as an eminent lawyer has no strength against the demons at home.

Of course, I would’ve liked it better if the book ended just one chapter earlier, but literature is more than fan service, and Yanagihara intended, for better or for worse, to elicit the reader’s misery. A happy ending would have meant closing the book with a satisfied smile; it would not have left the reader with a mass of emptiness and pure anger for how Jude’s life turned out. That is why she not only wrote an ‘unfixable’ character but did so with brute maximalism.

Make no mistake, however, of reducing Yanagihara’s graphic writing to mere profit-seeking. Different literary representations of trauma, no matter how ugly or painful, are important. As philosophy professor Eliss Marder puts it, literature is how we communicate aspects of the human experience that exceed ordinary expression and may even exceed human understanding. Similarly, Cathy Caruth, a pioneer in trauma theory, has long considered literature a vehicle for witnessing what cannot be completely known. We cannot reject pain from public comprehension because it is difficult to stomach. For some, trauma is not a backstory from which they can turn away. For some, the world is relentless, unforgiving, and there is no greater purpose nicely weaved throughout to make it all worthwhile.

A Little Life is a tormenting read, but it is so much more than its brutality. Between the lines, Yanagihara sketches an exquisite portrait of human compassion and empathy. She writes most strikingly of friendship as unconditional love, selflessness, chosen family, and a deeply transformative human connection. Undoubtedly, Jude encounters vicious adversaries throughout his life that permanently scar him but the friendship he finds is exceptional. The fact that it still could not completely “save” him does not change the love and compassion he found in so many.

There is a reason why several chapters are invested for the development of secondary characters, and why the only time Yanagihara employs a first-person perspective is from someone who loved Jude unconditionally. These characters’ humanity rises above all and their stories regale the reader with a subtle warmth unlike any other: friends and readers alike end up considering it a privilege to help carry any part of Jude’s burden he allows, even when it is extremely taxing.

Much like A Little Life shows, all-consuming connection is not healthy, but it is profoundly human.

Can Tigers' batting thrive as a unit?

Australia have six wins to their name against Bangladesh's four in 10 T20Is. All four of the Tigers' victories came in Mirpur.

Bangladesh have never beaten Australia in the T20 World Cup, losing in five meetings.

Average first innings total at the Sir Vivian Richards Stadium is 118. Pacers and spinners have had similar experiences at the venue as both have conceded runs at less than seven an over. In this T20 World Cup, however, spinners have conceded more, 8.45 runs an over, than pacers (7.74).

Bangladesh pacer Tanzim Hasan Sakib has taken seven wickets in the Powerplay, joint-most with Afghanistan Fazalhaq Farooqi for most scalps taken in the first six overs in the tournament. Meanwhile, Mustafizur Rahman's 67 dot balls is the joint-most in the group-stage of the tournament alongside New Zealand's Lockie Ferguson.

At the batting front, Marcus Stoinis (10) and Travis Head (9) both are in the top five for most sixes hit in the edition so far. Towhid Hridoy is in the top 10 with six maximums.

Bangladesh all-rounder Shakib, who will be on a hattrick whenever he comes to bowl against Australia, needs one wicket to become the first player to take 50 wickets in T20 World Cup history. He is also two wickets away from becoming only the second player after Tim Southee (164) to take 150 scalps in the format.

ABDULLAH AL MEHDI

Bangladesh are set to step into the Super Eight stage against Australia on Friday at Sir Vivian Richards Stadium in Antigua, in what will be their biggest test so far in this T20 World Cup.

The bowlers have carried the Tigers through to this round, but from here on the batting will have to turn the tide of disappointments as the Najmul Hossain Shanto-led team look to make a case against far stronger opponents.

Australia, winners of the 2021 edition, have come to the Super Eights with a perfect record of four wins on the trot. They have largely not come under a great deal of pressure, and with Antigua providing some of the bouncier pitches in the Caribbean, the wicket may suit the Aussies against the slower cutters of Mustafizur Rahman, who has been incredibly difficult to hit so far in this tournament.

However, some rain has reportedly seeped into the proceedings, leading to an expected drop in zip from the surface than is the norm there. Yet, it doesn't provide much room for optimism for Bangladesh's batting, which has been in dire straits, often stretched too thin.

Despite having encountered two Associate teams in four matches, the top order is still looking for runs, with Tanzid Hasan Tamim showing some resistance on one occasion. Liton Das has not been in his elements, even though he looked good against Sri Lanka, while skipper Shanto remains entangled in a torrid run of batting form.

On top of that, Shakib Al Hasan's batting contributions have been sporadic. The onus thus falls too hard on the likes of Towhid Hridoy and Mahmudullah Riyad, who have often had to bat to stage rescue acts rather than playing their natural game.

Bangladesh's bowling plans have worked out magnificently, but the cue now begins for the batters to share the burden of responsibility. Up against one of the best in the business, what can Shanto and company do to leave a mark?

ASSESS CONDITIONS QUICKLY

If Bangladesh bowl first, there will be enough time for the struggling batting unit to come up with a plan, but the same cannot be said if they bat first. The Tigers have lost 10 wickets in the Powerplay across four games, making them wary of a collapse at the very top. Therefore, the opening pair needs to put on a more solid effort to keep the Australian pace attack at bay in the Powerplay. The Aussies have played all their games in the Caribbean and may assess conditions better than any other side, which does not exactly play into Bangladesh's hands.

BETTER SHOT SELECTION CAN BUCK TREND

The wicket is not the only issue behind batting failures. The Tigers also need to look at some of their shot selections. Bangladesh batters repeatedly played poor shots against Nepal, leading to a score of just 105. Shanto himself reverse-swept a delivery to slip against the Netherlands, while Hridoy was also at fault against Nepal, going for a slog sweep when the ball was not there for that particular shot. On these wickets, the batters need to show resilience and game awareness to maximize impact.

SOMEONE NEEDS TO CARRY THE BAT

Just how Shakib carried the bat against the Netherlands, one from the top order must put a heavy price tag on their wicket once they get set.

MORE LOWER-ORDER MOJO

Both Netherlands and Nepal fixtures showcased some beneficial mojo from the Bangladesh lower order. While being cautious with shot selection, the Tigers cannot forego aggression when required. Rishad Hossain got some crucial hits against Nepal, and so did Jaker Ali in the Netherlands game, but Bangladesh will hope that the frontline batters take the lion's share of responsibility against the mighty men from Down Under.

Foden promises 'improved' Bellingham partnership

REUTERS, BLANKENHAIN

After a shaky start to England's European Championship campaign that had critics questioning his starting spot, Phil Foden insists his partnership with Jude Bellingham will only flourish.

England, who sit atop Group C, face Denmark on Thursday in Frankfurt before closing out the group stage against Slovenia on June 25.

Foden was a headliner this past Premier League season, pouring in 27 goals for Manchester City across all competitions to win Premier League Footballer of the Year honours.

But lining up on the left of a front three in England's 1-0 win over Serbia, with Jude Bellingham occupying the central No. 10 position in which Foden has thrived with City, he drifted out of the game.

"Jude's obviously an exceptional talent," Foden said in a Football Association video. "He's a leader now, I think he's turning into a leader. I think our link-up play is good at times and I think it's improving as well, and can keep getting better. So he's an exciting talent and I enjoy playing with him."

While some chalked up Sunday's performance as just a bad game for Foden, it drew criticism from some pundits.

Former Spain midfielder Cesc Fabregas said players with Foden's talent have the quality to hold the ball anywhere on the pitch.

Spain and Italy face off to extend record Euro rivalry

REUTERS, DORTMUND

When Italy and Spain meet in Gelsenkirchen on Thursday, they will write a new chapter in what has developed into the most intense head-to-head rivalry in European Championship history.

No two countries have met more often at Euro tournaments than the Azzurri and La Furia Roja - the Red Fury - who will line up against one another for the eighth time since 1960.

It will also be the fifth edition in a row that the two heavyweights have met head-to-head at a European Championship.

- Italy have lost just one match in their last 10 meetings against Spain in Euros and the World Cup (W4 D5). The sole defeat came in the 2012 Euro final.
- This will be the 11th encounter in major events between Spain and Italy - Euros (8) and World Cup (3) – a record between two European sides.
- Alvaro Morata, with 10 goals, became Spain's second-highest goalscorer at major international tournaments (Euros/World Cup combined), behind only David Villa (13). The 31-year-old also netted his seventh goal at the Euros and only Cristiano Ronaldo (14) and Michel Platini (9) have netted more in the competition.
- Morata also scored against Italy in the semi-final of the previous edition.

Over much of the country's sporting history, Spain's fans looked enviously across the Mediterranean Sea as Italy racked up four World Cup titles and the Azzurri battled for European supremacy with the mighty Germans.

But of the three Euro crowns won by the two countries over the last four tournaments, two have gone to Spain, underscoring their rise as a soccer superpower that also saw them crowned world champions in 2010.

In the most recent European Championship showdown, Italy defeated Spain in a nail-biting Euro 2020 semifinal that went to penalties at Wembley.

In a last-16 encounter in 2016, Italy were again victorious when defender Giorgio Chiellini scored from close range and Graziano Pelle volleyed home in the dying moments for a 2-0 win.

But in their most important meeting in all competitions, Spain triumphed in the final of Euro 2012 when Vicente del Bosque's all-conquering team thrashed Italy 4-0 in Kyiv which remains the biggest win in a European Championship final

The stakes will not be as high in Thursday's Group B game at the Arena AufSchalke. Spain and Italy both won their opening matches against Croatia and Albania, respectively, and look well-placed to advance into the knockout rounds.

But if they finish first and second in the group, they could be on course for another meeting, this time in the final in Berlin on July 14.

SHORT CORNER

Williamson steps down as New Zealand

Kane Williamson has stepped down as captain of New Zealand's white-ball teams and opted out of a national contract for the 2024/25 season following the Black Caps' early exit from the T20 World Cup. Williamson's decision marks the end of an era for a New Zealand team which made the semi-finals of the previous three T20 World Cups and the 2021 final but ultimately missed out on a maiden white-ball title.

Suryakumar happy to temper aggression on slow tracks

Suryakumar Yadav has proved time and again the kind of havoc he can wreak with the bat but India's lynchpin believes being able to control that aggression is equally important on the slow pitches in the ongoing T20 World Cup. The group stage of the 20-team tournament, especially its U.S. leg, proved a low-scoring affair with no batter managing to score a hundred.

Junior AHF Cup Hockey: Men's team in semifinals

Bangladesh men's U-21 team continued their winning streak in Junior AHF Cup to ensure their semifinal berth with a 4-2 win over Thailand but women's U-21 side tasted their first defeat in a 3-0 loss to Chinese Taipei in Singapore yesterday. The three wins from as many matches means the Men in Red and Green topped Pool A with nine points, which also made sure of their place in Junior Asia Cup.

Spotlight on Messi, Endrick IN 48TH COPA AMERICA

AFP

World champions Argentina get an expanded Copa America under way on Friday morning with Lionel Messi looking to add a second continental title in what is almost certainly his final appearance in the tournament.

The 108-year-old competition is being held in the United States with the host nation among six teams from the CONCACAF region joining the 10 South American nations looking for a place in the July 14 final in Miami.

Whether this is Messi's goodbye to elite international football remains to be seen, but what is certain is that the eight-times Ballon d'Or winner would relish the chance to win a third straight major tournament with his country, having won the last Copa America in 2021 which featured 10 teams and the 2022 FIFA World Cup.

"It's great to have records and continue to achieve things but I won't take part in a World Cup just to say I've done six," Messi told ESPN last week.

After facing Canada, Argentina have Chile and Peru to deal with, but they know that tough opposition awaits in the knock-out stage with rivals Brazil and Uruguay the two expected challengers for the title.

Brazil have struggled in CONMEBOL qualifiers for the 2026 World Cup having won just two of their opening six games and they currently sit in sixth place in the standings having lost to Uruguay, Colombia and Argentina.

There are several familiar names missing from Dorival Junior's Brazil squad with Casemiro, Gabriel Jesus and Thiago Silva left out while Richarlison and Neymar are both missing due to injury.

The pressure will be on the Real Madrid attacking pair of Vinicius Junior and Rodrygo to translate their club form into success for the Selecao while there is much excitement around the senior tournament debut of 17-year-old talent Endrick, who is set to join Real next month from Palmeiras.

Meanwhile, 15-time winners Uruguay have impressed under 68-year-old coach Marcelo Bielsa, who has infused his high-energy style, raising expectations with wins over Argentina and Brazil.

Colombia, unbeaten in over two years, boast Liverpool's Luis Diaz and a rejuvenated James Rodriguez, making Nestor Lorenzo's team formidable.

The USA aim to regain momentum after a World Cup last-16 finish, while Mexico, Copa finalists in 1993 and 2001, look below par but enjoy strong support in the USA.

While FIFA will be looking closely at the organization of the event, two years out from the World Cup which will be co-hosted by the USA, Canada and Mexico, the tournament's rich history and prestige means it is much, much more than a 'trial event'.

- Copa is the oldest active international football tournament, having started in 1916, with Uruguay winning the first edition of the tournament.
- Argentina and Uruguay are the most successful teams in the Copa America, with 15 titles each while Brazil, another South American giant and the most successful team in the FIFA World Cup (with five titles) is second with nine titles.
- The Copa América which was held in the United States in 2016 to celebrate 100 years of the tournament, was the first edition of the competition that took place outside the South American territory and had featured 16 teams.
- The 48th edition of the tournament will be held in 14 cities across the United States, with each location hosting 2 or 3 games.

Russia, N Korea sign mutual defence pact

Putin says the deal will protect both countries from aggression; Kim hails new ties as 'alliance'

REUTERS, Seoul

Russian President Vladimir Putin yesterday signed a deal with North Korea's Kim Jong Un that included a mutual defence pledge, one of Russia's most significant moves in Asia for years that Kim said amounted to an "alliance".

Putin's pledge overhauls Russia's entire post-Soviet policy on North Korea just as the United States and its Asian allies try to gauge how far Russia could deepen support for the only country to have tested a nuclear weapon this century.

On his first visit to Pyongyang since July 2000, Putin explicitly linked Russia's deepening of ties with North Korea to the West's growing support for Ukraine and said Moscow could develop military and technical cooperation with Pyongyang.

After talks, they signed a "comprehensive strategic partnership" pact, which Putin said included a mutual defence clause in the case of aggression against either country.

"The comprehensive partnership agreement signed today provides, among other things, for mutual assistance in the event of aggression against one of the parties to this agreement," Putin said.

He said Western deliveries of advanced, long-range weaponry including F-16 fighters to Ukraine for strikes against Russia breached major agreements.

"In connection with this, Russia does not exclude for itself the development of military-technical cooperation with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea," Putin said.

Kim praised Russia for making what he cast as an enormously significant strategic move to support North Korea, which was founded in 1948 with the Soviet Union's backing.

Putin's courting of Kim, which has included gifts of limousines and a tour of Russia's new space launch centre, has alarmed the United States and its Asian allies.

Putin was greeted by cheering crowds lining the streets of Pyongyang along with children waving Russian flags and a military salute. Kim, 40, greeted Putin at the airport.

4 arrested over double murder in Bogura

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Bogura

Law enforcers arrested four people in Bogura town yesterday over the murder of two men two days ago.

The arrestees are Kabir Ahmed Mithu, 60, general secretary of Bogura Motor Workers' Union, Azbeen Rifat, 19, a Chhatra League activist, Naim Hossain, 28, and Sheikh Sourav, 26.

They are among the 13 named accused in the murder case filed with Bogura Sadar Police Station by Hena Begum, mother of Noman Ahmed Sharif, one of the deceased.

Noman and Rumman Ahmed were hacked to death in Bogura town's Chakarpara area around 12:30am on Tuesday.

The two were killed following an altercation over a trivial matter, said police.

Hena Begum also accused 15 unnamed people of the murder.

EPIC Group to get $100m loan from IFC

The company will spend funds on expansion in Bangladesh, new manufacturing facility in India

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

International Finance Corporation (IFC) will provide EPIC Group with a $100 million debt financing package to support its expansion in Bangladesh and the construction of a new manufacturing unit in India.

The package includes a $70 million sustainability-linked loan and a $30 million green loan.

Additionally, EPIC Group will use the proceeds to upgrade its washing and wastewater treatment plant and to invest in technology and equipment that will reduce energy and water use in Bangladesh, IFC said in a statement on Monday.

IFC's funding, which includes its first green loan with sustainability-linked features in the manufacturing sector, is expected to help EPIC Group create over 10,500 direct jobs and 17,000 indirect jobs in the two countries.

The loan is structured with three ambitious corporate sustainability performance targets, including reducing greenhouse gas (GHG) emission intensity, decreasing freshwater intensity, and increasing the representation of women in junior and middle management.

"Partnering with IFC is a significant step for EPIC Group in pursuit of a more sustainable and innovative textile manufacturing industry," said Ranjan Mahtani, executive chairman of EPIC Group.

"This collaboration not only allows us to expand our operations in Bangladesh and India but also reinforces our commitment to reducing our environmental footprint

Israel may have violated laws of war in Gaza

Says UN rights office; 24 more Palestinians killed as Israeli forces bombard western Rafah

- Tensions soar on Israel-Lebanon border
- Gaza death toll rises to 37,396

Israeli forces may have repeatedly violated the laws of war and failed to distinguish between civilians and fighters in the Gaza conflict, the UN human rights office said yesterday.

Separately, the head of a UN inquiry accused the Israeli military of carrying out an "extermination" of Palestinians.

In a report on six deadly Israeli attacks, the UN human rights office (OHCHR) said Israeli forces "may have systematically violated the principles of distinction, proportionality, and precautions in attack".

"The requirement to select means and methods of warfare that avoid or at the very least minimise to every extent civilian harm appears to have been consistently violated in Israel's bombing campaign," UN High Commissioner for Human Rights Volker Turk said.

Israel's permanent mission to the United Nations in Geneva characterised the analysis as "factually, legally, and methodologically flawed". "Since the OHCHR has, at best, a partial factual picture, any attempt to reach legal conclusions is inherently flawed," it said.

Meanwhile, Israeli air strikes and clashes between troops and Hamas fighters rocked Gaza yesterday, as Israel's army warned it had readied an "offensive" against the Lebanese Hezbollah movement on the country's northern front.

Nvidia eclipses Microsoft as most valuable company

Nvidia became the world's most valuable company on Tuesday, dethroning tech heavyweight Microsoft as its high-end processors play a central role in a scramble to dominate artificial intelligence technology.

Microsoft's stock market value was $3.317 trillion as its shares dipped 0.45 percent. Apple's stock slipped over 1 percent, leaving its value at $3.286 trillion.

Nvidia's stunning surge in market value over the past year has become emblematic of a Wall Street frenzy driven by optimism about emerging AI technology.

Impactful Sakib needs to carry on

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

It was an easy presumption to put Bangladesh's bowling as their main weapon ahead of the T20 World Cup, especially since the batters have provided very little to be excited about in recent times.

But, very few could have predicted Tanzim Hasan Sakib to be the Tigers' lead pacer in this tournament -- he is currently occupying the joint-second spot in the top wicket-takers' list alongside New Zealand's Trent Boult, Windies' Akeal Hosein, and South Africa's Anrich Nortje with nine wickets in four games.

However, what sets Sakib apart from the rest is the impact he has had with the new ball -- the 21-year-old has been the most impactful bowler in the tournament so far, with a bowling impact of 251.54

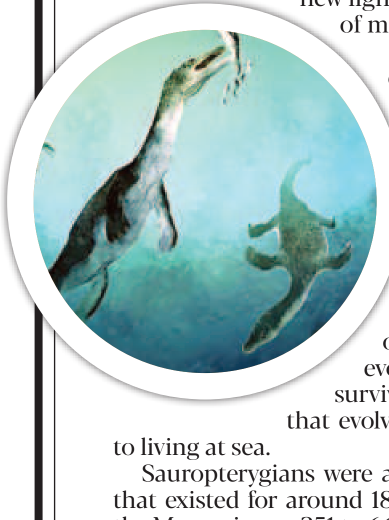
Reptile fossil shines new light on early marine evolution

CNN ONLINE

Scientists have discovered a 246 million-year-old marine reptile fossil, the oldest of its kind to be found in the Southern Hemisphere, shining a new light on the early evolution of marine mammals.



The greatest mass extinction event in the fossil record – known as "The Great Dying" – occurred some 252 million years ago, wiping out some 95 percent of species on land and sea.

What followed was the emergence of new creatures that evolved from those that survived, including reptiles that evolved from living on land to living at sea.

Sauropterygians were ancient aquatic reptiles that existed for around 180 million years during the Mesozoic era, 251 to 66 million years ago.

Nothosaurs were a type of Sauropterygian that lived on Earth during the Triassic period, the first period of the age of dinosaurs, 251 million to 200 million years ago.

However, their early evolution had only been known from fossils found in the Northern Hemisphere, according to the study published in the journal Current Biology Monday.

Sylhet floods worsening

Five lakh more affected

DWOHA CHOWDHURY and MINTU DESHWARA

The flood situation in Sylhet has been deteriorating fast with the rivers inundating vast tracts of land and upending the lives of millions.

An additional 500,000 people were affected yesterday as large parts of Moulvibazar and Habiganj got flooded.

Hundreds of neighbourhoods in Sylhet and Sunamganj districts were inundated the night before Eid.

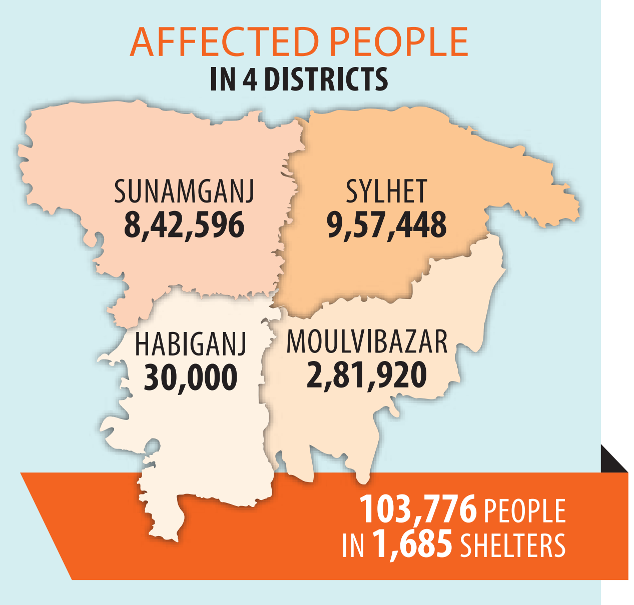
The number of people affected by the floods rose to 2.1 million, and 103,776 moved to 1,685 shelters.

According to Bangladesh Water Development Board, water level of the Surma, a major river in the region, fell a bit, but was still above the danger level yesterday while the Kushiyara swelled fast, crossed the danger level, and then started to fall slowly.

In Moulvibazar, the Manu, Dhalai and Juri rivers swelled fast and were flowing above the danger levels, while the Khowai in Habiganj and the Sari and Gowain in Sylhet were below danger levels.

Debojit Singha, additional divisional commissioner of Sylhet, said, "More areas are being inundated. Our focus is on relief efforts to ease people's sufferings."

Thousands of people in the districts were eating dry food as cooking was not an option in the flooded villages.



Balai Malakar, who took refuge at Dighli Govt Primary School in Chhatak upazila of Sunamganj, said his four grandchildren were refusing to eat flattened and puffed rice.

"The children are crying. They have not eaten a proper meal since early Monday. Besides, there is an acute shortage of drinking water," he said, adding that there was waist-high water in his village.

Officials said the government has provided adequate amounts of rice, dry food, baby food, and cash for people.

Sylhet City Corporation yesterday fed 32,000 people khichuri twice at the shelters.

In Moulvibazar's Shyamerkona area, Sadi Miah, 8, and Hridoy Miah, 17, drowned in flood water yesterday, said Akther Uddin, chairman of Chandnighat Union Parishad.

Zahid Faruk, state minister for water, told reporters in Sunamganj that the government had a project to dredge 20 rivers in Sunamganj to reduce flooding. The Surma is being dredged and all the broken dykes will be repaired by next monsoon.

The government postponed four Higher Secondary Certificate examinations in Sylhet until July 8.

Primary students drop by over eight lakh

Govt census cites Covid-19 fallout, declining birth rate and removal of duplicate student data as reasons

MOHIUDDIN ALAMGIR

The number of students in all primary-level educational institutions has decreased by over 8.32 lakh in 2023 from the previous year, a government report reveals.

According to the Annual Primary School Census (APSC) 2023, prepared by the Department of Primary Education (DPE), the number of students at just government primary schools dropped by over 10 lakh.

YEAR	PRY SCHOOLS	STUDENTS
2019	1,29,258	2,01,22,337
2020	1,33,002	2,15,51,691
2021	1,18,891	2,00,90,057
2022	1,14,539	2,05,46,091
2023	1,14,630	1,97,13,685

SOURCE: DIRECTORATE OF PRIMARY EDUCATION

On the contrary, the number of kindergarten and Ebtedayee madrasa students rose by around 2.56 lakh and 36,000 respectively, said the census, which came out this week.

Farid Ahmed, secretary of the primary and mass education ministry, said a dip in the country's birth rate and the DPE's new software, which removed duplicate student data, were two of the main reasons behind the drop in the numbers.

He added that some students moved to Qawmi madrasas after the Covid-19 pandemic due to financial struggles – another reason for the decreased number of students at primary schools.

The APSC-2023 data shows there were 1,97,13,685 students in 1,14,630 government and non-government primary schools, kindergartens, Ebtedayee madrasas and others last year.

In 2022, there were 2,05,46,091 students in 1,14,539 primary-level educational institutions, it added.

Dhaka, Delhi may sign rail transit deal

TUHIN SHUBHRA ADHIKARY

Bangladesh and India are likely to sign a memorandum of understanding for using each other's railway lines to boost cross-border connectivity.

The deal is expected to be inked during Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's two-day India visit starting today, Bangladesh Railway (BR) officials said.

As per the MoU, India will have access to BR tracks and Bangladesh will be able to use Indian Railways (IR) lines to operate passenger and freight trains up to Nepal and Bhutan borders, they said.

"An MoU on railway transit and transshipment is expected to be signed," BR Director General Sardar Shahadat Ali told The Daily Star yesterday.

Railways Secretary Humayun Kabir will accompany the prime minister to the signing ceremony, he said.

With the transshipment facility, Indian trains currently carry goods and passengers up to the India-Bangladesh border. From there, BR locomotives pull the coaches into Bangladesh and drop off passengers or unload goods before taking the coaches back to the border.

If India is allowed rail transit through Bangladesh under the new MoU, its trains will be operated from one part of India to another via Bangladesh.

The move comes at a time when India is set to develop an alternative railway network through Israeli forces pounded areas in the central Gaza Strip overnight, killing three people and wounding dozens of others, according to medics, while tanks deepened their invasion into Rafah in the south, residents said yesterday.

Israeli planes struck a house in Al-Nuseirat camp, killing two people and wounding 12 others, while tanks shelled areas in Al-Maghazi and Al-Bureij camps, wounding many other people, health officials said. Nuseirat, Maghazi, and Bureij are three of Gaza's eight historic refugee camps.

In Deir al-Balah, a city packed with displaced people in the central Gaza Strip, an Israeli air strike killed one Palestinian and wounded several others yesterday, medics said.

The Israeli military said on Wednesday forces were continuing their operations across the enclave targeting Hamas and military infrastructure in what it described as "precise, intelligence-based" activities.

CYBER SECURITY ACT

Man sent to jail over FB post

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Dinajpur

A man was sent to jail yesterday after being arrested under the Cyber Security Act over a Facebook post in Dinajpur's Hakimpur upazila.

The post was about the 30 percent quota for government jobs for children of freedom fighters.

Zahangir Alam, 43, a former employee of Hili Land Port, was arrested from his home in the upazila after Liakat Ali, former commander of the upazila's Muktijoddha command, filed the CSA casewith Hakimpur Police Station on Wednesday afternoon.

Dulal Hossain, officer-in-charge of the police station, confirmed that Zahangir was produced before a court, whichsent him to jail.

According to the case statement, his post, made on June 17, "belittled freedom fighters and their children" with regard to the quota system for government jobs.

It sparked widespread criticism and protests on social media, prompting Liakat Ali to file the case, the statement added.

HSC, equivalent exams deferred under Sylhet division

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government has decided to defer the upcoming Higher Secondary Certificate (HSC) and equivalent examinations under the Sylhet division in light of the prevailing flood situation in the northeastern part of the country.

All exams scheduled up until July 8 have been postponed under the Board of Intermediate and Secondary Education, Sylhet, Bangladesh Madrasah Education Board, and Bangladesh Technical Education Board, reads a press release issued by the Inter-Education Board Coordination Committee yesterday.

The exams on July 9 and subsequent exams will be held as per schedule, added the release signed by Prof Tapan Kumar Sarkar, chairman of the Inter-Education Board Coordination Committee and chairman of Board of Intermediate and Secondary Education, Dhaka.

The schedule for the deferred exams will be announced later, the release also added.

The HSC and equivalent exams set to begin on June 30 will proceed as planned elsewhere in the country, the press release mentioned.

In 2022, the government similarly postponed the SSC and later the HSC exams under the Sylhet division due to a worsening flood situation in the northeastern part of the country.

EXTREME HEAT

Hajj death toll tops 1,000

AFP, Riyadh

The death toll from this year's hajj has exceeded 1,000, an AFP tally said yesterday, more than half of them unregistered worshippers who performed the pilgrimage in extreme heat in Saudi Arabia.

The new deaths reported yesterday included 58 from Egypt, according to an Arab diplomat who provided a breakdown showing that of 658 Egyptians who passed away, 630 were unregistered pilgrims.

All told, around 10 countries have reported 1,081 deaths during the annual pilgrimage, one of the five pillars of Islam.

The figures have come via official statements or from diplomats working on their countries' responses.

The hajj, whose timing is determined by the lunar Islamic calendar, fell again this year during the Saudi summer.

The national meteorological centre reported a high of 51.8 degrees Celsius (125 Fahrenheit) this week at the Grand Mosque in Makkah.

According to a Saudi study published last month, temperatures in the area are rising 0.4 degrees Celsius each decade.

Each year tens of thousands of pilgrims attempt to perform the hajj through irregular channels as they cannot afford the often costly official permits.

Russia strikes Ukraine energy sites in 'mass' attack

4 killed; Romania to send Patriot missile system to Kyiv

AFP, Kyiv

Russian attacks overnight damaged a Ukrainian power plant and several energy facilities, Kyiv said yesterday, the latest in a series of bombardments that have pushed its power grid to the brink.

In the eastern Donetsk region, meanwhile, Russian cluster munitions and glide bombs killed four civilians and wounded four more in separate attacks, the regional governor said.

Targeted missile and drone attacks over recent months have crippled Ukraine's electricity generation capacity, and forced Kyiv to impose blackouts and import supplies from European Union states.

"The enemy attacked a number of energy infrastructure facilities," the energy ministry said, adding that the Russian projectiles targeted sites in four regions, including near Kyiv.

The largest private energy company in Ukraine, DTEK, said the attacks caused "serious damage" at one of its plants, without disclosing its location.

"This is already the seventh mass attack on the company's thermal power plant in the last three months," the company said.

Meanwhile, Nato member Romania announced yesterday that it would send a Patriot missile system to Ukraine, which Kyiv has requested to help its fight against Russia's invasion.

Ukraine's DTEK's CEO Maxim Timchenko echoed the calls for more military aid, and said the power plant struck early yesterday had already been damaged in a previous attack.

"We urgently need to close our skies or Ukraine faces a serious crisis this winter. My plea to allies is to help us defend our energy system and rebuild in time," he said.

Traffic collisions claim two lives in capital

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Two unidentified persons lost their lives in separate road accidents in the capital's Paltan and Jatrabari areas early yesterday.

Police said the victims, both middle-aged males, were likely vagrants.

A man, believed to be in his 30s, who was sleeping near the road divider at Paltan intersection was run over by a truck around 5:30am, said Abdul Aziz, sub-inspector (SI) of Paltan Police Station.

He was taken to the emergency department at Dhaka Medical College and Hospital at 6:20am, where doctors pronounced him dead, Aziz said.

"We have detained the truck driver and impounded the vehicle," he added.

In a separate incident, another man, believed to be in his 40s, was killed after being hit by an unidentified vehicle on the Jatrabari Flyover, said Sub-inspector Hiraman Biswas of Jatrabari Police Station.

On information, police recovered his body around 1:30am and sent it to the DMCH morgue.

Necessary legal steps are being taken regarding the accident, he added.

Cruise ship rescues 68 migrants off Spain's Canaries

AFP, Barcelona

A cruise ship rescued 68 migrants from a fishing boat spotted adrift south of Spain's Canary Islands with five bodies on board, Spanish authorities and the ship's operator said yesterday.

Rescuers were alerted on Wednesday afternoon to the vessel drifting in the Atlantic some 800 kilometres (500 miles) south of the island of Tenerife.

The cruise ship, the Insignia, was sailing in the area and was called on to head to the boat's location to pick up the survivors, Spain's maritime rescue service said in a statement.

It took on board 68 sub-Saharan African migrants, including three women and three minors, and recovered three bodies from the fishing boat. However, "bad weather" prevented it from collecting the other two bodies, the statement said.

Discussions on former DMP chief speculative

Ahmed, he said, "The value of land has increased significantly. Benazir Ahmed was on a mission for a long time. He might have an explanation. If he doesn't, then questions of corruption will arise."

Benazir has recently come under the spotlight due to reports of his unusually large amounts of property, including land, houses, and apartments, which are beyond his known sources of income.

Former DMP commissioner Asaduzzaman Mia has now come into discussion regarding his assets following a newspaper report published the day before Eid-ul-Azha.

It said the former senior police official's wife owns a house and two apartments in Dhaka, while his son owns a house and his daughter an apartment.

Additionally, his wife and children have 67 decimals of land in Dhaka, Gazipur, and Narayanganj. His family members collectively own another 166 decimals of land in these three districts, according to the report.

In response, Asaduzzaman Mia claimed in various interviews said all his assets were acquired through legal means and emphasised that his children are capable of acquiring the properties with their own lawful earnings.

Dhaka, Delhi may sign rail transit deal

Bangladesh to connect its Northeastern states with the rest of the country.

India plans to reduce reliance on the existing rail route through the Siliguri Corridor, commonly known as "Chicken's Neck", according to the Times of India.

The 22-km-wide strip, hemmed in by Nepal to the north and Bangladesh on its south, connects the seven northeast Indian states to the rest of the country.

According to a repot run by Times of India online on June 16, the planned project will feature 14 new routes connecting Bangladesh, spanning 861km, and alternative routes to the Northeast, bringing the total length of sanctioned tracks to 1,275.5km.

The initiative will involve gauge conversion of existing tracks and construction of new ones in Bangladesh, reads the report.

In November 2010, India and Bangladesh for the first time signed a transit agreement for waterways.

The two neighbours in 2015 inked a protocol allowing India to use four river routes via Bangladesh. The routes would link Kolkata and Murshidabad to Assam, Tripura and Meghalaya.

RAIL TRANSIT

Before the partition of India in 1947, there was seamless railway communication between different regions of India and Bangladesh through eight interchanges. Five of them -- Benapole-Petrapole, Darshana-Gede, Rohanpur-Singabadh, Biral-Radhikarpur and Chilahati-Haldibari -- have been revived in recent years.

During a high-level meeting with a BR delegation in April 2022, an Indian delegation discussed rail transit issues. Both sides agreed to work out the finer details and obtain necessary approvals from the authorities concerned, show documents.

Besides, the Indian authorities placed the transit proposal during then Bangladesh railways minister Nurul Islam Sujan's meeting with his Indian counterpart in New Delhi in June that year and the Bangladesh side agreed to examine the proposal.

Last year, Indian Railways put forward a proposal to the BR for carrying out trial runs of a freight train from West Bengal's Gede to Haldibari via Bangladesh.

The proposed route is Gede (West Bengal)-Darshana-Ishwardi-Abdulpur-Parbatipur-Chilahati-Haldibari (West Bengal).

Following an inter-ministerial meeting in May last year, BR sent a letter to Indian Railways seeking a comprehensive proposal with clarification. Indian Railways clarified saying it wants transit facility.

This year, IR has once again sent the proposal, through the Indian High Commission in Dhaka, for trail runs of empty freight trains. India this time proposed extending the route up to Dalgaon, a station near Bhutan border, from Haldibari of West Bengal.

WHAT BR SAYS

BR DG Shahadat said apart from Dalgaon, Bangladesh have sought access up to Hasimara railway station at Bhutan border.

This would enable BR to transport goods and passengers to and from Bhutan, he said.

At present, Bangladesh Railway can use Indian rail transit routes to Nepal only for transporting goods. Under the MoU, BR seeks to operate both freight and passenger trains, a BR official said seeking anonymity.

Replying to a question, Shahadat said a committee will be formed to finalise the modalities, routes, charges and other issues related to the railway transit.

"Making the railway transit routes operational will take more time."

He said both BR and the Bangladesh government would be benefited from the transit.

Asked whether BR infrastructures would be able to accommodate additional trains from India once the transit facility would be available, he said there would be no big problem.

There may be some problems regarding passenger trains as the Abdulpur-Parbatipur track is a single line. "However, the transit will be mainly for freight trains."

port, railway, and digital technology.

Hasina and her Indian counterpart Narendra Modi may also discuss the key issues on the Teesta management project, renewal of the Ganges water sharing treaty, trade and tariff, Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement (CEPA), Myanmar conflict and regional and sub-regional cooperation.

"This visit will give a vision for the bilateral relationship in the years ahead as well as how the two countries can work together amid new global geopolitical shift," said a foreign ministry official informed with the proceedings.

This will be Hasina's second trip to the Indian capital in less than 15 days. She attended Modi's swearing-in ceremony on June 9.

Hasina's visit, which is the first by any foreign head of government to India after the formation of the new government, takes place before her scheduled trip to Beijing on July 9-12.

Hasan Mahmud, foreign minister; Salman F Rahman, prime minister's adviser on private industry and investment; Ahsanul Islam Titu, the state minister for commerce; Zunaid Ahmed Palak, the state minister for posts, telecommunications and information technology; Abdur Rouf Talukder, Bangladesh Bank governor; Lt Gen Mizanur Rahman Shameem; Armed Forces Division principal staff officer; secretaries of Power Division, Economic Relations Division and railway ministry will accompany Hasina.

"The presence of the ministers and officials indicates the type of deals that might be signed during the visit," said a diplomatic source in New Delhi.

Hasina will depart Dhaka for New Delhi on a chartered flight of Biman Bangladesh Airlines at 2:00pm and reach the Indian capital at 4:00pm.

S Jaishankar, India's minister of external affairs, will call on Hasina at her place of residence in the evening.

On Saturday morning, Modi will host a reception at the Rashtrapati Bhavan for Hasina. After that, she will go to Raj Ghat to pay tribute to the father of the Indian Nation Mahatma Gandhi by placing a wreath at his Samadhi.

Later, Hasina will hold a one-to-one meeting with Modi followed by delegation-level talks at the Hyderabad House.

The two leaders will witness the signing of the MoU and agreements and then deliver press statements.

Hasina will then attend a banquet luncheon hosted by Modi.

In the afternoon, she will call on Indian President Droupadi Murmu at the Rashtrapati Bhavan and Vice President Jagdeep Dhankhar at his Secretariat.

She will depart New Delhi for Dhaka at 6:00pm. The premier is scheduled to arrive in Dhaka at 9:00pm tomorrow.

The census further said that over the years, Bangladesh has experienced a gradual decline in its population growth rate. In the 2011 census the population growth rate was at 1.46 percent, which dropped to 1.22 in 2022.

With the decline in population growth, the enrollment of students in primary schools began slowing down, it added.

The DPE's software -- Integrated Primary Education Management Information -- is a data storage and monitoring process that manages school management, teacher management, student management, annual census of primary schools, stipend management and annual book distribution activities.

It has significantly improved the cross-checking of multiple data, reducing the possibility of wrong or duplicate data entry of students.

"Due to this, the total number of enrollments declined in the APSC-2023 compared to APSC-2022," the census stated.

According to DPE sources, government primary schools saw a huge drop in the number of students in 2023, when there were 1,09,85,815 students in 65,567 government primary schools. The year before, there were 1,19,95,222 students in 65,565 of them.

On the other hand, the number of students shot up to 48,73,375 in 26,461 kindergartens in 2023, which was 46,08,679 in 26,478 kindergartens in 2022.

KM Enamul Hoque, advocacy adviser of Adult Education and Lifelong Learning in the Asia South Pacific, said the number of students in mainstream primary schools dropped as many guardians opted for Qawmi madrasas and English medium schools.

"Many families, especially from the lower socio-economic groups, suffered financial hardships due to the Covid-19 pandemic and so they shifted their children to Qawmi madrasas as the education expenses there are significantly lower."

DPE officials said that as Qawmi madrasas are not under any government authority regulation, they do not have much information in this regard.

Meanwhile, though the number of primary level institutions decreased in 2021 and 2022 owing to the Covid-19 fallout, it saw a slight rise again in 2023.

Last year, there were 1,14,630 government primary schools, kindergartens, NGO-run schools, Ebtedayee madrasas and other private schools in the country.

The number was 1,33,002 in 2020; 1,18,891 in 2021; and 1,14,539 in 2022.

is now focused on the two last areas its forces had yet to storm: Rafah on Gaza's southern edge and the area surrounding Deir al-Balah in the centre. The operations have forced more than a million people to flee since May, the vast majority already displaced from other parts of the enclave.

In Rafah, near the border with Egypt, Israeli tanks stationed deep in the western and central areas of the city stepped up bombardment, forcing more families living in the far coastal areas to flee northward. Some residents said the pace of the raid has been accelerated in the past two days.

Rafah housed over half of Gaza's 2.3 million people until May 7 when Israeli forces began the ground offensive into the city. Fewer than 100,000 are now believed to be left behind.

The health ministry in Hamas-run Gaza said yesterday that at least 37,431people have been killed in the territory during more than eight months of offensive. The toll includes at least 35 deaths in the past 24 hours, a ministry statement said.

There has been no sign of let-up in the fighting as efforts by international mediators, backed by the United States, have failed to persuade Israel and Hamas to agree to a ceasefire.

The armed wings of Hamas and Islamic Jihad said fighters battled Israeli forces with anti-tank rockets and mortar bombs, and have in some areas detonated pre-planted explosive devices against army units.

Yesterday, Israeli authorities freed 33 Palestinians who had been detained during the past months by Israeli forces in different areas of the enclave. The freed detainees were admitted into Al-Aqsa Hospital in Deir Al-Balah in the central Gaza Strip after they complained of torture and mistreatment by Israeli jailers.

Israel denies mistreatment of Palestinian detainees. Palestinian and international human rights groups have criticised what they say is Israel's ill-treatment of Gaza detainees and repeatedly demanded it disclose their whereabouts and information about their well-being.

Monsoon triggers landslide threat

The risk of landslides looms large for thousands living on foothills in Sylhet, Cox's Bazar and Chattogram amid the ongoing monsoon rain. Unabated hill razing has heightened the danger. Experts have warned that the situation resembles a ticking time bomb and anything can happen at any time if people living on foothills are not evacuated immediately.

6,558 families live illegally on Ctg hills

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

At least 6,558 families are still living on 26 hills in various parts of Chattogram city, violating the law and endangering the hills, according to the Hill Management Committee of Chattogram.

The committee revealed the data at its 28th meeting at the Circuit House in the port city yesterday.

At the meeting, Tofayel Islam, convener of the committee and divisional commissioner of Chattogram, asked the authorities concerned, including Power Development Board, to disconnect utility services within the next 15 days.

Over 20,000 people currently reside on these hills, which are being subjected to indiscriminate hill razing, said Abul Basar Mohammad Fakhruzzaman, deputy commissioner of Chattogram.

According to documents revealed in the meeting, most of the families live on seven hills owned by Bangladesh Railway.

When asked, Sujan Chowdhury, estate officer (east) of BR, claimed that they have removed over 1,700 illegal structures from these hills in the past two years, but no action has been able to deter grabbers, as people just return to the hills following evacuation drives.

Fakhruzzaman claimed that they evacuated grabbers from three state-owned hills recently. "We fenced these hills to protect them from grabbers," he added.

At the meeting, participants demanded that the administration make life imprisonment the sentence for hill-cutting.

CAMPAIGN ONGOING TO EVACUATE HILL RESIDENTS TO SAFETY

Meanwhile, the Chattogram district administration has started a publicity campaign in different hills to raise awareness among people about hillslides during the monsoon. A total of six teams, led by executive magistrates, have been campaigning through loudspeakers and asking people living on risky hill slopes to evacuate their homes and come to the shelter centres.

Campaigns were conducted in the hills near Akbar Shah Jheel areas, Bijaynagar Hill, Shantinagar Hill, Tankir Pahar, Paharika, Ambagan, Debarpar, and Railway Hill areas in the city.

Tanvir-al-Nasif, additional deputy commissioner (land acquisition) of Chattogram District Administration, said according to the forecast, heavy showers will continue for the next two to three days, so we have taken preparations to evacuate the people living on risky hill slopes."

The schools, colleges, and madrasa buildings are ready to be used as shelter centres in the respective areas.

Yusuf Hasan, executive magistrate of AC Land (Chandgaon circle), said the district administration has allocated dry food for the people taking shelter there.

Thousands living in landslide fear in Moulvibazar, Habiganj

MINTU DESHWARA

Suleman Ali, a resident of Dahpara village in Juri upazila, Moulvibazar, lives in fear after parts of his house were damaged by a recent landslide from a nearby hill.

"We are living in constant fear amid the looming threat of landslides. The persistent rainfall and flooding are exacerbating the situation further. We are desperately seeking a way out of this situation," he said.

Jashim Uddin, 35, from Saheb Tila village in Rajnagor upazila, echoed Suleman's concerns. Like them, thousands of residents in the hilly areas of Moulvibazar and Habiganj districts fear landslides amid the inclement weather.

The Met office issued a landslide warning for the hilly areas of Chattogram and Sylhet.

Rafiq Uddin, chairman of North Shahbazpur Union Parishad in Barlekha upazila, advised people to avoid foothill areas for safety.

On June 18, a hillock collapsed on Nirala Punjee road in Sreemangal upazila, Moulvibazar, following a daylong downpour and onrush of hilly torrents, halting vehicular movement. Earlier, three of a family died in a landslide in Majortila Chamelibag of Sylhet on June 10.

Besides, a female tea worker named Gita Kahar, 30, died and three others were injured in a landslide in Kamalganj on May 31.

Tofazzal Sohel, coordinator of Habiganj Sankhubdo Andolon, said hilly soil, saturated with rainwater, is turning into loose mud, increasing the risk of sudden collapses.

Abdul Karim Kim, general secretary of Bangladesh Poribesh Andolon's Sylhet chapter, said, "This is the fourth round of flooding in Sylhet within 20 days. Low-lying areas are submerged, and continuous downpours worsen the flood situation and raise the threat of landslides."

He called for strict enforcement of laws and effective local authority vigilance to curb hill razing.

Shah Shaheda Akhter, coordinator of Bangladesh Environmental Lawyers Association in Sylhet, echoed him.

Badrul Huda, assistant director of the Department of Environment in Sylhet, said, "Over 30 percent of Sylhet's hills have been razed in the last two and a half decades. Due to recent heavy showers and indiscriminate hill cutting, landslides may occur at any time."

Najratun Naeem, UNO of Barlekha upazila, said the administration has been alerting residents living on foothills to move to safety as incessant rain increases the likelihood of landslides.

We are living in constant fear amid the looming threat of landslides. The persistent rainfall and flooding are exacerbating the situation further. We are desperately seeking a way out of this situation.

DEATHS IN ROHINGYA CAMP

Safety fences not repaired in two years

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Cox's Bazar

Unmaintained safety fences led to loss of lives from landslides in Rohingya camps on Wednesday, said Refugee, Relief, and Repatriation Commissioner Mohammad Mizanur Rahman yesterday.

Due to a fund crisis, the agencies concerned did not repair the safety fences and sandbags in place to protect the camps from landslides for two years, he added.

Ten people -- including eight Rohingyas -- were killed in Camp 1 West, Camp 8, Camp 9, and Camp 14 in Ukhiya of Cox's Bazar due to the landslides caused by torrential rain on Wednesday.

A total of 233 makeshift shelters were completely damaged while 702 shelters were partly damaged in those incidents. More than 1,300 Rohingyas were evacuated, while a total of 1,500 people are at risk of landslides, said Mizanur Rahman.

The RRRC feared that more such incidents would happen in the future if protection measures are not repaired regularly.

A total of 543 landslides occurred in the camp on Wednesday due to the heavy rain, according to the RRRC office.

A total of 233 makeshift shelters were completely damaged while 702 shelters were partly damaged in those incidents. More than 1,300 Rohingyas were evacuated, while a total of 1,500 people are at risk of landslides, said the RRRC.

Most of the Rohingyas living under landslide risk were sent back to their houses since there was no rain yesterday, according to some of them. "We have no place to relocate the 1,500 Rohingyas living under threat, providing them new shelters. They will be transferred to safer places when the risk of landslides rises," said Mizanur Rahman.

AL gears up for grand 75th founding anniv

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Awami League has planned a series of events, including rallies, processions, discussions, and food distribution across the country in the lead up to its 75th founding anniversary on June 23.

Special programmes like seminars, art exhibitions, discussions, and documentary screenings are also planned. Cultural programmes at Rabindra Sarobar, a boat race, and a cycle rally at Hatirjheel are also scheduled.

The theme of this year's celebration is "Green World".

Various banners, festoons, placards, and arches will be displayed across Dhaka. To save power, the party will not illuminate streets or infrastructure.

The anniversary celebrations will kick off today with a procession that will start from the Institution of Engineers Bangladesh and end at Dhanmondi 32.

On June 23, Prime Minister and party President Sheikh Hasina will officially inaugurate the anniversary programme in front of Bangabandhu Bhaban after returning from New Delhi on June 22.

A discussion meeting and cultural event will be held at Suhrawardy Udyan on the same day, with Hasina addressing as the chief guest.

A boat-shaped stage has been constructed at Suhrawardy Udyan for the event.

Later, Bangladesh Shilpakala Academy will organise a light and sound show, followed by a cultural programme at the Rose Garden.

Political parties from neighbouring countries, development partners, and supporters of the Liberation War have been invited to the event, according to the Awami League sources.

The AL has also invited the BNP and other opposition parties to the celebrations.

Besides, a nationwide tree plantation campaign, "Sabuj Dharithri", will also be inaugurated on June 23.

AL Joint General Secretary AFM Bahauddin Nashim said, "This year's celebration will highlight aspects of Awami League's long history, tradition, movement, birth of Bangladesh, independence, Liberation War, and struggle."

NARSINGDI SHOAL

Youth initiative fuels socio-economic change

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Narsingdi

In 2019, 16 young people from remote shoal areas of Alokbali union under Narsingdi Sadar upazila founded a platform to ease the plight of the impoverished shoal residents.

Now with around 600 members, the Alokbali Union Human Welfare Association runs programmes to distribute Eid materials, provide treatment costs, build makeshift bridges for better access to schools and health complexes, provide stipends to meritorious students, conduct tree plantation drives, arrange free medical camps, and distribute goats for rearing among the poor shoal residents.

Most of the members of this platform are migrants in the Middle East, whose donations are used to run its social welfare programmes.

Saiful Islam, one of the founding members, is an expatriate of Saudi Arabia and works as a technician at a company there.

Talking to this correspondent, Saiful said, "We started our activities with 16 members. Now there are about 600 members. Most members participate and donate from the Middle East. We have six branches -- in Saudi Arabia, Dubai, Bahrain, Kuwait, Malaysia, and Bangladesh."

Another member, Al Amin, said, "Our main focus is on education and social development in our area. We are also working to broaden our scope and serve for the betterment of the shoal residents."

Md Yousuf Ali, 37, a local resident, said, "I received a goat from them last year priced at Tk 12,000. The goat recently gave birth to two kids."

Contacted, Delwar Hossain Dipo, chairman of Alokbali Union Parishad, said, "We appreciate their activities for the welfare of residents. We cannot take on all kinds of projects due to fund limitations and issues with the government's approval. However, I will personally donate to their cause."

FLASH FLOOD THREAT

Jamuna swelling up rapidly

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Pabna

Water level has been increasing rapidly in Jamuna river, which may cross the danger level within next three to four days, according to Sirajganj Water Development Board (WDB).

According to Sirajganj WDB, Jamuna was flowing at 11.77-metre at Hardpoint, 1.13m below the danger level, and at 13.45m at Kazipur point, 1.35m below the danger level, yesterday morning.

"Water level has been increasing rapidly in Jamuna in the last couple of days, and by 30 to 35cm every 24 hours in the last two days," said Md Najmul Hossain, sub-divisional engineer at Sirajganj WDB.

Due to the flow upstream, Jamuna is swelling rapidly and may cross danger level in Sirajganj within the next three to four days, he added.

"Due to rising water levels, at least 2 to 2.5 lakh people of low-lying areas and shoal areas of 25 unions in five upazilas of the district are facing the threat of flash flood," said Md Aktaruzzaman, district relief and rehabilitation officer in Sirajganj.

"We have made adequate preparations to tackle the crisis," he said.

At least 180 flood shelters have been prepared in the areas that are likely to be affected.

Besides, nearly 695 tonnes of food, cash and other necessary relief materials are in reserve, he added.

Prioritising pre-paid meters to address the 'ghost bills'

Says Nasrul Hamid

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government has taken various steps to ensure around 4.71 crore customers of six electricity distribution companies are billed accurately, said State Minister for Power and Energy Nasrul Hamid yesterday.

The ministry has priortitised installation of pre-paid and smart meters in this regard, he added.

He was responding to concerns regarding "ghost or abnormal" electricity bills in parliament.

"Investigations into specific complaints of ghost bills are conducted promptly, with administrative actions taken accordingly," the minister said in response to queries raised by Noakhali-3 MP Mamunur Rashid Kiran.

Regarding the electricity sector subsidy for the 2023-24 fiscal year, Nasrul said Tk 31,833 crore of the Tk 35,000 crore allocation has already been distributed.

He said dynamic pricing based on international fuel markets eliminates the need for additional subsidies in fuel pricing.

Responding to inquiries from Independent MP Mohammad Hushamuddin Chowdhury, Hamid said load shedding occasionally occur at rural areas due to supply-demand imbalances and necessary maintenance shutdowns.

In response to a separate question, he said electricity lines are disconnected following rules in cases of illegal connections and outstanding dues

FLOOD IN NORTH

Govt's flawed policies, unplanned dev to blame

Says Rizvi

UNB, Dhaka

BNP Senior Joint Secretary General Ruhul Kabir Rizvi yesterday blamed the government's "flawed" policies and "unplanned" development for the worsening flood situation in northeastern regions, including Sylhet.

Speaking at a press briefing at BNP's Nayapaltan central office, he called upon the leaders and activists of the party to stand beside the flood-affected people by extending their helping hands.

He said widespread devastation from floods continues unabated every year due to the government's indifference, which is alarming.

According to experts, Rizvi said unplanned activities are ongoing in haor areas of Sylhet in the name of development. "The incidence of floods has increased due to obstruction of the normal water flow of the river by constructing dams."

WHITENING BLACK MONEY

Provision needs to be reviewed: Momen

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Taxpayers have been disappointed with the budgetary provision for whitening black money, former foreign minister AK Abdul Momen told parliament yesterday.

"Honest taxpayers have become frustrated with the provision of whitening black money just by paying a 15 percent tax. I feel the provision needs to be reviewed further," he said.

Corruption is now the main barrier to maintaining growth, he said. The government's image is being tarnished because of corruption, he added.

Momen said the projects are not getting implemented in time due to corruption, which ultimately causes a rise in project costs.

"A portion of bureaucrats has become corrupt, which is intensifying harassment of the people. The entire bureaucracy is blamed due to a handful of corrupt bureaucrats," said Momen.

He said this while participating in the general discussion on the proposed national budget for the 2024-2025 fiscal year.

The price hike of daily essentials, alongside the rise in taxes, corruption, and extortion, is a matter of great concern for the country's people, Momen said.

but it was not mobilised. Then, in the UN climate conference in Glasgow in 2021, the world committed to mobilise $40 billion by 2025 for adaptation.

However, it remains $20 billion and is going down because development partners are reducing their development budget for various emergencies like the Ukraine and Palestine crises.

"What about those who are in a climate crisis? The GCA comes in to support the countries at the forefront of the crisis," Verkooijen said.

He said the GCA provides adaptation expertise to the projects funded by the development partners like the World Bank, Asian Development Bank and International Monetary Fund.

Much of the focus for the last two years was on Africa, with the development partners investing $9 billion over the last two years.

The GCA last year adapted the model from Africa to Bangladesh and is working with the WB and ADB to climate proof their development.

"It would be a wasted development project if you build a road and it gets washed away the next year. So, as we climate proof the project, it becomes sustainable," he said.

He said traditionally, development projects are taken on top-down approach, but Bangladesh is the only country where Peoples' Adaptation Plan is being adopted. It means incorporating the knowledge of local communities in development planning.

"Locals know when the rain comes, when there is flooding or when the temperature goes high. So, they identify the problems and solutions... we then link their plan to the global funding institutions for funding," he said.

This model of Bangladesh is now being rolled out in other parts of the world including Liberia and Kenya, Verkooijen added.

Of the accused, 26 people were present at the courtroom yesterday.

On March 24 of 2022, Tipu, 55, former general secretary of Motijheel AL, was returning home in his microbus from his restaurant in Motijheel AGB Colony area. The vehicle was at a traffic light in Shahjahanpur when attackers arrived at the scene on a motorcycle and opened fire.

Siam bought meat grinder to dispose of body: India CID

OUR CORRESPONDENT, New Delhi

A meat grinder, suspected to have been used to dispose of the body of murdered Awami League MP Anwarul Azim, was purchased by the assailants from a shop in Kolkata's New Market, West Bengal CID sources have claimed.

MP AZIM
MURDER

Investigators said Siam Hossain, one of the suspects, bought the grinder for Rs 2,200. Siam is in the custody of West Bengal CID after being brought from Nepal following his arrest in the Himalayan country.

CID sources claimed since the entire lump of flesh could not be minced with the grinder, small pieces were flushed into the septic tank of the New Town apartment where the MP was suspected to be killed.

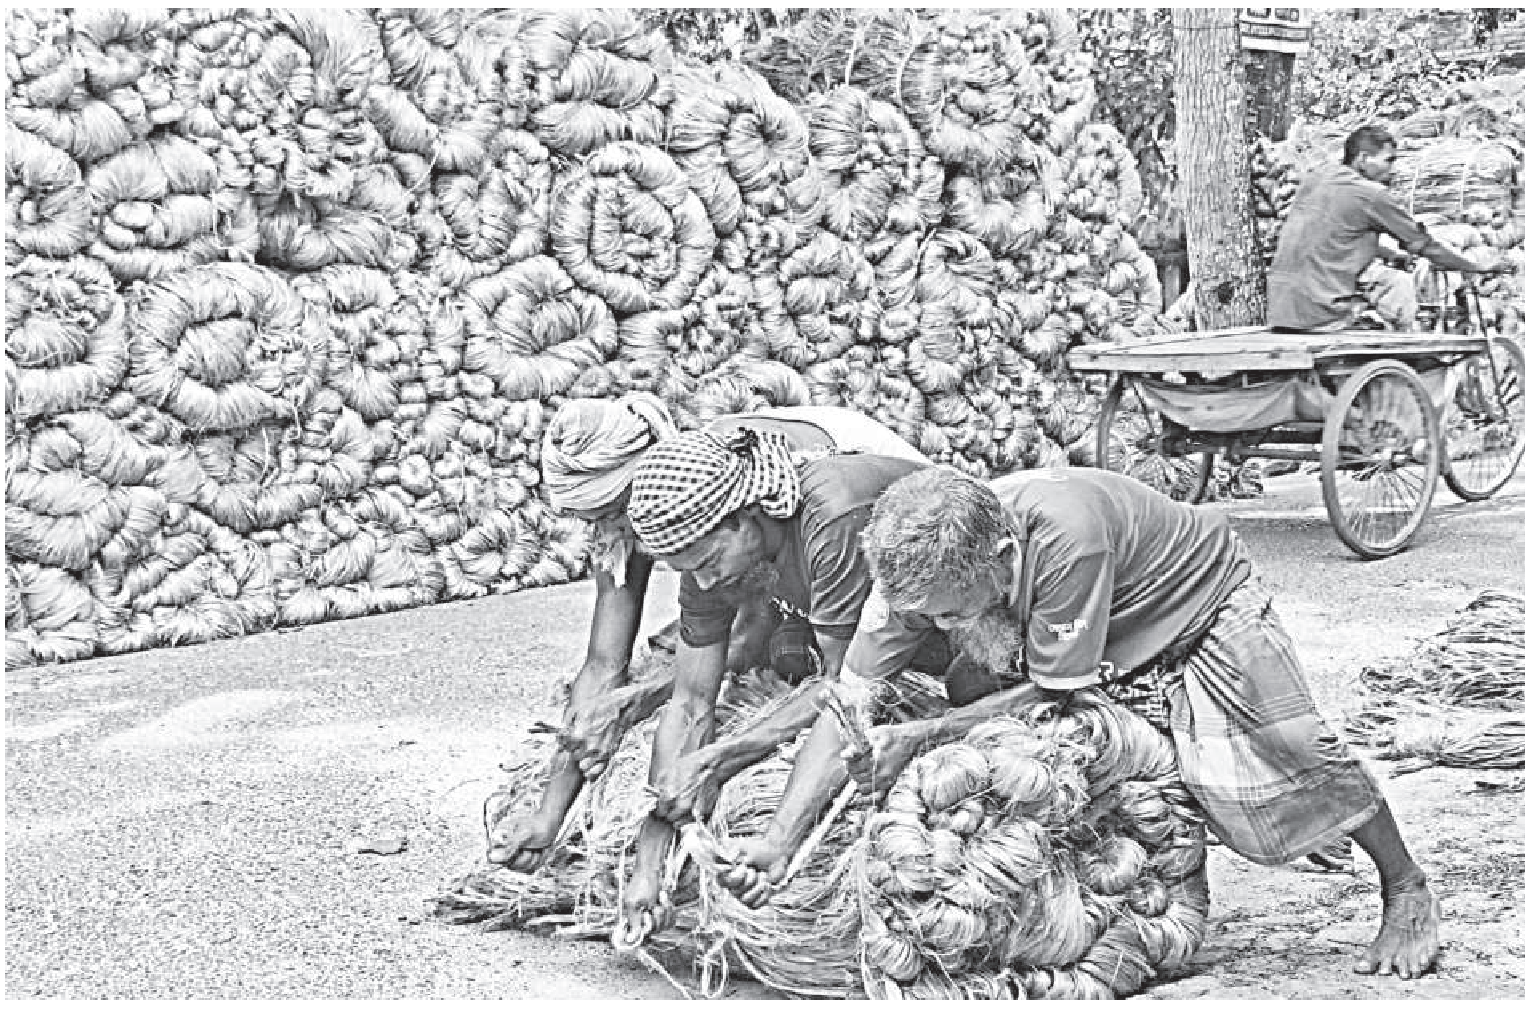
CID recovered flesh from the septic tank. The forensic test has established that the flesh was that of a man.

CID is trying to ascertain the exact places from where the murder weapons were procured so that they can collect corresponding CCTV footage and build a case using electronic evidence in the court.

The investigators have recovered the entire conversation between the lawmaker and Celesty Rahman, who is suspected of having lured him to the New Town flat, and found out that it was Siam who handled the MP's WhatsApp messages after his murder.

Sources said West Bengal CID has decided to request Dhaka Metropolitan Police to track down another woman who had reportedly accompanied Azim on his visit to Kolkata in either January or March this year. The questioning of this woman, who was found to be sharing messages with Celesty, may help reveal the extent of the criminal conspiracy behind the murder, claimed the sources.

Lawmaker Azim went to Kolkata on May 12. Nine days later, India and Bangladesh police said he was murdered at a Kolkata flat.



At the break of dawn, these workers start the process of rolling jutes manually. After a day's hard work. the labourers make Tk 700. The photo was taken in Barishal's Babuganj yesterday.

CLIMATE ADAPTATION

Loans to raise debt distress

Says CEO of Global Center on Adaptation

PORIMOL PALMA

It is an injustice when countries like Bangladesh that are not responsible for the climate crisis have to take loans for adaptation programmes, said Prof Patrick Verkooijen, CEO of Global Center on Adaptation (GCA).

"The countries like Bangladesh, Kenya and Senegal of the Global South do not cause climate crises. They don't want loans for climate adaptation as it increases their debt distress. This is a profound climate injustice in the system," he told a selected group of journalists at a Dhaka hotel on Monday during his three-day visit to Bangladesh.

He also met Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina at Gono Bhaban on Wednesday.

Previously, Verkooijen helped shape the climate agenda of the World Bank Group in his role as the special representative on climate change.

Verkooijen said Bangladesh will be graduating out of LDC by 2026, which is great, but there are also risks that the development partners may decrease financial support for adaptation.

"So, what we at the GCA can do is to ensure that the developed countries provide adaptation funds despite the LDC graduation. A country does not want a loan for climate adaptation," he said.

At the moment, Bangladesh is the only country that is yearly investing $1.2 billion of the taxpayers' money in adaptation whereas the need is $8.5 billion.

The GCA head said as per the Paris Agreement on climate, the world committed to mobilise $100 billion for the Global South, GHOST LOANS!

Krishi Bank issues loans in name of 4 persons who died before 1971

SOHRAB HOSSAIN, Patuakhali

Zainal Howlader, a resident of Kalikapur village under Patuakhali's Bauphal upazila, died in 1969.

In 2014, 45 years after his death, an agricultural loan of Tk 50,000 was issued to his name with Bangladesh Krishi Bank. Recently, the bank's Keshabpur branch sent a notice to Zainal's family asking for repayment of that loan, leaving the family members shocked.

"I recently received a notice from Krishi Bank saying that my father had taken a loan of Tk 50,000 in 2014 from the bank. But my father died in 1969, how could he take the loan in 2014? I urge the government to conduct a fair investigation and take action over this matter," said Zainal's son Abul Bashar, 64, a retired policeman.

This is not a standalone incident. The bank's Keshabpur branch recently issued notices regarding repayment of loans taken in 2014 to 14 persons. Of them, four passed away even before independence.

According to the bank's notices, three sons of Ketab Uddin Howladar of the village -- Javed Ali, Hazrat Ali and Raham Ali -- took agriculture-related loans from that branch in 2014.

Among them, two loans of Tk 25,000 and Tk 30,000 were in the name of Javed Ali, and one each of Tk 45,000 and Tk 50,000 in Hazrat Ali and Raham Ali's names respectively, according to documents.

However, Javed Ali passed away in 1960, Hazrat Ali in 1963 and Raham Ali in 1966, said family members.

"The notices from the bank were in the name of my grandfather and his brothers. But all of them died during the Pakistan period. We are shocked!" said Bajlu Howladar, grandson of Javed Ali.

Abul Mridha, 75, of the village, said, "Javed, Hazrat and Raham Ali died long before independence. I was surprised to hear about loans issued to their names in 2014. The issue should be investigated properly to find out the reasons behind this fraudulence."

Anwar Hossain, chairman of Suryamoni Union Parishad, raised questions about how the deceased could have taken loans.

He demanded exemplary punishment for those involved.

According to sources at the bank, a field officer checks the borrower and reviews his documents before approving any loan as per rules.

If everything goes well, he recommends the loan to the branch manager, who then verifies and approves the loan in presence of the borrower taking his signature or fingerprint in this regard.

Contacted, Md Taif Hossain, current manager of Keshabpur branch of the Krishi Bank, said he joined the branch on February 20 this year and came to know of the matter after some of the victims' families informed them of this.

"Upon receiving the complaints, we found that the loans were approved in 2014. The then field officer, Md Shafiur Rahman, has been summoned in this regard," he said.

However, Noor Hossain, the then branch manager, is unavailable, he added.

Noor Hossain is currently staying abroad and could not be reached for comments despite repeated attempts.

Mohammad Shafiur Rahman, who retired in 2019, claimed that he did not recommend giving loans to any person using the addresses of the deceased men.

Contcated, Ashfakur Rahman, chief regional manager of Krishi Bank, said they are looking into the matter seriously.

"Necessary action will be taken after a thorough investigation," he told this correspondent.

Upazila chairman sent to jail over domestic violence

OUR CORRESPONDENT, N'ganj

A Narayanganj court yesterday sent an upazila chairman to jail in a case filed by his second wife over domestic violence.

It passed the order after rejecting the bail petition of Maksud Hossain, Bandar upazila chairman, said Public Prosecutor Rakibuddin Ahmed.

Maksud appeared in court as his eight-week anticipatory bail expired, he said.

On April 23, his second wife Sultana Begum filed a petition with a tribunal, alleging that her husband demanded dowry and tortured her.

After hearing the petition, the court ordered Bandar police to investigate the matter after recording the case. Later, the case was recorded with the police station.

‘Golam Mamun’: A compelling spin-off of crime, betrayal, and societal reflections

SAEED KHAN SHAGOR

Shihab Shaheen’s first spin-off series, Myself Allen Swapan, garnered significant attention with its original character creation. The director has crafted yet another spin-off, this time centred on Golam Mamun– a character from Tanim Rahman Angshu’s Buker Moddhye Agun.

The web-series Golam Mamun has recently premiered on the OTT platform Hoichoi. Despite being a spin-off, the series is not a typical character-driven story. In Ayan Chakrabarty’s plot, police officer Golam Mamun is accused of murdering a delinquent named Nasir. Concurrently, Mamun’s colleague Sakib and Sakib’s wife, journalist Tania, are murdered, with all fingers pointing at Mamun. While on duty, Mamun is presented in court but escapes, becoming a fugitive who investigates the connections between these murders. He eventually discovers a link to his brother-in-law’s murder, another police officer.

In his quest to uncover the mysteries, Mamun faces betrayal, distrust, and the disguised faces of those around him. Can he rise above these challenges, or will his astute colleague, officer Robin, catch him? Are Robin and Mamun rivals or allies? The series answers these questions.

The screenplay, written jointly by Shihab Shaheen and Mezbah Uddin Shumon, opens with a tragic scene: a little girl narrates her deceased mother’s condition over a phone call, setting a gloomy tone. The series interweaves numerous events, maintaining a cohesive pattern without becoming irrelevant. Shaheen aimed to present this story on a wide scale, introducing peripheral issues through brief dialogues. Some parts were effective, but not all. For instance, the attempt to address national issues like power outages through dialogues was commendable, but the absence of a generator in such a flat seemed unrealistic

The attempt to introduce the narrative of domestic violence in the marital relationship of Mamun’s brother-in-law and sister was praiseworthy. Shaheen avoided the common trope of unnecessary smoking and drinking to make the characters relevant to violence, instead telling a different story.

Ziaul Faruq Apurba reprises his role from Buker Moddhye Agun and portrays the character Golam Mamun in this spin-off. He maintains his signature style, delivering a performance free from overacting, and shines in action scenes—a genre his fans haven’t seen him tackle before. This fresh portrayal is a delightful surprise for his die-hard fans. However, outside the action and thrilling moments, Apurba appears somewhat subdued.

Imtiaz Barshon plays the role of police officer Robin. With the addition of this latest series, Barshon has now appeared in three consecutive series, including Sharey Showlo, and Kaalpurush, as a cop – each time portraying a distinct character with different roles, appearances, and nuances. His versatility leaves no room for doubt. In Golam Mamun, he matches Apurba’s performance, creating a compelling antagonist whose ruthlessness contrasts sharply with the protagonist Mamun, garnering audiences’ sympathy for Mamun.

Sabila Nur plays police officer Rahi, an intriguing role in this series. She seamlessly transitions from a temperamental officer to a soft-spoken assistant, and then to an unknown identity at critical moments, showcasing her professionalism. Her urban Bengali accent adds an attractive touch.

Nazmus Sakib portrays tourist police officer Milon. Though Sakib acts regularly, he seldom gets ample screen space. In this series, he has that space, and the role of Milon has the potential to add a new dimension to the story, enhancing its excellence. However, he needs to pay more attention to clichéd dialogue delivery and forced comedy.

Masum Basher delivers an impeccable performance as the chief. Rashed Mamun Apu and Sabrin Azad also make strong appearances. However, Sharlin Farzana fails to make a significant breakthrough after a long hiatus.

Even though Golam Mamun is a spin-off series, Shihab Shaheen uses it to reflect our current socio-political realities through fiction and brief dialogues, highlighting numerous inconsistencies in our surroundings. However, we should question his portrayal of everything under an invisible shadow, or ‘hukumat’. This ‘invisible’ aspect implants a spectral reality in our minds, which eventually seems insurmountable. The ruling apparatus takes full advantage of this, becoming more active in masking their failures.

Storytelling plays a significant role in creating such narratives, leading to a gradual decline in the audience’s tendency to question authority. This decline is certainly not beneficial for any governance system or the state itself.

Raihan Rafi announces ‘Toofan’ sequel with original cast

The release of Toofan during Eid has captivated audiences across Bangladesh, with theatres experiencing overwhelming responses. In a thrilling development, director Raihan Rafi has announced a sequel is in the works, following the film’s dramatic cliffhanger ending.

Starring Shakib Khan, Toofan carried high expectations even before its release and has not disappointed. Since premiering this Eid, the film has already broken records.

Plans for Toofan 2 began before the first film’s release, but Rafi waited for audience reactions. “The film ends in a way that makes a sequel essential,” he said. The script is ready, with the main cast returning and potential new additions.

defending 119 against Pakistan and South Africa defending 115 against Nepal and 113 against Bangladesh respectively.

The lowest successful defense, however, belongs to the Tigers, who bundled out Nepal for 85 after posting just 106 in St Vincent.

Bowlers’ iron grip on batters was slipping as the first round was coming to a close. Two of the three 200-plus totals in the tournament so far came in the final two days of the first round -- West Indies posting 218-5 against Afghanistan and Sri Lanka making 201-6 against the Netherlands.

This trend of higher scores continued in the first two matches of the Super Eight as well. In Group 2, South Africa posted 194-4 against the USA, who in reply made 176-6 in Antigua where Bangladesh are scheduled to play against Australia and India in the Super Eight.

On Thursday, hosts West Indies were blown out of the water by defending champions England despite posting a commendable 180-4 as Jos Battler’s side chased that down in just 17.3 overs in St Lucia.

Scores north of 170 being scored and chased down is signaling a change of tide in the tournament, which could very well add to the challenges of Bangladesh in the Super Eight.

The Tigers begin their Super Eight journey today against Australia, with the match starting at 6:30 am Bangladesh time.

The Tigers have heavily banked on their bowlers so far in the tournament, who have been making up for the shoddy performances from the batters.

However, the Tigers’ bowling attack still hasn’t been tested on a flat surface, and containing the belligerent Aussie batting line-up on a flat surface would be a huge challenge.

Less than 48 hours after the Australia match, the Najmul Hossain Shanto-led side will face India at the same venue.

The Tigers would be hoping for a return to first round’s playing conditions in Antigua for the next few days, otherwise, they might risk seeing their misfiring batting get exposed by two superior teams in quick succession.

Elderly couple murdered

Bloody footprints were spotted up to the fourth floor, police said.

As the underground water tank at Shafiqur’s house started overflowing, neighbours went to notify someone at the building.

When a tenant from the third floor came down to switch off the water pump, he found Shafiqur lying in a pool of blood on one side of the garage. She called the neighbours for help and then dialed 999 to report the incident.

The police found the key to the main gate of the building with Shafiqur. The building can however be accessed by jumping over the back boundary wall.

Emon said the killers ransacked the almirahs, but no valuables were missing. His laptop, which was inside an almirah, was found on the bed.

He went on to say that they didn’t have any enmity with any neighbours, but had a land dispute in their village.

Meanwhile, the bodies of the victims were sent to Dhaka Medical College Hospital morgue for autopsy.

Speaking to reporters, Deputy Commissioner of Police (Wari division) Iqbal Hossain said the modus operandi suggests that this was a planned murder. “It’s not a case of theft or robbery.”

“The killers inflicted many blows to Shafiqur’s neck and head to ensure his death. Nothing was missing from the house. The killers tried to pass it off as a robbery.”

He said the double murder could have occurred due to previous enmity or family enmity.

Putin seeks security should not be given a stage on which to defend Russia’s war in Ukraine.

Russia and Vietnam signed agreements on issues including energy, underlining Moscow’s pivot to Asia after the West imposed sanctions on Moscow over the conflict in Ukraine.

“We are firmly committed to deepening the comprehensive strategic partnership with Vietnam, which remains among the priorities of Russia’s foreign policy,” Putin was quoted as saying by Russian media.

He was quoted by Russia’s TASS news agency as saying the two countries shared an interest in “developing a reliable security architecture” in the region based on not using force and peacefully settling disputes with no room for “closed military-political blocs”.

The 11 pacts signed in Hanoi were not on the same level as the landmark mutual defence agreement in North Korea.

But Putin’s warm welcome was a public relations achievement for the Russian leader, who has an outstanding International Criminal Court arrest warrant against him over alleged war crimes in Ukraine, charges he denies. Neither Russia nor Vietnam is a member of the ICC.

The military ceremony put on to greet Putin, who was embraced by both Vietnamese President To Lam and Prime Minister Pham Minh Chinh, was the kind reserved for the highest heads of state and rolled out when US President Joe Biden and Chinese President Xi Jinping visited Vietnam last year.

The two presidents witnessed the exchange of 11 cooperation agreements and memorandums of understanding, including deals on oil and gas, nuclear science and education.

At another event, Lam said Putin continued to lead Russia “overcoming all difficulties and challenges, at the same time contributing to the peace, stability and development in the region and the world.”

Vietnam’s hosting of Putin was criticised by the United States, now an important partner which upgraded diplomatic relations with Hanoi last year and is Vietnam’s top export market, and by the EU.

A US embassy statement this week said no country should be giving Putin a platform to promote Russia’s war in Ukraine.

An EU delegation spokesperson in Vietnam said Hanoi had the right to develop its own foreign policy, but said Russia’s war in Ukraine proved Moscow did not respect international law.

Hajj death toll

Saudi authorities reported clearing hundreds of thousands of unregistered pilgrims from Makkah this month, but it appears many still participated in the main rites which began last Friday.

This group was more vulnerable to the heat because, without official permits, they could not access air-conditioned spaces provided by Saudi authorities for the 1.8 million authorised pilgrims to cool down after hours of walking and praying outside.

“People were tired after being chased by security forces before Arafat day. They were exhausted,” one Arab diplomat told AFP yesterday, referring to Saturday’s day-long outdoor prayers that marked the hajj’s climax.

The diplomat said the main cause of death among Egyptian pilgrims was the heat, which triggered complications related to high blood pressure and other issues.

In addition to Egypt, new fatalities were confirmed yesterday by Pakistan and Indonesia. Out of around 150,000 pilgrims, Pakistan has so far recorded 58 deaths, a diplomat briefed on the tally told AFP.

“I think given the number of people, given the weather, this is just natural,” the diplomat said.

Indonesia, which had around 240,000 pilgrims, raised its death toll to 183, according to the ministry of religious affairs, compared with 313 deaths recorded last year.

Deaths have also been confirmed by Malaysia, India, Jordan, Iran, Senegal, Tunisia, Sudan and Iraq’s autonomous Kurdistan region. In many cases authorities have not specified the cause.

to navigate the waters in Myanmar’s territories of the Naf river, prompting firing either by the Myanmar military or the Arakan Army, he said.

The minister, however, said the situation has improved of late.

“Currently, they are not shooting at the boats in Bangladeshi waters. The two ships on the Myanmar side [of the Naf river] have been withdrawn,” he said referring to the deployment of those Myanmar ships.

He expressed optimism that there would be no further shooting. “However, those who cross the area are taking necessary precautions.”

Locals in St Martin’s said gunshots were fired from across the border at trawlers and speedboats on the Naf river since June 6.

‘Swiss banks not so lucrative now to park money’

ago after tax probes by the US, France and Germany and a new system of bank-data exchange between governments has scuppered the traditional “no-questions asked” approach by Swiss banks to serving rich clients living abroad, Bloomberg reported in 2016.

The development of the Common Reporting Standards (CRS) in 2014 by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) also brought about a major shift in global tax transparency.

This is because by signing up, countries agree to automatically exchange financial account information. As a result, it has become harder for individuals to conceal their wealth offshore without the rest of the world knowing about it. Before this, countries generally had to request this information from other nations.

Data from the Swiss National Bank showed that Bangladeshi nationals saved 13.96 million CHF in Swiss banks in 2023, the lowest since 1997. The amount was 78 percent of the total deposits of 17.71 million CHF, or $19.86 million.

The deposits were Tk 233 crore in Bangladeshi currency. In the case of Bangladeshi nationals, the deposits amounted to Tk 184 crore.

Iftekharuzzaman, executive director of the Transparency International Bangladesh, said Switzerland is one of the many destinations for illicit fund transfers.

Switzerland is a conventional destination, but since it joined the global efforts against money laundering and corruption, it has lost its shine, he added.

“Many destinations for illegal money transfers have sprouted, and they are more attractive,” he said, citing the names of Malaysia, Singapore, and the Middle Eastern countries.

Plus, there are offshore destinations to park money, he said.

“One can buy properties in the UK, the US, Canada, and the Southeast Asian and Middle Eastern countries. This is not easy in the case of Switzerland,” added Iftekharuzzaman.

“So, the falling deposits in the Swiss banks belonging to Bangladeshi citizens and banks do not provide any relief that illegal capital flight has declined.”

In 2022, the Tax Justice Network’s Financial Secrecy Index, the UK-based organisation, named the US as the top destination for stashing money illegally. The country overtook traditional tax havens Singapore, Switzerland, Luxembourg, the Bahamas, and the Cayman Islands.

Mansur, a former economist at the International Monetary Fund, said Switzerland had once kept the information of depositors confidential. “Now it is not maintaining the secrecy. It provides information if any government seeks.”

Bangladeshis living in Switzerland may hold a portion of the deposits. A part of the foreign currency reserves of Bangladesh are also kept there, he added.

UK's Sunak faces call for polls date betting probe

AFP, London

UK Prime Minister Rishi Sunak yesterday faced calls to launch an inquiry after a member of his security detail was arrested for allegedly betting on the timing of the general election.

London's Metropolitan Police said it was told by the Gambling Commission that a close protection officer was being investigated over the alleged bets.

The regulator had already been looking into claims that Conservative party candidate Craig Williams, who served as Sunak's ministerial aide, placed a bet on when the election would be held.

A second candidate from Sunak's party, Laura Saunders, is now also under investigation about an alleged bet on the date of the poll, the BBC reported on Wednesday evening.

Saunders is married to the Tories' director of campaigns, it added.

DIRECT PASSENGER FLIGHT

India shuns China's calls to resume service

REUTERS, New Delhi

China is pressing India to restart direct passenger flights after a four-year halt, but New Delhi is resisting as a border dispute continues to weigh on ties between the world's two most populous countries, officials said.

India-China relations have been tense since the biggest military confrontation in decades on their disputed Himalayan border killed 20 Indian and at least four Chinese soldiers in June 2020. Thousands of troops remain mobilised on each side.

Since the clash, India has made it difficult for Chinese companies to invest, banned hundreds of popular apps and severed passenger routes, although direct cargo flights still operate between the Asian giants.

Direct flights would benefit both economies, but the stakes are higher for China, where a recovery in overseas travel after the Covid-19 pandemic is lagging, while India's aviation sector booms.

Several times over the past year or so, China's government and airlines have asked India's civil aviation authorities to re-establish direct air links, two people with direct knowledge of the matter told Reuters, with one saying China considers this a "big issue".

"We hope the Indian side will work with China in the same direction for the early resumption of direct flights," China's Foreign Ministry told Reuters in a statement last week.

MYANMAR CRISIS

Ethnic armed groups accuse junta of breaking truce

AFP, Yangon

An alliance of Myanmar ethnic armed groups have accused the junta of repeatedly violating a China-brokered ceasefire in the north of the country this month and causing civilian casualties.

Beijing brokered a truce between the junta and the so-called "Three Brotherhood Alliance" in January after months of fighting that displaced more than half a million people near China's southern border.

The ceasefire allowed the alliance -- made up of the Ta'ang National Liberation Army (TNLA), the Myanmar National Democratic Alliance Army (MNDAA), and the Arakan Army (AA) to hold swathes of territory it had seized in northern Shan state.

Junta troops on Wednesday launched an air strike on territory the TNLA holds near the ruby and gem-mining hub of Mogok, the group said.

"In this incident, one civilian was killed and 3 wounded including a 10-year-old child," the TNLA said in a statement posted to the alliance's Telegram channel on Wednesday.

Nowhere in Israel will be spared in case of war

Lebanon's Hezbollah chief warns; Israel army spokesman says Hamas can't be eliminated

AFP, Beirut

Fears of a regional war rose yesterday after Lebanon's powerful Hezbollah movement said none of Israel would be spared in a full-blown conflict, and Israel said it had approved plans for a Lebanon offensive.

Experts are divided on the prospect of wider war, almost nine months into Israel's vow to eradicate Hamas, the Palestinian group in the Gaza Strip.

On Wednesday Israel's top army spokesman said Hamas, as an ideology, cannot be eliminated. Others, including US Secretary of State Antony Blinken, have also pointed to the difficulty of destroying the group.

Hezbollah chief also threatened Cyprus if it opened its airports to Israel "to target Lebanon".

In a televised address, Hezbollah chief Hassan Nasrallah said "no place" in Israel would "be spared our rockets" if war began.

Nasrallah's Iran-backed group has exchanged near-daily fire with Israel since Israel began offensive in Gaza on October 7, but the fire from Hezbollah rockets, Israeli warplanes and other weapons has escalated in the past few weeks.

The Hezbollah chief also threatened the nearby island nation of Cyprus if it opened its airports or bases to Israel "to target Lebanon".

Cyprus, a European Union member, is home to two British bases, including an airbase, but they are in sovereign British territory and not controlled by the Cypriot government.

Cypriot President Nikos Christodoulides denied his country's involvement in the offensive and said it was "part of the solution". He pointed to its role in a maritime humanitarian corridor to Gaza.

Warplanes from the British airbase in Cyprus have, along with United States forces, carried out reprisal strikes against Yemen's Iran-backed Houthi rebels who have for months been attacking shipping in nearby waterways.

On Wednesday, US military said its forces destroyed two Houthi sites in Yemen. The Houthis and Hezbollah both say they are acting in response to Israel's actions in Gaza. On Tuesday Israel's military announced that "operational plans for an offensive in Lebanon were approved and validated", and Foreign Minister Israel Katz warned of Hezbollah's destruction in a "total war".

US envoy Amos Hochstein called for "urgent" de-escalation.

On Tuesday Hezbollah published a more than nine-minute video showing drone footage purportedly taken by the movement over northern Israel, including parts of the city and port of Haifa.

4 in 5 people want more climate action

UN survey finds

AFP, United Nations

Four in every five people want their country to strengthen its commitments to addressing climate change, according to a global poll of 75,000 participants published yesterday.

The survey by the UN Development Program, Oxford University and GeoPoll posed 15 questions by randomised telephone calls to people in 77 countries representing 87 percent of the world's population.

The key finding was that 80 percent of respondents want their governments to increase efforts to fight against global warming.

Poorer countries beat this drum the loudest, with 89 percent in favour, though appetite is also high in G20 nations (76 percent), according to the survey.

China (73 percent) and the United States (66 percent) -- the world's biggest greenhouse gas emitters -- also saw a majority of respondents in favour of climate action.

"As world leaders decide on the next round of pledges under the Paris Agreement by 2025, these results are undeniable evidence that people everywhere support bold climate action," said Cassie Flynn, UNDP global climate director.

India boosts Sri Lanka's maritime monitoring centres

AFP, Colombo

Sri Lanka launched an upgraded naval monitoring centre yesterday, funded by its powerful neighbour India as New Delhi pushes to counter China's expanding regional influence.

The Maritime Rescue Coordinating Centre -- able to track shipping across vast areas -- was backed by a $6 million Indian grant, a statement from President Ranil Wickremesinghe's office said.

Based in Sri Lanka's naval headquarters in Colombo, it also includes seven remote stations along the island's eastern seaboard.

One lies in the far south of Sri Lanka -- close to the Chinese-run port of Hambantota -- overseeing major international east-to-west shipping routes.

Sri Lanka's maritime rescue region covers an area of 1.77 million square kilometres (683,400 square miles) stretching from India to Indonesia, Australia and the Maldives.

India's Foreign Minister S Jaishankar opened the facility during his first foreign visit since the formation of Prime Minister Narendra Modi's new government this month.

Jaishankar said on social media that Colombo was a key part of India's "neighbourhood first" and maritime security policies.

India is suspicious of China's growing presence in the Indian Ocean, including in Sri Lanka as well as the Maldives, which signed a military assistance pact with Beijing in March.

That deal came as a garrison of Indian soldiers, who had been stationed in the upscale holiday destination to assist with maritime patrols, was ordered by pro-Beijing President Mohamed Muizzu to leave.

China coast guard personnel a 'band of barbarians'

Says Philippine navy official

REUTERS, Manila

China's coast guard personnel acted like a "band of barbarians" during a Philippine resupply mission to a contested shoal in the South China Sea this week that led to injuries and damage to vessels, a senior navy official said yesterday.

A Philippine sailor suffered serious injury after what its military described as "intentional-high speed ramming" by the Chinese Coast Guard, aiming to disrupt a resupply mission for troops stationed on the Second Thomas Shoal.

China's Coast Guard personnel, which Philippine military officials said were carrying knives and spears, looted firearms and "deliberately punctured" Philippine boats involved in the mission.

"We were unprepared for that kind of response," Philippine navy spokesperson Roy Trinidad said in a phone interview yesterday. "We stuck with the rules of engagement. They were not allowed to use guns except for self defence."

Trinidad said China's "illegal, aggressive and deceptive" actions raises the risk of miscalculation at sea.

But China's foreign ministry disputed the Philippines' statement, with a spokesperson saying yesterday that the necessary measures taken were lawful, professional and beyond reproach.

"The Philippine ships not only carry building materials, they also smuggled weapons and equipment and deliberately rammed Chinese ships," said ministry spokesperson Lin Jian.

GRAFT CASE

Delhi CM Kejriwal gets bail

NDTV ONLINE

Delhi Chief Minister Arvind Kejriwal has been granted bail in the liquor policy case. Kejriwal's lawyer had argued the Enforcement Directorate (ED) had no evidence against him.

The Aam Aadmi Party (AAP) chief is likely to come out of jail today, as the bail order has to reach jail first.

His lawyer told the Delhi court that the ED's entire case against the Aam Aadmi Party (AAP) chief rested on statements given by those who turned approver in the case.

The court denied the ED's request to allow at least 48 hours to sign the bail bond in order for the central agency to challenge it before the relevant court.

The ED arrested Kejriwal on March 21 over money laundering allegations while framing the Delhi liquor policy for 2021-22, which was later scrapped after the Lt Governor raised red flags.

Air pollution now the biggest killer

Take legal action against those responsible

It is alarming to know that air pollution has become the leading cause of death in Bangladesh, outpacing fatalities from high blood pressure, poor diet, and tobacco use, according to a newly unveiled global study. The study found that in 2021, at least 236,000 lives were lost due to air pollution in the country. By comparison, 200,000 deaths occurred due to high blood pressure, 130,100 due to tobacco use, and 130,400 were linked to poor diet. This deserves critical attention.

Unlike other major causes of deaths, air pollution is something that affects everyone, particularly children. In fact, in 2021, the country ranked fifth globally in terms of deaths among children under the age of five due to air pollution. And as much as 36 percent of preterm births in Bangladesh were also linked to it. Aside from deaths, air pollution impacts children's health in many ways and at many levels, starting from pregnancy through early childhood. These issues may continue to affect an individual throughout their life.

Despite these severe health impacts—and the resulting burden on the nation—we wonder why the government has failed to make any significant progress in reducing air pollution. A number of previous studies have shared similar findings, which make it obvious that this has turned into a silent killer that must be urgently addressed. According to a study by Clean Air Fund (CAF), between 2017 and 2021, Bangladesh received $2.3 billion to curb air pollution. Where did this fund go? What was it used for? Does the government have any notable achievement to show that it was properly utilised?

Major pollutants like construction dust, traffic fumes, factory emissions, and brick kilns continue to be unchecked to this day. According to Bangladesh Road Transport Authority (BRTA), of the 60 lakh registered vehicles in the country, about 6.17 lakh run with no or expired fitness certificates. Additionally, Bangladesh produces about 30 lakh tonnes of e-waste every year—most of which contain carcinogenic elements. Brick kilns, too, continue to heavily pollute the environment. In other words, the government has done little to nothing to address the killer air that citizens are breathing in.

Last year, the High Court rightly lambasted the Department of Environment (DoE) for failing to take effective steps to control air pollution in Dhaka despites its repeated directives. But even that seems to have changed nothing. It is high time, therefore, for the relevant state institutions as well as polluting entities to be held responsible for their negligence or contributions in this regard. Perhaps then they will finally start to act as they are legally bound to do, and help prevent needless deaths of citizens.

A tragedy lurking in the shadow

Ukhiya landslides bring the horror to Rohingyas

We are saddened by the tragic deaths of ten people, including eight Rohingyas, in landslides at the refugee camps in Cox's Bazar's Ukhiya upazila early Wednesday. According to a report, the landslides occurred after heavy downpour overnight, affecting multiple camps including camps 1, 2, 9, 10, and 14 where the deaths have been confirmed. The authorities are reportedly taking steps to evacuate at-risk camp dwellers from hazardous, hilly areas to prevent further casualties. While heavy rainfall has been a significant factor in these deadly landslides, it just goes to highlight the precariousness of the living condition of the Rohingya.

Such landslides have occurred in the past as well. Around 12 lakh Rohingyas have been living in 33 camps of Ukhiya and Teknaf in Cox's Bazar, most of them since 2017 after fleeing persecutions in Myanmar. Their living arrangement, with many residing in perilous conditions on hill slopes, may put them at a natural disadvantage during monsoon. Those at risk should be evacuated, but where would they be evacuated to and then what? It's a terrible and tricky situation. While the authorities are moving them to temporary locations for now, Bangladesh, which has been bearing an enormous burden by hosting so many refugees, cannot be expected to resolve the issue on its own. The international community must come up with a solution that simultaneously ensures the long-term well-being of the Rohingya community and protects our interests.

The Ukhiya landslides add to the growing casualties caused by the recent deluge and mountain runoff that already combined to set off a flood in Sylhet and Sunamganj and threaten to inundate many other areas. With the Met office warning of further rains and potential landslides in Chattogram and Sylhet divisions, it is likely that more such incidents will occur. Heavy rainfall since Tuesday night has caused extensive damage in many areas, submerging homes, roads, poultry farms, fish enclosures, etc. However, apart from Ukhiya, there have been no reports of fatalities from landslides yet, but that may change if preventive actions are not taken. The authorities in Chattogram and Sylhet, where most of the landslides usually occur because of fragile, often-illegal settlements, must remain especially vigilant and relocate at-risk families.

Given the severity and frequency of landslides, the higher authorities also must take a critical look at our state of preparedness and undertake comprehensive measures. Timely warnings and immediate response are crucial in such scenarios. Structural reinforcements and proper land management are equally important to mitigate the risk of future disasters. Without such actions, this seasonal threat will continue to lurk in the shadow and endanger people every monsoon.

THIS DAY IN HISTORY

Birth of Benazir Bhutto

On this day in 1954, Pakistan's first woman Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto was born. Belonging to a politically influential family, she co-chaired the Pakistan People's Party (PPP) and became the first woman to lead a Muslim majority country. She was assassinated in 2007.

The constitutionality of building kitchen markets over bulldozed homes

PSYMHE WADUD

The Dhaka South City Corporation (DSCC) recently went on to evict 87 families in the Miranzilla sweeper colony. One DSCC official told this daily that the eviction measures were being carried out to implement a decision made some eight years ago.

As a law student and an academic, I am still naïve to recall judicial interpretations of our constitution and laws. Indeed, more than two decades back, the High Court categorically observed that no eviction is constitutional if alternative rehabilitative measures are not adopted (ASK v Bangladesh, 1999). Later, there were multiple other decisions along the same line of interpretation, landmark among which is BLAST v Bangladesh (2008).

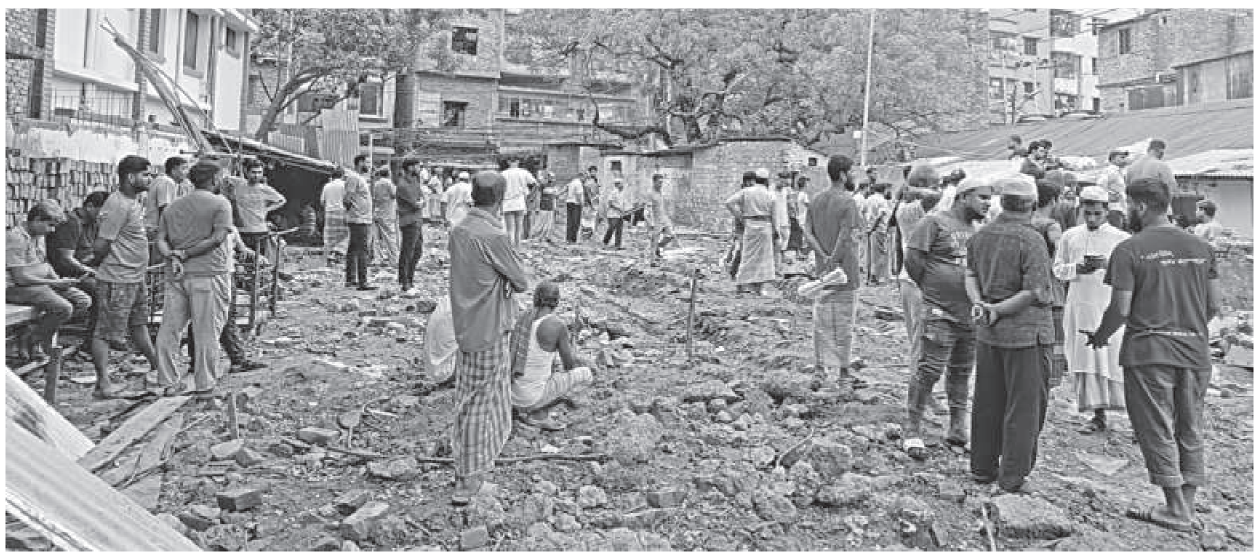
Shelter, among others, is not a judicially enforceable right under the Bangladesh Constitution. It falls within the purview of the judicially unenforceable policy principles that nonetheless are supposed to be "fundamental to the governance of Bangladesh" and to "form the basis of the work of the state." However, the Supreme Court has gone on to enforce shelter through reimagining the margins of the fundamental right to life. Indeed, the court held that the right to life, as enshrined in the constitution, cannot be construed as a vegetative existence only, but ought to be interpreted as a dignified life.

The decisions mentioned above constitute the primer for constitutional law lessons 101. These are rather primary cases for understanding and teaching right to life in law schools (at least I can speak for the University of Dhaka). The Dalit, on the other hand, are a major category to study and research into equality and non-discrimination law. They are the paradigmatic subaltern class about whom discussions abound in civil society seminars and symposia. What the Miranzilla eviction measures underscore for us afresh is the gap between our studies, activism, and reality. It also shows how only the courts are sites of constitutionalism for us.

However, the discursive notion of constitutionalism ought to be rooted in multifarious sites, including parliamentary and executive spaces of state governance, and the decisions emanating from the courts ought to be taken seriously by the decision-makers. Why should every (unconstitutional) action get remedially treated with stay orders from the court (as happened at the present instance as well), when we already have categorical observations and holdings from the court to pre-emptively inform the decisions of different branches of the state?

For purposes of international human rights law, adequate housing is a paradigmatic economic right having both cultural and social connotations. This right can be restricted only in accordance with law, and only in pursuance of a legitimate aim. In the case of Miranzilla, such aim is the expansion of a kitchen market. Tenets of human rights law require that the restriction and the legitimate aim are proportionate to each other, and that such restriction is the least intrusive measure in pursuance of the aim sought to be achieved. Further, in no case can such restriction violate the "essence" of the right, implying that there has to be alternative rehabilitative measures in place to counteract the impact of restrictions, if any, imposed on the exercise of right to adequate housing. The international human rights law envisions that the right is progressively realised, also firmly acknowledging that in no cases can states take regressive measures (e.g., eviction without appropriate and adequate rehabilitation).

Rehabilitation, too, is rather euphemistic, I would say. Indeed, eviction from ancestral homes of hundred years strikes at the very root of a community's existence, and rehabilitation can hardly restore the status quo ante. The fact that we advocate for rehabilitation as a minimum for the would-be evicted people too in a way empowers the top-down narrative defined by hegemony. Nonetheless, when even the bare minimum is not complied with, we get to see the unclad face of power.



Eviction from ancestral homes of hundred years strikes at the very root of a community's existence, and rehabilitation can hardly restore the status quo ante.

The recent eviction measures tell us two things: first, how the Dalit community lies at the lowest stratum of the power hierarchy, and second, that those in decision-making power view them exactly as such. The decision-makers also are entirely unmindful to the existence of elderly, children, and persons with disabilities within such families. The disparate impact that the measures are having on them is unsurprisingly not accounted for.

The Dalit, the identity they embrace "as a matter of assertive pride and resistance"—are indeed the outliers, falling outside the four-fold caste schema. The eviction reifies their identity as Dalits—as opposed to "children of God" or Harijans, as Gandhi had called them—a term that I personally find rather supercilious and patronising (as did Ambedkar). In any case, can homes of the children of God be bulldozed to expand a kitchen market?

Let's honour the Rohingya refugees and their hosts

Sumbul Rizvi
is the representative of UNHCR in Bangladesh.

SUMBUL RIZVI

Over 12 crore people are forcibly displaced by conflict or persecution—across borders or within their countries. Among refugees, three-quarters are hosted by low- and middle-income countries like Bangladesh, which will soon mark the seventh year of hosting nearly one million Rohingya refugees.

This displacement, in the words of UN High Commissioner for Refugees Filippo Grandi, is driven by "the international community's inability to solve conflicts or prevent new ones." In 2017, Bangladesh provided protection to one of the world's most persecuted communities. The generous people of Cox's Bazar were on the ground joined by UNHCR, United Nations, and NGO partners, offering food, clothing and shelter to traumatised Rohingya families.

Some refugee situations are short as in 1971, while others may take longer. The Rohingya yearn to quickly return, but are unable to until it is safe. The international community, especially regional entities, must work towards a political solution and resolution of the conflict. In the meantime, providing protection and support is how states demonstrate solidarity and shared humanity.

Seven years on, we watch in alarm the escalating conflict in northern Rakhine, while refugees await its cessation, anticipating voluntary repatriation to a peaceful homeland. As the warring parties battle for control of the Rakhine state, the inevitable viciousness of conflict is apparent, impacting civilians including the Rohingya. The stateless Rohingya once again have nowhere to go. In May, UNHCR issued a guidance note urging all states neighbouring Myanmar to respect the principle of non-refoulement and allow fleeing civilians access to safety.

While the Rohingya situation is not on the scale witnessed in 1971, memories are evoked of one crore uprooted Bangladeshis seeking asylum with India during the Liberation War. Asylum is universally applicable, enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and embedded in state traditions from time immemorial, especially in this part of the world.

Protection includes safety and security while fleeing, and when in the receiving state. Pushback of civilians approaching international borders and deportation/refoulement of those desperately seeking protection with their relatives in Bangladesh's refugee camps are contrary to the shared history of humanity and asylum tradition in South Asia.

> Sadly, a new trend of stereotypes and toxic public narrative dehumanises the Rohingya, blaming them for all and sundry woes, whether inflation, illicit yaba trade, climate impacts, and more. 'Rohingya' is used as a slur—synonymous with criminals and primitive people. History has shown how dehumanising language, seemingly harmless, can prove dangerous for all concerned. Today, social media and technology further amplify that harm.

Since 2022, the security situation in the refugee camps has deteriorated—including killings, kidnapping, gender-based violence and child protection incidents. Rival criminal organisations feeding on despair are responsible, persuading refugee youth lacking prospects of livelihoods and education, by force or by lure. The conflict across the border further aggravates security in the camps.

While UN agencies and NGOs have stepped up protection monitoring, and UNHCR intervenes with authorities on all reported incidents, this is not enough. Concerted state action is imperative to reverse the tide of insecurity and protect the vulnerable. With 80 percent women, children and elderly having survived unimaginable trauma, refugee mothers clamour for attention to their plight, demanding a safe environment. A proposed Joint Peace Campaign is raising hopes as efforts commence.

I am inspired by the Rohingya community's incredible courage—in the face of historical prejudice and targeted violence and living amid the impacts of climate change and natural disasters. If the majority lacked basic education and urban skills when they arrived from Myanmar, they are now active participants in education, skills, and community empowerment programmes. Seeking self-improvement, they access online courses, English lessons, vocational trainings; operate community blood drives, camp libraries for women, youth environment groups, and so much more.... Steadily, the Rohingya are building capacity to provide for themselves. They are at the forefront, delivering services in camps, including mental health counselling, manufacturing menstrual hygiene products, documenting camp life through photography and art, fighting fires, and protecting from natural disasters.

Cohesion with local host communities have allowed Rohingya coexistence over the last seven years. Sadly, a new trend of stereotypes and toxic public narrative dehumanises the Rohingya, blaming them for all and sundry woes, whether inflation, illicit yaba trade, climate impacts, and more. "Rohingya" is used as a slur—synonymous with criminals and primitive people. History has shown how dehumanising language, seemingly harmless, can prove dangerous for all concerned. Today, social media and technology further amplify that harm.

The challenges are myriad, but collective advocacy and a common vision have overcome enormous constraints. In 2023, after 33 percent drop in food rations, UNHCR and humanitarian partners sounded the alarm, linking the cuts to increased malnutrition and health risks, as well as child marriage, child labour, and dangerous boat journeys in search of hope. This year, with new funding, the UN World Food Programme (WFP) was able to raise the value of food vouchers twice from $8 to $10 on January 1, and to $11 on June 1. The 2023 funding appeal, too, received higher funding compared to most refugee situations in a year of competing global priorities. The 2024 funding requires collective advocacy and support to sustain the refugees.

Partners are providing Myanmar curriculum classes for children in Grades KG to 10, with Grade 11 beginning this year. In June, 90,000 Rohingya school children took end-of-year learning assessments. Four years ago, there was no formal education for the Rohingya. Today, through advocacy and partnership, girls and boys are enrolled across grades. Through collective efforts, the tree cover in camps has been restored and deforestation for firewood is a memory. Slopes, streambanks, drainage systems, and forests have been rehabilitated by Rohingya volunteers and donor funds.

Local communities and refugees will further benefit from much needed funds that will flow from the World Bank IDA 2020 Window for Host and Refugees. Based on the MoU between UNHCR and the World Bank, aimed at supporting developing economies with large refugee populations, the $700 million grant and extremely concessional loan is key to enhancing the local context. By uplifting refugees alongside its own people, Bangladesh continues a tradition of solidarity and protection, and invests in a vibrant relationship with its Rohingya neighbours when they one day return to a stable Rakhine.

A teacher who inspired generations of architects

Do we have a national fetish to celebrate accomplished people around us only after they perish? How often do we express gratitude to our teachers when they are still around? Being an educator myself, I understand, even if imperfectly, how much students' appreciation means to a teacher.

Today, I would like to thank a professor who inspired generations of architects in Bangladesh.

Shamsul Wares is known as a fiercely passionate teacher who professes architecture as a philosophy of modernism—one that views the challenges of space-making through the lens of 20th century aesthetic experiments in abstraction, platonic clarity, and humanism. His growth as an iconic teacher in the Department of Architecture at the Bangladesh University of Engineering and Technology (BUET) paralleled the trials and tribulations of a post-independent country and the evolution of its built environment.

As an architect, Shamsul Wares has produced a robust body of design work, ranging from residential houses to urban parks, from factories to institutional buildings, from cinema halls to shopping malls and apartment complexes. "Wares sir" built an intellectual bridge between the aggregate design legacy of Muzharul Islam, Louis Kahn, Constantinos Doxiadis, Paul Rudolph, and Stanley Tigerman during the Pakistan era and the generations of architects that contributed to the development of what has been called a "Bengal Stream" in architecture in post-independence Bangladesh. The kind of architecture he advocated in his classroom is deliberately abstract, where overt social and historical representations are muted in favour of platonic formal expressions. We learnt from his position on aesthetic modernism, one that is cognitively powerful without having to resort to any kind of semiotic adventures or show gratuitous associations with the power structures of history and society.

Towards the end of Nathaniel Kahn's acclaimed documentary, My Architect: A Son's Journey (2003), there is a perplexingly poignant moment. I reflected on it in a review of the documentary, "Inside the Capitol building ... Shamsul Wares delivers a startling, if not the ultimate, message: that personal failings should not blind us to the genius of a great artist and that a son must seek his father not always in the father's fulfilment of familial duties, but sometimes in the humanity of his aesthetics." To describe the genius of a great artist, Wares likened Louis Kahn to "our Moses" who, in his view, gave Bangladesh an unmistakable symbol of democracy, a timeless Parliament Building that captures the highest expression of modernism. The most dramatic part in all of this was not Wares's "genius father" statement, but the tears that rolled down his cheeks while stating it. Nathaniel Kahn stated on several occasions that, for him, the Shamsul Wares moment in the documentary unexpectedly became his project's intellectual epicentre. Many people agreed.

It is hard not to wonder what Wares's tears meant both for the documentary and the state of architecture in Bangladesh. Were they tears of gratitude? Joy? Emotion? Days after I first watched the documentary in New York City, I ran into India's celebrated architect Charles Correa at a soiree hosted by MIT professor Stanford Anderson at his beautiful waterfront house in Boston. Upon hearing that I was from Bangladesh, Correa asked me about Shamsul Wares, particularly the reason for his tears in My Architect. Kahn's work is great, but why cry, Correa asked. I was at a loss for words but found myself ruminating on the question, too. I tried to convince Correa that Bangladeshis become sentimental while talking about Kahn's Parliament. There are several potential reasons for this: the edifice parallels the country's political journey to independence; Kahn had a monumental influence on the architectural evolution in this country; and the country had found a national symbol of architectural pride in this building. This is emotional stuff, I argued with Correa, who seemed unconvinced. Years later, I told Sundaram Tagore, director of Louis Kahn's Tiger City (2019), that weeping inside Kahn's Parliament has not been uncommon.

Shamsul Wares's tears also reveal his quintessential pedagogy: architecture is a lifestyle, an abstraction of life itself. As his students, we found such teaching inspirational and contagious. In our young minds, he was our Plato, who made us conscious of praktike (doing) and gnostike (knowing) in design education. Wares's metaphysics of the art of buildings had a profound influence on us. Architecture is an arduous journey, one that requires perseverance, determination, and love. Architecture must simultaneously undertake the archaeology of the aggregate human experiences of the past, while endeavouring to forge ahead into the future. This is probably the reason why he often cites the Danish existential philosopher Soren Kierkegaard, "Life can only be understood backwards, but it must be lived forwards." Wares demonstrates a deep understanding of the project of history—his panoramic, nuanced, and non-conforming history classes used to spellbind us—yet he steadfastly remained committed to architecture's ability to shape a humane future.

Shamsul Wares grew up in Chandpur, a small city southeast of Dhaka, near the confluence of two mighty rivers of the Bengal delta: the Meghna and the Padma. The geographic energy emanating from the meeting of two delta-shaping rivers must have left an indelible impression on his worldview, one that accommodates and triggers multiple lines of thought as a critical vantage on life.

When he arrived in Dhaka in the early 1960s to pursue higher studies and visited the East Pakistan University of Engineering and Technology (EPUET), his chance encounter with the newly minted programme of architecture there determined what his lifelong passion would be. The decade of 1960s was a period of "great transformation" for the then East Pakistan, politically and socially. The political and economic asymmetries between West Pakistan and East Pakistan that disempowered the people of the eastern wing of the state created a robust culture of protest and resistance in East Pakistan. For the people of East Pakistan, this was a time of national soul-searching.

Richard "Dik" Vrooman, an American architect and academic from the Texas Agricultural and Mechanical University (Texas A&M University), came to Dhaka in 1961 for eight years to create a faculty of architecture at EPUET. Other Texas A&M University professors who joined Vrooman included James C Walden, Jr (1962-66) and Samuel T Lanford (1963-65). The mission was to educate local architects, filling the void of architectural design expertise warranted by the burgeoning building industry, particularly during Ayub Khan's "Decade of Development" in Pakistan. Vrooman and his colleagues were supported by, among others, expatriate architects like Daniel C Dunham (1962-67) and Jack R Yardley (1966-68). Part-time faculty included East Pakistan's first professionally trained architect Muzharul Islam. Joan C Walden taught basic design and Mary K Donaldson art history. Prominent artists like Rashid Chowdhury, Hamidur Rahman, and Abdur Razzak also taught in the architecture programme. Abdullah Abu Sayeed introduced Bangla literature, while Mary Frances Dunham lectured on European art and music. Roy Vollmar and Gus Langford, two of Louis Kahn's associates stationed at his local office in Dhaka during the construction of the Parliament Building, were occasional instructors. This was a time of extraordinary academic fertility that characterised architecture education at EPUET.

Shamsul Wares was an intellectual product of this vibrant and cosmopolitan environment, as well as the political consciousness of 1960s East Pakistan. He graduated with a Bachelor of Architecture degree in 1968, during the height of Bangalee agitation for self-rule in East Pakistan. After graduation, he worked at Vastukalabid, the acclaimed architectural office of Muzharul Islam. In 1972, he joined the architecture programme as a lecturer at the age of 26. His pedagogy began to demonstrate the cosmopolitanism, modernism, and multidisciplinarity of the programme that had trained him.

The decades of 1970s and 1980s were a time of a regionalist spirit in architecture around the world as the idea of a universal 'modern' was challenged for its alleged failure to incorporate local characteristics of a place. Wares, however, maintained a sophisticated distance from the discourse of regionalism in architecture. He never advocated any comforting and phenomenological symbolism of placeness in the built environment.

The decades of 1970s and 1980s were a time of a regionalist spirit in architecture around the world as the idea of a universal "modern" was challenged for its alleged failure to incorporate local characteristics of a place. Wares, however, maintained a sophisticated distance from the discourse of regionalism in architecture. He never advocated any comforting and phenomenological symbolism of placeness in the built environment. While acknowledging the significance of the place in making architecture meaningful, he resolutely and deliberately wanted to transcend its causal influence, in the same way Rabindranath celebrated Bengal and its people, nature, rivers, and rain only to ultimately surpass them all to reach a universal milieu of humanity. In The Apu Trilogy (1950s), Satyajit Ray depicted an intimate portrayal of life in rural Bengal while narrating a universally understood sapiens story. There is a reason why his Pather Panchali (1955) won the Best Human Document award at the Cannes Film Festival in the year of its release. In a similar vein, Wares's modernism aspires to a universal value system that neither glorifies nor rejects the place.

Asked to suggest one book to an aspiring architect, Shamsul Wares's answer was bewilderingly beautiful, "If it is concerned with architecture, I do not know of one book that surpasses all other books. Thirty years ago, I would have suggested Space, Time and Architecture by Sigfried Giedion. Right now, I think we are in a much-diversified state, and one book is too few to understand the dynamics of architecture today. However, if I must pin down my suggestion to one book, I would suggest a novel ... The Bicycle Thief." Recommending Luigi Bartolini's haunting novel (1946) portraying the urban despair of postwar Rome—transformed into a devastatingly poignant film (1948) by Vittorio De Sica—to students of architecture is one instance of Wares's cosmopolitanism, enlightenment, and wisdom. Learning about architecture through iconic buildings may be too parochial or didactic a suggestion. The ability to see the promises and perils of architecture through the humanity of a father-son saga, as in The Bicycle Thief, or through the existential angst of city life, shows the irresistible allure of Shamsul Wares's design pedagogy.

Aristotle once said, "Those who know, do. Those who understand, teach." Shamsul Wares understood, and hence taught. Being his student has been our privilege.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

Secularism and state religion in the Bangladesh Constitution

NAFIZ AHMED

One of the most unique features of the Bangladeshi Constitution is that it pledges to conserve secularism (Article 12) while also declaring Islam as its state religion (Article 2A). The promise of secularism was present in the original Constitution. The state religion was added later through an amendment. Secularism was removed from the Constitution but was later restored through another amendment. Currently, both secularism and state religion co-exist in the Bangladeshi Constitution. If their meanings are taken literally, the existence of secularism and a constitutionally recognised state religion seem mutually exclusive, as there is an intrinsic conflict between the two. However, in a recent judgment (decided in 2016), the High Court Division of the Supreme Court of Bangladesh held that secularism and state religion can co-exist without contradicting each other. This short essay examines how the recently published judgment changed the meaning of secularism and state religion in Bangladesh.

Through the Anwar Hossain Chowdhury and others v Bangladesh case, the Supreme Court of Bangladesh incorporated the doctrine of basic structure into the constitutional law jurisprudence of Bangladesh. According to the basic structure doctrine, the Constitution of Bangladesh cannot be amended in a way that destroys the basic structure of the Constitution. A provision or principle connected to the constitutional identity of Bangladesh Constitution is part of its basic structure. Secularism was one of the primary motivators of the emergence of independence Bangladesh and the adoption of its autochthonous Constitution. The readers of the Bangladesh Constitution would generally agree to call it a secular constitution. Thus, secularism is undoubtedly connected with the constitutional identity of Bangladesh. The Supreme Court of Bangladesh had made similar remarks in Bangladesh v Advocate Asaduzzaman Siddiqui and Ors.

Through the Writ Petition No. 1434 of 1988, Swairachar O Sampradaiyikata Protirodh Committee, along with prominent public intellectuals of that time, challenged the constitutionality of the insertion of a state religion in the Constitution. The writ was finally heard in 2016. However, the hearing only lasted for 10/12 minutes, as noted by Justice Ashraful Kamal in the full text of the judgment. The writ was dismissed because the first petitioner did not have locus standi (the right to sue), as per the Court. The full text of the judgment became available to the public in 2024. Quite interestingly, the full text of the judgment discusses the substantive issues of the petition, although only the issue of locus standi was argued before the Court. In the full text of the judgment, the Court held that the inclusion of state religion does not affect the basic structure of the Constitution and does not violate the constitutionally guaranteed freedom of religion. It also held that the inclusion of state religion "does not offend the concept of secularism, as provided for in the Constitution."

Secularism has been given different meanings in different jurisdictions. Three meanings of secularism are worth mentioning. Firstly, it may mean that the state has a negative obligation not to endorse the practice of any religion (the idea associated with the Constitution of the United States of America). This version of secularism prohibits the state from conflating religion with public life. Secondly, secularism may mean that the state must regulate religion (the idea associated with the French Revolution). This version of secularism requires the state to prohibit the people from bringing religious practices and symbolisms into the public sphere (e.g., banning hijabs and abayas in public schools). The second version of secularism requires the state to govern and restrict, if necessary, religious practices through laws. Thirdly, secularism may mean that the state has a positive obligation to take measures to ensure that all religions can be practiced freely. This may be done by funding the establishment of places of worship, providing state-funded security in places of mass religious gatherings, and so on.

Justice Naima Haider, writing for the majority in Swairachar O Sampradaiyikata Protirodh Committee vs Bangladesh, observed that the third meaning of secularism is its true meaning in the context of the Bangladeshi Constitution. She noted that Article 2A "places an obligation upon the State to ensure equal status and equal right in the practice of the Hindu, Buddhist, Christian and other religion." (Emphasis added) Justice Haider also observed that "Article 12 as drafted... would impose an obligation upon the State to ensure [that] religious authorities of any particular religion cannot dominate over the State..." Thus, according to Justice Haider, although Article 2A recognises Islam as the state religion, it creates a positive obligation on the state to ensure the religious rights of the minorities.

While interpreting Article 2A, Justice Haider held that the constitutional recognition of Islam as the state religion does not create any legal obligation on the state. She noted that the recognition of a state religion may be of two types: 'recognition with establishment' and 'recognition without establishment'. A recognition is 'with establishment' where state religion may be enforced by placing religious laws in the legal hierarchy or giving special privileges to that religion's followers (such as becoming President or Monarch). Justice Haider wrote, "...recognition with establishment will occur when the State maintains a formal connection with any specific religion which is 'established' in the sense of being supported, funded by the State". According to Justice Haider, the recognition of state religion in Bangladesh is recognition without establishment. Thus, according to the Court, the recognition of state religion has no legal consequence. Justice Haider notes, "[t]he conferment of status of 'State Religion' on its own does not tantamount to an action on the part of State to grant political status in favour of Islam. Article 2A must be read as a whole and once read, it becomes obvious that the insertion of the concept of Islam being the state religion does not, on its own, affect the constitutional rights of others having different religious beliefs."

The above-discussed case begs a few questions. For instance, one might ask if all petitioners must have locus standi for a writ petition to be maintainable. One might also ask how a clearly justiciable constitutional provision can be without legal consequences. The Court also did not address how the recognition (even without establishment) of a religion as the state religion may affect the believers of other religions. Nevertheless, the judgment provides us with a new understanding of secularism in Bangladesh and the consequences (or lack thereof) of recognising Islam as the state religion.

LAW VISION

Role of the Supreme Court in an amalgamation process

MOHAMMAD FOYSAL

Under the scheme of the Companies Act 1994, sections 228 and 229 require a scheme of amalgamation, be it for merger or acquisition, to get approved by the High Court Division (HCD or Court). Central to an amalgamation process is the application procedure and consideration of application by the HCD, as the HCD is vested with the authority to either approve or reject such an application. The HCD might reject such an application, if it considers that the scheme is in asymmetry with the core of public interest or even when it finds the scheme not to be generally beneficial. In certain cases, the Court may choose not to outrightly reject a scheme and direct the applicant to revise the scheme in line with public interest and other lawful considerations. Further, the Court may direct other regulatory bodies to take appropriate measures to assess the viability of a scheme and its potential impacts.

As an instance, in the case of Robi Axiata Limited v RJSC 2016) the BRTC was entrusted with the same task and conducted an expert evaluation of the proposed merger as well as a public hearing on the merger and amalgamation as per section 87 of the Bangladesh Telecommunication Act. In this case, the Court considered several key aspects of post-amalgamation effects. While considering the effects of the merger through socio-economic lenses, the Court allowed several intermediaries including some employees of airtel to secure justice and protect public interest by applying its inherent jurisdiction. Thereafter, the Court also considered the issue of consumer rights and directed the BTRC to assess the effects of merger on the consumers in terms of charges imposed and access, quality and variety of services available, deter unfair practices of operators to secure and promote healthy competition, ensure market accessibility of new operators etc. In the language of the court, the BTRC conducted a thorough investigation and public hearing to guard against "total chaos in the telecommunication industry of Bangladesh". Indeed, there should be certain yardsticks to assess the socio-economic impact of any amalgamation process, particularly whether the scheme of amalgamation will monopolise the business affecting other corporations in the same business arena. Also, in the case of Summit Power Limited v Summit Narayanganj Power Ltd (2018), the Court directed the petitioner to revisit some clauses of the scheme so as to enable them to merge the corporations.

The HCD plays a catalyst role in an amalgamation process and approves an amalgamation process after a thorough perusal of the application and being satisfied that the amalgamation will not bring any evil for anybody.

Thus, the HCD plays a catalyst role in an amalgamation process and approves an amalgamation process after a thorough perusal of the application and being satisfied that the amalgamation will not bring any evil for anybody.

COURT CORRIDOR

Judicial discretion as a potent tool

MOBASHSHIRA TABASSUM RAHI

When a legal rule is not adequate to reach a conclusion, honorable judges use their discretionary power by seizing assistance from legal principles, which they are entitled to do. Although statutes of our country repeatedly mention judicial discretion, they do not precisely specify its limits. In the BLAST and Others v Bangladesh & Others (2015) 1 SCOB (AD) case, it was suggested that courts tend to passively echo statutory punishments. However, the same case also recognised those discretionary powers embedded in Bangladesh's penal provisions allow judges to adapt sentences based on the unique facts of each case. Civil cases in Bangladesh allow judges greater flexibility in handling preliminary issues and determining financial penalties, unlike criminal cases with stricter guidelines. However, one may ask: in the presence of clear and valid legal rule, does judicial discretion still hold any weight? The very essence of judicial discretion lies in its application when multiple permissible options coexist within the legal framework. While multiple lawful options may exist, discerning the one with the highest moral weight stands as the core function of judicial discretion.

The perception of discretion may vary among individuals, as it is influenced by personal values, cultural norms, and lived experiences. It hinges on what one person considers a discreet action that might differ enormously from another's perspectives. Contextual and individual experiences further influence how discretion is applied, making it a nuanced subjective judgment.

Despite conflicting legal provisions, in Riggs v Palmer, 115 N.Y. 506 (1889) the court (New York Court of Appeals) considered morality and societal norms using discretionary power. The core legal question in the case revolved around whether William A. Palmer, who murdered his grandfather, could still inherit his estate. The court, ultimately, decided against inheritance, ruling that his unlawful and morally unacceptable actions forfeited any benefits granted by the will. Judge Robert Earl speaking for the majority, sided with the plaintiffs. The court, guided by timeless principles of law and recognised maxims, determined that granting Elmer any advantage from his criminal act would be fundamentally unjust. Justice demands that no one be allowed to exploit their own wrongdoings, profit from their deceit, or leverage their injustice for personal gain. Acquiring property through criminal means is similarly condemned. When important judgments like this one arise, a disconnect between legal rulings and societal norms poses a serious concern. While strict interpretations safeguard order, clashes with fundamental morals necessitate judicial flexibility. After all, courts exist within a social fabric that grants them legitimacy, and their decisions should reflect shared social values.

Discretion permits legal actors to interpret and apply laws in a way that aligns with the contemporary perspectives. This adaptability supports maintaining the relevance and legitimacy of the legal system, as it can respond to changing public attitudes and expectations. However, while discretion is a potent tool, it must be utilised within the bounds of established laws and regulations. Meandering beyond these boundaries can undermine the principles of justice and fairness. Therefore, a delicate balance must be struck, permitting discretion without renouncing the overarching framework of legal principles.

While discretion is a potent tool, it must be utilised within the bounds of established laws and regulations. Meandering beyond these boundaries can undermine the principles of justice and fairness.

Tigers target 'unconventional paths' in 'bonus' quest

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh had specific dreams going into this T20 World Cup: to make the Super Eight stage by qualifying from Group D. With that target achieved, a bigger mountain now stands before them.

What coach Chandika Hathurusingha said at the press conference on Wednesday may not reflect the team's overall sentiment, but it remains to be seen whether it can ignite the passion required for the task ahead.

While the likes of Towhid Hridoy and Soumya Sarkar had oozed optimism in going far ahead of the tournament, Bangladesh skipper Najmul Hossain Shanto remarked that fans should not have high expectations since the Tigers often wear expectations like a burden. Past World Cups and many big tournaments, especially finals, are cases in point.

There are no Associate teams in Bangladesh's way in the Super Eight. First comes Australia, shortly followed by India, before the Tigers take on Afghanistan in their final Super Eight game.

"Yeah, I mean, when we came into the tournament, our first target was to get into this Super Eight. So, I think we achieved that with... what can I say, our bowlers kept us in the game? So, we played the conditions really well, used the conditions in our favor," Hathurusingha said.

"So going forward for us, being here, we're very happy to be here. And then anything from here for us is a bonus. So, we play with a lot of freedom. And we are going to challenge all three teams the best we can," he further claimed.

It might be that he wanted to downplay the pressure. For Bangladesh, as they are not one of the Associate nations at this World Cup, winning is the only target. But given Bangladesh's lackluster performances in the T20I format, even making the Super Eight was a big achievement.

Thus, along with the freedom to express their game, Hathurusingha reminded the players that they would have to play the roles they are responsible for.

"This game, why do we start playing this game? To enjoy," Hathurusingha said about why players come into cricket.

"So that fact of enjoyment, we don't take it away from the players. How big is the game? That doesn't mean that they have a free license to go and do whatever they want. So, the enjoyment factor is always at the forefront, but they have to do their role for the team," he added.

But this World Cup has served playing conditions that helped Bangladesh's cause so far. Going forward, there is no guarantee of that happening. Bangladesh had not been able to see the wicket for the game but were able to assess conditions with wind directions coming into play in quite a few games. Clear planning with the ball has been evident in this tournament. Hathurusingha said they might do something unique when asked if they want to beat Australia.

"Planning and decision-making give them a lot of belief that if you are not afraid to make decisions and be brave, you can compete with them [Australia]. We will probably take some unconventional paths to beat some teams," he added.

It remains to be seen whether Hathurusingha downplaying pressure is the first step in the Tigers' "unconventional path" as they look to secure a maiden berth in the knockout stage of the premier event.

India to open next home season against Tigers

AGENCIES

The Board of Control for Cricket in India (BCCI) confirmed on Thursday that India will be kicking off their upcoming home season against Bangladesh in September before hosting New Zealand in October and England next year.

India will welcome Bangladesh for a two-match Test series, which will be played in Chennai and Kanpur from September 19-23 and September 27-Oct. 1, respectively. It will be followed by three T20Is in Dharamsala, Delhi and Hyderabad.

This will only be the third instance of India hosting Bangladesh in a bilateral series. Bangladesh played a solitary Test in their first-ever tour to India for a bilateral series in 2017 while the last time the Tigers travelled across the borders was back in 2019 for a similar itinerary of three T20Is and two Tests.

Bangladesh's only win -- across all formats -- away to India was during the 2019 tour when the Tigers beat India by seven wickets in the first T20I in Delhi.

Following the home series against Bangladesh, India will then host the Black Caps for three Tests, with the first Test starting on October 16 in Bengaluru.

England will visit India in January next year to play five T20Is and three ODIs. Chennai, Kolkata, Rajkot, Pune and Mumbai will be the venues for the T20s, while Nagpur, Cuttack and Ahmedabad will host the ODIs.

England's tour of India will begin on January 22 and conclude on February 12.

Clash of hosts with survival at stake

STAR SPORTS DESK

West Indies and USA are set to collide in a high-stake Super Eight fixture of the T20 World Cup in Barbados on Saturday, in the two teams' first-ever international meeting, the result of which will leave one of the co-hosts all but eliminated.

With both the co-hosts opening their Super Eights journey on the losing side, with the former going down against South Africa before the latter succumbing to holders England, the Kensington Oval is poised to stage a spectacle.

Although a colossal gulf of experience exists between the two teams -- since the two-time champions are up against a side that advanced from the group stages in their maiden World Cup appearance -- the on-field show may not reflect this, given how the USA have fared in the ongoing marquee event.

USA have scripted a fairytale by coming this far on the back of a monumental win over Pakistan in Texas. Therefore, despite an 18-run defeat to South Africa, the Aaron Jones-led side have every reason to fancy inflicting another massive upset.

West Indies, meanwhile, have done justice to their pedigree as T20 specialists, having won all four group-stage encounters.

The Men in Maroon came up short against England despite having totaled 180, but their bowling exploits left a lot to be desired. Their team management may consider fielding young pace sensation Shamar Joseph, who this year had scripted the Windies' first Test win in Australia after 27 years.

Batters come alive as England take on South Africa

STAR SPORTS DESK

Batters have started to come alive in the T20 World Cup following a shift to the West Indies and a blockbuster contest between two of the best batting lineups, at least on paper, in the tournament will face off when reigning champions England take on hot favourites South Africa at the Darren Sammy Cricket Ground in St.Lucia today.

In six meetings in T20 World Cups, South Africa have had the better of England on four occasions. England won the other two.

The venue for the contest has already seen two 200-plus first-innings totals in the four matches played so far and boasts a 194.75 average first-innings total, and on that basis, another run-fest is expected to be on the cards when the two sides lock horns.

Both sides come into the contest having won their opening Super 8 contests. Despite having flirted with group-stage elimination, England seemed to have found top gear after a dominant display in an eight-wicket victory over co-hosts West Indies in St.Lucia yesterday, courtesy of a match-winning unbeaten 47-ball 87 from opener Phil Salt.

The right-handed batter smacked five sixes and seven fours and put together an unbeaten 97-run stand with Jonny Bairstow (48 off 26) to help England chase down an 181-run target with 15 balls to spare.

England will be further boosted by the fact that their encounter against South Africa will be at the same venue whereas the Proteas played their last match in Antigua.

On the other hand, South Africa qualified for the Super 8s with a 100 percent record but barely got over the line in at least three of the four encounters -- a four-wicket win against the Netherlands, a four-run win over Bangladesh, and a one-run victory against Nepal. South Africa batters struggled to get going on wickets in New York, where they played three matches, as well as in Kingstown where they beat Nepal to cap off the group stage. Batting first in two of those contests, the South Africa batters managed a best first innings total of 115.

Against the USA, however, South Africa's batters were able to get rid of their shackles as they posted 194 for four -- their highest total this tournament so far. Opener Quinton de Kock found his mojo as he smashed five sixes and seven fours in a 40-ball 74 while skipper Aiden Markram notched up his highest score in the tournament -- a 32-ball 46 which was followed by a 22-ball 36 from Heinrich Klaasen.

England are expected to go unchanged from their eleven that played against the West Indies, while Markram has a big call to make -- whether to continue with two spinners or to go with an extra pace option. Tabraiz Shamsi took a solitary wicket but went for 50 runs in his four overs against the USA and should the Proteas skipper opt to go with one spinner, it would likely mean that Ottneil Baartman will return to the lineup.

Bangladesh emerge Pool A champions

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh U-21 team emerged as Pool A champions with an all-win record as they inflicted a massive 7-0 defeat on Indonesia in their last pool match of the Men's Junior AHF Cup in Singapore on Thursday.

With four successive wins, Bangladesh sit at the top of the five-team table with 12 points and set their semifinal clash with Pool B runners-up Chinese Taipei.

The men in red and green confirmed their semifinal and Junior Asia Cup berth before coming into their fourth and final pool match. They just needed a point to become group champions, but the men in red and green left the ground with a comprehensive win.

Mohammad Abdullah gave Bangladesh a three-minute lead from open play before Mehrab Hossain Samin doubled it four minutes later by converting a penalty corner.

In-form Amirul Islam made it 3-0 in the ninth minute by converting a penalty corner before Din Islam netted a field goal in the 13th minute to take a comfortable 4-0 lead in the first quarter.

Bangladesh struck three more goals in the third and fourth quarters, with Jibon and Abdullah netting one field goal apiece before Shimul Islam scored from open play to complete the rout.

Mbappe injury leaves France thinking

AFP, Paderborn

France boast fearsome strength in depth but remain hugely reliant on Kylian Mbappe for inspiration and are now facing the prospect of being without their injured superstar for at least their next Euro 2024 game against the Netherlands on Friday.

Captain Mbappe is recovering from a broken nose suffered in Monday's 1-0 win over Austria in Duesseldorf in their opening match at the tournament.

The French Football Federation later said Mbappe would not need an operation but did admit he would need to be fitted with a mask before he could return to action.

In any case, the lack of time between matches means the clash with the Dutch in Leipzig is set to come too soon for the 25-year-old.

And France coach Didier Deschamps will hope his team can get a positive result which could seal their last-16 place.

But can Les Bleus beat a strong Netherlands side without arguably the world's most lethal striker?

"Of course, he is an important player, the captain, a leader. So that will have an impact, but we have an exceptional squad," midfielder Adrien Rabiot said on Wednesday.

France met the Netherlands twice in Euro 2024 qualifying, and Mbappe scored a brace on each occasion, in a 4-0 win in Paris and in a 2-1 victory in Amsterdam.

Above all, it is worth considering how France have done in recent games without Mbappe.

Deschamps' team lost 2-1 in a friendly in Germany last September when Mbappe was left on the bench. They also laboured to a 0-0 draw against Canada in their final pre-tournament friendly when he only appeared as a late substitute.

The obvious option for Deschamps when it comes to replacing Mbappe would be to start Giroud, even if the big centre-forward is a very different player.

"Everyone knows I think about the collective before I think about myself," Giroud said after the Austria game.

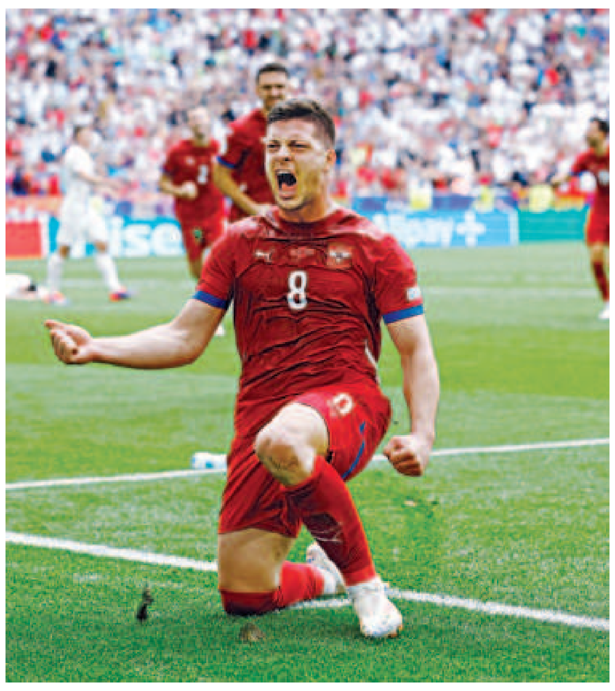
Another option for Deschamps is to move Marcus Thuram in from the left wing and to a central role.

Thuram, though, has only scored twice for his country in 20 caps, and one of them came against Gibraltar.

Then there is Randal Kolo Muani, but he appears low on confidence after a difficult season in Mbappe's shadow at PSG.

One thing is for sure, France's performance against Austria -- with the returning N'Golo Kante outstanding shielding an impressive defence -- indicated they do at least look solid enough to shut most opponents out as they wait for Mbappe to return.

- Kylian Mbappe, who is doubtful for the game with a broken nose, has scored more goals against the Netherlands (six) than he has versus any other nation.
- Mbappe, France's third highest scorer of all time, is yet to score at Euro -- he was unable to score in four games in the last edition of the tournament in 2022.
- This will be the fourth Euros meeting between the teams.
- France have, however, won seven of their last eight matches against the Dutch in all competitions, the exception being a 2-0 defeat in the UEFA Nations League in November 2018.



Luka Jovic celebrates after scoring a last-gasp header to snatch an equaliser for Serbia after Slovenia were put ahead by Zan Karnicnik in a Group C fixture of Euro 2024 yesterday. Super 8 brings about batters' resurgence

ASHFAQ-UL-ALAM

The end of the first round and the commencement of the Super Eight phase has seemingly brought an end to bowlers' domination in the ongoing ICC T20 World Cup, posing a fresh challenge for the teams that are vying for a spot in the semifinals.

In the first round of the T20 World Cup, which took place jointly in the USA and the Caribbean, the balance between the ball and bat was overwhelmingly tilted towards the former, in a surprising change from what usually transpires in the shortest format of cricket.

In the 37 completed games in the first round, the average run rate of teams was a mere 6.71. A record 10 times bowlers bowled 20 or more dot deliveries in a spell, a feat that had only happened twice before in the past eight editions of the tournament, once each in 2010 and 2012.

The four lowest successful defences in T20 World Cups have all come in the ongoing edition. Three of them happened in New York, with India

'We'll retaliate if boats come under fire'

Says Asaduzzaman

Bangladesh would retaliate if the Myanmar military or the Arakan Army continued firing at Bangladeshi boats on the Naf river, said Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan yesterday.

The warring parties in Rakhine State have been warned about it, he said at a press briefing at the Secretariat.

"Occasionally, they [warring parties] have opened fire on our Border Guard Bangladesh by mistake. We have conveyed our concern to them. They said if our vessels clearly display the Bangladeshi flag, no one will fire at them."

Reaching Saint Martin's Island from the mainland by boat has become a challenging task due to poor navigability at certain parts of the Naf river, Asaduzzaman said.

'Swiss banks not so lucrative now to park money'

Their deposits fell in 2023 for second year in a row

SOHEL PARVEZ and REJAUL KARIM BYRON

Bangladeshi nationals and banks kept 17.71 million Swiss francs (CHF) in deposits last year in the banks of Switzerland, the lowest on record, reflecting the fading attractiveness of the country among the wealthy to park money.

This was a 68 percent decrease from the 55.2 million CHF Bangladeshi citizens and banks deposited in 2022, according to figures released yesterday by the Swiss National Bank (SNB), the central bank of the western European nation.

This is the second year in a row that deposits kept by Bangladeshis fell in Swiss banks. However, it does not mean that illicit outflows of capital from the country have come to an end, said two analysts.

"Of course, illegal money siphoning out of the country has increased, and it is taking place. But Swiss banks are not a favourite destination anymore. It is not a place to keep the identity secret anymore," said Ahsan H Mansur, executive director at the Policy Research Institute of Bangladesh, a local think-tank.

"Now, Dubai and Singapore are the new havens. Money is laundered and is invested in real estate and businesses in the US and England too."

At a programme in Dhaka yesterday, Shamsul Alam, a former state minister for planning, said $7 billion to $8 billion are laundered from Bangladesh every year.

Putin seeks 'security architecture' for Asia

Russian President Vladimir Putin said he wanted to build a "reliable security architecture" in the Asia-Pacific region during a state visit to Vietnam yesterday, part of a trip to Asia seen as show of defiance to the West.

A day after signing a mutual defence agreement with North Korea, Putin received a 21-gun salute at a military ceremony in Vietnam, was embraced by two of its Communist leaders and lavishly praised by one of them.

Putin had contributed to "peace, stability and development" in the world, Vietnam's president said.

Putin's visit has drawn criticism from the United States and its allies, who treat the Russian leader as a pariah and have protested that he

Summer vacation cut short

Schools, colleges to open June 26

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government has decided to shorten the summer vacation for educational institutions by a week to make up for learning losses caused by unexpected closures earlier this year due to cold waves and heat waves, among other reasons.

The last day of the summer vacation will be on June 25 (Tuesday) and educational institutions will reopen on June 26 (Wednesday), said MA Khair, the public relations officer at the Ministry of Education.

According to the academic calendar, this year's Eid-ul-Azha and summer vacation started on June 13 and were scheduled to continue until July 2.

Meanwhile, the ministry also decided to resume the two-day weekend -- Friday and Saturday -- for educational institutions.

In May, the education ministry announced that academic activities at all secondary-level educational institutions would resume on Saturdays to compensate for the sudden closures due to the heatwaves.

Elderly couple murdered at a Jatrabari home

Police say it was a planned killing, motive not clear yet

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

An elderly couple were hacked to death at their residence at Momenbagh in the capital's Jatrabari area yesterday morning.

The deceased were identified as Shafiqur Rahman, 62, a retired driver of Janata Bank, and his wife, Farida Yasmin, 55.

Their son, Al Amin Emon, is a sub-inspector in the Special Branch of police. He joined the force in 2021.

Police recovered Shafiqur's body from the ground floor of the four-storey building and Farida's body from a bedroom on the first floor around 6:00am, Inspector (Operations) Ohidur Haque Mamun of Jatrabari Police Station told The Daily Star.

The bodies of both victims had multiple injuries inflicted by sharp weapons, the inspector added.

Emon said his parents lived with him on the first floor, and the second and third floors were rented out.

On Wednesday, Emon went to their village in Feni's Dagonbhuiyan, while his wife went to her father's house in Jatrabari's Matuail.

According to Emon, it was his father's routine to wake up at 4:00am every day, switch on the water pump, and perform the Fajr prayer at a local mosque.

Yesterday morning, his father went to the ground floor to switch on the water pump as usual. The killers, who were already there, first hacked his father to death in the garage, then went up to the first floor and hacked his mother, who was asleep at the time, before escaping through the roof.

Farmers and fishery owners have set up such nets over enclosures and crop farms to ward off pests. When the birds come by to look for food, mainly insects, they get trapped, tangled and strangled to death. However, little do the people know that these birds play an important ecological function in controlling pests and thereby, help maintain a balance benefitting the farmers and the ecosystems. As a matter of fact, black drongos are sometimes even referred to as "symbols of good fortune" owing to their ecological role. This photo highlights the importance of awareness about the vital role these birds play in maintaining natural harmony and why they should be protected.

US, UK, EU voice worry over conflict in Rakhine State

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

As many as 15 countries -- including the US and the UK -- and development partners yesterday expressed concern over the worsening situation in the Rakhine State of Myanmar and the cross-border implications.

"Today we reiterate the importance of protecting all civilians," they said in a joint statement on the occasion of the World Refugee Day yesterday.

The intense fighting between the Myanmar military and the Arakan Army in Rakhine State since November last year has left hundreds of thousands of people, including the Rohingya, displaced.

Another several thousand also took shelter along the Naf river close to the Bangladesh border.

Several hundred Myanmar border security personnel and Myanmar military along with some of their family members had also crossed the border and taken shelter in Bangladesh. They were later repatriated.

Transport through the waterway between Teknaf and St Martin's Island has remained suspended after bullets were fired targeting boats last week.

The 15 countries in their statement recognised Bangladesh's generosity in hosting more than a million Rohingya who fled their homes in 2017 and earlier.

The other signatories of the statement are Japan, Germany, Canada, Australia, Denmark, Spain, Sweden, France, Switzerland, Norway and Italy.

Docs, engineers grab a third of civil admin jobs

More and more medical, engineering graduates opt for BCS general cadre

MOHIUDDIN ALAMGIR and BAHARAM KHAN

The general cadre jobs in the civil service have become so lucrative that even medical and engineering graduates are queuing up for them, giving up careers in the two highly specialised fields.

Around 30 percent of the general cadres recruited through the last three Bangladesh Civil Service (BCS) examinations graduated from either medical colleges or engineering universities, shows Bangladesh Public Service Commission (PCS) data.

The government spends a lot of money on medical and engineering students, and the skills they acquire are important for the country, said Mohammad Kaykobad, distinguished professor of Brac University.

Knowledge and the country's resources are wasted when such graduates choose civil service,said the professor who taught at Bangladesh University of Engineering and Technology (Buet) for over 40 years.

Administrative power, perks, quick promotions, and what is perceived as a discrimination against non-admin cadre officers are the reasons why graduates gravitate towards the general cadre, said several bureaucrats.

In the 43rd BCS, recruits in the admin cadre included 183 engineers and 25 doctors, which is 32.24 percent of the total number, according to PSC sources.

The trend was similar in the 40th and 41st BCS.

Dhaka University Prof Emeritus Serajul Islam Choudhury said, "Doctors and engineers turning away from their specialised field is a new phenomenon. It was not the case in the past.

"This indicates that meritorious students find jobs in administration more lucrative ..."

The 14 categories of general BCS include administration, police and foreign services while the 14 categories of specialised BCS include education and health. Any university graduate can participate in the recruitment tests for general cadres.

WHY IS GENERAL CADRE SO POPULAR?

In the 41st BCS, 36,098 engineering and 22,715 medical graduates applied for jobs under the general cadre while in the 43rd BCS, 47,315 engineering and 15,665 medical graduates vied for the jobs.

A PSC official said the number of applications from doctors fell in the 43rd BCS because the preceding BCS tests were held to recruit only doctors: 4,000 physicians were hired from 31,026 applicants.

"It is widely known that the administration officers reign over others. They have the chance to become top bureaucrats," said a PSC official, requesting anonymity.

A foreign service officer who is a medical graduate, said, "A foreign service officer gets additional benefits when posted abroad. The ones appointed in a developed country can get their children enrolled at good schools. There are many other incentives."

An admin cadre officer has the opportunity to be promoted as an upazila nirbahi officer within a relatively short period of time.

Hasina-Modi talks in Delhi today

Bangladesh PM accorded warm welcome

STAR REPORT

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina and her Indian counterpart Narendra Modi will hold a bilateral meetingat the Hyderabad House in New Delhi today.

Hasina reached the Indian capital yesterday afternoon on a two-day state visit which is aimed at advancing the bilateral relationship.

Indian State Minister for External Affairs Kirti Vardhan Singh welcomed her at the Indira Gandhi International Airport, reports our New Delhi correspondent.

Her visit is taking place after the general elections in both the countries this year. The premier along with several other international leaders attended the swearing-in ceremony of Modi and his cabinet ministers on June 9.

In September last year, Hasina had a meeting with the Indian prime minister on the sidelines of the G20 summit in New Delhi.

Diplomatic sources said nearly a dozen agreements and MoUs on areas of mutual cooperation, including regional connectivity, power, economy, and digital technology, are likely to be signed today.

The Teesta river management project, border killing, and Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement could be on the agenda of today's bilateral meeting between Bangladesh and India.

Before the formal meeting, the two prime ministers will hold one-to-one meeting at the Hyderabad House.

Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud joined the entourage of Hasina in New Delhi yesterday after performing hajj in Saudi Arabia.

FLOODS IN SYLHET

Thousands in dire need of relief

DWOHA CHOWDHURY and MINTU DESHWARA

With the waters receding in some areas, the flood situation in the Sylhet region started showing signs of improvement yesterday. However, due to an insufficient supply of relief items, thousands of people who are stranded in remote areas continue to suffer and are in desperate need of assistance.

According to official data, some 2,603 tonnes of rice along with around Tk 75 lakh cash assistance and 12,493 sacks of dry food have been allotted for the flood-affected people in the region.

While the government officials concerned said that enough relief supplies had been allocated and more aid was on its way, flood victims and members of civil society argued that the allocation was insufficient given the number of people affected by the flood and should be increased.

According to official data, the flash floods have marooned some 22.46 lakh people in the division's three worst-affected districts: Sylhet, Sunamganj, and Moulvibazar. Of them, 57,889 people were still at the shelters till yesterday.

While supplies for relief were given to those staying at the shelter centres, people living outside the shelters told this newspaper that as of yesterday, they had not received any supplies.

Md Abdullah and Shelly Begum of Sunamganj's Chhatak Monhanpur village, who lost their home in the flood, said they were struggling to manage food as no government relief reached them.

"We are somehow surviving on the food given to us by our neighbours in the area," said Abdullah.

GRAFT ALLEGATIONS

News reports on cops 'motivated, misleading'

Says police association; TIB chief critical of its 'stance to protect corrupt officers'

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh Police Service Association (BPSA) has described the recent media reports on graft allegations against some former and current members of the police force as a smear campaign by the media.

The association came down heavily on the media and also called for exercising more caution while reporting on the police force in future.

In a statement issued yesterday, it claimed that the reports being run by print, electronic, and the social media outlets are partial, motivated, exaggerated, and misleading.

Former inspector general of police Benazir Ahmed has recently come under the spotlight due to reports on his huge properties, including land, houses, and apartments. Benazir and his family had reportedly left the country after the Anti-Corruption Commission started investigating his wealth.

Former Dhaka Metropolitan Police commissioner Asaduzzaman Mia recently hogged the headlines for allegations of corruption.

The BPSA statement came a day after Home Minister

Road crashes claim 5 lives in 2 districts

STAR REPORT

At least five people were killed and 22 others injured in three road crashes in Faridpur and Rangpur on Thursday night and yesterday.

In Faridpur, two people were killed and 10 others injured when a bus hit an easy bike on the Dhaka-Khulna highway near Madhukhali bus stand early yesterday.

The victims are Sumon Ali, 38, of Kundupasha village of Jhalakathi's Nalchity upazila, and Siraj Hawladar, 60, of Sarukhali village of Barishal Sadar upazila.

Police said the deceased and injured are relatives.

After visiting a relative's house in Pabna from Jhalakathi after Eid, they were going to another relative's place in Faridpur.

They hired the easy bike for Gondardia after getting off a bus at Madhukhali bus stand in Faridpur. Around 1:00am, the three-wheeler was hit by a Dhaka-bound bus.

The injured were first taken to Madhukhali Upazila Health Complex and doctors referred them to Faridpur Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujib Medical College Hospital. The two died while undergoing treatment.

TEESTA WATER SHARING

Dhaka, Delhi should look for 'creative solution'

Int'l affairs expert Sreeradha tells Star

Bangladesh and India should find a "creative solution" to the Teesta management as Dhaka has long been demanding its share of water from the transboundary river, said Prof Sreeradha Datta of OP Jindal Global University.

Given the strong bilateral relationship between the two countries, the border killings are "shameful", she said.

"India has not effectively responded to Bangladesh's long-standing demand for Teesta water. I think the leaders of the two countries will find out a creative solution to this problem," she told The Daily Star yesterday.

2 killed, 5 injured in Sherpur boat capsize

UNB, Sherpur

Two young men, including a medical student, were killed while five others were injured when a boat capsized in a beel (lake-like wetland) in Sherpur yesterday.

The deceased were identified as Mosharraf Hossain Milton 22, a second-year student at Rangpur Medical College, and Md Amanullah 19.

The incident took place in the Dhali beel around 2:30pm in the Kanduli area under Jhenaigati upazila, confirmed Md Shafiqul, chairman of Dhanshail union.

According to police, hospital, and local sources, Milton, from South Kanduli village, along with some friends, rented two boats, one of which capsized in the middle of the beel. The passengers drowned because they couldn't swim.

The boatmen and passengers from the other boat rescued them and took them to Jhenaigati Upazila Health Complex.

As their condition worsened, they were moved to Sherpur District Hospital, where the on-duty doctor declared Milton and Amanullah dead, said Dr Khairul Kabir Sumon, residential medical officer (RMO) at Sherpur District Hospital.

Jhenaigati Police Station Inspector (Investigation) Iskandar Habib, said that a duty officer was sent to the scene immediately after learning about the boat capsize. "Legal actions are being taken regarding the incident."

takes place in Florida where Messi is ending his career with Major League Soccer club Inter Miami.

Thursday night's victory over Canada on a below-par temporary grass pitch in Atlanta was not a vintage performance: the Argentine captain and talisman missed a couple of clear chances though he also had a hand in both goals.

"The important thing is that we started with a win," said Messi, whose team had started the last World Cup with a defeat by Saudi Arabia that was one of the all-time shocks.

"We struggled a bit in the first half and the pitch didn't help either," he added after his record 35th Copa America finals appearance. "We'll always give our best, sometimes playing better, sometimes worse, but always fighting our hardest."

It was Messi's perfectly weighted pass to Alexis Mac Allister that made Julian Alvarez's opener followed by another controlled through ball to assist Lautaro Martinez's second.

"When Lionel Messi gets going, everything looks easy," football writer Diego Provenzano wrote in Argentine daily Clarin.

Messi could yet make the 2026 World Cup, depending on how his body holds up, but coach Lionel Scaloni has urged fans to stop speculating about that and just enjoy the moment.

"It doesn't make much sense to be thinking about when they are not here," he said of Messi and veteran striker Angel Di Maria. "Let's enjoy them now. Then we'll see what happens."

Argentina next face Chile and Peru in Group A of the U.S.-hosted tournament between 16 teams in the Americas.

With some, including French striker Kylian Mbappe, suggesting the Copa is inferior to the also ongoing European Championship, Messi noted that his tournament included teams with 10 World Cups between them: Brazil (5) Argentina (3), and Uruguay (2).

"There are a lot of world champions left out to say that it (the Euros) is the most difficult tournament," he said.

Station, said, "After the incident, police arrested Sukumar Das, driver of Purbasha Paribahan. Police also seized the bus and the easy bike."

In Rangpur's Pirganj upazila, three people were killed and 12 others injured in two road crashes on Thursday night and yesterday, said police.

The deceased are Mintu Mia, 25, of Hajratpur village of Mithapukur upazila, and Ashraful Islam, 30, of Narayanpur village of Pirgachha upazila. The identity of another victim could not be known immediately.

Solaiman Sheikh, OC of Borodargah Highway Police Station in Pirganj, said a bus rear-ended another bus of Hanif Paribahan at Madarhat on Dinajpur-Panchagarh highway around 10:20pm, killing a person and injuring 12 others of both vehicles.

On information, firefighters went to the spot and sent the injured to Rangpur Medical College Hospital. One of the injured, Mintu, died there.

Police seized the vehicles, said OC Solaiman, adding that the deceased were Hanif Paribahan passengers.

In another incident, a Pirgachha-bound pickup was hit by a bus in Madarhat village early yesterday, injuring Ashraful, a pickup passenger.

Locals took him to the local upazila health complex, where he died in the morning, said OC Solaiman.

Thousands in dire need of relief

The couple has now taken shelter at their neighbour's home, which was flooded as well but not as badly as other houses.

They also said they lost all their rice stored at the house when it got flooded.

Sufi Alam Sohel, chairman of the Islampur union in Chhatak upazila, said the flash floods severely damaged at least 800 houses while thousands of families lost their stored paddy as they live at the foothills of India's Meghalaya state.

"As an emergency response, I was allotted only 10 maunds of rice and three sacks of dry food, which was barely enough to feed the people at the shelters, let alone all the affected people in the union," he told this newspaper.

Another 17 tonnes of rice have been allotted for the union, but that has yet to arrive. "But that too will be inadequate," he added.

Kanon Alam, an advocate of the Supreme Court, said he was at his home in Azampur village of Sunamganj's Dowarabazar upazila when the flash floods first hit.

"In the last couple of days, I have closely observed the struggle of the affected people. The government allotment is so small that many people would have been starved if the solvent locals did not lend their support," he said.

Faruque Mahmud Chowdhury, president of the Sylhet divisional unit of Sushashoner Jonno Nagorik (Shujan), said that on the one hand, the amount of relief provided is insufficient, and the distribution is also questionable.

"The process of distributing relief provides an opportunity for local representatives to commit irregularities," he said, calling for adequate supply and transparency in distribution.

Abdul Karim Kim, coordinator of Songkhubdho Nagorik Andolon Sylhet, said the Sylhet region gets affected by floods every year, yet the government fails to allot adequate relief.

"The government ought to provide relief assistance to the people in proportion to their needs."

Speaking on the matter, Debojit Singha, additional divisional commissioner (general) of Sylhet, said, "As general relief, we have received enough cash, rice, baby food, and animal feed. Additionally, 26,000 relief packs with 14 essential items have been provided by the Prime Minister's special relief fund.

"Reaching those residing in shelter centers was our top priority because they are the most severely affected and they have received relief multiple times. We are aiming to extend relief efforts to the people left in the villages and remote areas now that we have received a new allocation."

According to the Water Development Board (WDB), as of 9:00am yesterday, the water level of the Surma River was flowing 16cm above the danger mark at Sylhet point and 65cm above the danger mark at Kanaighat point.

On the other hand, the Kushiyara River was flowing 61cm above the danger mark at Amalsid point, 13cm above the danger mark at Sheola point, 1.2cm above the danger mark at Fenchuganj point, and 24cm above the danger mark at Sherpur point.

Shah Mohammad Sajib Hossain, Assistant Meteorologist at Sylhet Weather Office, told UNB that there was no rainfall from Thursday noon till Friday morning.

Meanwhile, the local meteorological department has predicted moderate to heavy rains in some parts of Sylhet for the next few days due to active monsoon conditions.

In the past three weeks, Sylhet city has been inundated five times due to heavy rains, affecting hundreds of areas and causing untold suffering to the dwellers.

Earlier, on May 29, heavy rains and hill torrents from upstream caused flooding in Sylhet. The flood situation began to normalise on June 8.

However, continuous rains starting in the early hours of June 17 led to another flood in the district.

Prior to this, in May, floods were caused by hill torrents and rains from upstream in India.

The Sylhet floods story in Friday's newspaper mentioned that 103,776 people were at shelters when, in reality, over 51,000 people moved to shelters. We apologise for the inadvertent mistake.

our New Delhi correspondent.

Briefing reporters after the meeting, PM's Principal Secretary M Tofazzel Hossain Miah said the two leaders discussed advancing the partnership between the two countries.

"The two new governments [of India and Bangladesh] have come to power with mandates [from people]. So, the two countries will have new visions," he said.

The Indian minister said his country wants to work with Bangladesh in a more substantive way in the areas of logistics, energy, and connectivity.

Hasina and Jaishankar agreed to strengthen BIMSTEC.

The premier emphasised speeding up the ongoing developmental projects involving the two neighbours. The two leaders agreed on the issue.

On Rohingya issue, the principal secretary said border areas of Bangladesh and India are being affected by the ongoing fighting between the Myanmar government forces and rebel groups.

Prime Minister's Private Industries and Investment Affairs Adviser Salman F Rahman and Foreign Secretary Masud Bin Momen, among others, were present.

After the meeting, Jaishankar wrote on X, formerly Twitter, that Hasina's state visit to India underlines the "close and abiding" ties between Bangladesh and India, reports UNB.

"Delighted to call on Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina of Bangladesh this [Friday] evening. Appreciate her guidance on the further development of our special partnership," he said.

'INVEST IN BANGLADESH'

During another meeting with a delegation of the Confederation of Indian Industry (CII) yesterday evening, Hasina called upon Indian businesspeople to invest in Bangladesh.

The Bangladesh government gives priority to the neighbouring countries for trade, business and investment, PM's Private Industry and Investment Affairs Adviser Salman quoted Hasina as saying while briefing reporters after the meeting.

Hasina said Bangladesh is setting up 100 special economic zones and the Indian entrepreneurs can invest there.

The CII team told Hasina that they in collaboration with Federation of Bangladesh Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FBCCI) want to work in Bangladesh's different sectors, including agriculture, IT and logistics.

He said Bangladeshi businesspeople raised the issue of non-tariff barriers and urged the CII delegation to prevail upon the Indian government to address the issue.

FBCCI President Mahbubul Alam, Nitol Niloy Group Chairman Abdul Matlub Ahmad, Pran RFL Group Chairman Ahsan Khan Chowdhury and some other leading Bangladeshi businesspeople were also present.

Today morning, red carpet will be rolled out for Hasina at the Rashtrapati Bhavan, where she will received formally by Modi. She will also inspect the guard of honour there.

Hasina is scheduled to visit Raj Ghat to pay tribute to the Father of the Indian Nation Mahatma Gandhi by placing a wreath at his Samadhi. She will sign the visitor's book there.

The premier will attend a luncheon hosted by Modi at the Hyderabad House.

Hasina is expected to call on Indian President Droupadi Murmu and Vice President Shri Jagdeep Dhankhar.

The PM is scheduled to depart the India capital from Palam Airport at 6:00pm (Delhi time) and reach Dhaka around 9:00pm.

Yesterday, Hasina departed the Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport by a chartered flight of Biman Bangladesh Airlines at 2:00pm.

SOCIAL MEDIA POSTS

HK charges two under new nat'l security law

AFP, Hong Kong

Hong Kong has charged two people in the span of a week with "sedition" over social media posts and clothing slogans, under a new national security law.

The city passed a homegrown security law in March, commonly known as Article 23, which the United States and Britain have criticised for curbing rights.

The legislation is Hong Kong's second national security law and follows the one imposed by Beijing in 2020 after huge, sometimes violent pro-democracy protests a year earlier.

Yesterday, authorities charged Au Kin-wai, 58, with publishing "seditious" posts on social media platforms such as Facebook, YouTube and X.

Au published the content intending to incite "hatred, contempt or disaffection against the fundamental system of the state" and against Hong Kong's constitutional order, according to a court document.

Authorities separately charged Chu Kai-pong on June 14 with sedition, saying the 27-year-old wore a t-shirt calling for Hong Kong's "liberation" and a mask with a design suggestive of a protest slogan, local media reported.

Docs, engineers

"But doctors, engineers and other cadre officials wait for years for a promotion. In most cases, they work under younger admin cadre colleagues. It is clear discrimination."

SM Golam Kibria, former president of BCS Information Association, said while some administration cadre officers of the 13th BCS have been appointed as secretaries -- the top grade for a bureaucrat -- officers of the same batch in education cadre have reached the 4th grade at best, and those in health reached the 3rd grade.

Prof Baizid Khoorshid Riaz, additional director general of the Directorate General of Medical Education, said, "A deputy secretary gets an interest-free car loan and Tk 50,000 per month to pay for a chauffeur and maintain the vehicle. A professor gets no such thing."

Serajul Islam Choudhury said medical graduates choosing other fields is alarming when the country is facing a dearth of doctors, especially in rural areas.

"It's a pity that they go to villages as public servants, but not as physicians."

Contacted, PSC Chairman Sohorab Hossain said he has nothing to comment on the issue.

The commission recommends candidates as per the rules, he said.

News reports on cops 'motivated, misleading'

Asaduzzaman Khan on Thursday said the graft allegations against Asaduzzaman appeared to be based on speculation.

The same day, the BPSA, a platform of the police's BCS cadre officials, held a meeting at the police headquarters. Some participants of the meeting even demanded that legal action be taken against those involved in publishing such news.

Dr Iftekharuzzaman, executive director of Transparency International Bangladesh (TIB), said police's stance is akin to "shooting the messenger".

"By doing this, they are actually warning the people and the media that you don't comment on the graft allegations or publish reports in the media. They are actually threatening the media and the people," he told The Daily Star when asked for his reaction on the BPSA statement.

He said the BPSA, as a representative association of police, does not want publication of reports on irregularities and corruption by the force members.

BPSA STATEMENT

According to the statement, anti-liberation and anti-state elements, along with cyber terrorists hiding abroad, are using the social media to assassinate the characters of police officers through spreading misinformation. Inspired by them, several media outlets are running biased and negative reports against some former and current members of the police.

The statement, signed by BPSA President Monirul Islam, additional IGP, and General Secretary Golam Mostafa Russel, superintendent of Narayanganj police, said in most cases, the reports did not mention their sources of information. Such reports damage morale and tarnish image of the police members.

It went on to say that because of the police's successful role against the anti-liberation, communal, and anti-democracy forces' activities like torching properties and hurling petrol bombs, they are constantly criticising the police force.

It added that some media outlets are publishing negative reports against certain police officers out of personal vengeance and individual interests, which goes against the ethics of journalism.

The BPSA said the media has obligations to publish impartial news. "But for some mysterious reasons, a section of the media is cleverly trying to make the police force controversial, which is nothing but an attempt to stifle honest journalism. Such one-sided behaviour from the media is tantamount to deceiving the general readers."

In the interest of public safety, the BPSA requested the media to refrain from publishing any misleading reports.

The association's statement also highlighted the role of police in uprooting terrorism and militancy and also during the Covid-19 pandemic.

IFTEKHARUZZAMAN'S REACTION

Iftekharuzzaman said the BPSA took a stance to save the police officials against whom graft allegations have been brought.

"Instead, they could have said that they were embarrassed by the reports on the allegations against their fellow members. As a police association, it should state that they are ready to cooperate with investigations.

"If they can do it, people's faith in them would be restored to some extent," Iftekharuzzaman said.

Ukrainian drones strike 4 Russian oil refineries

Radar stations, intel centres in Bryansk, occupied Crimea also hit

REUTERS, Kyiv

Ukrainian long-range attack drones struck four Russian oil refineries as well as radar stations and other military targets in Russia in a major attack in the early hours of yesterday, Kyiv's military said.

Ukraine has dramatically stepped up its use of drones this year to attack Russian oil facilities, which it deems legitimate military targets that are fuelling Russian troops in their nearly 28-month-old invasion.

"Unmanned aerial vehicles attacked the Afipsky, Ilsky, Krasnodar, and Astrakhan oil refineries," the Ukrainian military said in a statement on the Telegram messaging app.

Russia's military said earlier that it had downed 70 drones over the Black Sea and Ukraine's occupied Crimean peninsula, 43 drones over Russia's Krasnodar region and one more over Russia's Volgograd region yesterday.

A Kyiv intelligence source told Reuters that the Afipsky, Ilsky and Krasnodar oil refineries produced fuel for Russia's Black Sea Fleet and that the drone operation targeting them had been conducted jointly with the SBU security service.

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

An Indian national, who was visiting relatives in Dhaka, died after a CNG-run auto-rickshaw hit him on the Mayor Hanif Flyover in Tikatuli area yesterday afternoon.

The deceased was identified as Dwijendra Lal Chowdhury, 60, a resident of Nadia district in West Bengal, said his nephew Pradip Roy Chowdhury.

Pradip said Dwijendra left his ancestral Chandpur residence many years ago and settled in India.

He arrived in Bangladesh a month ago to visit relatives here and was supposed to return to India today, he said.

The man got down from a bus on the flyover and was crossing the road around 2:30pm when an auto-rickshaw hit him, leaving him injured, Kawshik Roy, a passerby, said.

He was rushed to Dhaka Medical College Hospital where doctors declared him dead, said Kawshik who took him to the DMCH.

Inspector Bachchu Mia, in-charge of the DMCH Police Outpost, said the body was kept at the hospital morgue for autopsy.

RENOVATION OF OSMANI UDYAN

DSCC extends deadline once again

Mayor says work to complete by next month

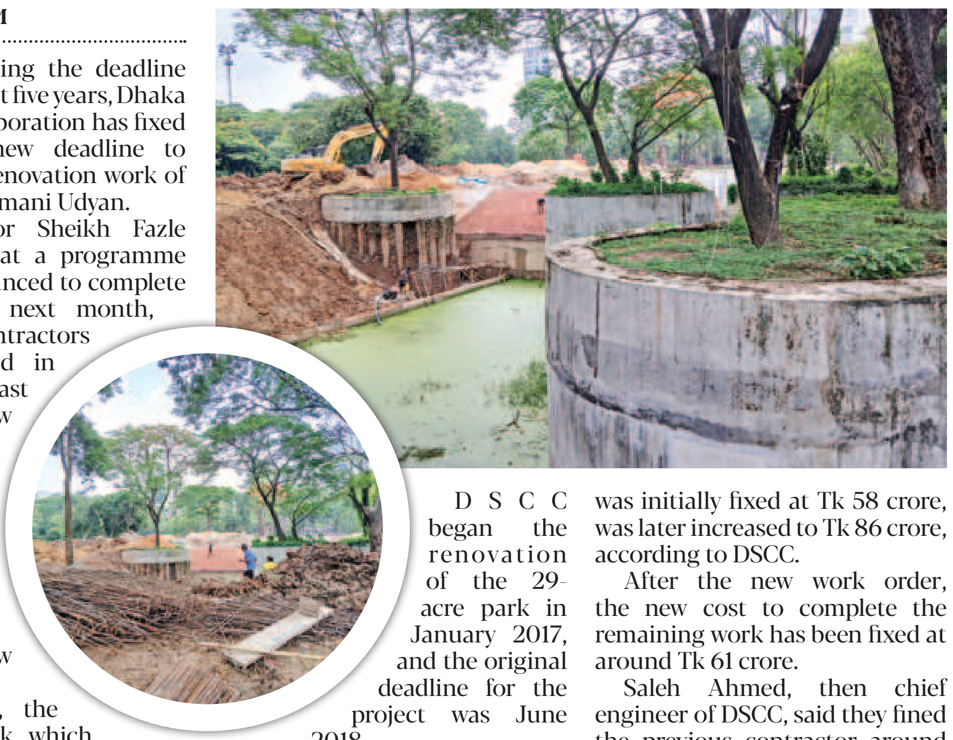
HELEMUL ALAM

Despite extending the deadline four times in last five years, Dhaka South City Corporation has fixed yet another new deadline to complete the renovation work of the capital's Osmani Udyan.

DSCC Mayor Sheikh Fazle Noor Taposh, at a programme recently, announced to complete the work by next month, as new contractors were appointed in September last year with a new work order and they have already started working.

The deadline has been fixed July 2024 in the new work order.

Before that, the renovation work, which was supposed to be completed in 2018, remained halted for around two years due to the contractor, Builders Limited's, work order getting cancelled in 2022, with the allegation of breaching contract.



DSCC began the renovation of the 29-acre park in January 2017, and the original deadline for the project was June 2018.

The deadline was first extended to June 2019, was later extended twice to June 2020 and June 2021 and was again extended until June 2022, according to DSCC sources.

Meanwhile, the cost, which was initially fixed at Tk 58 crore, was later increased to Tk 86 crore, according to DSCC.

After the new work order, the new cost to complete the remaining work has been fixed at around Tk 61 crore.

Saleh Ahmed, then chief engineer of DSCC, said they fined the previous contractor around Tk 3.5 crore for their failure to complete the project.

Renovation of the park -- named after General Muhammad Ataul Goni Osmani, commander-in-chief during the Liberation War -- is taking place under a Tk 200-crore "Jol Sobujey Dhaka Project" for modernisation of 19 parks and 12 playgrounds by DSCC, most of which have been completed.

In the park, there are walkways, a library, a food court, drainage system to control two lakes, direct walkways to come from the side of secretariat to Nagar Bhaban, a stairway to the lake, an indoor games zone, and parking facilities.

The 29-acre green sanctuary has a number of rare trees and plants, alongside sculptures and an auditorium.

During a recent visit, this correspondent saw workers busy with the construction work.

Three firms -- PF Corporation, NDE-SBN (JV), and PFC and SI (JV) -- got the work order to complete the work in five packages.

Md Nadim Bhuiyan, project manager of NDE-SBN (JV), said 50 percent of the work on their portions has been completed.

He said they started their work on September 28 last year and are scheduled to complete their work by June 25.

Meanwhile, according to new design, there will be boundary

FLOODS IN NORTHEAST

772,000 children affected: Unicef

UNB, Dhaka

Over 20,00,000 people, including over 772,000 children, are already affected by flash floods in the north-eastern region and in urgent need of assistance, said Unicef Representative in Bangladesh Sheldon Yett yesterday.

Yett said Unicef is "deeply concerned" about the devastating flood situation unfolding in Bangladesh.

"The rivers are flowing dangerously high, and the situation is expected to worsen over the next 24 to 48 hours," he said.

"As waters rise, children are the most vulnerable, facing heightened risks of drowning, malnutrition, deadly waterborne diseases, the trauma of displacement, and potential abuse in overpopulated shelters," Yett said in a statement.

He said their priority is to ensure the safety and well-being of children and adolescents.

In coordination and partnership with the government of Bangladesh and local stakeholders in the field, they have already distributed safe water to reach more than 100,000 people for over 5 days, and while these efforts continue.

"We have also distributed more than 3,000 ten-liter water containers. We are urgently bringing in additional emergency supplies to the affected communities in case the situation worsens," he said.

Over 810 government schools in the Sylhet division have been flooded and almost 500 are being used as flood shelters. In addition, almost 140 community clinics are also affected by flood waters.

"Child Protection Social Workers are offering support to mitigate potential violence and counseling to help children overcome trauma during this difficult time," Yett said.

419 hajj pilgrims return home

UNB, Dhaka

Conspiracy on to make AL look corrupt

Quader tells rally

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader yesterday alleged that a conspiracy is being hatched to portray AL as a corrupt party to the people of the country.

"Stay alert; Fakhruls are spreading rumours. Allegations of corruption are being brought against Awami League. The police force is being attacked in a generalised way, and they have the intention to do the same against the army," said Quader.

He was addressing a brief rally prior to a procession brought out marking AL's 75th founding anniversary, starting from in front of the Institution of Engineers in the capital's Ramna.

He also alleged that some media outlets are also involved in anti-AL propaganda.

The AL second-in-command also stated that they should think about whether the plot to label the party as corrupt is part of a conspiracy to oust it from the government.

"If a person commits a crime, in that case, the Anti-Corruption Commission is independent and the judiciary is independent. Sheikh Hasina has the

Says BNP leader Farroque

UNB, Dhaka

BNP Chairperson's Advisory Council member Zainul Abedin Farroque yesterday said the country's people are waiting to see what Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina brings from Delhi this time.

"But if she returns empty-handed, the people won't forgive her. There will be political resistance against her," he said while speaking at a protest rally.

Jatiyatabadi Nagorik Parishad organised the programme in front of Jatiya Press Club to protest a move "to build railway tracks over Bangladeshi soil by the Indian government".

Fatema finds success in vermicomposting

SUZIT KUMAR DAS, Faridpur

Kaniz Fatema, 31, a homemaker from Pierpur village in Faridpur, earns Tk 40,000-45,000 per month by producing vermicompost, allowing her to become self-reliant and create job opportunities for others.

Her journey was not easy. After completing her SSC in 2007, she married Sheikh Shamsur Rahman and her in-laws did not allow her to continue her education.

Despite this, Fatema persevered. In 2019, she began working with USID, where she received training in various subjects and learned about vermicomposting, a natural process of converting organic waste into fertiliser using earthworms.

"In 2021, I took a loan of Tk 5,000 from a local NGO and bought two kilogrammes of earthworms, four concrete slab rings, and four tins. Using 100kg cow dung, I produced 40kg of vermicompost in one month, which I sold for Tk 400," said Fatima.

By the end of 2021, Fatema had purchased six more rings and began earning Tk 4,000-5,000 per month. In 2022, she invested Tk 65,000 to build four reservoirs and a tin-shed house for her farm, naming her business "Ehan Vermicompost".

Currently, Fatema operates 10 rings and nine reservoirs on five decimals of land at her father's home, producing around 2.5 tonnes of vermicompost each month. She sells those for Tk 15-20 per kg. She has invested around Tk 4 lakh into the business.

Fatema buys cow dung from locals for Tk 2 per kg.

Champa Begum, a homemaker from Alalpur village, said, "Fatema collects cow dung from my house each week, allowing me to earn Tk 1,200-1,400 per month."

Fatema also employs a permanent worker, Hima Begum. "I start working after finishing my household chores and earn Tk 8,000 per month," said Hima.

Fatema sells most of her vermicompost at fertiliser shops in Pierpur Bazar and sometimes directly to consumers from her house. She also supplies vermicompost to various shops and customers in Dhaka.

Arif Hossain, a resident of Mirpur-1 in Dhaka, said, "I collect vermicompost from Fatema for my rooftop garden. The quality is excellent."

Now, people interested in vermicompost production visit Fatema for advice. "Fatema is very supportive. I took a lot of advice from her," said Sahan Khan, a resident of Komorpur village.

Anwar Hossain, sub-assistant agriculture officer of Faridpur Sadar upazila, said, "Fatema is one of the top vermicompost producers in the district. We are giving all kinds of support to her."

Army chief pays homage to Bangabandhu

BSS, Dhaka

Chief of Army Staff General SM Shafiuddin Ahmed paid rich tribute to Father of the Nation Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman yesterday by placing a wreath at his portrait in front of Bangabandhu Memorial Museum at Dhanmondi-32.

After laying the wreath, the army chief stood in solemn silence there for some time as a mark of profound respect to the memory of Bangabandhu and his family members as well as all martyrs of August 15, 1975, said an ISPR press release.

Army high officials, among others, were present.

SYLHET FLOOD

Over 10,000 left without power

UNB, Sylhet

Incessant rain and water from the hills have led to early flooding in the Sylhet region, causing power outages for over 10,000 residents in the district.

The Power Division has cancelled all leaves for electricity workers to ensure that they are available to support people during this crisis.

In a notification yesterday, it was reported that the Bangladesh Power Development Board (BPDB) and the Bangladesh Rural Electrification Board (BREB) in the Sylhet zone have faced significant damage to power substations, lines, transformers, and electric poles due to the ongoing deluge.

Safety measures have been implemented in flood-affected areas, leading to intentional power cuts to prevent electrical accidents.

Rising water levels have also necessitated further power disconnections.

All 21 of the 33/11 kV substations under BPDB Sylhet remain operational, maintaining power supply to the region.

10th Int'l Yoga Day celebrated

grilles around the park and two gates on the south and north sides. The fencing around the park has already been completed.

Iqbal Habib, vice president of Bangladesh Paribesh Andolon, said if authorities confined the park to its boundary again, that would be a clear violation of its original design.

Earlier, a total of 70 architects prepared the designs of 19 parks and 12 playgrounds and presented them at Nagar Bhaban in 2017.

In the designs, experts opined that the parks must contain greenery. Moreover, boundary walls or fences around parks or playgrounds should be removed in most cases.

Contacted, Mohidul Haq, UNO of Kaunia upazila, said steps are being taken to distribute dry food among those affected.

Meanwhile, WDB has issued a flood alert for parts of Lalmonirhat, Kurigram, and Nilphamari, predicting further rises in the water levels of the Teesta, Dudhkumar, and Dharla rivers due to anticipated heavy rainfall in northern Bangladesh and Indian West Bengal.

India's Gangtok recorded 31mm of rainfall in 24 hours till yesterday morning, which might exacerbate Rangpur's current flood situation.

visit at the invitation of her Indian counterpart Narendra Modi.

Farroque, also a former opposition chief whip in parliament, said India, being a friend, cannot take everything away from Bangladesh and deprive it of its fair share of water from shared rivers.

The BNP leader warned that the people of Bangladesh will never accept if India builds railway tracks over Bangladesh to transport goods to the other side.

"Let's forget all the differences and join a movement against Indian aggression," he said.

He said lakhs of people in the Sylhet region are living in extreme misery due to sudden floods.

Farroque alleged that the government constructed the Mithamoin-Austagram road in Kishoreganj haor area only to appease an individual, which is now causing floods.

the upazila, claimed that he had reported the problem to the authorities concerned through the upazila administration on behalf of the farmers.

"However, no initiative has yet been taken to repair or rebuild the sluice gates," he added.

Moreover, water seeps in through these ineffective sluice gates during extreme weather events such as cyclones and floods to inundate the localities, said locals.

Tarek Mahmud of Banshbaria union said his yard was inundated by sea water during the recent cyclone.

Contacted, officials of BWDB said new sluice gates will be constructed in these affected areas.

Asked why they have not done so yet, Prashanta Talukder, sub-divisional engineer of BWDB (Sitakunda sub-division), said they could not do so due to fund crisis.

"These existing sluice gates need to be replaced. So, we are preparing a development project proposal for constructing new structures and will send it to the ministry concerned for approval soon," he said.

courage to bring the corrupt, no matter how influential they are, under book," added Quader.

Addressing BNP, he said, "How would you wage a movement? Will you run away like on October 28?"

"A movement without people is not a movement. Today, in the name of movement, if they take to the streets again with arson, terror, and murder, Awami League will give an appropriate response," said Quader.

The procession was scheduled to start at 2:30pm, and to attend it, AL leaders and activists began to throng the venue around 1:30pm.

Streets in front of IEB, Matsya Bhaban, and the one leading to Shahbagh intersection were brimming with them, which caused vehicular movements on those roads to come to a halt, with commuters having to wait long hours in their vehicles.

As the procession advanced through Mirpur Road towards Dhanmondi-32's Bangabandhu Bhaban, traffic congestion extended to adjacent roads.

The procession started from Suhrawardy Udyan around 3:45pm and ended at Dhanmondi 32 at 5:30pm.

20,000 stranded in Rangpur flash flood

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Dinajpur

Around 20,000 people in the low-lying areas of Rangpur's Kaunia upazila have been marooned due to a flash flood caused by a surge in the Teesta river.

The flood occurred following excessive rain in the area alongside Indian upstream regions in 24 hours till yesterday morning, which caused the river's water level to rise above the danger mark.

The flood has already affected around 10 villages in the upazila. Also, 11 char areas have been affected by Teesta's rising water levels.

Rangpur Water Development Board (WDB) officials said the Teesta was close to the danger level at Dalia Point a couple of days ago, causing floods in Gangachara in Rangpur and parts of Nilphamari district.

The Teesta is now flowing 52cm above the danger level at Kaunia point. However, WDB officials said the water level has remained unchanged since yesterday morning.

As floodwaters swept away many homes, residents of the flood-affected villages -- particularly in Balapara and Dhepamadhupur unions -- have sought refuge on higher grounds with their families and livestock.

"The flood situation has been worsening since Thursday. The flash flood has already claimed the livestock of many families, while a significant area of cropland has also been submerged," said Aminul Islam, chairman of Dhepamadhupur union.

He also expressed concern over the severe drinking water crisis and said relief efforts have yet to reach many flood-affected people.

Flash floods hit northern districts like Rangpur and Kurigram due to the rise in water levels in the Teesta following torrential rain. Around 20,000 people in the low-lying areas of Rangpur's Kaunia upazila have been marooned due to the flood. The photos were taken yesterday. PHOTO: STAR

A 'CASTLE' IN RUINS

145-year-old historic Mymensingh building in dilapidated condition

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Mymensingh

At the heart of Mymensingh city, surrounded by greenery, stands a two-storied tin-shed "castle" with a banyan tree in front of it.

Its European architectural design bears testimony to the sense of aesthetics and wealth of the then Mymensingh zamindars.

The structure comprises staircases made of iron, alongside various other metal accessories. Due to the sheer quantity of iron used in constructing and decorating the structure, this 145-year-old establishment was also known as "Lohar Kuthi" among locals.

The two-storied building was placed on a high plinth, which historians say was done to protect the castle from floods. The building also hosts two Greek sculptures in white on both sides of the front gate.

However, the dismembered hands of both the sculptures show how decades of negligence made it a forgotten "castle".

Maharaja Suryakanta Acharya Chowdhury, a prominent zamindar, constructed the castle on 27.50 acres of land at a cost of Tk 45,000 in 1879 in Mymensingh town.

Some say it was named in memory of Mymensingh's first Zilla magistrate NS Alexander. However, another group of scholars claim that the building was named after Alexandra, the beloved wife of Emperor Edward.

Acharya used this building as a rest house for his guests. Rabindranath Tagore arrived in Mymensingh by train on February 15, 1926, and stayed at this place for four days as his guest.

Tagore was accorded several receptions during his stay there.

However, the rich history of the establishment remains mostly unexplored to this day. Not much has been done to create awareness either.

After the 1947 partition, the house was used as the library of Teachers Training College for men and teachers' dormitory.

The two-storied house has 14 rooms on the ground and first floors. Seven rooms on the first floor of the house were used as dormitories for around 60 years.

During a recent visit, this correspondent found the floor abandoned, and in a precarious condition.

Although TTC still uses the second floor as a library for its students, this correspondent saw it to be only a shadow of its former self.

TTC Principal Prof Zainal Abedin Khan said officials of the Ministry of Cultural Affairs visited the castle recently to talk about renovation. "We are yet to get any confirmation in this regard," he said.

The castle was listed as an archaeological site in March 2019.

Contacted, Afroza Khan Mita, regional director of the Department of Archaeology (Dhaka and Mymensingh), said a proposal for preservation, renovation and digging of all archeological sites including Alexandra Castle has already been approved. The work could start in the next fiscal year.

"The renovation work of the castle will be given priority," she said.

Saline creeps into cropland as sluice gates lie unrepaired

SIFAYET ULLAH, Ctg

At least 50 farmers in Chattogram's Sitakunda upazila are struggling to protect their crops as saline water from the Bay of Bengal constantly inundated their 150 acres of cropland due to four sluice gates being non-functional for eight years.

"We used to cultivate three crops on our land. Due to salinity, the land has turned barren," said Ahmed Hossain, a farmer from Muradpur union under the upazila.

According to Bangladesh Water Development Board, these sluice gates, constructed on the mouths of Boalia, Shikder, Rajapur and Guliakhali canals between 1960 and 1968 became inoperative in 2016.

Visiting Boalia Khal (canal) area recently, this correspondent observed that sea water was constantly entering the locality during high tide through a damaged sluice gate.

Affected farmers in the area said they had urged the local administration several times for immediate steps to resolve the problem, but to no avail.

Nur Mohammed, who used to be a paddy farmer in the area, said salinity turned his land barren and compelled him to leave paddy cultivation.

"Only an operational sluice gate can turn my land cultivable again," he added.

Sitakunda is known for producing high-yielding varieties of beans, as well as tomatoes, gourds and sweet pumpkins every year.

COX'S BAZAR DISTRICT

Govt building 268km road network

BSS, Dhaka

The government is implementing a project to improve the rural connectivity in Cox's Bazar district.

Under the project titled "Emergency Multi-Sector Rohingya Crisis Response Project (EMCRP)", the government is building a 268-kilometre road network in several upazilas, including Ukhia and Teknaf.

The government is also building 50 new cyclone shelters, one relief administration and distribution centre, 34 multipurpose community service centres, six markets, two fire service offices, one LGED building, nine fire-fighting warehouses and drains, culverts and bridges inside the camps.

Under the project, the government is also setting up lightning arresters and solar street lights.

Talking to the news agency, Project Director of the EMCRP, being implemented by LGED, Javed Karim, said the project is helping build and rehabilitate basic infrastructure, improve community resilience and help prevent gender-based violence against the forcibly displaced Rohingya population.

Executive Engineer of LGED in Cox's Bazar Md Mamun Khan said work of around 200 kilometres has been completed.

"Four bridges and 45 school and disaster shelters in Ukhia upazila have been handed over. Also, a modern jetty is being constructed at the Cox's Bazar-Maheshkhali link gate. Two rubber dams have been constructed. Apart from these, several other works are going on," he added.

He also said multipurpose community service centres, satellite fire service centres, 268 lightning arresters, 2,500 solar street lights and 35 nanogrids for energy supply have been installed inside the camp.

Development Project Proposal of the EMCRP got the Ecnec approval on October 30, 2018. The revised DPP was approved on October 6, 2020.

The total estimated cost of the project is Tk 1,394.47 crore. Of the amount, the government is providing Tk 12.80 crore and the remaining Tk 1,381.67 crore is coming from the World Bank and German Development Bank.

TAIWAN CONFLICT

US, China hold first informal nuclear talks in five years

REUTERS, Hong Kong

The United States and China resumed semi-official nuclear arms talks in March for the first time in five years, with Beijing's representatives telling US counterparts that they would not resort to atomic threats over Taiwan, according to two American delegates who attended.

The Chinese representatives offered reassurances after their US interlocutors raised concerns that China might use, or threaten to use, nuclear weapons if it faced defeat in a conflict over Taiwan. Beijing views the democratically governed island as its territory, a claim rejected by the government in Taipei.

"They told the US side that they were absolutely convinced that they are able to prevail in a conventional fight over Taiwan without using nuclear weapons," said scholar David Santoro, the US organiser of the Track Two talks, the details of which are being reported by Reuters for the first time.

Participants in Track Two talks are generally former officials and academics who can speak with authority on their government's position, even if they are not directly involved with setting it. Government-to-government negotiations are known as Track One.

Washington was represented by about half a dozen delegates, including former officials and scholars at the two-day discussions, which took place in a Shanghai hotel conference room.

Beijing sent a delegation of scholars and analysts, which included several former People's Liberation Army officers.

A State Department spokesperson said in response to Reuters' questions that Track Two talks could be "beneficial". The department did not participate in the March meeting though it was aware of it, the spokesperson said.

Such discussions cannot replace formal negotiations "that require participants to speak authoritatively on issues that are often highly compartmentalized within (Chinese) government circles," the spokesperson said.

Israel 'pause' in Gaza had no impact on aid supplies

Says WHO, warns intense heat could worsen health crisis for displaced Palestinians

AGENCIES

A daily "pause" the Israeli military declared in Gaza to facilitate aid flows has had no impact on deliveries of badly needed aid, the UN's health agency said yesterday.

"So overall, we the UN can say that we did not see an impact on the humanitarian supplies coming in since that, I will say, unilateral announcement of this technical pause," said Richard Peeperkorn, the World Health Organization (WHO) representative in the Palestinian territories. "That is the overall assessment."

Over the weekend, the Israeli military announced a daily humanitarian "pause" in fighting on a key road in southern Gaza. Days later however, a United Nations spokesman said "this has yet to translate into more aid reaching people in need".

According to the WHO, as of May 17, only 750 people remained in the city of Rafah.

There were between 60,000 and 75,000 in the Al-Mawasi area in the south of the Gaza Strip, where many Palestinians have taken refuge since the start of the Israeli offensive in Rafah, reports AFP.

Dr Thanos Gargavanis, a trauma surgeon and emergency officer at the WHO, said the UN in Gaza was trying to "operate in an unworkable environment".

Returning from Gaza, the UN Women's Special Representative for the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Maryse Guimond, described the territory as a "world of devastation".

She added: "More than one million people in Gaza are in constant displacement" in the hope of finding somewhere safe. However, the WHO's Dr Gargavanis said that "no place is safe".

The world health body also warned that scorching heat in the Gaza Strip could exacerbate health problems for Palestinians displaced by Israeli bombardment, reports Reuters. The WHO is calling for the Rafah crossing to be reopened for humanitarian aid and medical evacuations.

US destroys 6 Houthi drones in Red Sea

AFP, Washington

The US military said later on Thursday that it had destroyed four Houthi nautical drones and two aerial ones over the Red Sea off Yemen.

Iran-backed Houthis have launched scores of drones and missiles at commercial vessels in the Red Sea and Gulf of Aden since November, describing the attacks as being in support of Palestinians during Israel's offensive in Gaza.

The US and its allies have responded with an increased naval presence to defend shipping in the vital waterway and with retaliatory strikes on Houthi targets.

Trump promises US green card for foreign graduates

AFP, Washington

Donald Trump said he wants to grant green cards to foreign graduates from US colleges, in an apparent softening of his typically hard-line view on immigration, a key election issue.

The Republican candidate made the remarks in a podcast published Thursday, days after President Joe Biden announced a citizenship pathway for immigrants married to US nationals, counterbalancing his recent crackdown on illegal border crossings.

"What I want to do and what I will do is, you graduate from a college, I think you should get automatically as part of your diploma a green card to be able to stay in this country," Trump told the All-In podcast. A green card is the commonly used name for a permanent resident card in the United States and a step toward citizenship.

Trump said this should include "anybody who graduates from a college," including those who complete two-year programs, known as junior colleges, and doctoral graduates.

Asked initially on the podcast if he would promise to help import the "best and the brightest around the world to America," Trump replied: "I do promise."

CORRUPTION CASE

Delhi HC blocks Kejriwal's release from prison

AFP, New Delhi

An Indian court yesterday stopped the release from jail of one of Prime Minister Narendra Modi's chief opponents, a day after he was granted bail in a long-running corruption case, reports said.

Arvind Kejriwal, the chief minister of Delhi and the leader of the opposition Aam Aadmi party, denies the charges as a "political conspiracy" by Modi and his Hindu-nationalist Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP).

He was released from detention to campaign partway through India's weeks-long general election but returned to jail after voting ended this month.

A trial court ordered his release late Thursday, but before he could walk out of jail yesterday the country's top economic crimes investigative agency, the Enforcement Directorate (ED), appealed to the Delhi High Court.

It suspended his release until it could decide on the appeal, local media reported.

Tigers face India

the competition, and the scorecards of the other matches in the Super Eight are indicating that runs are flowing more freely now, unlike the first round.

In the first four matches of the Super Eight, the average run-rate has been 8.60, which is significantly higher than the first round's average scoring rate of 6.71.

This upsurge in runs will make Bangladesh's task even more arduous against India, who are fresh off a convincing 47-run win over Afghanistan in their Super Eight opener on Thursday, where they posted 181-8.

Much like the Australia match, Bangladesh will be tested against a side that look stronger on paper in all departments.

India boast one of the strongest batting line-ups in the competition, and although their star batter Virat Kohli is yet to hit his stride, making just 29 runs in four innings, it hasn't stopped their undefeated march so far in the tournament.

India's ace in the hole so far in this World Cup has been pacer Jasprit Bumrah. His economy rate of 3.46 is the best amongst bowlers who have played at least four matches, and on top of that, he has also claimed eight wickets, conceding just 6.50 runs per wicket.

Bangladesh's fragile top-order will have to try and preserve their wickets against Bumrah and Co early on and again deal with the pacer's searing yorkers at the death.

History is also not on Bangladesh's side, as the Tigers have ended up on the losing side in all four previous encounters against India in T20 World Cups.

The last two of those defeats were agonising for Bangladesh, as they lost by just one run in Bengaluru in 2016 and by five runs in DLS method in Adelaide in 2022.

A defeat today will douse Bangladesh's faint hopes of making it to the knockout phase of the T20 World Cup for the first time. A washout would keep them in the hunt while a win would put the Najmul Hossain Shanto-led side with a golden opportunity of making it to the top four.

But to topple India, a lot has to go right for the Tigers and even more things have to go horribly wrong for India, which at the moment seems unlikely.

JU lost 40pc waterbodies

The university is situated on over 697 acres.

According to the study, Jahangirnagar University's original master plan, designed by renowned architect Mazharul Islam in 1968, was neglected during subsequent structural development phases, disguising the changes as further development.

"As a consequence, significant structural alterations have occurred in the university's landscape, land use, and land cover. Unfortunately, these changes have led to a reduction in blue-green spaces, resulting in a de-greening impact on the campus," it added.

The research found that the university's new registrar building, new arts building, and several dormitories of male and female students were constructed after removing a significant portion of vegetation cover.

The study further said much of the architecture of the buildings, constructed on the campus in the last two decades, does not harmonise with the surrounding environment by utilising maximum airflow and natural lighting.

Furthermore, many abandoned structures remained unused on the campus occupying the spaces, it mentioned.

Farhadur Reza, one of the four researchers who conducted the study, said an area with more trees absorbs more carbon, and if the vegetation cover is reduced, it affects the microclimate and ecological services.

If any area faces deforestation, temperature will rise subsequently and that has a negative impact on the biodiversity, said Farhadur, also an associate professor of urban and regional planning at JU.

Another member of the team, Mashura Shammi, said the construction of academic and administrative buildings without proper environmental and social assessments, and also in violation of the master plan is to blame for the decrease in waterbodies and vegetation area.

Mashura, also a professor of environmental sciences at JU, said the drainage system, footpath, sewage plan, air flow, and abandoned buildings should have been taken into consideration before taking up such construction projects.

The study said solid waste management practices, faecal sludge and sewage management, grey water management and energy management were ignored in the Further Development Projects of JU.

"These problems require practical solutions," it said.

Students and teachers have long been criticising the authorities for taking up development projects without proper environmental and social assessments. They demanded a master plan for the university saying that the authorities violated the existing one.

Students staged demonstrations over the felling of trees to make room for different structures to be built under different projects. The ongoing project, involving around Tk 1,445 crore, is one of them.

Under the project launched in 2018, a total of 22 new buildings and an extension building are being constructed. Construction of some of these buildings have been completed. The project was supposed to the completed by this year but the deadline will be extended.

Amartya Ray, president of a faction of JU Chhatra Union, said, "Since the beginning of the Further Development Projects, we have been urging the authorities to knock down old and abandoned buildings, except the special ones designed by Mazharul Islam.

"If the new infrastructures are built after knocking down the old ones, land will not be wasted and the environmental damage will be much less," he said.

Renowned economist Prof Anu Muhammad, also a former faculty member of JU, said, "I used to call the university a 'living laboratory'. But the present environment is not like that."

He said the biggest damage happened to JU over the last decade.

"The authorities keep saying that they are preparing a new master plan, but we have not seen one yet. They are cutting trees in the absence of a new master plan.

"This is an administration governed by contractors," said Anu Muhammad.

Nasir Uddin, director at the planning and development office of JU, said they were drawing up master plan which would have details about sewage management.

Asked about filling waterbodies, he said only an extension building of the Faculty of Mathematical and Physical Sciences is being built on low land.

Putin threatens to arm North Korea

"It would destabilise the Korean Peninsula, of course, and potentially ... depending on the type of weapons they provide, might violate UN Security Council resolutions that Russia itself has supported," Miller said.

Russia and North Korea's signing of a mutual defence pact this week sent ripples out across the region, with South Korea summoning Moscow's envoy yesterday, and Japan and the United States voicing serious concern.

The defence pact, which comes against the backdrop of Putin's grinding war against Ukraine, is the most significant agreement signed by Russia and North Korea in decades and is seen as something of a revival of their 1961 Cold War-era mutual defense pledge.

The deal was inked on Wednesday during Putin's trip to Pyongyang, where he received a lavish welcome from fellow autocrat Kim Jong Un, North Korea's leader.

It consolidates the Kim regime's powerful link with a world power that wields a veto on the UN Security Council and means Russia now has a defence pact with South Korea's biggest enemy.

South Korea, a US treaty ally, condemned the treaty and summoned Russia's ambassador yesterday, a rare diplomatic step that illustrates the soured tensions between Seoul and Moscow.

First Vice Minister Kim Hong-kyun relayed the South Korean government's "stern position" on Kim and Putin's defense pact, urging Moscow to "immediately halt military cooperation" with Pyongyang and abide by UN Security Council resolutions, the foreign ministry said.

Dhaka, Delhi should look for 'creative solution'

Minister Sheikh Hasina and her Indian counterpart Narendra Modi at the Hyderabad House in New Delhi.

Dhaka and Delhi failed to seal the Teesta deal in 2011 due to West Bengal Chief Minister Mamata Banerjee's last-minute opposition.

People in Bangladesh's northern region currently suffer from a shortage of irrigation water in the dry season. There is no respite for them during the monsoon either as they experience flooding.

In 2020, Bangladesh asked China to support the implementation of nearly $1 billion Teesta River Comprehensive Management and Restoration Project. China has shown interest in the project.

During a visit to Dhaka on May 9 this year, Indian Foreign Secretary Vinay Mohan Kwatra told Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud that his country was interested in financing the Teesta project.

On June 13, Hasina told parliament that her government was considering a proposal for a detailed feasibility study for the Teesta project as per recommendations from China.

The premier is likely to visit China on July 9-12. During that tour, Dhaka and Beijing may discuss the Teesta project, said diplomatic sources.

Sreeradha, a professor of Jindal School of International Affairs at OP Jindal Global University in Haryana, yesterday said India would not want to see any "unfriendly country" implementing any project close to its border.

"Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina has a very good understanding of Indian security concerns. So, it is expected that Narendra Modi and Sheikh Hasina will go for a mutually acceptable agreement," said Sreeradha, who researches into India's neighbouring countries and South Asian security.

She expressed optimism that India will realise the importance of Bangladesh's priority project.

About the killing of Bangladeshis by Indian Border Security Force, she said identifying and addressing the root causes of cross-border smuggling and trespassing are crucial.

Though India approved line of credits of about $8 billion for Bangladesh, only about $1.7 billion has been disbursed so far because of the difficult terms and conditions, Sreeradha said.

As Bangladesh seeking fresh loans, India should offer credits under new terms and conditions, she added.

She said India's northeast region is much more secure today and is developing because of Bangladesh's support in addressing the security concerns.

According to Sreeradha, the road, rail and water connectivity between Bangladesh and India has seen a significant progress, thanks to Bangladesh's support.

"All these are advancing the regional and sub-regional cooperation."

However, the visions of India and Bangladesh to have access to ASEAN nations via Myanmar have been affected due to the conflict in Myanmar, she observed.

"In South Asia, India attaches highest priority to its relations with Bangladesh. Addressing each other's concerns can greatly help promote the regional value chain, stability and peace," she said.

She hoped the two top leaders will advance this agenda.

About reducing the Bangladesh-India trade gap, Sreeradha said Bangladesh should produce new products that are in demand in India.

Bangladesh also needs to improve its investment environment to attract more investment from India, she added.

"Though there is a Special Economic Zone in Chattogram for India, red tape, corruption and other governance issues keep Indian investors away from investing in Bangladesh," she said.

India's exports to Bangladesh are worth $12 billion a year against Bangladesh's exports of about $2 billion to India.

BLESSED BASAR

This Eid-ul-Azha, the young sensation Khairul Basar has graced our screens with 12 TV projects – some already aired, while others await release. Fresh from the festivities Basar drops by The Daily Star for a quick chat.

PHOTOS: SHEIKH MEHEDI MORSHED

SHARMIN JOYA

How are you? Where did you spend Eid?
I am doing great! I spent Eid in Mymensingh city, where I grew up. I stayed there for four days, spending quality time with my family and friends. Though the joy was immense, duty called and I had to return to Dhaka soon after.

Around 12 of your small screen projects are slated to air this festival. What can viewers expect from them ?
These projects offer a diverse array of settings, including some shot in Australia. Those will feature Tanjim Saiyara Totini, under Rubel Hasan's direction. This time, I am sharing the screen with Tasnia Farin, Tanjin Tisha, Sabila Nur, Keya Payel, Samira Khan Mahi, and Safa Kabir, among others.

Shooting abroad for tele-fictions-how viable is it financially?
To be honest, if the team is not properly organised, it is hardly worth the effort. As we shot in Australia, the location was amazing, and our producer, Fakhrul Alam Mojumder Reya, made it possible for the entire team to complete the work in an organised manner.

We completed five projects there, all directed by Rubel Hasan, featuring Totini and myself. One of them, titled Blame Game, is set to air this Eid.

Television is known as the writer's medium – so focusing on the script is more important, I believe. For these five projects mentioned above, the scripts were good and suitable for an extensive international shoot.

Tele-fictions have broadened their scope for visual arrangement in recent times. We have now seen the plots being adapted from South Indian films as well. Is this good for the industry's improvement?
I think small screen projects should not make the audience think that it could be a 'film'.

For instance, if you write a short story that gives you the essence of a novel, it will lose its unique style.

It is good that we are innovating with visual arrangements by working on art direction and set design – yet, at the end of the day, it should have the essence of being a story-based fiction.

The audience loved your performance in 'Networker Baire' and 'Mohanagar', and you were a regular face on OTT. However, your presence on OTT platforms has reduced over time. Why?
For Gias Uddin Selim's Kajol Rekha and Masud Hasan Ujjal's Bonolota Sen, I had to reject many offers from both television and OTT. Since I had to work on my looks for both films, I had no option but to change it for other roles.

Thus, it took time to return to television. Amitabh Reza Chowdhury's Bodh was my last project on OTT. After that, due to previously committed silver-screen schedules, I couldn't sign new projects. Also, after almost two and a half years, I don't get calls for any projects that I would want to take on, and the audience also has some expectations from me, which I must meet. So I am waiting for the right project to come along.

What are your upcoming projects?
The post-production of Bonolota Sen has been completed, and it will be released soon. I am also working on another government-granted film titled Sharey Tin Haat Bhumi, by Noyeem Imtiaz Neamul. I am in talks for another set of government-granted films.

What do you like to do in your leisure time?
I like to read poems, listen to music, and read books whenever I get time. My usual routine is to listen to at least one song by Kabir Suman every day. It brings peace to my mind.

On a lighter note, how many times have you fallen in love?
(Laughs) I have fallen in love quite a few times! I want to keep feeling this emotion forever. We all want to be independent, but love is a beautiful dependency.

WHAT'S ON THE GRAM

TANJIN TISHA

Tanjin Tisha exudes elegance in a form-fitting white gown adorned with rhinestones, highlighting her beautiful physique. Her choice of a loose bun, contact lenses, complemented by nude lipstick, and a subtle brown smoky eye look, enhanced her overall glamorous appearance. The actress made her OTT debut with Sanjoy Somadder's Poison, a web-film that revolves around an actress, Rupa Mirza, whose life becomes embroiled in a series of murders and shadows of her past.

TV TALKIES

'Eric' shadows a father's reckoning

Set in 1985, Netflix's new miniseries Eric, directed by Lucy Forbes, navigates a father's psychological warfare involving an imaginary character, particularly when his son goes missing.

The story hence runs on renowned puppeteer Vincent Anderson (Benedict Cumberbatch) and his wife, Cassie (Gaby Hoffmann), dealing with their only son, Edgar (Ivan Morris Howe), going missing when their personal and professional lives come to a boiling point.

Turmoiled with the potential of being replaced on his founded famous on-screen Puppet Show, Vincent's additional emotional turbulence manifests in Eric– a blue fictional character that Edgar creates for his father's show.

The character becomes a constant reflection of Vincent's character as the notoriously distant person deals with both the case of his missing son and his professional upheaval.

The series' further introduction and inclusion of Vincent's father explains why Vincent is the way he is.

Embroiled with other simultaneous missing children's cases, Edgar's incident is a gritty compelling narrative done suitably.

WHAT'S PLAYING

ISWEGH ATTAY

Tinariwen's Iswegh Attay from their Grammy-winning album Tassili is a haunting and introspective track. The poetic yet enigmatic lyrics, with the repeated line– I drank a glass of tea that scorched my heart, suggesting deep emotional anguish.

The captivating music video opens with the band members sitting in a well-lit cave, gracefully preparing a pot of tea– no tea has ever looked better. As the soothing, calming desert blues groove unfolds, the visuals are equally pleasing, perfectly complementing the hypnotic music.

TINARIWEN
TASSILI

With Kyp Malone's featured guitar and vocals, and written by Malian artiste Sanou Ag Ahmed, Iswegh Attay is a spellbinding exploration of inner turmoil. The courage to overcome adversity resonates through the evocative lyrics and stunning imagery.

Don't neglect primary education

Govt has to look into the decline of students

A recent government report has revealed a concerning statistic: the number of students in all primary-level educational institutions in the country has reduced by over 8.32 lakh in 2023 from the previous year. The implications of this decline is no doubt significant, as primary education is the foundation for bringing up a skilled, informed generation to ensure Bangladesh's prosperity. While officials have highlighted the country's declining birth rate and a new, more accurate software at the Directorate of Primary Education for this decrease, there are other pieces of the puzzle which, if not resolved, can have grave repercussions for the country's future.

The Covid pandemic dealt a major blow to education, as financial struggles brought on by it forced many to take their children out of primary school or transfer them to Qawmi madrasas. Infact, financial insecurity continues to be one of the biggest detriments to primary education. According to UNESCO, households account for 71 percent of total education spending in Bangladesh, one of the highest in the world. The average annual family cost per child in 2023 was Tk 17,294 for primary education, stated the Education Watch 2023 report. To put things in perspective, the average monthly family income in 2022 was just Tk 32,422. News of parents taking their daughters out of school and marrying them off circulated all around during the pandemic, and unfortunately the trend has continued since then.

Meanwhile, many of the government-run primary schools are in no shape to cater to the children, reeling from the absence of a proper learning environment, lack of safety, and poor infrastructure. Only those from the low-income group see these institutions as an option—and even they prefer madrasas in many cases.

In this scenario, this year's budget for education is Tk 94,710 crore—only 1.69 percent of the GDP, the lowest in the last 16 years. The drop in the number of students, revealed by the Annual Primary School Census 2023, might very well be due to a falling birth rate and improved software, but we cannot ignore the contributing factors that have been plaguing the sector for years. When more than 60 percent of Class 3 students and 70 percent of Class 5 students do not have the expected grade-level proficiency in mathematics (according to an assessment), it is clear that our primary education is faltering. The government must address these cracks to ensure that all children in the country get access to the best primary education possible.

Must commuters risk their lives every Eid?

Take effective actions to prevent road crashes

It seems we have no escape from the recurring nightmare of road crash fatalities during Eid holidays. This Eid-ul-Azha, too, at least 92 lives were lost in road crashes across the country between June 13 and June 17, according to Bangladesh Road Transport Authority (BRTA).

Reportedly, Road Transport and Bridges Minister Obaidul Quader quoted the BRTA data and warned about the urgent need for policies to regulate motorcycles and easy bikes, which accounted for most of the recent crashes. While we are glad that the minister has expressed concern over this issue, the history of three-wheeler bans or the government's feeble attempt to prevent unfit and unlicensed vehicles from operating on the road and then backtracking on their decisions don't give us much hope that any such policy will be formulated or implemented soon.

For more than a decade, road crashes during Eid rush have been on the rise. It is incomprehensible why no effective steps have been taken to prevent these tragic incidents in the last 10 years, especially when the same government has been in power during this time. The current regime has undoubtedly excelled at developing Bangladesh's roads and communication infrastructure, but it has failed to make those very channels safe for people to use. The reasons behind road crashes are not unknown, neither are the solutions. Even simple measures such as increasing traffic monitoring on the roads after Eid could prevent many deaths.

As the road crash fatality count goes up with each passing hour, the government should stop providing lip service to the issue and take some real actions, such as creating dedicated lanes for different types of vehicles, not allowing unfit and unlicensed vehicles on the road, increasing traffic monitoring, and giving exemplary punishment to reckless drivers. It must start treating the epidemic of road crashes with the seriousness it deserves.

'Hand of God' goal by Diego Maradona

On this day in 1986, Argentine football legend Diego Maradona scored his memorable "Hand of God" goal (the ball struck his hand, but the referee mistakenly thought it had hit his head) to help his team defeat England in a World Cup quarterfinal game. Argentina went on to win the tournament.

Sylhet's flood is the price we're paying for ignoring nature an ecology and biodiversity conservation researcher, is director at Bangladesh Resource Centre for Indigenous Knowledge (BARCIK). He can be reached at animistbangla@gmail.com.

PAVEL PARTHA

The flood that we are seeing in the Sylhet region is happening due to multiple reasons. As the monsoon season sweeps across Bangladesh, rainfall will naturally increase. Sylhet is the wettest region in the country. Heavy rainfall is a common occurrence there since it is located just below Cherrapunji, which is often called the wettest place on Earth. However, the severity and frequency of flooding in Sylhet and the surrounding areas in the past two years indicate that this is not merely a natural event, but a crisis exacerbated by human actions.

Firstly, the intense rainfall and subsequent floods are indeed influenced by climate change, which is causing abnormal weather patterns and extreme rain in short durations. Every region has a water-carrying capacity—as in how much water it can absorb and channel without flooding. When the rainfall exceeds this capacity, waterlogging and flooding occur, as we have regularly seen in Sylhet.

Sylhet has always been known for its hilly terrain. The region experiences significant rainfall on the high grounds, which then flows down to the lowlands and river basins, our haors. Historically, this water movement was natural, but unplanned and anthropocentric development has disrupted this balance. The region's unique topography and natural habitat have been ignored in the development process, which has led to severe consequences. The huge number of water bodies spread out like spiderwebs have largely been filled up, mostly illegally.

The floods in Sylhet highlight the urgent need for a balance between development and environmental conservation. PHOTO: SHEIKH NASIR

In the high-lying region, illegal hill-cutting has been rampant, with hills often levelled completely so people can build infrastructure. This destroys the natural landscape and reduces the land's ability to manage rainwater, leading to worse flooding. Cutting hills in any way is illegal. However, cutting hills at angles up to 30 degrees is still manageable. Cutting over 45 degrees causes significant damage. But we are cutting hills at 180 degrees—completely levelling them and destroying the area's geographic identity.

We are often inconsiderate of the fact that an area does not belong solely to humans. Sylhet's rich ecosystem includes rivers that traverse national boundaries and sustain both human and other lives. Yet, indiscriminate development has ignored environmental considerations, filling up rivers and ponds, and now water has nowhere left to go. This, coupled with poor drainage systems choked by plastic pollution, exacerbates the flooding problem. We cannot confuse flooding with waterlogging. Flooding is a natural phenomenon. Waterlogging here is largely a result of human error and negligence. If we could control plastic pollution, the drainage system would be more efficient and cause less waterlogging.

For my work, I have travelled to various areas around Sylhet. Historically, Sylhet's elderly and Indigenous people recall that the floods we see today are unheard of. This is because the drastic changes in the landscape, driven by unregulated development, have fundamentally altered the region's ability to handle heavy rainfall. Destruction of the natural ecosystem—flattened hills, filled water bodies—has left the area more vulnerable to heavy floods than ever before.

Despite the dire situation, there have been efforts to address the flooding primarily through some big-budget projects. However, such large-scale projects have mostly failed, primarily due to a lack of inclusive planning. Effective development must involve all stakeholders—local communities, academic institutions, and environmental organisations. This participatory approach ensures that the unique needs and concerns of the region are considered and addressed.

In international forums like COP, Bangladesh has advocated for climate justice and the establishment of loss and damage funds for vulnerable nations. However, even if these funds are made available, we lack comprehensive plans to mitigate the flooding and waterlogging crises in Sylhet. There is an urgent need for better climate diplomacy and negotiation to secure adequate funding and formulate effective, inclusive strategies.

Our talks and discussions around climate change are largely about economic damages. We also must consider the non-economic losses caused by flooding. Two years ago, I visited some flooded areas around Sylhet. Many of our folk songs that make up our cultural identity are from that region. It broke my heart to learn that the local women and Bauls had lost their song books, either written by themselves or passed down to them for generations, to the floods. The destruction of cultural heritage represents a loss that is immeasurable. These songs, passed down through generations, form an integral part of our identity. When floods destroy such cultural treasures, the loss transcends monetary value.

To address these challenges, we must rethink our development mentality. Sustainable development involves preserving natural landscapes, maintaining forest covers, and protecting river ecosystems. Projects should not only aim for economic growth but also safeguard cultural and environmental heritage. Inclusion of all stakeholders in development projects fosters a sense of ownership and ensures that diverse perspectives are taken into account. When designing big projects, we should select local leaders and representatives with the help of union parishads and city corporations and make an inclusive project that gives everyone ownership. This will also save money and increase efficiency.

The floods in Sylhet highlight the urgent need for a balance between development and environmental conservation. By adopting sustainable practices and inclusive planning, we can mitigate the impact of extreme weather events and protect both our natural and cultural heritage. The time to act is now, for the sake of our environment, our communities, and our future.

PROJECT SYNDICATE

The spectre of neo-fascism is haunting Europe

Slavoj Žižek,
professor of philosophy at the European Graduate School, is international director of the Birkbeck Institute for the Humanities at the University of London, and the author, most recently, of 'Christian Atheism: How to Be a Real Materialist.'

SLAVOJ ŽIŽEK

The surprise in this month's European Parliament elections was that the outcome everyone expected really did come to pass. To paraphrase a classic scene from the Marx Brothers: Europe may be talking and acting like it is moving to the radical right, but don't let that fool you; Europe really is moving to the radical right.

Why should we insist on this interpretation? Because most of the mainstream media has sought to downplay it. The message we keep hearing is, "Sure, Marine Le Pen, Giorgia Meloni, and Alternative für Deutschland (AfD) occasionally flirt with fascist motifs, but there is no reason to panic, because they still respect democratic rules and institutions once in power." Yet, this domestication of the radical right should trouble us all, because it signals a readiness by traditional conservative parties to go along with the new movement. The axiom of post-World War II European democracy, "No collaboration with fascists," has been quietly abandoned.

The message of this election is clear. The political divide in most EU countries is no longer between the moderate right and the moderate left, but between the conventional right, embodied by the big winner, the European People's Party (comprising Christian democrats, liberal-conservatives, and traditional conservatives) and the neo-fascist right represented by Le Pen, Meloni, AfD, and others.

The question now is whether the EPP will collaborate with neo-fascists. European Commission President Ursula von der Leyen is spinning the outcome as a triumph of the EPP against both "extremes," yet the new parliament will include no left-wing parties whose extremism is even distantly comparable to that of the far right. Such a "balanced" view from the EU's top official sends an ominous signal.

When we talk about fascism today, we should not confine ourselves to the developed West. A similar kind of politics has been ascendant in much of the Global South as well. In his study of China's development, Italian Marxist historian Domenico Losurdo (also known for his rehabilitation of Stalin) stresses the distinction between economic and political power. In pursuing his "reforms," Deng Xiaoping knew that elements of capitalism are necessary to unleash a society's productive forces. But he insisted that political power should remain firmly in the hands of the Communist Party of China (as the self-proclaimed representative of the workers and farmers).

This approach has deep historical roots. For over a century, China has embraced the "pan-Asianism" that emerged towards the end of the 19th century as a reaction against Western imperialist domination and exploitation. As historian Viren Murthy explains, this project has always been driven by a rejection not of Western capitalism, but of Western liberal individualism and imperialism. By drawing on pre-modern traditions and institutions, pan-Asianists argued, Asian societies could organise their own modernisation to achieve even greater dynamism than the West.

Pan-Asianism tended to oscillate between its socialist and fascist versions (with the line between the two not always clear), reminding us that "anti-imperialism" is not as innocent as it may appear. In the first half of the 20th century, Japanese and German fascists regularly presented themselves as defenders against American, British, and French imperialism, and one now finds far-right nationalist politicians taking similar positions vis-à-vis the European Union.

The same tendency is discernible in post-Deng China, which political scientist A James Gregor classifies as "a variant of contemporary fascism." Harnessing economic impulses for the sake of nationalistic projects is the very definition of fascism, and similar political dynamics can also be found in India, Russia, Turkey, and other countries.

It is not hard to see why this model has gained traction. While the Soviet Union suffered a chaotic disintegration, the CPC pursued economic liberalisation but still maintained tight control. Thus, leftists who are sympathetic towards China praise it for keeping capital subordinated, in contrast to the US and European systems, where capital reigns supreme.

But the new fascism is also supported by more recent trends. Beyond Le Pen, another big winner of the European Parliament elections is Fidias Panayiotou, a Cypriot YouTube personality who previously gained attention for his efforts to hug Elon Musk. While waiting outside Twitter's headquarters for his target, he encouraged his followers to "spam" Musk's mother with his request. Eventually, Musk did meet and hug Panayiotou, who went on to announce his candidacy to the European Parliament. Running on an anti-partisan platform, he won 19.4 percent of the popular vote and secured himself a seat.

Similar figures have also cropped up in France, the United Kingdom, Slovenia, and elsewhere, all justifying their candidacies with the "leftist" argument that since democratic politics has become a joke, clowns might as well run for office. This is a dangerous game. If enough people despair of emancipatory politics and accept the withdrawal into buffoonery, the political space for neo-fascism widens.

Reclaiming that space requires serious, authentic action. For all my disagreements with French President Emmanuel Macron, I think he was correct to respond to the French far right's victory by dissolving the National Assembly and calling for new legislative elections. His announcement caught almost everyone off guard, and it is certainly risky. But it is a risk worth taking. Even if Le Pen wins and decides who will be the next prime minister, Macron, as president, will retain the ability to mobilise a new majority against the government. We must take the fight to the new fascism as forcefully and as fast as possible.

India's election was an eye-opener for struggling democracies

Brig Gen (retd) Dr M Sakhawat Hussain, former election commissioner of Bangladesh, is senior fellow at the South Asian Institute of Policy and Governance (SIPG), North South University (NSU).

M SAKHAWAT HUSSAIN

The late Atal Bihari Bajpai, former Indian prime minister and founder of Bhartiya Janata Party (BJP) and the National Democratic Alliance (NDA), has seldom been mentioned in the last 10 years. Lal Krishna Advani, who led the demolition of the 300-year-old disputed Babri Mosque, has remained uninvolved, and even Jagat Prakash Nadda, the current party president, is not given a speck of the spotlight. It's only Prime Minister Narendra Damodar Das Modi who has featured prominently in posters or hoardings. Even the all-powerful Home Minister Amit Shah, regraded as the second man in the BJP hierarchy, was not seen anywhere near the PM in important events like inaugurating the new parliament building, or the spectacular opening of Ram Mandir in Ayodhya, where the Babri Mosque once stood.

Over the last 10 years, it has been Modi, Modi and Modi in Indian politics and on the political canvas, even downsizing the images of Gandhi and Nehru.

Narendra Modi ruled India with an iron hand, transforming the nation, perhaps for the first time in its history, into what has been labelled as an "electoral autocracy" and "flawed democracy" by the Sweden-based V-Dem Institute. With no effective opposition in the 16th and 17th Lok Sabha, the BJP government essentially became a one-man show. Consequently, the "largest democracy in the world" slipped further to the 53rd position in the democracy index. Perhaps it was the mistake of the Indian voters who handed a landslide victory to Modi's BJP last time, without any counterforce to act as a check and balance.

However, in the recently concluded 18th Lok Sabha election, Indian voters did not make the same mistake. About 66 crore voted to demote Modi from the status of a self-proclaimed "god-sent avatar" to just a mortal human being. BJP could only secure 240 seats in the 2024 elections, falling short of the 272 seats needed to solely form the government. It had to seek support from its partners in the NDA, particularly from the Janata Dal (United)—headed by veteran politician and nine-time chief minister of Bihar, Nitish Kumar—with 12 seats, and the Telugu Desam Party (TDP)—led by yet another seasoned politician from Andhra Pradesh, Chandrababu Naidu, with 16 seats.

What it means is that Modi, as the third-time prime minister of India, will not head a BJP government as he did in the last two terms. He has to lead a coalition government with two seasoned politicians by his side. It means that he has been brought down from being the single decision-maker of state affairs to a head of a consultative body, as should have been the case in a democracy.

On the other hand, voters have also provided a formidable opposition in the form of the Indian National Congress (INC) with 100 seats (including a rebel MP who joined) and its allies under the Indian National Developmental Inclusive Alliance (INDIA) with 234 seats. This marks the first time in 10 years that a robust opposition has emerged.

Now, the question arises: why did the BJP fall short of securing enough power to form a government when they were confident of achieving an absolute majority of around 400 seats with the strong slogan "Ab ki bar char sau par" (this time over 400)? That number would have enabled the BJP to amend the constitution. The party unequivocally expressed its intention to transform India from a secular to a religion-based country (a Hindu state). Their agenda included not only making India a Hindu land but also advocating for the slogan "one country, one election," which meant combining general elections with state elections to perpetuate power for the BJP. It was evident that Hindutva was the rallying cry throughout the two terms of BJP.

Over the past decade, the significant minority of Indian Muslims, comprising over 20 percent of the population, largely marginalised socially, were deliberately targeted. School and college textbooks underwent revisions, with chapters pertaining to the 700-year Muslim period deleted and characterised as invasions. Names of places were altered in some regions. In numerous states, vigilante groups like "Go Rakshak" emerged, engaging in unchecked violence against Muslims suspected of consuming beef or participating in related activities. Modi and Amit Shah, collectively referred to as MoSh, branded the country's minority communities as "Ghus baithi" (infiltrators) and likened them to "children-producing factories." They even stoked fear among India's Hindu majority, suggesting that if the opposition were to come to power, properties and gold would be seized and distributed among Muslims. Such divisive rhetoric, unprecedented in India's political history, provoked outrage among liberal and secular voters. Modi was branded as the "Divider in Chief" by Time magazine in 2019.

It wasn't just Muslims, but also Other Backward Castes (OBCs) of India, particularly Dalits, who were significantly disregarded. It's worth noting that Uttar Pradesh, a state considered to be the stronghold of Hindus and the Hindi belt, is home to the largest population of Dalits and Muslims. Here, Chief Minister Aditya Nath Yogi aimed to secure a minimum of 72 seats but failed to do so. Instead, the BJP lost a significant number of seats, mainly to the OBC-based Samajwadi Party led by Akhilesh Yadav. Moreover, BJP lost seats in Ayodhya, where Modi had inaugurated Ram Mandir a few months prior. Additionally, the party lost five other Lok Sabha constituencies in holy places like Kashi and Varanasi.Losses in Uttar Pradesh, Punjab, and West Bengal brought down the BJP, making it dependent on other partners of the NDA.

In Ayodhya, BJP ignored the fact that they built the temple with all the religious fervour at the cost of poor Dalits of the area, whose houses and businesses were destroyed without payment of adequate compensation.

Perhaps the party was certain that Indian voters would be mesmerised by the BJP's Hindu card, ignoring the fact that around 40 percent Indians still live below the poverty line. They are grappling with high prices of essential commodities, soaring inflation rates, increasing youth unemployment, and endemic corruption. Meanwhile, the government resorted to silencing opposition voices through coercive measures wielded by the central government. Opposition leaders and activists were harassed and jailed, their funds frozen. The inefficacy of democratic institutions exacerbated the BJP's downfall in 2024. Another factor overlooked by the BJP government was the burgeoning influence of alternative and powerful social media platforms, which countered the decline in press freedom and the dominance of crony media. The contributions of civil society organisations were also remarkable. Despite facing intimidation and fear, these organisations persevered, utilising technology alongside social media to drive home their agendas.

Nevertheless, India's democratic institutions, electoral integrity, and practice of liberal democracy have long served as influential models for postcolonial Afro-Asian countries, especially those in South Asia. However, this influence was disrupted by the regression of democracy in India. The South Asian powerhouse's democratic backsliding did not bode well for the neighbouring countries.

Although Modi has become the prime minister of India for the third consecutive term and may compare himself to Nehru, he now relies on two more secular regional leaders, political tacticians who could potentially outmanoeuvre the Modi-Shah duo. The current NDA government marks the end of the BJP government, at least for the time being. It will face a robust opposition scrutinising and challenging every misstep both inside and outside the parliament. This has brought relief to democratic and liberal Indians of diverse religious, cultural, and ethnic backgrounds and given them hope that the 18th Lok Sabha may herald the return of a tolerant, secular India reminiscent of the Gandhian-Nehruvian era.

A monologue on the beasts among us

BLOWIN' IN THE WIND

Dr Shamsad Mortuza
is professor of English at Dhaka University.

SHAMSAD MORTUZA

The butcher cuts the meat into pieces. It's hard to believe that the hide was concealing so much. Each organ of the animal has its own story, but now it's all history. Just the day before Eid, we bought the animal from a makeshift cattle market. There was visible dissatisfaction everywhere. The traders complained they were not receiving the prices displayed by the online markets, while the buyers believed the traders had entered the market with unrealistic expectations curated by some corporate manipulators. The farmers who fattened their animals realised that most of their customers' wallets were far from fat.

As I stand before the heap of fresh meat, my thoughts turn to the slain politician who was hacked to death, and his body was disposed of like trash. When MP Anar went missing, I cried with his family. His daughter's appeal to find her missing father moved me. I thought he was a simple man who crossed the border in a rickshaw van. Then the truth started coming out of the hide, piece by piece.

The MP turned out to be someone with a notorious past: underground politics, gold smuggling, and racketeering. It was hard to imagine that the face could hide so many secrets. Information came to light byte by byte. The sympathy for the public figure waned, yet his brutal end served as a reminder that, in the end, we live in a jungle where beasts will devour beasts. Once the skins of civilisation peel off, the inner beasts are revealed. Once exposed, the animal becomes a target. The hunter is hunted. You can only pray that you don't become prey.

The pile of meat starts getting bigger and bigger under the blades of our hired butcher. I am manning the mission so that beefs don't get mixed up, pieces don't get missing during the process, and the size of meats remains appropriate for distribution. The animal we bought the day before probably had no clue about our purpose. Even if it did, it was helpless. It followed us, meeting its fate rather naively. Again, I think of the slain parliamentarian. I could have thought of Jamal Khashoggi, but Anar is nearer. They used the same technique, luring Anar into the trap only to hack him into unidentifiable and disposable pieces. Is it true that they marinated Anar's meat with spices to mask the corpse smell? I suddenly lose my appetite, and the meat looks gross despite its holy nuances.

The political animals are full of tricks. They know how to bring other animals into their traps. At times, lust taints the baits, painting them with desire. We hear that the predators lured Anar into a honey trap. The bait unleashed the inner beast within the man who met his demise. Other beasts were waiting to match him.

The baits come in different shapes and sizes. Animal traders know which bait to hook their prey with. Some baits are glorified by focusing on size. The bigger the animal, the larger the display. The spectators wait for the animals' dramatic fall, with resounding thumps that will echo through heaven's doors to announce the sacrifice. Private prayers become public. Instead of sacrificing their inner beasts, some animals prefer displaying their bestial energy when sobriety is required. Some fall for the honeyed words of the traders who have corporatised the trade.

They reimagine Darwinian selectionism—the principle of survival of the fittest. Being fit, on the other hand, entails being intelligent enough to be adaptive. The strongest of animals have disappeared, while we humans have survived, not because we were the strongest, but because we were quick learners. The small can only eat the big if you know how to process it. The animals who are having a field day may very well be devoured by us, the humans. The day may come when our skins will peel off, and we will match the bestiality of other animals.

After all, we are all animals, whether political or biological. Some animals are bigger than others. Some are smarter and more adaptive. Some eat while others are eaten. Someone who drags an animal with a rope may soon find themselves roped in. The one who sharpens the blade can soon be under its edge.

The individuals who fatten their beasts manipulate the egos of their intended victims. They are aware that certain animals are susceptible to being deceived by appearances. Then there are corporate masters who understand the power of images. They import rare breeds to stand out from the crowd. To maximise their profits, they hide import documents. They claim their items are exotic, albeit esoteric. To make claims for their goods, they invent family lineages. Little do they realise that once the meats are processed, it's all the same. The hide will remain on the pavement without any offer. Another syndicate. They'll make you wait so that you can give it away for free.

In the market of sacrifice, it is difficult to distinguish between devotion and devotee. Who sacrifices whom? For whom do the sacrifices take place? When did God require projected pride manifested by the size of the beasts, as opposed to humility and submission? Who buys these animals? Does God sanction the purchase of a holy sacrifice with unholy money? Who uploaded the images with the intention of manipulating the public's perception? The unreal cost of an animal piques the public's interest. The boasting beasts come under scrutiny. The hidden animals get exposed. The father disowns his son—or should I say sacrifice? The analogy becomes a false echo of the original sacrifice. The fallen animal proves to be less intelligent and less adaptive. Darwin wins. Does their former master's sacrifice of the mighty ones reflect God's will? Or is it the will of the political master? Was Anar sacrificed, too? The list of fallen heroes and runaway animals is growing.

The heap starts getting bigger and bigger. The creature has long come out of its hide. It will be consumed. Its energy will be dispersed. The yields will be bagged. The yields will be eaten. The meat will undergo a transformation into various forms of energy. It will reach the bloodstream. It will travel to various cells at different ends. The beast will be reborn.

Everything must come to an end. But who will have the last piece? Who will have the last laugh? Are the fallen false gods and the reign of animals a test of God's will? Pray we don't become prey.

Reserved approach misfires against Aussies

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh lacked vitality in the Powerplay against Australia yesterday when the chance came to bat first at the Sir Vivian Richards Stadium, one of the best batting tracks on offer in the ongoing edition.

The top-order's rudderless performances throughout the group-stage was enough evidence for the team management to work out a different approach but they opted for one that did not work.

In what appeared to be at least a 160-170 wicket, Bangladesh looked past putting early pressure on Australia's bowling attack.

The first six overs produced just 39 runs for the loss of one wicket, with opener Liton Das blocking to keep his end locked. During his 25-ball stay, it appeared he was finding rhythm but then the inability to find scoring options, managing just 16 runs, saw him eventually throw his wicket against Adam Zampa.

Bangladesh had in fact wanted to keep wickets in hand for the last six overs of the innings but they couldn't manage to get the momentum they wanted as wickets fell frequently.

Towhid Hridoy hit an impactful 28-ball 40 but there was no support from the other end from any other recognised batter.

When asked about the sluggish and negative approach in the Powerplay, skipper Najmul Hossain Shanto revealed that it was what the team had wanted.

"We had a plan to play carefully by being watchful at the beginning because we were not getting good starts in the previous matches," Shanto told reporters in the post-match press conference.

"So, it was our plan to finish the first six overs by keeping wickets in hand which I think we were able to do. It could have been a little better but we were happy. I think, if I could have played a little more, till the 16-17th over, then we could have scored close to 160-170.

"I would also say that the wicket was a little slow in the beginning. It was not like the ball was not coming to the bat, but as I said it was important to have a set batter."

Bangladesh's unconventional ploy was to use Rishad Hossain's pinch-hitting ability to take out Zampa but he perished to Glenn Maxwell after a four-ball stay. Thus, two quick wickets between the ninth and 10th overs saw the rate of run-scoring take a dip.

The middle-order too did not perform as expected with the wicket offering grip which led to the dismissals of Shakib Al Hasan and Mahmudullah Riyad.

Bangladesh failed to go full throttle at the death overs with, Hridoy the only spark during that phase.

Shanto finally managed to get a few runs but fell in the 13th over after a 36-ball 41 and Bangladesh lost all their momentum. The skipper himself was at a loss to explain why batters did not click.

"It is difficult to say why we were not able to play. I think everyone has the capability, people have played well in different places in the past. But I do not have an answer. Everyone has the freedom to play their natural game but somehow it is not happening," Shanto said.

Australia did exactly what the Tigers couldn't. They piled on the runs in the Powerplay at a brisk rate, showing where improvement is needed for the Tigers to challenge superior oppositions.

Afghans FAIL Bumrah TEST

REUTERS, Barbados

Afghanistan coach Jonathan Trott was disappointed with the shot selection of his batters in their defeat by India in Thursday's T20 World Cup Super Eight match and said they failed to execute their plans for facing Jasprit Bumrah.

Bumrah was almost unplayable once again, India's pace spearhead claiming three Afghan wickets and conceding only seven runs in four impeccable overs at Kensington Oval.

Bumrah deceived Rahmanullah Gurbaz, Afghanistan's leading scorer in the tournament, with clever change of pace and got the better of the other opener, Hazratullah Zazai, with an off-cutter that resulted in a leading edge at point.

"Obviously disappointed with a few of the shots or the decision-making," Trott said after their 47-run loss in the Group 1 contest.

"Obviously, Bumrah is going to be a key bowler for any side. For India, he's crucial and we needed to play him better. His figures suggest we didn't play him very well.

"We'd obviously spoken about it and how we were going to play him. So, we weren't able to execute that and, yeah, that's very disappointing."

ALL YOU NEED TO KNOW

Bangladesh will be searching for their first win over India in T20 World Cup when they meet today in a Super Eight clash in Antigua. The Tigers lost all four of their encounters with India in the mega event.

The Tigers, however, suffered two close defeats against India in the T20 mega event -- the first being the agonising one-run defeat in Bengaluru in 2016 and the other one was when the two sides last met in the 2022 edition, with Bangladesh falling short by five runs (DLS) despite a quickfire Liton Das fifty.

Liton's 27-ball 60 in that 2022 T20 World Cup game in Adelaide is the highest and the only fifty by any Bangladesh batter against India in the showpiece event.

India also hold a clear advantage in overall T20I head-to-head records against Bangladesh, winning 12 of the 13 matches played between the two sides. The only win for Bangladesh came in 2019 in Delhi during a bilateral series.

Tigers lose impetus with 'bonus' mentality

SHABAB CHOWDHURY

A significant mismatch on paper was the theme for Bangladesh ahead of their T20 World Cup Super 8 fixture against Australia in St. Lucia and the Tigers could do very little to overturn the notion with their on-field display yesterday.

A lacklustre attitude, particularly with the bat, saw Bangladesh succumb to a 28-run defeat in DLS method against the 2021-winners but more than the result itself, it was the manner in which the Tigers approached the game that left the fans raising a toast to disappointment.

It won't be a stretch to presume that even the most ardent of fans would humbly expect to see Bangladesh produce fighting displays and moments of courage and go toe-to-toe against the top sides in Super 8s more than they would perhaps anticipate a positive result. But against the mighty Aussies, there was hardly any attitude shown that would suggest that the Tigers came to the ground looking for a fight.

Bangladesh gave their opposition all and maybe more respect than they were looking to get and it seemed like this particular group of Tigers was rather intimidated by the Kangaroos, so much so it induced a mental barrier because of which they forgot to prowl let alone go for the kill.

Fear loomed large and the idea of a lost battle encapsulated the Tigers' camp, especially on the batting front. On a good wicket, the Tigers laboured hard but only managed a paltry 140-8 and in reply, Australia raced off to 100-2 in 11.2 overs before rain prompted umpires to call for a result via the DLS method. Batting first, no batter other than Towhid Hridoy, who scored a 28-ball 40, looked to make a game out of the difficult situation Liton Das's 25-ball 16 had put the Tigers in and at no point could one say that the Aussies were forced to break a sweat or resort to any defensive measure.

> Bangladesh's performance was a prime example of what head coach Chandika Hathurusingha had said about the Super 8s being a bonus for the Tigers, underlining that the objective of qualifying for the second round had already been achieved.

The proactive body language and the attitude of hunting down oppositions for the desired victory -- features that were evident in the lead-up to the Super 8s -- were lacking. The Tigers seemed to have used up all their aggression in making their way to the Super 8s and suffered from stage fright when they were due to take the big stage.

Bangladesh's performance was a prime example of what head coach Chandika Hathurusingha had said about the Super 8s being a bonus for the Tigers, underlining that the objective of qualifying for the second round had already been achieved.

Ironically, none of what Hathurusingha said had found a reflection in Bangladesh's performances. Most of his troops couldn't play with an ounce of freedom nor could they execute their roles.

Even the thunderous bowling that helped the Tigers win three matches in the group-stage looked blunt. Starman Shakib Al Hasan continued to avoid bowling to left-handers as he did not bowl an over in the match. Meanwhile, vice-captain and lead pacer Taskin Ahmed's perennial habit of getting cold feet in ICC events has returned as his early tournament sizzle has all but worn off in the past two games. With in-form pacer Shoriful Islam, who is yet to feature in the tournament, raring to go, will the team management take a bold decision in this regard?

Starc goes top

Australia pacer Mitchell Starc has become the most prolific wicket-taker in World Cup history, claiming his 95th wicket in World Cups -- ODI and T20 -- against Bangladesh in Antigua on Friday.

Spin key in crucial Australia-Afghanistan contest

STAR SPORTS DESK

The Australia-Afghanistan T20 World Cup Super Eight clash at the Arnos Vale Ground in Kingstown today is potentially a must-win contest for Rashid Khan and Co as a defeat will see the Afghans hoping for other outcomes going their way in order to qualify for the semis.

Meanwhile, Australia can ill-afford to slip up as they would be looking to further boost their chances of progressing from Group 1 following a 28-run win (DLS) in their first Super Eight fixture against Bangladesh in Antigua on Friday.

Another reason why the Aussies will be desperate to avoid an upset against Afghanistan is that Mitchell Marsh and Co will then be left with the prospect of confirming their semifinal spot through a win in a high-voltage final Super Eight game against India in St.Lucia on June 24.

Australia might have to tinker with their eleven for the game, considering they will be going against a spin-heavy Afghanistan on the spin-friendly wicket of Kingstown in St Vincent. In the three matches played at this venue so far in this World Cup, spinners have ruled the roost with 27 wickets against pacers' 17.

Australia are wary of the fact as pacer Pat Cummins mentioned that even taking the first hattrick of the ongoing edition -- in their last game against Bangladesh -- may not save him from the axe when Australia line-up against Afghanistan.

In order to bolster their spin prowess, any one of Cummins, Josh Hazlewood or Mitchell Starc -- all of whom had started against Bangladesh -- might have to sit out the game in favour of another spinner.

"Yes, potentially. We've been pretty open with that, that anyone in the squad's ready to play and the bowling line-up might change at different times," said Cummins who has played in three of his team's five games so far.

"It's got to be adaptable. We feel like we've got all bases covered. So yeah, we'll rock up there. And I mean, the best thing of all this is I'm not captain or selector or anything, so I just turn up and have no worries."

The Aussies have not been afraid of chopping and changing according to the demands of the conditions in this World Cup. They played just one frontline fast bowler in the first-round win over Scotland with Adam Zampa, Glenn Maxwell and Ashton Agar providing spin options.

In the victory over England, Cummins, Starc, and Hazlewood all played just as they did against Bangladesh.

Starc sat out the match against Namibia with Cummins and Hazlewood getting the nod.

Meanwhile, Afghanistan will definitely be confident with the likes of Rashid, Noor Ahmad, and Mohammad Nabi providing them one of the most envious spin arsenal, but it is their batters who will need to crank it up a notch if they are to stun the 2021 T20 World Champions.

Afghanistan were bundled out for 114 and 134 in their big-margin losses to co-hosts West Indies and India in their previous two matches, respectively. Avoiding such batting mishaps will be key if Afghanistan are to put up a fight against the mighty Aussies.

Had no idea about hat-trick feat: Cummins

AGENCIES

Pat Cummins created history in Antigua on Thursday when he became just the second Australian player and seventh overall to claim a hattrick in an ICC Men's T20 World Cup match on Friday.

Cummins picked up two wickets from the final two deliveries of his third over against Bangladesh and then completed the feat with the opening ball of his last over when he had Towhid Hridoy caught at short fine leg, helping Australia to a 28-run win (DLS) in a Super Eight fixture in Antigua.

It meant Cummins joined compatriot Brett Lee as Australian bowlers to have taken a hat-trick at a Men's T20 World Cup, after the legendary right-armer achieved the feat against Bangladesh in 2007.

After the match, Player of the Match Cummins said, "I had no idea (regarding the hattrick), then saw when it came up on the screen.

Spain and their king buzz with confidence

REUTERS, Gelsenkirchen

Spain fans - including King Felipe - purred with a growing belief that their team can go all the way and be crowned Euro 2024 winners after an utterly dominant victory over defending champions Italy.

"Two weeks ago, I thought it was impossible for Spain to win this European Championship. Now I even think it is probable," Inako Díaz-Guerra, sports editor for El Mundo newspaper, said.

Having defeated Croatia 3-0 in their opening match, La Roja beat the Azzurri in their second group game by a narrow 1-0 margin on Thursday with the only goal coming from Italy defender Riccardo Calafiori who put the ball into his own net.

But the scoreline did not do justice to Spain's complete control of the game from start to finish with young wingers Nico Williams and Lamine Yamal cutting through Italy's defence time and again and Italy chasing shadows in every area of the pitch.

Coach Luis de la Fuente's side would have racked up a string of goals were it not for Italian goalkeeper Gianluigi Donnarumma and the width of the crossbar which denied Williams what would have been a stunning goal to double Spain's lead.

"Despite the narrow result and the own goal, the dominance was constant, and not that boring kind of dominance of holding the ball during the infamous tiki-taka period, but one of flow and real danger," Diaz-Guerra wrote.

Spain's King Felipe was in Gelsenkirchen's Arena AufSchalke for the game.

After the final whistle, the Spanish King told the players that their performance had been spectacular.

"If you keep playing like that, there will be celebrations," he said to applause and cheers in the changing room.

Spain's win guaranteed them the top finishing spot in Group B regardless of the outcome of their last match in the opening phase against Albania on Monday.

They will play a third-placed side from another group in the last 16.

Fans are already expecting to meet hosts Germany in the quarter-finals.

Spanish newspapers said coach de la Fuente was likely to give many of his first-choice players a rest for the Albania game as they plotted their campaign further ahead in the tournament.

"Spain is pure art," exclaimed a headline in As, a sports daily.

'Little Italy lucky to avoid TOTAL COLLAPSE'

The Italian press were in full agreement with manager Luciano Spalletti's damning assessment of his country's 1-0 loss to Spain on Thursday in Euro 2024, a scoreline which in no way reflected Spain's utter domination of the game.

Riccardo Calafiori's own goal was the only difference between the sides on the scoresheet, but the gulf in class was apparent to all, as a young, exciting, Spanish side threatened to run riot against what Spalletti described as a tired Italy.

"Little Italy" was the headline in La Gazzetta dello Sport which greeted Italians on Friday morning, a clear indication of just how the Spanish had overrun Spalletti's jaded looking team.

The front page also told how "the Azzurri were never in the game", that keeper Gianluigi Donnarumma prevented a total collapse as Spain dominated Italy, but with a note of hope; "a draw with Croatia will be enough".

Former Italy and AC Milan manager Arrigo Sacchi, writing for La Gazzetta dello Sport, said that the difference between the two sides is enormous, but he feels that the manager is not at fault.

"(Spanish manager Luis) De la Fuente's national team plays dominant football, has technical and tactical knowledge, knows how to move and above all, does it with the right timings," Sacchi wrote.

"Italy, unfortunately, is not yet a team: it takes time, it takes patience. We should learn a lot from this defeat, and I hope that we will try to learn from the mistakes we have made and not be caught up in the usual presumption.

"Let's make one thing clear right away: Spalletti is not to blame. He is a coach who has been working for less than a year, he has inherited a complicated situation and is trying to give a style to a country that has never had one."

Tuttosport went with the headline: "And it still worked out well" - a clear reference to how Spain peppered Italy with 20 shots compared to Italy's four, but the Italians somehow escaped with a narrow defeat.

Corriere dello Sport went with the plain and simple "Reset", saying Italy need to forget the Spanish defeat, again referencing how Italy need just a draw to reach the last 16.

Outside of the sports media, the daily newspapers also featured Italy's downfall on the front pages. "Azzurri dominated, Spain are superior" read La Repubblica, with La Stampa going with "Spanish punishment".

La Stampa also referenced Italy's 4-0 humbling by Spain in the Euro 2012 final, "Only Donnarumma prevents the ghosts of 2012", with the keeper the only player to come away with any praise after the performance in Gelsenkirchen.

Scaloni angry, Marsch upset

AGENCIES

Argentina head coach Lionel Scaloni hit out at the temporary grass surface installed for Thursday's Copa America opener against Canada, which his side won 2-0, saying it was unsuited for a major tournament game.

The field at the Mercedes-Benz Stadium is made of artificial turf but organisers installed grass sod on top for this tournament after June 15.

"Thank goodness we won, because otherwise it would have been a cheap excuse to sit here and say this but we've known we were going to play here for seven months and they changed the surface two days ago," said Scaloni.

"It's not good for the spectacle. I'm sorry, it's not an excuse, but it's not a pitch. The stadium is beautiful and with the synthetic turf it should be spectacular, but with the (grass) turf today. Honestly, it's not suitable for this kind of players."

The grass was installed after Atlanta United's last home game on June 15. Meanwhile, Canada coach Jesse Marsch said Argentina should be fined for emerging five minutes late from the dressing room for the second half.

"When they were waiting, I knew that they were looking at video and they were analysing how they wanted to play against us. Now, I wish again the referees would manage that," Marsch said.

"If we were five minutes late, we'd get a fine. There would be a big problem. Let's see what happens with Argentina, I think they have to be fined. How late were they? 20 minutes? 30?

"It was a long time. But they had that time to prepare how they wanted to play against us in the second half, which if we would have known ahead of time that we could have an extra 10 minutes then we could have prepared some things more."

Another youth football league to begin without a purpose

SPORTS REPORTER

The BFF Under-18 Football League is set to get underway today in three separate venues with youth squads of nine Bangladesh Premier League (BPL) outfits, who are taking part seemingly just to fulfil a condition and avoid the federation's fine.

The purpose behind the youth team is that all top flight clubs would train and maintain youth teams round the year to strengthen the pipeline and then participate in the junior league with their respective youth teams. However, other than Bashundhara Kings, no other team has an active youth team.

Just like the previous four editions of the competition – the first three being held in a tournament format – all clubs except Bashundhara Kings held trials at the last minute to form a squad for the tournament.

The scheduling of the tournament also reflects the neglect it is receiving from the game's local governing body, as the 36-match-long tournament will be completed in less than a month, forcing the players to risk injuries by playing matches with little rest period in between.

The club officials and coaches said that financial constraint, accommodation problem and an overall lack of a systemic process were the main reasons why they did not have permanent youth squads.

"There is no system in place to develop the professional league and the youth league. The federation is holding the youth league and we are also participating in it, otherwise the federation will fine the club Tk 20 lakh," said Mohammedan SC manager Imtiaz Ahmed Nakib.

Nakib also informed that they formed their squad in less than two weeks by selecting some players from trials, who will join 10-12 players who played for Mohammedan in the 2021-22 season, the last edition of the youth competition.

"I think the clubs can train the junior players round the year if they really want to do it, though there is a crisis of accommodation and financing," Abahani assistant coach Pranotosh Kumar said.

"The young players are leaving the clubs after one-and-half month's training and the competition. The players hardly benefit with this short period of training," he added.

The former national player also thinks that the hectic schedule may hamper the purpose of the league as the players won't get enough time to recover.

Fortis FC manager Rashedul Islam sees the league format a positive change that will give the players an opportunity to play eight matches instead of three to four matches they would otherwise get in the tournament format.

"Some 10-12 junior players have been with our senior team but all of them except one were ruled out in the medical test. So, we conducted a five-day trial with some 400 players to pick 30 players for the league," Rashedul said.

Tigers face India with backs to the wall

Less than 48 hours after losing to Australia, Bangladesh will be up against another tournament favourites in India today with their chances of progressing to the semifinals of the ICC T20 World Cup hanging in the balance.

In their Group 1 Super Eight match in Antigua yesterday, the Tigers put up 140-8 on the board but could hardly test the Aussies, who raced to 100-2 in 11.2 overs in a rain-interrupted chase and were eventually declared winners by 28 runs in DLS method.

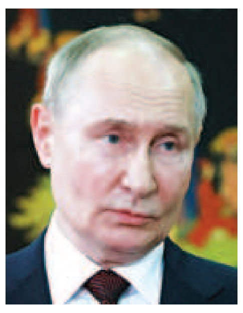
Putin threatens to arm North Korea

US 'incredibly' concerned; Seoul summons Russian envoy over pact with Pyongyang

CNN ONLINE



Vladimir Putin has threatened to arm North Korea if Western countries continue providing military aid to Ukraine, as the Russia president's new defence pact with Pyongyang sparked a series of diplomatic reverberations in the region.

Putin's remarks, at the end of a state visit to Vietnam, capped off a week in which Moscow sought to rattle the West and project strength from a part of the world in which his influence still carries weight.

"Those who supply these weapons believe that they are not at war with us. I said, including in Pyongyang, that we then reserve the right to supply weapons to other regions of the world," Putin told reporters Thursday at the end of his trip to Hanoi, in response to a question on whether the supply of Western long-range weapons could be considered an act of aggression.

"Where they will go next?" he said, suggesting those countries could then sell the weapons to Western adversaries.

"It is incredibly concerning," US State Department spokesperson Matthew Miller told a news briefing when asked about Putin's remarks about possible arms supplies to North Korea.

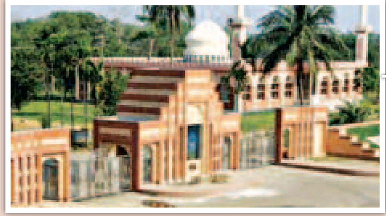
JU lost 40pc waterbodies in 35 years

Says a study; vegetation area shrank by 26.5pc between 1988 and 2023



- 172.5 acres converted into built-up areas
- Original master plan neglected during structural development

SHEIKH TAJUL ISLAM TAJ

Jahangirnagar University campus, known for its verdant fields, woods, and waterbodies, has lost nearly 40 percent of its waterbodies over the last three and a half decades.

The university's vegetation cover has also shrunk by 26.5 percent during the same period, according to a study.

In contrast, the JU saw its built-up area going up by 159.3 percent. Around 172.5 acres of land were converted into built-up areas, said the study published in the Bangladesh Journal of Environmental Research, a peer-reviewed journal.

The research titled "35 Years of Land Use and Land Cover Change in Jahangirnagar University: Challenges of Achieving Sustainable Green University Campus" analysed data on JU from 1988 to 2023.

It shows that waterbodies covered an area of 122.4 acres in 1988, but the figure dropped to 73.58 acres last year. The vegetation area of 388.80 acres shrunk to 285.88 acres over the same period.

Israeli forces step up strikes across Gaza

Engage in close-quarter combat with Hamas fighters

REUTERS, Cairo

Israeli forces pounded Rafah in southern Gaza yesterday, as well as other areas across the enclave, killing at least 32 Palestinians as troops engaged in close-quarter combat with Hamas fighters, residents and Israel's military said.

Residents said the Israelis appeared to be trying to complete their capture of Rafah, which borders Egypt and has been the focus of an Israeli assault since early May.

Tanks were forcing their way into the western and northern parts of the city, having already captured the east, south and centre. Israeli forces fired from planes, tanks and ships off the coast, forcing a new wave of displacement from the city, which had been sheltering more than a million displaced people, most of whom have been forced to flee again.

Later yesterday, Palestinian health officials said at least 12 Palestinians were killed in Mawasi in western Rafah in what Palestinians said was a tank shelling that hit a tent housing displaced families.

Palestinian health officials said at least 32 Palestinians had been killed in separate Israeli military strikes yesterday.

The Israeli military said it was looking into the reported strikes on Mawasi and a separate incident in Gaza City.

It said its forces were conducting "precise, intelligence-based" actions in the Rafah area, where troops were involved in close-quarter combat and had located tunnels used by Hamas members.

The military also said that over the past week its forces had targeted a university that it said served as a Hamas headquarters from which Hamas fighters fired on its soldiers and had found weapons and barrel bombs. It did not name the university.

In nearby Khan Younis, an Israeli air strike yesterday killed three people, including a father and son, medics said.

Another Israeli air strike on a Gaza City municipal facility killed five people, including four municipal workers, the territory's Civil Emergency Service said. It added that rescue teams were searching the rubble for more missing victims.

The health ministry in Hamas-run Gaza said yesterday that more than 37,463 people have been killed in the territory during more than eight months of offensive.

Meanwhile, Armenia has officially recognised a Palestinian state, the Armenian foreign ministry said in a statement yesterday, the latest country to do so despite opposition from Israel.

Armenia supports a United Nations resolution on an immediate ceasefire in Israel's offensive in Gaza and is in favour of a two-state solution to the Palestinian-Israeli conflict, the same statement said.

In a separate development, Qatar said yesterday it was continuing mediation efforts to "bridge the gap" between Israel and Hamas to secure a ceasefire in Gaza and the release of Israeli hostages held there.

Couple killed in landslide

A man and his pregnant wife died in a landslide in Cox's Bazar Sadar upazila early yesterday.

The deceased were identified as Anwar Hossain, muezzin of a local mosque, and his wife, Maimuna Akhter.

Maimuna was seven months pregnant, reports UNB.

They lived at the foot of a hill in Badsha Ghona area under the upazila.

Incessant rain over the past few days had saturated the hill, adjacent to their house, which finally gave way and collapsed onto their tin-roofed house around 3:00am.

Helal Uddin Kabir, councilor of Ward 9 under Cox's Bazar Municipality confirmed the matter.

The couple, sleeping at the time, got trapped under the debris. Locals later recovered their bodies from the rubble.

The victims were taken to Cox's Bazar Sadar Hospital, where they were declared dead on arrival.

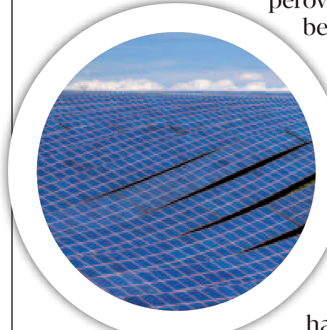
Cox's Bazar has been experiencing heavy rainfall over the past several days.

Solar panel achieves world record with 'miracle material'

INDEPENDENT.CO.UK

A new efficiency world record for converting sunlight into electricity has been set, in what researchers claim is a huge boost for renewable energy.

Researchers at Longi, the world's biggest solar panel manufacturer, achieved a 34.6 percent power conversion efficiency using a tandem perovskite-silicon solar cell, beating the previous record by 0.7 percent.



The new record is also more than 7 percent more efficient than the record for a standard silicon solar cell, which is found in most commercial solar panels.

Perovskite has been hailed as a "miracle material" for its potential to vastly improve everything from batteries to telecommunications and renewable energy.

With current silicon solar panels reaching their physical limits, researchers are now looking to next-generation tandem cells to better harness the Sun's energy.

Perovskite-silicon cells have a theoretical efficiency limit of 43 percent – far exceeding the 29 percent limit of standard silicon cells.

From outside, you can hear hushed laughter, a street slang hurled, an almost loud shriek that quickly fades into giggles, and an unlikely combination to the rest of the orchestra -- the clacking of keyboards and chiptunes. The red curtain, as it turns out, hides a gaming arcade.

MD ZAHIDUR RABBI

The unassuming, narrow, winding alley in Dhaka's Geneva Camp reeks of a pungent mix of mosquito coils and incense. A maze of tangled overhead electric wires blocks the sun here any time of the year. A bare-bones eatery sells piping hot "singaras" with questionable hygiene from dawn to dusk. There's a cacophony of conversations in mixed Urdu and Bangla that gets doused in old hindi songs from a speaker somewhere.

To a stranger, this alley -- like the rest of the camp -- is an all-out attack on the senses.

At the dead end of this alley, nestled between the worn-out brick buildings that house "variety stores", a bright red curtain hides a dusty little establishment. From outside, you can hear hushed laughter, a street slang hurled, an almost loud shriek that quickly fades into giggles, and an unlikely combination to the rest of the orchestra -- the clacking of keyboards and chiptunes.

The red curtain, as it turns out, hides a gaming arcade.

THE DENS THAT HIDE 'MOSTOFA'

Inside one of the four remaining gaming arcades in Dhaka's Geneva Camp, the race is on to beat the high score in EA Sports Cricket 07. Second grader Ayan, an avid arcade gamer, smashes the keyboard controls to hit back-to-back sixes. He must beat his friend Nandu, who is on the bowling end with another set of controls.

This is an everyday scene at Usman's gaming arcade, who has been operating the business out of the same spot for the last 25 years. For just five bucks, gamers like Ayan and Nandu can immerse themselves in the virtual world of gaming for 15 minutes.

> The arcade gaming business was very popular back in the day. Sometimes I used to earn about Tk 2,000-3,000 in a single day. Now I am only able to earn about Tk 300-400 a day, operating from 9:00am to 11:00pm. I am unable to even keep up with the rent.

There was a time when almost every alley or "para" in Dhaka had at least four to five gaming arcades. However, as smartphones and computers became more accessible with time, the crowds started waning at the arcades. These days, arcades are rare, and most of the ones that are surviving, like Usman's, have ditched the old arcade machines for computers.

There was a time when almost every alley or "para" in Dhaka had at least four to five gaming arcades. However, as smartphones and computers became more accessible with time, the crowds started waning at the arcades.

These days, the arcades are rare, and most of the ones that are surviving have ditched the old arcade machines for computers.

However, an arcade is no arcade without the familiar retro machines. The solution? Fitting in a monitor, a keyboard, and the entire setup inside a makeshift arcade machine body made in the local markets.

The facades hold up just fine with no bother; it's the games inside that really matter. "Cadillacs and Dinosaurs", or "Mostofa" as everyone in Bangladesh loved to call it, and other classic hits like Street Fighter II, now gave way to the more popular sports genre games like Cricket '07, FIFA, and occasionally, Grand Theft Auto.

Some old-school, machine run arcades, however, still remain in Dhaka at various spots. At the capital's Rayer Bazar, one arcade still harbours the old machines operated by coins.

Here, third-grader Sabbir and his friend Kakon were found trying to beat the final boss in "Cadillacs and Dinosaurs". Every day, Sabbir sells kitchen mittens after school, earning, on average, Tk 35 in profits. He saves some for daily expenses and the rest goes into the arcade machine. For Sabbir and his friend, the arcade is a place to forget all of the hardships of the day and enjoy simple laughter and good times together.

THE LOOMING END OF OLD ARCADES

Ashraf, owner of one of the arcade gaming centres at Geneva Camp, shared troubling insights about the business. "The arcade gaming business was very popular back in the day. Sometimes I used to earn about Tk 2,000-3,000 in a single day. Now I am only able to earn about Tk 300-400 a day, operating from 9:00am to 11:00pm. I am unable to even keep up with the rent," he shared.

"I am thinking about selling the machines and retiring as the business has now become a burden and I have also become an old man," Ashraf added.

Unable to keep up with the inflation and the downed popularity of the arcades, Khokon, owner of the arcade at Rayer Bazar, now doubles as a shoe-seller on the footpath just outside his shop. He shared how his profits have gone down from a Tk 1,000 to just Tk 300-400. He blames the rise of smartphones for his dwindling profits.

Ashraf's gaming shop at the Geneva Camp.

He also mentions that often he falls victim to extortion from local gangs. "I try my best to keep them out of my business but it is getting more and more difficult every day," Khokon said.

These days, there are rising gaming arcades or hubs that have ditched the old models altogether to make ways for PlayStations, usually targeted towards higher end customers.

GamenationBD is one such modern arcade that has PlayStation 4 that can be rented on an hourly basis. Yousuf, who works at GamenationBD, said, "The hourly rent costs Tk 60 per hour and if you play multiplayer, every player must pay Tk 50. We have games like Mortal Kombat, Street fighter, Need for Speed, GTA V, FIFA, and more."

"Most of our customers are between the ages of 16 and 25," he shared.

HOW ARCADES CHANGED AND HOW THEY CHANGED US

These arcades that once riddled the alleys of Dhaka, and now hide in secret corners of the city, shaped an entire generation in the country. The impact, no matter how one perceives it, was undeniable.

Md Golam Rafsan Jani, a tech enthusiast who is currently working as a learning designer at Optimizely, said, "I used to regularly play arcade games about 17 or 18 years ago. Each coin was about Tk 1 and the most hyped game was 'Mostofa'."

"I also used to play Mario on TV cards at my home back in the day. All of these experiences had motivated me to buy a personal computer for gaming back in 2006," he shared.

While arcade gaming has lost its golden era, it continues to impact the lives of youngsters, particularly in the underbellies of Dhaka. For the children in Geneva Camp, an hour of gaming in the arcade is an escapade from the harsh realities of life. To others, they remain the reminders of a nostalgic bygone era.

JISHU

Jishu's elder sister then appeared with her retired husband, expressing that their mother didn't want to leave Jishu's side. They couldn't keep her at their flat as she was very attached to Jishu and couldn't sleep without him.

After the previous tenant vacated the house, Khan E Alam decided not to accommodate any younger residents. They often chat and socialise with friends, causing disturbances during his sleep. Even after the noise subsides in the afternoon, its effects linger, disrupting his peace of mind long into the night. One day, as Khan E Alam was reading the newspaper, a young man entered the drawing room with a casual air, sporting sunglasses like a cinema hero, and inquired, "I noticed a 'To-Let' sign. Is the house still available?"

Glancing up from the newspaper, Khan E Alam replied, "Yes, but it's not available to you."

Surprised, the young man asked, "Do you know me? You've never seen me before, yet you've already declined. Please explain."

"It's because you're too young. I've decided not to rent to younger individuals."

"Why? What's wrong with them? Why can't you rent to me? Weren't you once my age?"

"I won't rent to younger individuals because they tend to make noise and disturb my sleep. Although I was once young like you, I wasn't as loud as today's youth."

ILLUSTRATION: AMREETA LETHE

The young man countered, "But how do you know I make noise? You've never met me."

"It's your age that gives it away", Khan E Alam replied irritably.

The young man persisted, "You're assuming. But the problem is, your assumption is wrong. Despite my youth, I don't make noise. And neither do my friends when they visit, because my 82-year-old mother lives with me. Are you an octogenarian?"

Moved by this revelation, Khan E Alam regarded the young man with newfound importance. A young man who cared for his elderly mother was undoubtedly responsible. After a moment of contemplation, Khan E Alam changed his demeanour and courteously invited the gentleman to take a seat.

As the young man sat down, Khan E Alam inquired, "Who else lives with you, apart from you and your mother?"

"It's just the two of us", he replied. "My mother and I."

"Only two of you? Then why such a large flat?"

"My mother enjoys reading. She has a vast collection of books. And I work on software development, so I need ample space."

"Do you have assistants who come to your house?" Khan E Alam asked, his eyes filled with curiosity.

"Yes, they do come when needed, but I usually communicate with them over the phone", the young man replied.

"Does that mean there's a lot of coming and going?" Khan E Alam inquired, scrutinising him.

"Yes, exactly. It's like the ebb and flow of a river. People come and go", he responded with a smile. "But they don't make noise. My mother wouldn't tolerate it, and I would ensure they don't."

Impressed by his responsible demeanour, Khan E Alam decided to rent the house to him. He then apologised for not asking his name earlier.

"I'm Jishu", the young man replied.

"Jishu Chowdhury?" Khan E Alam asked in surprise. "Just Jishu? No other part to your name?"

"No, that's it. My late father was a simple man who disliked complications, even in naming his children. I'm Jishu, my brother is Sishu, my elder sister is Mishu, and the younger one is Nishu."

"Ah, it seems your father liked rhymes. By the way, where do your siblings live?" Khan E Alam inquired.

After learning about Jishu's siblings, Khan E Alam abandoned the idea of seeking references and asked when he planned to settle in.

"The sooner, the better", Jishu replied. "And about the advance?"

"Hmm, alright", Khan E Alam hesitated before accepting the cash offered by Jishu. "Bring your mother. An 82-year-old woman who reads books is no joke."

2.

Jishu appeared two days later with his mother, bringing along boxes of books, several broad bookshelves, branded computers, and three laptops. It was clear to Khan E Alam that Jishu was a computer enthusiast. Khan E Alam felt elated to have such an educated and technologically savvy tenant for the first time, eagerly anticipating meeting Jishu's mother.

After some days, Khan E Alam noticed a significant number of young men on motorcycles visiting Jishu's flat daily. They didn't stay long and left quietly. Despite the frequent visitors, there was no disturbance or noise, which relieved Khan E Alam. He felt reassured that he hadn't made a mistake in renting the flat to Jishu; he believed Jishu to be a good person, and his visitors seemed to come from respectable backgrounds.[a]

One day, Jishu took Khan E Alam to his flat where his elderly mother was in the drawing room, wearing a white sari and thick glasses. Despite her imposing presence, Khan E Alam felt respectful and greeted her by touching her feet. She blessed him, evoking a sense of traditional respect.

The house help brought a plate of snacks, and Jishu's mother warmly entertained Khan E Alam. Despite his hesitation, Khan E Alam declined, but Jishu's mother insisted he take whatever he liked. He felt as if he were listening to his own mother's voice.

Khan E Alam inquired about the type of books she liked to read, to which she replied that she tried to read but found her eyes getting tired quickly.

Jishu's elder sister then appeared with her retired husband, expressing that their mother didn't want to leave Jishu's side. They couldn't keep her at their flat as she was very attached to Jishu and couldn't sleep without him.

Jishu's mother affirmed her attachment to her youngest son, stating that she needed to stay with him by rule.

The elder sister lamented that Jishu hadn't married yet, which saddened their mother, who often scolded them for not getting him married. Khan E Alam mentioned that Jishu could marry at his own discretion, but the elder sister explained that Jishu believed he wasn't settled yet and thus wasn't interested in marriage.

Khan E Alam suggested that Jishu was doing well in his software business and could consider marriage, ensuring that their mother would be taken care of. However, the elder sister revealed that they had tried convincing him, but he didn't listen.

When Khan E Alam inquired about Jishu's elder brother in the USA, the elder sister became upset, revealing that he, too, was unmarried. She explained that being twins, they shared a dramatic life, facing challenges and fears together, even death.

Khan E Alam offered to intervene and talk to Jishu about marriage, which delighted the elder sister. She shared that Jishu had a close friendship with a girl named Baani and suggested that Mishu could marry her if Khan E Alam could manage Jishu.

Understanding his responsibilities as the owner of the flat, Khan E Alam didn't feel uneasy about the situation.

POETRY

The first downpour will be my cue

TAHSEEN NOWER PRACHI

Raindrops whisper on the tin roof's drum,
A symphony that calls me finally home.
There you'll be, a shawl draped round your form,
Lost in memories weathering life's storm.
A thousand teardrops, like the falling rain,
Glimmer in your eyes, a heart etched with pain.
Do you know, dear one, the clouds we see now,
Hold echoes of sunlight, a forgotten vow?
When you see me, weathered by distant shores,
Can you speak of the laughter we held before?
Old photographs blur, a face half-unknown,
Is this who I was, a seed long sown?
Through the drumming rain, I'll find my way back,
To stories whispered beneath the eaves' crack.
"Where have you wandered?" your voice, soft and low,
I'll say, "I sought myself, but you helped me grow."

The journey

If you travel on a bus, always take the window seat. You may want to peek outside, maybe later, in more peaceful hours. But for now, you let your head, full of worries, and a throbbing heart haggle with each other. Whether or not you have made the right decision to begin a voyage you are not sure how and where it will end.

DESIGN: MAISHA SYEDA

If you travel on a bus, take an empty seat with a broken one next to you; you can travel without company, uninterrupted. If it's a window seat, you may look out, maybe later, when all your thoughts will go to sleep. But for now, you let your painted toenails rest next to your embroidered handbag. Closing your eyes, you listen to the loud Hindi songs blaring on the bus, wishing you were somewhere else before drifting off.

A sudden brake and the bus conductor's shouts jerk you up. You open your eyes, remembering only half of the dream. The other half swirls in the sultry air before flying outside. It is then that you look out.

A sudden brake and the bus conductor's shouts jerk you up. You open your eyes, remembering only half of the dream. The other half swirls in the sultry air before flying outside. It is then that you look out.

The green countryside stretches out under a blazing sun like a tapestry. You pass coco-palms, betel-nuts, brick houses, a woman in a red printed sari with a pitcher on her waist, a few naked kids playing in the sand, peasants irrigating their fields, a hermit lost in thought under a banyan tree, a small white duck sitting on the back of a cow and a lone man in a bicycle. As you pass the small, thatched mud huts nestled among banana and mango groves in village after village, you wonder what kind of lives, what joys, what sorrows, what stories, what songs are hidden behind them. And you wonder if there are other daughters, once exiled and outcast, are going back home too?

The exiled DAUGHTER

Is it true that when we migrate, we lose a few people from our past? Is it a fact or a fiction that with migration, a new life takes shape, erasing the memories of bygone days? Can we ever cut our ties to the ancestral home?

I stand in the courtyard facing the L-shaped one-story house. I look at the tinned roof where bougainvillaea blooms in white, pink and yellow colours. And at night, a single moon and a thousand stars glow and the fragrance of hasnahena flowers washes over the senses in waves. Here, in this courtyard, a century old banyan tree stands still and in silence, watching over the house like a mother. And under the shade of this very banyan tree, a very old grandmother used to lie down on a cot and grin with a toothless mouth, watching a six-year-old girl run amok, chasing a naughty cat.

I stand in the courtyard and watch life playing in flashback—a giggling child in her mother's arms, a defiant teenage girl, a young bride in a red sari. This house and this courtyard bear witness to the lives of my grandparents and my parents. Here, my brother's children and their children will be born and raised. Here, under this very banyan tree, History may come with a broad smile on her face, her pockets brimming with stories of three generations and one exiled daughter.

KHIVA
a Central Asian gem on Silk Road

Want to share your travel experiences with us? Please send your stories to holiday@thedailystar.net

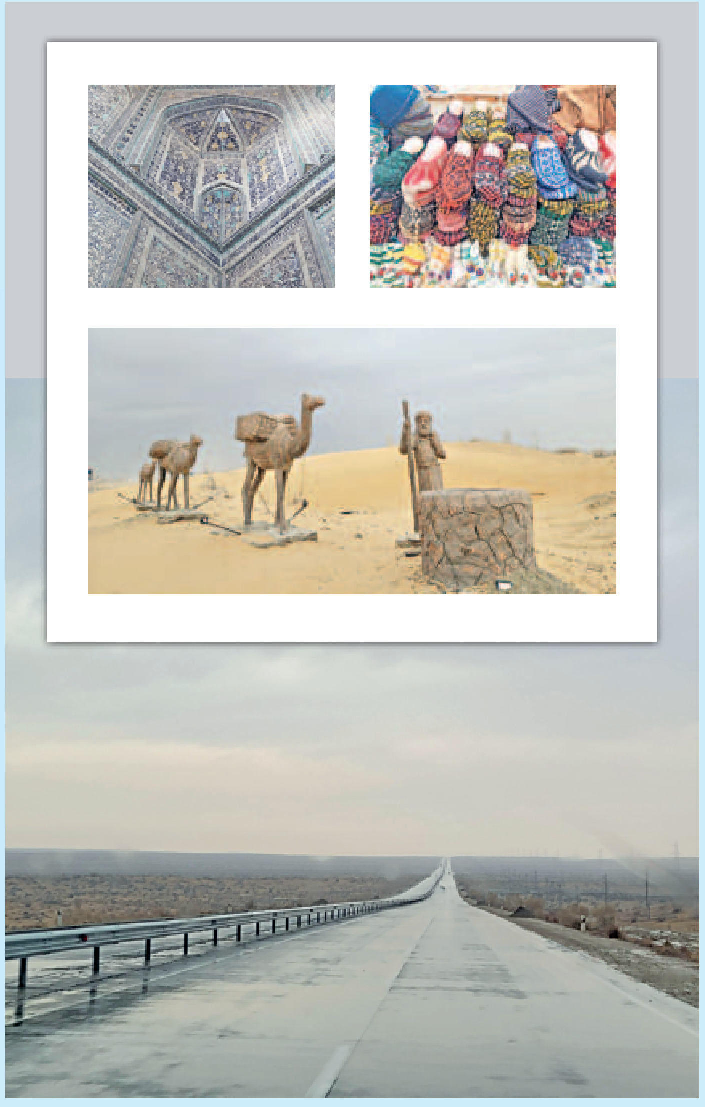
ELIZA BINTE ELAHI has so far visited more than 50 countries across the globe. Eliza, who teaches at the University of South Asia as an adjunct faculty, considers herself a history and heritage lover.



10 days in Uzbekistan

It won't be an exaggeration to say the cities of this ancient country -- Khiva, Samarkand, Bokhara, Tashkent, Ferghana, Andijan, Margillon, and Kokand -- have deeply influenced human history and civilisations. Iranians, Turks, Tatars, Tajiks, Uzbeks, Mongols -- these cities have witnessed the rise and fall of great empires and enriched and inspired cultures and history through tales of heroism, greatness, violence, knowledge, science, art, creation, and diversity.

How much one can even comprehend the enormity of all these in 10 days? One can only have a glimpse of those and store as much as one can in the memory. That's it.

I started my journey from the capital city of Tashkent. From this ancient city, I went to Samarkand, a city that may give you the impression that time has frozen here. My next destination was Bukhara, a noise-free lively city. If solitude had a place to live, it would have been here.

Next was Khiva.

I got a taste of the Silk Road on the road trip to Khiva through the steppe. Ah! Seeing the barren lands I read in Bengali translations of Russian literature felt unreal. Yes, childhood dreams do come true indeed!

Then, in the next couple of days, I had remarkable train and road trips to Andijan, Margillon, and Kokand. But those are stories for another day. Let's explore Khiva for now.

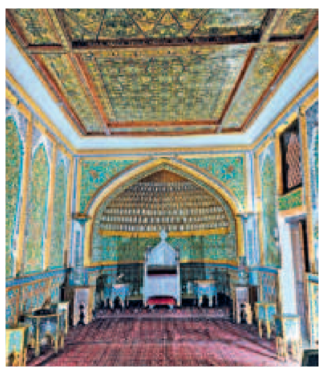
ELIZA BINTE ELAHI

The destination was Khiva, one of Uzbekistan's most well-preserved ancient cities on the Silk Road.

Like Bukhara, Khiva is a Unesco World Heritage Site hosting a wealth of history and culture dating back 2,500 years.

It is approximately 480 kilometres from Bukhara. We started our road trip at 8:00am. The 7-8 hour drive in a mini-van across the diverse Uzbek landscape promised to be a thrilling one.

As we left the city behind, our journey through the steppe started. Contrary to the image of a barren desert, the steppe offers a unique beauty with its sparse vegetation and wide-open spaces. Two hours into the journey, we took a coffee break, savouring the tranquillity of the barren region. Suddenly, the sky turned ominously dark, and a rare desert rain began to fall. It's not an ordinary event as we were told by our driver and guide, Mirza Beg. It was a first time experience for them too.



After the rain, we enjoyed the road trip witnessing small towns and villages with a clear blue sky on the backdrop.

We arrived at Khiva around 4:00. After checking into our hotel in Ichan-Kala, the old city, we quickly set out to explore the area before daylight faded.

ABOUT KHIVA AND THE SILK ROAD

Khiva is a charming city located in the western Khorezm region of Uzbekistan. This small isolated ancient city is rich in culture and history that spans over a millennium.

Khiva can be best explored walking. There are two parts of this city -- Ichan-Kala or the inner city and Dishankala or the outer city. We chose to stay in Ichan-Kala as it would be convenient for us to explore the city. Ichankalai is old Khiva. Among the cities located on the Silk Road I have visited, Khiva still retains some of its oldest forms.

Central Asia was an important centre of trade during the golden age of the Silk Road trade. The overland routes of the Silk Road passed through the cities and deserts of Central Asia, bearing the footprints of world travellers, merchants, bandits, and warriors. This Central Asian route was a bridge between East and West for a long time. Culture, religion, philosophy have been exchanged along this route shaping civilisations and cultures.

Due to its important geographical location, numerous empires developed here - the Muslim Khawarism Empire, the Mongol Empire of Genghis Khan, the Timurid Empire of Timur and his descendants. The region's Muslim thinkers made unforgettable contributions to mathematics, astronomy, language, literature, and art during their time under Islamic rule.

Contributions of Muhammad Ibn Musa Al-Kharizmi in algebra, Omar Khayyam in mathematics and poetry, Imam Bukhari in Hadith, Al Farabi in philosophy are continuing to enrich the world.

THE CHARM OF ICHAN-KALA

Visiting Ichan-Kala is like stepping into a living museum. The city's layout and architecture speak of its rich past, with every stone path and old wooden door telling a story.

It is a meticulously preserved area that feels almost other-worldly. Much of the city has been rebuilt, but those renovations have done in such a way that it kept the essence of its glorious past.

The absence of noise and litter, along with the friendly locals, creates a welcoming atmosphere. Sound pollution is so less that if you shout name from one end of the city that voice will be heard from the other end almost two kilometres away.

Within Ichan-Kala's walls are several remarkable structures the Kunia-Ark Citadel, Islam Khodja Minar and Madrasa, Muhammad Amin Khan Madrasa, Tosh-Hovli Palace, Juma Mosque, Pakhlavan Mahmud's Tomb, Pahlavan Mohammad Gates, Syed Alauddin's Tomb, Tosh-Darbhoja Gate, and Allakuli Khan Caravanserai. The city's similarity to Bukhara is striking.

KHIVA'S HANDMADE HATS

By the time I came out of the accommodation, evening was approaching fast. And with that the temperature dropped too. It was 3-4 degrees Celsius, and the wind was picking up. Local shopkeepers, mostly women, set up stalls selling handmade hats called Chugirma, made from sheep wool. The hats were not just beautiful but also a testament to the harsh winters of Khiva.

THE TOSH-HOVLI PALACE

The next day began with a visit to the Tosh-Hovli Palace, constructed in 1834. The palace's mosaics and woodwork are breathtaking. With 166 rooms, it's impossible to see them all, but seeing the opulent quarters of the king and his queens were enough to leave a lasting impression. The vast courtyard offered a glimpse into the grandeur of the past.

ISLAM KHODJA MINARET

When we arrived at the Islam Khodja complex, the first thing that caught my eyes was the towering minaret basking in the golden morning sun. This towering structure, adorned with turquoise tiles and intricate geometric patterns, stands as a symbol of Uzbekistan's rich cultural heritage. When the awe-inspiring 57-meter-high (187 ft) minaret was built in the 20th century, it was the tallest minaret in Central Asia. It is not just a minaret but a true marvel of medieval engineering.

The minaret's unique architecture allows light and air to flow through its narrow staircase, showcasing the exceptional craftsmanship of its builders. The minaret honours Islam Khodja, a revered religious leader, educator and advisor to the Khanate (state) of Khiva.

KUNYA-ARK FORTRESS

As we stood in front of the Kunya-Ark, a 17th-century fortress, Mirza, our guide, informed us that it was built by the rulers of Khiva, especially under Muhammad Amin Khan, to protect the city from outside threats. The fort also served as the residence of the Khiva Khans and the administrative centre of the Khanate.

It is said that Muhammad Amin Khan wanted to build a minaret that surpassed all other minarets in the region, overlooking all the avenues of the rival city of Bukhara.

Climbing to the top of the fort, we enjoyed a panoramic view of Khiva, with its ancient structures inside the wall and sprawling cityscape outside.

BREAD: A SYMBOL OF LOVE

Walking through Ichan-Kala thinking of the timeless architectural marvels, I came across a woman making bread, a common yet heart-warming sight in Uzbekistan.

She greeted me with a bright smile, embodying the local tradition of hospitality. Bread is integral part to Uzbek culture, symbolising love and respect. It is served at every meal, often accompanied by green tea. Mirza explained that there are numerous types of bread, but abi naan and patir are the most popular.

Though bread is a staple food in lots of countries in central Asia, Middle East and North Africa that I visited, in Uzbekistan, it is more than a food. It's a part of their culture symbolising love and respect. They break and distribute bread with hands; using knife might be seen as a sign of disrespect here.

FAREWELL TO KHIVA

My next destination was Urgench, from where a domestic flight would take me to Tashkent. That's a different story.

Khiva offered me a unique glimpse into the past. I, as a lover of archaeology and history, felt a deep connection to this part of the Silk Road.

FROM BARE TO BOUNTIFUL

Chittagong Hill Tracts transform into a new hub of agriculture

The three hilly districts -- Rangamati, Khagrachhari, and Bandarban -- now produce about 20 percent of the total fruit in Bangladesh, according to officials of the Department of Agricultural Extension.

JAGARAN CHAKMA

"You are being transferred to the Chittagong Hill Tracts."

This was a popular dialogue in the climactic scene of Bengali movies in the 1990s, when the hilly regions were looked upon as the backwoods of the nation, a place where government employees would be posted as a punitive measure.

However, the 'backwards' CHT of the past now stands as a beacon of massive economic, educational, and social progress. Once, thousands of acres were uncultivated in the CHT. Now, the areas are full of various crops and fruits.

A few hundred years ago, rice, tea, and oilseeds were cultivated in the plains between the valleys of the CHT, earning it the acclaim of being known as Karpas Mahal (land of cotton) during the Mughal Empire.

But as times changed, so did the mode of cultivation. Jhum cultivation, also known as slash and burn agriculture, was the dominant force in the region in the past. While it remains a tradition, it is no longer the way of life.

Now, the region is filled with all kinds of crops throughout the year as the community cultivates cashew nuts, coffee, pineapples, mangoes, jackfruits, bananas, oranges, guavas, dragon fruits, strawberries, lemons, papayas, custard-apples, wood apples, ginger, and turmeric.

Vegetables are also produced, with most being organic as they hardly apply fertilisers since the soil is fertile and naturally yields abundantly. At present, orchards upon orchards of fruit are being cultivated in the hills.

The three hilly districts -- Rangamati, Khagrachhari, and Bandarban -- now produce about 20 percent of the total fruit in Bangladesh, according to officials of the Department of Agricultural Extension (DAE). This is a result of modern farming methods.

Once a rare sight in the CHT, power tillers, pumps, and tractors combined with modern irrigation systems and the use of improved seed varieties have replaced the traditional farming system.

Mohammed Basirul Alam, acting deputy director of the DAE of Khagrachhari, said there are around 3,500 people in the district who cultivate mangoes on around 4,150 hectares.

According to DAE estimates, Khagrachhari will produce around 49,000 tonnes of mangoes this year. Alam believes mangoes worth around Tk 200 crore are grown in the district annually.

Md Altaf Hossain, chief scientific officer of the Hill Agriculture Research Station under the Bangladesh Agriculture Research Station in Khagrachhari, said fruit production increased substantially in the three hill districts in the past 15 years on the back of the improvement in the communication systems and growing entrepreneurial mindset.

He is also the project director of the "Cashew nut and coffee research project".

Once, mangoes would be brought to the CHT from Rajshahi, but according to Hossain, the three districts now meet over 20 percent of the country's demand for the delicious fruit.

Although it would be impossible to pinpoint the moment that things began to shift, the introduction of mobile networks to the region in 2008 undoubtedly shaped its economic destiny. Numerous infrastructure development projects since 2009, including the widening of roads and bridges boosted connectivity in the remote areas of the CHT. That played a major role, as did the connection to the national electricity grid.

Such bold initiatives brought a change in the mindset of the educated young generation, who began investing and profiting. Seeing that success, the next generation was encouraged to invest in agriculture.

Take the example of Debashish Chakma, who lives in Shantipur village in the Panchari upazila of Khagrachhari. After completing his master's from the department of anthropology at the Chittagong University, he worked in various organisations for about 10 years.

After saving up, he started gardening fruits like mangoes, mandarin oranges, and guavas over 15 acres of his family land in 2012.

Chakma, president of the Panchari Fruits Garden Owners Association, said once he started turning a profit from the garden, he quit his job and became a full-time agribusiness entrepreneur.

He earns around Tk 25 lakh per year and at least 10 people work year-round in his garden. He said there are more than 1,000 higher-educated agribusiness entrepreneurs in the district who were contributing to the economy and creating jobs.

"I believe these entrepreneurs will change the economy of the CHT as their capital is growing. This will help establish an agro-processing industry."

Chakma also said the introduction of modern technologies has made farming commercially viable for entrepreneurs. Even highly educated individuals have put their talents to the business.

Prue Nue Mong, who completed LLB under the National University, opted not to practise law but rather become an agro-entrepreneur. He developed an interest in agriculture in his childhood as agriculture was his family's main source of income.

However, he said his family would not use technology or modern cultivation methods. "I think the agriculture sector in the hilly areas has bright prospects, and this can change the livelihood of the people."

He also said investing in agriculture provides a quick return on investment.

Mong invested a nominal amount and gradually established a fruit garden over an area of 280 decimals in Kuhalong Headman Para in Kuhalong union of Bandarban sadar upazila.

He added that a decade ago he used to cultivate mandarin oranges, guavas and dragon fruits before successfully developing the garden. "I have earned at least Tk 8 lakh annually for the past six years."

A project for coffee and cashew nuts

JAGARAN CHAKMA

Seeing the huge potential in agriculture, the government is implementing a Tk 211.84 crore project in the Chittagong Hill Tracts (CHT) region to introduce modern technologies and enhance research initiatives with a view to promoting coffee and cashew nut cultivation.

The project, which is being implemented jointly by the Department of Agricultural Extension (DAE) and the Bangladesh Agricultural Research Institute (BARI), has targeted to expand the area under cashew nut and coffee cultivation from 2,000 hectares at present to a combined 6,000 hectares. It is expected to boost production by 50 percent.

Md Altaf Hossain, project director of the cashew nut and coffee research project, said high-yielding varieties of cashew nuts and coffee had been developed under the project.

A modern field lab has been set up at the BARI in Khagrachhari. According to Hossain, the state-run agency has already started distributing high-yielding varieties of coffee saplings.

He said this would make a positive impact in the economy and the livelihood of farmers in the area as coffee can be grown on unused land at a low investment.

According to project documents, the government also plans to increase the country's export earnings on the back of the two products.

Coffee has already been cultivated on around 220 hectares of land in different areas of the CHT region under the project.

According to Hossain, it is possible to earn Tk 5 lakh from 40 decimals of land by cultivating coffee. "There is huge potential for coffee cultivation in the three hill districts, particularly on unused land."

In Bangladesh, the demand for coffee is high because consumption is on the rise. However, the requirement is met largely through imports. Therefore, if coffee can be produced locally, it will not only cater to the domestic demand, the item can also be exported.

"Additional coffee production can be an alternative source of income for those in the hilly regions of Bangladesh," Hossain said.

He said Bangladesh's climate is suitable for the production of the Robusta variety of coffee and is more resistant to disease than other varieties.

It generally thrives at altitudes of 500-1000 metres above sea level and with 1,000-2,000mm of rainfall. Thus, the BARI is aiming to expand cultivation in the hilly areas.

Additionally, many of the 75 horticulture centres scattered across Bangladesh under the horticulture wing of the DAE are now producing commercial coffee seedlings and selling them at government-fixed prices.

Dhaka, Delhi eye shared prosperity

Connectivity, defence figure high in Hasina-Modi talks; focus shifts to Teesta project from water sharing

STAR REPORT

Away from Teesta water sharing, over which Bangladesh and India have been in a deadlock for years, the latter now focuses on water conservation and management of the river inside Bangladesh.

The development came as Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina and her Indian counterpart Narendra Modi held one-on-one and delegation-level meetings at the Hyderabad House in New Delhi yesterday.

Briefing reporters after the meetings, Modi said India would send a technical team to Bangladesh to review the protection and management of the Teesta.

Indian Foreign Secretary Vinay Kwatra then said a technical team has been formed to look into how Bangladesh can conserve Teesta water with Indian assistance.

Conservation of the Teesta requires technical management, Kwatra said, adding: "It is less about the water sharing part, but more about management of water flow within the Teesta river."

It is the understanding between the two leaders that a technical team would undertake efforts to make progress on this, he said.

Dhaka and Delhi almost signed a deal on sharing the Teesta water in 2011, but it did not happen due to West Bengal

Spectrum of ties widens

SHAHAB ENAM KHAN

The resounding applause in Delhi during Sheikh Hasina's visit to India was a testament to the vision and goals the two nations share.

In a world of increasing geopolitical uncertainty and power tilts, this visit and the bilateral talks underscored the necessity of pragmatic cooperation in the evolving fields of trade, technologies, infrastructure, and connectivity.

Strategically speaking, Delhi has understandably focused on sub-regionalism

75TH ANNIVERSARY

It's high time AL went into introspection

PARTHA PRATIM BHATTACHARJEE

The Awami League, one of the oldest and largest political parties in the country, is set to celebrate its 75th founding anniversary today.

It had been at the forefront of almost all democratic movements before and after the birth of Bangladesh. It also led the the nation to independence.

On June 23, 1949, East Pakistan Awami Muslim League was founded by the likes of Maulana Abdul Hamid Khan Bhashani, Huseyn Shaheed Suhrawardy, Shamsul Haque and Ataur Rahman Khan. To make it more pluralistic and non-communal, the word "Muslim" was dropped from its name in 1955, and it was renamed Awami League.

The party played key roles in the Language Movement in 1952, Jukta Front election in 1954, anti-Ayub movement, Education Movement in 1962, Six-Point Movement in 1966, and the students' 11-point movement

How Lucky got so lucky!

Wealth, source of income of NBR official Matiur's wife don't add up

JAHIDUL ISLAM JOY and ZYMA ISLAM

Laila Kaniz Lucky is the upazila parishad chairman of Narsingdi's Raipura and a retired teacher of a government college.

It has now emerged that the former Bangla literature teacher has, in her name, a huge amount of properties, which do not match with her known source of income, indicating someone may have used her wallet as a safe place to stash wealth.

Lucky is the wife of Dr Matiur Rahman, a member of the National Board of Revenue, who came under the spotlight after his son posted on social media a photo of a sacrificial goat that he claimed to have bought for Tk 12 lakh.

Matiur is now president of the NBR's Customs, Excise and VAT Appellate Tribunal, a grade-1 job, with a basic monthly salary of Tk 78,000.

Media reports, NBR sources and a number of documents seen by The Daily Star suggest that the highly-connected NBR official and his close and distant family members have great wealth, including significant stakes in various companies.

Matiur did not respond to this newspaper's calls, but denied any wrongdoing while talking to other media outlets.

Lucky's tax files submitted to the Election Commission before this year's Narsingdi upazila pollsclaim she is worth Tk 10.31 crore, but a closer look indicates she may have understated her wealth by dozens of times.

According to her wealth statement, she owns more than eight acres of mostly non-agricultural land and five flats in Dhaka, but the combined value of all this was shown at only Tk 5.19 crore.

This innocuous-looking list does not even mention her palace-like home in Raipura upazila's Marjal village -- an omission that raises eyebrows due to the opulence of the residence.

The much-talked-about, high-walled compound and two-storey bleached white mansion sits beside neighbours who live in small one-storey homes or huts made of corrugated tin sheets.

The Laila Kaniz Lucky Road, named after her, leads to her mansion.

Shamim Iqbal Munna, of Raipura's upazila engineering office, said that the 123-metre road was built in 2014 at a cost of Tk 14 lakh.

Multiple teachers at the nearby Md Bashir High School, all requesting anonymity, said the land acquisition for that road was done using the school fund, and not with Lucky's money. They said she used her influence to have the road named after her.

Lucky retired as an associate professor of Bangla at Government Titumir College in the capital four years ago, and according to her tax filings, she gets a pension of only Tk 4.65 lakh per year.

TEESTA BOAT CAPSIZE

Girl's body recovered, five still missing

UNB, Kurigram

The body of a two-and-a-half-year-old girl, who went missing after a boat sank in the Teesta River on Wednesday night, was recovered from the river at Jigabarir Char in Ulipur upazila of Kurigram yesterday.

The deceased was identified as Kulsum Satalashkar, daughter of Koyjor Ali.

With this, the death toll from the boat capsize rose to two.

Enamul Haque, a member of Bazra union parishad, said locals spotted Kulsum's body floating in the river and rescued it in the morning.

Ulipur Upazila Nirbahi Officer (UNO) Ataur Rahman said Kulsum and six others went missing when a boat carrying 26 people sank in the Teesta river on Wednesday evening.

Later, divers from a local firefighting unit rushed to the spot and recovered the body of a child.

Four people are still missing. They are Anisur Rahman, 30, his wife Rupali Begum, their 9-year-old child Irin, their niece Hira Moni, 9, and Shamim Hossain, 5, son of Azizur Rahman.

The Gowainghat-Pirojpur-Sonarhat road in Sylhet's Gowainghat upazila has been severely damaged by heavy rains and hilly torrents, rendering it unusable for both vehicles and pedestrians. In the past three weeks, Sylhet city has been inundated five times, affecting many areas and causing untold sufferings to locals. At least 21.08 lakh people have been affected by the flash floods in Sylhet, Sunamganj, and Moulvibazar districts, with 53,244 people living shelter centres as of yesterday afternoon. AL MPs blast govt move for allowing legalisation of black money

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Two lawmakers from Awami League and one from Jatiya Party yesterday in parliament criticised the government for keeping the provision of whitening black money in the proposed national budget for 2024-25 fiscal.

Participating in the general discussion on the proposed budget, Pran Gopal Datta from Cumilla-7, Zahid Maleque from Manikganj-1, and Nurun Nahar Begum, a JP MP from a reserved seat for women, said there will be a reluctance from taxpayers to pay taxes if the provision for whitening black money is kept.

"As a taxpayer, I have to pay more than 30 percent tax if I have Tk 30 lakh. But those who did not show their money [in their tax returns] last year would legalise that undisclosed income by paying a 15 percent tax. This will make the taxpayers reluctant to pay taxes," said Pran Gopal, a renowned physician and also a former VC of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujib Medical University.

He said the finance minister in his budget speech did not say anything about informal economy.

Zahid, a former health minister, said he does not want to see the provision of whitening black money in the proposed budget.

"We will have to curb corruption and cut the tax rate to reduce black money."

He said it is not the low-income people or industrialists but the white-collar people who have black money.

It's high time

in 1969, and thus came out as the most authentic voice of the people.

The AL faced a crisis following ideological conflicts between Suhrawardy and Bhashani in the late 50s. In the early 60s, Sheikh Mujibur Rahman, already popular among students, emerged as a promising leader.

Later, under his leadership, Bangladesh went on to become independent.

The AL faced an existential crisis after August 15, 1975, when its supreme leader Bangabandhu and most of his family members were killed.

Sheikh Hasina, Bangabandhu's elder daughter, returned home from abroad in 1981 and rebuilt the party.

She has been leading the organisation for 43 years as its longest serving chief. Under her leadership, the party has assumed power five times.

Besides, the achievements of Hasina's government are unparalleled compared to those of any other government.

However, some fundamental questions can still be raised as the AL turns 75 today.

Is the party doing justice to its name? Awam, an Urdu word from which its name was derived, means "the people".

Is the party still the "voice" of the people like it was in the past? Is it still true to its ideals today?

The activities of the AL in recent years show that the party has deviated a lot from its core ideals. The party that once considered itself as an activist-oriented organisation has shifted its dependency towards the bureaucracy and law enforcement agencies. It always spoke in favour of people's fundamental rights, but now it is mostly confined to making rhetorical statements on the government's development activities.

Businesspeople are now gaining more influence in the party ranks surpassing the politicians. The party that had fought to ensure people's voting rights has now developed a system of electing public representatives unopposed and holding electoral contests among the AL members amid boycott by a large number of opposition parties.

In many of his speeches during 1972-75, Father of the Nation Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman had mentioned corruption as the main evil hindering the country's development. He had dreamt of a corruption- and exploitation-free secular Bangladesh.

But according to the latest Household Income and Expenditure Survey, income inequality is all-time high in the country. The top 10 percent of the wealthiest households now hold 40.92 percent of its total income.

Former and current bureaucrats, law enforcers, politicians, businesspeople and other professionals now hog the headlines for allegations of corruption.

Within six years after its founding, the word "Muslim" was dropped from party's original name. But its deal with Khelafat Majlish in 2006, its policy to appease Islamist group Hefajat-e-Islam and dropping of contents written by Hindu and freethinking writers from school textbooks following Hefajat's demands raised questions about the AL's secular character.

Party leaders always claim that no one can defeat a united AL. But the question remains how united the party actually is. In the absence of activities by opposition parties, it seems AL itself has become its main enemy.

In its 2018 electoral manifesto, the AL's two major promises were to contain price hike of essentials and take effective action against corruption. In its electoral manifesto in 2024, the party reiterated its pledge to cut the prices of commodities and keep those within an affordable range.

After forming the government in January this year for a fourth consecutive term, the AL took some initiatives to keep the prices of essentials under control, but they seem inadequate.

According to the latest data of Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics, food inflation surged 54 basis points to 10.76 percent from 10.22 percent while non-food inflation slipped 15 basis points to 9.19 percent from 9.34 percent in April, which is the highest rise on the Consumer Price Index in seven months.

The government's steps to check corruption did not meet people's expectations. Over the last 15 years, loan scams and indiscipline ruled the financial sector.

In its manifesto in 2008, the AL had vowed to make the wealth statements of ministers, MPs and their family members public every year, but it did not make good on the pledge. This promise was not mentioned in the three subsequent electoral manifestos.

The party had pledged to enforce laws to recover defaulted loans. However, Bangladesh Bank data shows that defaulted loans at banks hit an all-time high of Tk 1,82,295 crore at the end of March this year.

The AL had also assured the people of building a reliable electoral system. But it had to field dummy candidates in the January 7 national election to make sure the polls look participatory. It also had to restrain from fielding candidates in this year's upazila parishad elections to make sure the polls look participatory.

Due to the party's electoral strategy, AL men fought against their fellow party colleagues in the national and local elections.

And whenever any AL member is found involved in any wrongdoing, party leaders make the same old claim -- "some infiltrators from BNP-Jamaat are tainting Awami League's image".

Does the AL know who are its tested men, how many of its supporters are loyal to its core ideals and how many of them will respond to the party's call in the event of a crisis?

As AL celebrates its 75th founding anniversary, people expect that it will do justice to its name and gain strength to build a secular and democratic Bangladesh.

Bridge collapse

Begum, 30, and her daughter Hridi, 5, the police said.

Four others were rescued alive from the spot, said police and firefighters.

Survivors said they were en route to the wedding to be held at the bridge groom's residence in Gurdal village under Amtali upazila in a microbus from the bride's residence at Shibchar upazila.

Around 2:30 pm, the bus was crossing a bridge over a canal in the Haldia Bazar area.

"When our vehicle came to the middle of the bridge, it collapsed," said Mahbub Khan, one of the survivors.

The microbus fell into the water.

"The canal was filled with water hyacinth. I became senseless. Later, I found myself in a hospital bed when I regained my sense," he told The Daily Star.

On information, firefighters and police rushed to the spot and started a rescue operation with the help of locals, said Saiful Islam Sohel, a local union parishad member.

However, rescue operations were delayed due to heavy rain, said firefighters.

So far, nine bodies have been retrieved and four were rescued alive, said Noor Hossain, station manager of Amtali Fire Service and Civil Defence station.

The rescue operation was suspended in the evening and will resume today, he said.

Neither the bride nor the bridegroom was in the microbus.

The bridge was constructed by the Local Government Engineering Department in 2008, said Asaduzzanan Mintu Mallick, Haldia union parishad chairman.

The bridge, which was in a dilapidated condition, was not repaired, he said.

Abdullah Al Mamun, engineer of LGED's Amtali upazila office, could not reached for comment despite repeated attempts.

Dhaka, Delhi eye shared prosperity

Chief Minister Mamata Banerjee's last-minute objections.

People in the northern part of Bangladesh have for years been suffering from floods in monsoon and water scarcity in winter.

At the joint briefing, Hasina and Modi agreed to a shared vision for the two countries as well as cooperation to make the region prosperous and stable.

Hasina said, "Today, our two sides had very productive meetings where we discussed politics and security, trade and connectivity, the sharing of water from common rivers, power and energy, and regional and multilateral cooperation, among other issues of mutual interest.

"We agreed to collaborate with each other for the betterment of our people and countries... We charted the future course of action to ensure a smart Bangladesh by following Vision 2041 and Viksit Bharat by 2047."

Modi said Bangladesh "lies at the confluence of our 'Neighbourhood First' policy, Act East Policy, Vision SAGAR and the Indo-Pacific Vision".

Noting that the two countries completed many important projects for public welfare in the last year alone, he said, "I reiterate India's commitment to realising Bangabandhu's vision of a stable, prosperous and progressive Bangladesh."

The two leaders witnessed the signing of 10 Memorandums of Understanding (MoUs).

It was Hasina and Modi's first bilateral meeting after the January 7 election in Bangladesh. For India, it was the first visit by the head of a foreign government after the national elections there.

Hasina's two-day visit on June 21-22 took place before her planned visit to China in early July.

RIVERS

The two countries have decided to start talks at the technical level for the renewal of the Ganges River treaty that will expire next year.

In 2020, Bangladesh requested China to support the implementation of a nearly $1 billion Teesta River Comprehensive Management and Restoration Project. China showed interest at the time.

The project was discussed at yesterday's meeting, Kwatra said.

There are 54 transboundary rivers between Bangladesh and India. The two countries have a water sharing treaty regarding the Ganges only.

The Indian Ministry of External Affairs (MEA) and Bangladesh's Ministry of Foreign Affairs (MOFA) issued separate statements later.

The Indian statement said, "Recognising the importance of water resource management in our bilateral relationship, we will continue to engage in prioritising the exchange of data and formulating the framework for interim water sharing based on the recommendations of the Joint Rivers Commission."

MOFA in its statement said Bangladesh also reiterated the early conclusion of Teesta Water Sharing Treaty.

Asked about this, former ambassador M Humayun Kabir told this correspondent the idea of conservation and management of the Teesta is fine, but ignoring the sharing of water means ignoring the fundamental rights of Bangladeshi people.

"The share of Teesta water is important as it has larger implications," he said.

OTHER MATTERS

Addressing the joint press briefing, Modi said with focus on connectivity, commerce, and collaboration in the last 10 years, the two countries restored the connectivity that existed before 1965.

"We will now focus on digital and energy connectivity even more. This will speed up the economies of both countries," he said.

Modi welcomed Bangladesh's decision to join the Indo-Pacific Oceans Initiative. "We will also continue our cooperation in other regional and international forums."

The Indian premier said the two leaders had detailed discussions from defence production to modernisation of armed forces and decided to strengthen cooperation over counterterrorism, fundamentalism and peaceful management of the border.

The MEA statement said both the countries will explore defence industrial cooperation for modernisation of the Armed Forces of Bangladesh, to strengthen its capability for defence, and work closely for military engagements of exercises, training and capability development.

As part of sub-regional connectivity initiatives, India will extend transit facilities for movement of Bangladesh goods to Nepal and Bhutan through railway network, it added.

India will continue to expand power and energy collaboration and the countries will together develop intra-regional electricity trade, including competitively-priced power generated from clean energy projects in India, Nepal and Bhutan, through the Indian electricity grid.

"Based on availability and to the best of its abilities, India will also support Bangladesh with supply of essential commodities."

Describing India as Bangladesh's major neighbour, trusted friend, and regional partner, Hasina said Bangladesh greatly values the relations with India.

She recalled with gratitude India's contribution to Bangladesh's independence.

Hasina invited Modi to visit Bangladesh.

She also called on Indian President Droupadi Murmu and Vice President Jagdeep Dhankhar in New Delhi before leaving for Dhaka last night.

Meanwhile, Vinay Kwatra made several announcements including the introduction of e-visa for patients from Bangladesh.

At the media briefing, he said India takes the issues of fatalities or injuries at the border with great sensitivity and it has been taking measures to ensure that the fatalities are reduced. The measures include using non-lethal weapons.

Kwatra said that the two leaders at the meeting discussed the Rohingya crisis, which affects both Bangladesh and Myanmar. India offered assistance in the past and will continue to do so in the future.

He said the two countries agreed to commence negotiation on the Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement that will include the issues of tariff, inclusion of new goods and services in trading.

M Humayun Kabir told The Daily Star that it was not clear what the framework for Bangladesh to join India's Indo-Pacific Oceans Initiative would be.

How Lucky got so lucky!

The affidavit also does not mention that she is one of the co-owners of Wonder Park and Eco Resort, a sprawling green expanse with a lake, and lakeside cottages.

This newspaper contacted the eco resort and they confirmed that Lucky's children Ahmed Taufiqur Rahman and Farzana Rahman Ipshita are co-owners.

The eco resort took over certain sections of land from a community graveyard that lies adjacent to it, Altaf Hossain, a local union parishad member, told the newspaper.

The Daily Star visited the spot and located three graves inside the boundary of the eco resort.

The total value of the land of about 133.5 decimals, on which the eco resort is built, is shown at Tk 53.9 lakh -- a figure rejected by Altaf Hossain. He said every decimal of land in the area costs about Tk 5 lakh. This puts the valuation of just the land at least Tk 6 crore.

In addition, Lucky stated in her affidavit that she has a 5 katha Rajuk plot in Dhaka, the value of which is "only Tk 14 lakh". Depending on the location, per katha price of Rajuk plots is much higher.

She also has 155 decimals of farmland, but her affidavit did not mention the value.

Lucky first became upazila chairman uncontested after the then chairman Abdus Sadek died of cancer in December 13, 2022.

Raipura was supposed to go to polls again on May 29 this year, but the Election Commission postponed voting after a candidate died in the run-up to the election.

Lucky's affidavit also shows she owns a flat worth TK 55 lakh in Bashundhara Residential Area, which appears to be an undervaluation.

According to property databases, the price per square feet for flats in the area is upwards of Tk 10,000, meaning even a small 1,000 square feet apartment would cost more than Tk one crore.

In addition, Lucky owns four flats in Sheltech Bithika, a condominium in Mirpur -- the combined value of which was shown at Tk 1.6 crore.

A floor plan obtained from the real estate project's website shows that the flats are 1,525 square feet each, and according to property listings, the price per square feet is Tk 6,850. This puts the total value of the four flats at Tk 4.18 crore -- about four times the amount stated.

A glaring example such undervaluation is the value of her furniture shown in her tax files -- just Tk 75,000.

Speaking to The Daily Star, Lucky said that she and her family are being victimised out of jealousy.

"We're very upset about the events that are unfolding. We're innocent people. Efforts are underway to frame us by dishing out lies along with some truths. My husband did well in his job. Those who are jealous of his professional success have hatched a conspiracy to accuse him of corruption. I don't want to say more."

DON'T PANIC refrain from killing Russell's Viper

Environment, health ministries urge people

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Amid growing concerns over the recent sightings of Russell's Viper (Chandrabora) in various parts of the country, the environment and health ministries have urged people to remain calm and refrain from killing snakes.

The environment ministry have also issued a set of guidelines in this regard.

STAY CALM AND INFORMED

Health Minister Dr Samanta Lal Sen yesterday urged all not to panic over the presence of Russell's Viper snakes. At a virtual meeting with health officials, he said timely intervention can fully and quickly cure snakebite victims. He also instructed public hospitals to maintain an adequate stock of anti-venom.

"The most important task is to take snakebite victims to a doctor at the quickest possible time... timely medical intervention can fully cure snakebite victims through proper treatment, said the minister.

ECOLOGICAL IMPORTANCE

The environment ministry advised the public to avoid destroying the habitats of Russell's Viper. According to the ministry, natural predators like mongoose, monitor lizard, forest cat, eagle and crane help control the viper population. The killing of these predators has contributed to an increase in viper numbers.

Russell's Viper is protected under the Wildlife (Conservation and Security) Act, 2012, as it plays a crucial role in controlling rodent population and its venom is used to produce life-saving medicines. Killing these snakes is a punishable offense.

HABITAT AND BEHAVIOUR

Russell's Viper typically inhabits lowland grasslands, thickets, open forests, and agricultural areas, generally avoiding human settlements.

Their earth-coloured bodies make them difficult to spot, increasing the risk of accidental encounters.

These snakes are good swimmers and can spread to different regions through river currents and floods. The public is advised to be cautious, especially in flood-prone areas.

MISINFORMATION AND MISIDENTIFICATION

In several districts, fear of Russell's Viper has led to the mistaken killing of other snakes. In Chattogram, locals killed a five-foot-long Burmese python, mistaking it for a viper.

Mahmud Hossain, an officer at Chunati Wildlife Sanctuary, attributed the incident to misinformation on social media.

"There is a lot of misinformation circulating on social media on Russel's Viper, which led people killing the python. Even though no such snakes [viper] are in the area, people are panicked and getting misled by Facebook posts," he added.

Shahriar Caesar Rahman, CEO of Creative Conservation Alliance, emphasised the need for proper research to confirm any increase in viper numbers. "Killing a snake is not a solution, we need to focus more on medical treatment," he added.

SAFETY GUIDELINES TO PREVENT SNAKEBITES

- Avoid tall grass and bushes
- Wear protective clothing
- Carry torch, flashlight at night
- Maintain clean surroundings
- Handle fallen debris with care
- Do not confront snakes
- If needed, call National Helpline at 333

STEPS TO TAKE AFTER SNAKEBITE

- Minimise movement
- Clean the wound
- Remove restrictive items
- Avoid harmful interventions
- Seek immediate medical help
- Stay calm, do not panic
- Antivenom is available at govt hospitals

Climate budget still not enough

Speakers tell event; propose 5pc pollution tax

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The allocation for the environment ministry has decreased by 2.35 percent in the upcoming budget compared to last year, if inflation is accounted for, said experts at a programme yesterday.

Despite needing 5 percent of GDP for climate issues, only 0.706 percent has been allocated for climate action, down from last year, they added.

"Climate-related funding is declining despite an increase in heatwaves, floods, and cyclones," said M Zakir Hossain Khan, founder and chief executive of Change Initiative.

He pointed out that although the proposed budget for the environment ministry is Tk 52 crore higher than the 2023-2024 fiscal year, the allocation has effectively decreased due to inflation.

At a press conference organised by CHANGE Initiative in the capital yesterday, Zakir presented findings of a research.

He said while Bangladesh aims to achieve 4,114.2 megawatts of renewable energy by 2030, the proposed 2024-2025 budget allocates only Tk 100 crore, or 3.2 percent, for this goal.

Bangladesh faces a climate financing gap of $23.4 billion per year, which rises to around $40 billion per year when considering the economic impact of lost working days due to disasters.

"International funding is significantly insufficient to cover this shortfall," he added.

In the 2023-2024 fiscal year, the

In the 2023-2024 fiscal year, the operating budget of the environment ministry was 8.61 percent of the total budget. This has decreased to 6.78 percent in the upcoming proposed budget.

FLASH FLOOD IN RANGPUR

Teesta water recedes but still flowing above danger level

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Dinajpur

While the water level of the Teesta river has receded significantly in the last 24 hours, it is still flowing above the danger level in Rangpur's Kaunia upazila.

As of yesterday, the river was flowing 20 centimetres above the danger level at Kaunia point. It was flowing 52cm above the danger level on Friday, according to the Water Development Board (WDB) in Rangpur.

The water level at the upazila's Dalia point has decreased significantly due to no rain, but it is very close to the danger mark.

DHAKA, DELHI RAIL TRANSIT

Trial run to begin next month

Says Indian Foreign Secretary Vinay Kwatra

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

An Indian goods train will begin its trial run through Bangladesh next month, as the two neighbouring countries have agreed to utilise each other's rail lines under rail transit facilities.

The train will travel from Gede [West Bengal] - Darshana [Bangladesh] to Chilahati [Bangladesh] - Haldibari [West Bengal] cross border interchange point, said Indian Foreign Secretary Vinay Kwatra.

Besides, a new train service would be launched between Rajshahi and Kolkata and a bus service between Chattogram and Kolkata, he said.

He was briefing media after the two countries signed and renewed 10 MoUs during Prime Miniter Sheikh Hasina's two-day visit to India.

One of these MoUs was signed between Bangladesh and the Indian railways ministry for railway connectivity.

Currently, Indian trains, under the transshipment facility, carry goods and passengers up to the India-Bangladesh border. From there, Bangladesh Railway's locomotives pull the coaches into Bangladesh and drop off passengers or unload goods before taking the coaches back to the border.

Once India is allowed rail transit through Bangladesh under the new MoU, its trains will be operated from one part of India to another via Bangladesh.

"We believe that connectivity can transform geographical proximity into new economic opportunities, not just between India and Bangladesh but also for Quader said this after visiting the venue of the party's public rally to be held today at Suhrawardy Udyan.

He said all leaders and activists of AL from central to root level are ready to celebrate the party's founding anniversary..

Mobile network should be disconnected at night

AL MP tells JS citing health issues

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government should disable mobile networks in rural areas between 10:00pm and 6:00am, said ruling Awami League MP and ENT specialist Pran Gopal Datta yesterday.

The excessive use of mobile phones could lead to disabilities in the younger generation, he told parliament.

He said the government should find ways so that mobile networks are limited to purposes such as freelancing or earning foreign currency during nighttime.

He said most of his patients, including children as young as ten, experience hearing issues due to excessive use of mobile phones.

"People are complaining that they can't listen and can't focus on studying. Something should be done to keep our young generation away from this technology during late hours," he added.

He also criticised the commercialisation of the health sector.

REMAL AFTERMATH

People suffer as ferry service suspended since May 27

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Bagerhat

Ferry service between Rayenda of Bagerhat's Sharankhola upazila and Machhua of Pirojpur's Mathbaria upazila has remained suspended since May 27 due to damages caused to Rayenda ferry terminal by Cyclone Remal.

This ferry route is the only means of communication between Rayenda and Machhua.

The ferry route, which started operations on November 10, 2021, used to serve 20,000-25,000 people and over a thousand vehicles daily.

On-site observations revealed that the cyclone caused significant damages to the pontoon, connecting road, and steel railings of the terminal. The adjacent roads were washed away into the river, while local shops were also damaged.

Although an alternative trawler terminal is operational, the boats are charging a higher fare than usual, alleged locals.

Besides, trawlers cannot transport vans, pick-ups, and trucks, thereby affecting local businesses adversely.

"Since the ferry service is suspended, we cannot travel even for urgent needs. Using trawlers costs Tk 60-100, and they depart as per their convenience," said Mizan Sheikh, a resident of Rayenda.

Jamal Uddin, a local from Machhua, said, "During Eid, many couldn't visit their relatives. No one from Rayenda could come here."

Fayzul Islam, a regular commuter on the route, echoed him.

Halim, a shopkeeper near Rayenda terminal, said, "After the ferry service started, I managed to sustain my family with my shop. After the terminal was damaged in the cyclone, the ferry operations remained suspended from May 27. This has adversely affected small businesses like mine, making it hard to make ends meet."

Jalil Sheikh, a cattle trader in Rayenda, said, "We used the ferry to take our cattle to Mathbaria for sale ahead of Eid-ul-Azha. This time, we couldn't transport cattle before Eid."

Md Farid Uddin, executive engineer of Roads and Highways Department in Bagerhat, said, "We have sent a proposal for allocation to the higher authorities for necessary repairs to resume the ferry services."

30 hurt in AL factional clash in Rajshahi

UNB, Rajshahi

At least 30 people were injured in a clash between two groups of the Awami League in Bagha upazila of Rajshahi yesterday.

Several hand bombs were detonated during the clash. Police fired 50 rounds of tear gas shells to bring the situation under control.

Among the injured are Bagha municipality mayor Akkas Ali, Bagha upazila AL general secretary Ashraful Islam Bablu, Ardani union chairman Rafiqul Islam, and former vice chairman Shafiur Rahman Shafi.

Eyewitnesses said the clash started during a human chain organised by local AL leaders protesting alleged irregularities and nepotism involving Mayor Akkas Ali.

On the other hand, another group of AL brought out a protest procession against extra money collected in the name of Dalil Lekhak Samity of sub-register office.

The two sides clashed when the procession crossed the human chain.

Fakirhat Fire Service Station Leader Monirul Islam said the accident happened while Khalilur along with his wife and son was travelling to his in-laws' house in Jashore.

In Munshiganj, two people were killed and three injured when a Nababganj-bound passenger bus and a Dhaka-bound CNG-run auto-rickshaw collided head-on in Sirajdikhan upazila yesterday.

the entire region," said the Indian foreign secretary.

Replying to a question about railway-related MoU, he said there are six cross-border railway links between India and Bangladesh.

"Another crucial aspect of this railway connectivity is the transit... between different parts of India through the territory of Bangladesh," Vinay said.

And the trial run of the goods train is a part of the issue, he said.

The related point is that Bangladesh would get sub-regional transit to Bhutan and Nepal, part of which already exits but would be further expanded and strengthened, he said.

India has been pursuing rail transit for the last few years and Indian Railways in 2022 submitted a proposal to the BR for carrying out trial runs of a freight train from West Bengal's Gede to Haldibari via Bangladesh.

BR's Director General Sardar Shahadat Ali told The Daily Star yesterday that a committee will be formed to finalise the modalities, routes, charges and other issues related to the railway transit.

Asked about the Rajshahi-Kolkata train service, he said as BR has shortage of carriages, they have to seek rakes from the Indian Railway to start the service. Besides, some preparatory work is needed before launching the services, he added.

Teesta water recedes but still

10 villages in the low-lying areas of the upazila went underwater, leaving about 20,000 people stranded for the last two days.

Residents of the flood-hit Balapara and Dhepamadhupur unions were compelled to leave their homes and shift to higher lands with their cattle. However, they are now struggling to access freshwater for drinking.

Meanwhile, rescue and aid remain a far cry for these flood victims, said Aminul Islam, the chairman of the aforementioned unions.

Additionally, 11 shoals on the river have been gravely affected by the flood as houses and arable land remain submerged.

As per Upazila Nirbahi Officer Mahidul Haque, the district commissioner's office allocated about 200 packets of dry food. "We are ready to combat this crisis," he said.

However, the WDB officials said the Teesta, Dudhkumar, and Dharla rivers may swell in the next 24-72 hours as heavy rain is likely in the northern areas of Bangladesh and West Bengal.

A warning was issued in this regard on Friday as the flood situation is expected to worsen in Rangpur, they said.

operating budget of the environment ministry was 8.61 percent of the total budget. This has decreased to 6.78 percent in the upcoming proposed budget. Similarly, the allocation for climate issues has dropped from 8.61 percent to 6.78 percent during the same period.

Zakir suggested imposing a 5 percent pollution tax on plastic, brick kilns, buildings, polluting industries, and deforestation. This could generate additional revenue of Tk 2,900 crore, he estimated.

জাতীয় ও আন্তর্জাতিক চক্রান্ত এবং স্বাধীনতাবিরোধী চক্র ও অবৈধ সেনাশাসকদের নির্যাতন আর নিপীড়নের মাধ্যমে ধ্বংস করার চেষ্টা করা হয় জনগণের সংগঠন, বাংলাদেশ আওয়ামী লীগকে। কিন্তু আওয়ামী লীগের তৃণমূল নেতা-কর্মী, সমর্থকেরা জীবন দিয়ে সকল প্রতিকূলতা, ষড়যন্ত্র মোকাবিলা করে দলকে টিকিয়ে রেখেছে, শক্তিশালী করেছে। গণতন্ত্র ও ভোটের অধিকার প্রতিষ্ঠায় দীর্ঘ আন্দোলন-সংগ্রামের পর ১৯৯৬ সালের ১২ জুনের সাধারণ নির্বাচনে বিজয়ী হয়ে সরকার গঠন করে বাংলাদেশ আওয়ামী লীগ। আমরা শুরু করি অর্থনৈতিক মুক্তি অর্জন ও দেশ গড়ার নবতর সংগ্রাম। আওয়ামী লীগের নেতৃত্বে উন্নয়ন ও অগ্রগতির পথে ঘুরে দাঁড়ায় বাংলাদেশ। ১৯৯৬-২০০১ মেয়াদে আমরা খাদ্য ঘাটতির দেশকে খাদ্য উদ্বৃত্তের দেশে পরিণত করি। গণতন্ত্রকে প্রাতিষ্ঠানিক রূপ দেই। আইনের শাসন ও মানবাধিকার প্রতিষ্ঠা করি। আমরা 'দায়মুক্তি অধ্যাদেশ বাতিল আইন, ১৯৯৬' সংসদে পাশ করে জাতির পিতার হত্যার বিচার শুরু করি। আওয়ামী লীগ সরকারের আন্তরিক উদ্যোগ ও প্রচেষ্টায় মহান '২১ ফেব্রুয়ারি' আন্তর্জাতিক মাতৃভাষা দিবসের মর্যাদা পায়। ভারতের সঙ্গে গঙ্গার পানি চুক্তি স্বাক্ষরিত হয়। কারও মধ্যস্থতা ছাড়াই স্বাক্ষরিত হয় পার্বত্য চট্টগ্রাম শান্তি চুক্তি। আওয়ামী লীগ সরকারের এই পাঁচ বছরে দেশে আর্থ-সামাজিক উন্নয়নের এক নব দিগন্তের সূচনা হয়। ২০০১ থেকে ২০০৬ বিএনপি-জামাত জোট সরকারের দুঃশাসন, অত্যাচার নির্যাতন ও দমন নিপীড়নের বিরুদ্ধে আন্দোলন-সংগ্রাম এবং ২০০৭ থেকে ২০০৮ অগণতান্ত্রিক তত্ত্বাবধায়ক সরকারের সকল ষড়যন্ত্র মোকাবিলা করে বাংলাদেশ আওয়ামী লীগ 'দিন বদলের সনদ' ঘোষণা দিয়ে ২০০৮ সালে জাতীয় সংসদ নির্বাচনে জনগণের ভোটে পুনরায় নিরঙ্কুশ বিজয় অর্জন করে এবং ২০০৯ সালের ৬ জানুয়ারি সরকার গঠন করে।

জাতির পিতার আদর্শ এবং মহান মুক্তিযুদ্ধের চেতনাকে ধারণ করে আমাদের নেতা-কর্মী ও সমর্থকরা লড়াই-সংগ্রাম ও মানুষের আস্থা অর্জন করে আওয়ামী লীগকে জনমানুষের সংগঠনে পরিণত করেছে। আমি বিশ্বাস করি, আমাদের নেতা-কর্মীদের মেধা, পরিশ্রম, ত্যাগ ও দক্ষতায় আওয়ামী লীগ আরও গতিশীল ও শক্তিশালী হবে এবং জাতির পিতার স্বপ্নের ক্ষুধা-দারিদ্র্যমুক্ত ও সুখী-সমৃদ্ধ সোনার বাংলাদেশ প্রতিষ্ঠিত হবে। স্বাধীনতাবিরোধী সাম্প্রদায়িক গোষ্ঠী এবং উন্নয়ন ও গণতন্ত্র বিরোধী দেশি-বিদেশি অপশক্তি এখনও নানাভাবে চক্রান্ত-ষড়যন্ত্র করে যাচ্ছে। এই অপশক্তির যে-কোনো অপতৎপরতা-ষড়যন্ত্র ঐক্যবদ্ধভাবে মোকাবিলা করে উন্নয়নের ধারাবাহিকতা ও গণতন্ত্র রক্ষার জন্য সর্বদা প্রস্তুত থাকতে আমি দলের সকল স্তরের নেতা-কর্মীদের প্রতি আহ্বান জানাচ্ছি।

আমি বাংলাদেশ আওয়ামী লীগের ৭৫তম প্রতিষ্ঠাবার্ষিকী উপলক্ষে গৃহীত সকল কর্মসূচির সর্বাঙ্গীণ সাফল্য কামনা করছি।

জয় বাংলা, জয় বঙ্গবন্ধু
বাংলাদেশ চিরজীবী হোক।

বাংলাদেশ আওয়ামী লীগ: সংগ্রাম, স্বাধীনতা ও সমৃদ্ধির প্রতীক

কামাল চৌধুরী

আধুনিক রাষ্ট্রব্যবস্থায় রাজনৈতিক দলের ভূমিকা অত্যন্ত গুরুত্বপূর্ণ। প্রাচীন বা মধ্যযুগে কেন্দ্রীভূত রাজ্য বা আঞ্চলিক শাসনকাঠামোয় রাজনৈতিক দলের অস্তিত্ব খুঁজে পাওয়া যায় না। রাজনৈতিক দলের ধারণা আধুনিক কালের সৃষ্টি—ব্রিটিশ আগমনের পূর্বে ভারতবর্ষেও কোনো রাজনৈতিক দল ছিল না। ব্রিটিশ শাসনের শুরুর কিছুকাল পরে প্রথমে ক্লাব বা অ্যাসোসিয়েশনের আকারে কিছু সংস্থা গঠিত হয় সেগুলি ছিল প্রধানত মধ্যবিত্ত বা অভিজাত সুবিধাবাদী শ্রেণির দাবি আদায়ের জন্য গঠিত, উদাহরণস্বরূপ কলকাতায় ১৮৫১ সালে ব্রিটিশ ইন্ডিয়া অ্যাসোসিয়েশন এবং ১৮৫২ সালে বোম্বে অ্যাসোসিয়েশন গঠনের কথা বলা যায়। সার্বিক বিচারে ১৮৮৫ সালে গঠিত ভারতীয় জাতীয় কংগ্রেসই প্রথম রাজনৈতিক দল। পরবর্তী সময়ে ভারতবর্ষে আরো অনেক রাজনৈতিক দল আমরা দেখি, তবে কংগ্রেস ও মুসলিম লীগ এ দুটি দলই উপমহাদেশের রাজনীতিতে মূল কুশীলব হিসেবে আবির্ভূত হয়। সেই প্রেক্ষাপটে ধর্মীয় জাতীয়তাবাদ ও হিন্দু মুসলিম বিভাজনের রাজনীতির অনিবার্য ক্রিয়া হিসেবে ভারত ও পাকিস্তান নামে দুটি রাষ্ট্রের জন্ম ঘটে। ১৯৪৭ সালে ভারতবর্ষের বিভক্তির মাধ্যমে এই উপমহাদেশের রাজনীতির গতিধারা বদলে যায়; বাংলা ভাগের ফলে পূর্ব বাংলার মানুষ পাকিস্তানের অন্তর্ভুক্ত হয়, পশ্চিমবঙ্গ পরিগণিত হয় ভারতের অংশে।

২. পাকিস্তান প্রতিষ্ঠার অব্যবহিত পর থেকেই পূর্ববাংলার প্রতি পশ্চিম পাকিস্তানিদের বৈষম্যমূলক নীতি স্পষ্ট হতে থাকে, যা বাঙালিদের অসন্তোষের কারণ হয়ে দাঁড়ায়। তখন পাকিস্তানে মুসলিম লীগ সরকারকে চ্যালেঞ্জ করার মতো তখন কোনো কার্যকর বিরোধী দল ছিল না। সে সময়ে কিছু তাৎপর্যপূর্ণ ঘটনা ঘটে যা ছিল পূর্ববাংলার মানুষের ধূমায়িত ক্ষোভেরই বহিঃপ্রকাশ: ১৯৪৮ সালের ৪ঠা জানুয়ারি পূর্ব পাকিস্তান মুসলিম ছাত্রলীগ গঠন, বাংলা ভাষার মর্যাদা প্রতিষ্ঠার দাবিতে ১৯৪৮ সালের ১১ই মার্চ প্রথম ধর্মঘট ও শেখ মুজিবুর রহমানসহ ছাত্র নেতৃবৃন্দের গ্রেফতার, ঢাকা বিশ্ববিদ্যালয়ে মোহাম্মদ আলী জিন্নাহর 'উর্দুই হবে পাকিস্তানের একমাত্র রাষ্ট্রভাষা' ঘোষণার প্রকাশ্য প্রতিবাদ, ১৯৪৯ সালের জুন মাসে টাঙ্গাইলের উপনির্বাচনে মুসলিম লীগ প্রার্থী খুররম খান পন্নীকে পরাজিত করে শামসুল হকের জয়লাভ, ১৯৪৯ সালে ঢাকা বিশ্ববিদ্যালয়ের চতুর্থ শ্রেণির কর্মচারীদের আন্দোলনে নেতৃত্বদানের অভিযোগে শেখ মুজিবসহ কয়েকজনকে বিশ্ববিদ্যালয় থেকে বহিষ্কার—এসবের প্রেক্ষাপটে ১৯৪৯ সালের ২৩ ও ২৪শে জুন ঢাকার কে এম দাস লেনের রোজ গার্ডেনে মুসলিম লীগের একাংশের কর্মী সম্মেলনে পূর্ব পাকিস্তান আওয়ামী মুসলিম লীগ প্রতিষ্ঠা ও প্রথম বিরোধীদলের আত্মপ্রকাশ। নবগঠিত এই দলের সভাপতি নির্বাচিত হন মাওলানা আব্দুল হামিদ খান ভাসানী, সাধারণ সম্পাদক শামসুল হক ও যুগ্ম সম্পাদক শেখ মুজিবুর রহমান। বঙ্গবন্ধু তখন ছিলেন জেলে। অসমাপ্ত আত্মজীবনীতে এই দল গঠনের প্রেক্ষাপট সম্পর্কে তিনি লিখেছেন:

'আমার সাথে যোগাযোগ করা হয়েছিল, আমার মত নেওয়ার জন্য। আমি খবর দিয়েছিলাম, "আর মুসলিম লীগের পিছনে ঘুরে লাভ নাই এ প্রতিষ্ঠান এখন গণবিচ্ছিন্ন সরকারি প্রতিষ্ঠানে পরিণত হয়েছে। এরা আমাদের মুসলিম লীগে নিতে চাইলেও যাওয়া উচিত হবে না। কারণ এরা কোটারি করে ফেলেছে। একে আর জনগণের প্রতিষ্ঠান বলা চলে না। এদের কোন কর্মপন্থাও নাই" আমাকে আরো জিজ্ঞেস করা হয়েছিল আমি ছাত্র প্রতিষ্ঠান করব, না রাজনৈতিক প্রতিষ্ঠান গঠন হলে তাতে যোগদান করব? আমি উত্তর পাঠিয়েছিলাম ছাত্র রাজনীতি আমি করব না, রাজনৈতিক প্রতিষ্ঠানই করব। না করব কারণ বিরোধী দল সৃষ্টি করতে না পারলে এদেশে একনায়কত্ব চলবে।' (অসমাপ্ত আত্মজীবনী: পৃষ্ঠা ১২০)

আওয়ামী মুসলিম লীগের প্রতিষ্ঠা পাকিস্তানি শাসকগোষ্ঠীর একনায়কসুলভ আচরণের বিরুদ্ধে পূর্ব বাংলার মানুষের প্রতিবাদের প্রথম প্রাতিষ্ঠানিক রাজনৈতিক অভিব্যক্তি। সেই থেকে আজ ৭৫ বছর অতিক্রান্ত কিন্তু ইতিহাসের নিরিখে এই উপমহাদেশে ভারতীয় জাতীয় কংগ্রেস প্রতিষ্ঠার মতোই তাৎপর্যপূর্ণ ঘটনা এটি। বাঙালির আন্দোলন সংগ্রামের প্রতিটি কালপর্বে আওয়ামী লীগই বাঙালির আশা আকাঙ্ক্ষার প্রতীক দল হিসেবে নিজের অবস্থান সুদৃঢ় করেছে। ১৯৫১ সালে হোসেন শহীদ সোহরাওয়ার্দীর নেতৃত্বাধীন নিখিল পাকিস্তান জিন্নাহ আওয়ামী লীগও আওয়ামী লীগের সঙ্গে একীভূত হয়, ১৯৫৪ সালের নির্বাচনে যুক্তফ্রন্টের মূলশক্তি ছিল আওয়ামী লীগ। এর ধারাবাহিকতায় বঙ্গবন্ধুর নেতৃত্বে আওয়ামী লীগ অল্পসময়ের মধ্যে বাঙালির আশা আকাঙ্ক্ষার প্রতীক দলে পরিণত হয়। জন্মলগ্নে আওয়ামী মুসলিম লীগে নানা পন্থীদের সমাবেশ ঘটেছিল, তাদের আদর্শগত বৈপরীত্য দলে নানা সংকটেরও সৃষ্টি করেছে। বাস্তব কারণে শুরুতে 'মুসলিম' শব্দটি দলের নামে যুক্ত থাকলেও দলকে অসাম্প্রদায়িক করার লক্ষ্যে ১৯৫৫ সালে অনুষ্ঠিত বার্ষিক কাউন্সিল অধিবেশনে মুসলিম শব্দটি বাদ দেয়া হয়। ১৯৫৭ সালে কাগমারী সম্মেলনে দলের অভ্যন্তরীণ মতবিরোধ প্রকাশ্যে আসে, যার ফলে জুলাই মাসে মাওলানা ভাসানী ন্যাপ গঠন করে আওয়ামী লীগ থেকে আলাদা হয়ে যান।

তবে বাঙালির ইতিহাসের চূড়ান্ত বাকবদল ঘটে ১৯৭১ সালের মার্চ মাসে। ৭ই মার্চে যখন বঙ্গবন্ধু জাতিকে স্বাধীনতা যুদ্ধের প্রস্তুতি গ্রহণের আহ্বান জানিয়ে ঘোষণা দেন 'এবারের সংগ্রাম আমাদের মুক্তির সংগ্রাম, এবারের সংগ্রাম স্বাধীনতার সংগ্রাম' তখনই বদলে যায় বাংলাদেশের ইতিহাসের গতিধারা। ২৫শে মার্চে গণহত্যার রাতের অব্যবহিত পরে ২৬শে মার্চ প্রথম প্রহরে বঙ্গবন্ধু স্বাধীনতা ঘোষণা করেন। পাকিস্তান সামরিক জান্তা তাঁকে গ্রেপ্তার করে। বন্দীদশায় থেকেও যুদ্ধের নয় মাস তিনি ছিলেন মুক্তিযুদ্ধের সার্বক্ষণিক প্রেরণা, তাঁর অনুসারীরা আওয়ামী লীগের নেতৃত্বে প্রবাসে বাংলাদেশ সরকার গঠন করে। বঙ্গবন্ধুকে রাষ্ট্রপতি, সৈয়দ নজরুল ইসলাম অস্থায়ী রাষ্ট্রপতি ও তাজউদ্দীন আহমদকে নবগঠিত সরকারের প্রধানমন্ত্রী হিসেবে নির্বাচন করা হয়। আওয়ামী লীগের নেতৃত্বে সংগঠিত ও পরিচালিত হয়েছে মুক্তিযুদ্ধ।

সে সময় একাত্তরে পরাজিত শক্তির ষড়যন্ত্র, বৈজ্ঞানিক সমাজতন্ত্র প্রতিষ্ঠার নামে হঠকারী রাজনীতি, দেশি-বিদেশি নানা ষড়যন্ত্র মোকাবেলা করতে হয়েছে তাকে। আজীবন শান্তির অন্বেষণকারী ছিলেন তিনি, চিন্তা-চেতনায় ছিলেন সমন্বয়বাদী—এই উপলব্ধি থেকে ১৯৭৫ সালে সকলকে ঐক্যবদ্ধ করে দ্বিতীয় বিপ্লবের কর্মসূচি ঘোষণা করেছিলেন। ১৯৭৫ সালের ১৫ই আগস্ট বঙ্গবন্ধুকে পরিবারের অধিকাংশ সদস্যসহ হত্যার পরে ঘাতক কবলিত বাংলাদেশে একটি দীর্ঘ ও পরিকল্পিত ইতিহাস বিকৃতির কাল শুরু হয়। আওয়ামী লীগের জন্য সেটি ছিল সবচেয়ে বড় দুঃসময়—কাণ্ডারিবিহীন নৌকার ঘুরে ঘুরে চলা! ৩রা নভেম্বর ১৯৭৫ সালে জেলখানায় নির্মমভাবে হত্যা করা হয় আওয়ামী লীগের চার জাতীয় নেতা সৈয়দ নজরুল ইসলাম, তাজউদ্দীন আহমদ, ক্যাপ্টেন মনসুর আলী, এএইচএম কামারুজ্জামানকে। ১৯৮১ সালের ১৭ই মে একটি ঝড়ো দিনে লক্ষ লক্ষ মানুষের শোক ও অশ্রু ভেজা অভ্যর্থনায় সিক্ত হয়ে বঙ্গবন্ধুকন্যা শেখ হাসিনা নির্বাসন কাল থেকে দেশে ফিরে আসেন। আওয়ামী লীগের রাজনীতিতে যুগান্তর ঘটে তখন। তাঁর নেতৃত্বে ২১ বছর পরে আওয়ামী লীগ পুনরায় রাষ্ট্র পরিচালনার সুযোগ পায়।

৪. পিতা থেকে কন্যা—এ এক মহাকাব্যিক উপাখ্যান। পিতা দিয়েছে স্বাধীন স্বদেশ কন্যা দিয়েছে আলো। বঙ্গবন্ধুর অসাম্প্রদায়িক জীবনবোধ, সাহস ও মানব মুক্তির দর্শন ধারণ করে দেশরত্ন শেখ হাসিনা বাংলাদেশের রাজনীতিতে নতুন মাত্রা যোগ করেছেন। তাঁর নেতৃত্বে আমাদের প্রিয় মাতৃভূমি 'স্বপ্নের সোনালি অধ্যায়' অতিক্রম করছে। মোট পাঁচবার তিনি প্রধানমন্ত্রী হিসেবে নির্বাচিত হয়েছেন, তন্মধ্যে একটানা চতুর্থবার। উন্নয়ন এবং অগ্রগতির নানা সূচকে বাংলাদেশ এখন আদায় করে নিয়েছে বৈশ্বিক সমীহ। বাংলাদেশ এখন বিশ্বের ৩৩তম বৃহৎ অর্থনীতি। বিদ্যুৎ, শিক্ষা, স্বাস্থ্য, প্রযুক্তি, কৃষি, যোগাযোগ অবকাঠামো, সামাজিক নিরাপত্তা ও দারিদ্র্য নিরসন , অনগ্রসর জনগোষ্ঠীর সুরক্ষা, গৃহহীনদের গৃহ দেয়া, খাদ্য নিরাপত্তা, বৈদেশিক সম্পর্ক, নারীর ক্ষমতায়ন ও শিশু কল্যাণ, বঙ্গবন্ধু হত্যাকারীদের বিচারসহ সকল ক্ষেত্রে সাফল্য বাংলাদেশেকে উচ্চ মর্যাদায় আসীন করেছে।দেশের অভ্যন্তরে নানামুখী স্রোতকে তিনি যেমন দক্ষতার সঙ্গে সমন্বয় করেছেন তেমনি মোকাবেলা করেছেন বৈশ্বিক নানা চাপ। করোনা বিশ্বমারি রাশিয়া ইউক্রেন যুদ্ধ ও বর্তমানে গাজায় ইসরাইলের আগ্রাসনের মুখে তাঁর সুচিন্তিত ও সাহসী পদক্ষেপ এখন সর্বত্র প্রশংসিত। দেশের অভ্যন্তরে জঙ্গিবাদ, বিএনপি জামাতের বোমা ও অগ্নিসন্ত্রাস, হত্যা, নাশকতা ও অপপ্রচার মোকাবেলা করেছেন দৃঢ় হাতে। তাঁর নেতৃত্বে রাজপথেও সমান সক্রিয় থেকেছে আওয়ামী লীগ।

সাধারণ সম্পাদকের কথা

দক্ষিণ এশিয়ার অন্যতম প্রাচীন, ঐতিহ্যবাহী রাজনৈতিক দল বাংলাদেশ আওয়ামী লীগ। মহান মুক্তিযুদ্ধে নেতৃত্ব দানকারী দলটি জন্মলগ্ন থেকে জাতির পিতা বঙ্গবন্ধু শেখ মুজিবুর রহমানের প্রজ্ঞাবান নেতৃত্বে গড়ে উঠেছে। বাঙালি জাতির মুক্তিদাতা মহান নেতা শেখ মুজিব নিজের জীবনকে উৎসর্গ করেছেন দেশমাতৃকার মুক্তির সংগ্রামে এবং আওয়ামী লীগকে একটি সমতা ও সম্প্রীতির আদর্শনির্ভর দল হিসেবে নির্মাণের কাজে। বাংলাদেশ আওয়ামী লীগের সম্মানিত সভাপতি দেশরত্ন শেখ হাসিনা তাঁর একটি অনবদ্য লেখায় যথার্থভাবে তুলে ধরেছেন কী অসাধারণ মিথস্ক্রিয়ায় বঙ্গবন্ধুর নেতৃত্বে একটি জাতিরাষ্ট্রের জন্মের সঙ্গে যুক্ত হয়ে গিয়েছিল একটি দলের আদর্শভিত্তিক অভিযাত্রা। তিনি লিখেছেন, 'অহিংস অসহযোগ আন্দোলন আর সশস্ত্র মুক্তিযুদ্ধের অভূতপূর্ব সমন্বয়ে আমাদের স্বাধীনতা অর্জন।' যুগপৎ এই দুই রাজনৈতিক কৌশলের সমন্বয়, মিশ্রণ ও বিজয় অর্জন পৃথিবীর ইতিহাসে এক বিরল ঘটনা, যা সম্ভব করেছে গণমানুষের দল–আওয়ামী লীগ। জাতির পিতা বঙ্গবন্ধু শেখ মুজিবুর রহমানের বলিষ্ঠ নেতৃত্বে বাংলাদেশ আওয়ামী লীগ সংগঠনের নিবেদিত বিশাল কর্মী বাহিনীর দেশপ্রেম ও আত্মত্যাগই এই অসম্ভবকে সম্ভব করতে পেরেছে।

বঙ্গবন্ধু শেখ মুজিবুর রহমানের বলিষ্ঠ নেতৃত্ব ও আওয়ামী লীগের নেতাকর্মীদের ত্যাগ-তিতিক্ষায় বিশ্ব মানচিত্রে স্বমহিমায় উদ্ভাসিত হয়েছে বাঙালি জাতির হাজার বছরের লালিত স্বপ্ন স্বাধীন সার্বভৌম বাংলাদেশ।

সকল ষড়যন্ত্র, সকল অপচেষ্টাকে প্রতিহত করে ২০০৯, ২০১৪, ২০১৯ এবং ২০২৪ সালে সর্বকালের সর্বশ্রেষ্ঠ বাঙালি, জাতির পিতা বঙ্গবন্ধু শেখ মুজিবুর রহমানের সুযোগ্য কন্যা মাননীয় প্রধানমন্ত্রী শেখ হাসিনার নেতৃত্বে বাংলাদেশ আওয়ামী লীগ জনগণের রায় নিয়ে টানা চারবার সরকার গঠন করে। মাত্র ১৫ বছরে হতদরিদ্র বাংলাদেশের চেহারাটা আমূল পাল্টে দিয়েছে। যে বাংলাদেশ ছিল অবহেলিত, দারিদ্র্যপীড়িত, যে বাংলাদেশকে নিয়ে পশ্চিমা বিশ্ব উপহাস করতো 'তলাবিহীন ঝুড়ি' বলে, মাননীয় প্রধানমন্ত্রী দেশরত্ন শেখ হাসিনার দূরদর্শী, সুদক্ষ, সৃজনশীল ও সাহসী নেতৃত্বের ফলেই সেই বাংলাদেশ আজ সারা বিশ্বে উন্নয়নের বিস্ময়কর রোল মডেল। জাতির পিতা বঙ্গবন্ধু শেখ মুজিবুর রহমান যে সোনার বাংলার স্বপ্ন আমাদের দেখিয়েছিলেন, তাঁর সেই স্বপ্ন আজ বাস্তবায়িত হচ্ছে তাঁরই কন্যা দেশরত্ন শেখ হাসিনার নেতৃত্বে দেশকে স্মার্ট বাংলাদেশে রূপান্তরের মাধ্যমে, স্বল্পোন্নত থেকে উন্নয়নশীল দেশে উন্নীত করার মাধ্যমে এবং দেশকে খাদ্যে উদ্বৃত্ত দেশে পরিণত করার মাধ্যমে। সুশাসন, স্থিতিশীল অর্থনীতি, কৃষি উৎপাদন বৃদ্ধি, উন্নয়নে গতিশীলতা, ডিজিটাল বাংলাদেশ, শিক্ষার প্রসার, স্বাস্থ্যসেবা নিশ্চিতকরণ, কর্মসংস্থান, বিদ্যুৎ উৎপাদন বৃদ্ধি, সামাজিক নিরাপত্তা বেষ্টনী, খাদ্য নিরাপত্তা, নারীর ক্ষমতায়নসহ বিভিন্ন ক্ষেত্রে এসেছে অভূতপূর্ব সফলতা। উন্নয়নের এই ধারাবাহিকতায় বাংলাদেশের অর্থনীতি আজকে একটি শক্ত ভিত্তির উপর দাঁড়িয়েছে। বাংলাদেশ এখন দ্রুত উন্নয়নশীল দেশগুলোর মধ্যে সামনের কাতারে। বিশ্বজুড়ে প্রশংসিত হচ্ছে বাংলাদেশের এই সাফল্য ও অর্জন।

জন্মলগ্ন থেকে এখন পর্যন্ত আওয়ামী লীগের শক্তির উৎস জনগণ, শক্তির উৎস সংগঠনের তৃণমূল পর্যায়ের নেতাকর্মীরা। নেতা-কর্মীদের ইস্পাতদৃঢ় মনোবল এবং ঐক্যবদ্ধতার ফলে আওয়ামী লীগের বিরুদ্ধে কোনো ষড়যন্ত্র সফল হয়নি, কোনোদিন হবেও না।

বাংলাদেশ আওয়ামী লীগ এ মুহূর্তে বাংলাদেশের সর্ববৃহৎ ও সবচেয়ে শক্তিশালী রাজনৈতিক সংগঠন। আওয়ামী লীগের নিবেদিত নেতাকর্মীরা আজ বঙ্গবন্ধুর সুযোগ্য কন্যা দেশরত্ন শেখ হাসিনার নেতৃত্বে ঐক্যবদ্ধ।

আমার বিশ্বাস, আমাদের সংগঠনের সর্বস্তরের নেতাকর্মীরা বাংলাদেশ আওয়ামী লীগকে একটি প্রশিক্ষিত, সুশৃঙ্খল ও সুসংগঠিত প্রতিষ্ঠানে পরিণত করে সংগঠনের গৌরবময় অতীত ঐতিহ্যকে সমুন্নত রাখতে সক্ষম হবে।

জয় বাংলা, জয় বঙ্গবন্ধু
বাংলাদেশ চিরজীবী হোক।

'Baaji' delivers high-stakes drama in cricket's shadow

SAEED KHAN SHAGOR

In Baaji, director Arifur Rahman crafts a narrative that unfolds against the backdrop of intense drama and societal complexities, using the mysterious death of rising cricket star Apu, in Captain Abir's (Tahsan Khan) local team, as its pivot point.

In one scene, Inspector Topu (Manoj Pramanik) and his subordinate drink in a bar. Topu's life is murky, struggling to reconcile with the inevitable compromises of personal and family life. The solo of Teka O Pakhi plays in the background. In its lyrics, the song reflects the elusive nature of money and the high cost of chasing it; Baaji seems to serve as a solemn reminder of this familiar truth.

Released on the OTT platform Chorki during Eid-ul-Azha, the star-studded web-series has become one of the festive highlights starring the former celebrity couple Tahsan Khan and Rafiath Rashid Mithila. It also features Mim Mantasha, Nazia Haque Orsha, Shahadat Hossain, Partho Sheikh, Tasnuva Tisha, Abrar Athar, Azharul Hoque Adil, and Manoj Pramanik.

Penned jointly by Aditya Sengupta and Hasanat, the plot unfolds with the mysterious death of rising cricket star Apu, who dies under suspicious circumstances after delivering a stellar performance as Man of the Match.

In investigating his brother's death, Topu begins to unravel a series of puzzles, including rumours linking the country's biggest cricket star Abir to the incident. Topu's informal entry into an exclusive cricket practice session, despite being a nobody in the team, serves as a pivotal yet illogical subplot, driving the story. The episodes are aptly titled with cricket-based jargon like Powerplay, Decision Pending, Strategic Timeout, etc.

Scriptwriter Hasanat endeavours to infuse the screenplay with subplots and dialogues that touch on family life, internal police biases, power dynamics, and the influence of "editor's choice" in journalism.

Though the narrative revolves around betting and its consequences, actual cricket scenes are minimal. Accordingly, despite its unique framing, the story ultimately culminates in a conventional murder mystery.

However the depiction of betting as a mass-market phenomenon is lacking, instead presenting it as an elite culture. This portrayal, amid the widespread promotion of betting sites, raises questions about the director's target audience. The subplot of Tahsan and Mithila's relationship and their professional reunion with the dialogue– "we are professionals" – serves as a brilliant metaphor.

The recurring tropes in our local series productions, like, infertility in Topu and Renu's marriage and police characters depicted as losers, need reevaluation. However, the script notably gives every character equal space.

The character of Mrs 45, played exceptionally by Nazia Haque Orsha, can single-handedly drive the show. She stands out with her portrayal of a mother, the wife of a disabled man, a family's cornerstone, and a simultaneous ruthless contract killer.

Marking his OTT debut with Baaji, Tahsan Khan comfortably handles his role as Abir, whether creating tension through his performance or navigating the strains of his character. However, his portrayal on the field lacks finesse, as his grip on the bat, positioning, execution, and body movements are not convincing.

Although the story's predictable outcome somewhat diminishes Topu's struggles, Manoj Pramanik excels as a brother and performs credibly as an ordinary police officer. His fight scenes, nevertheless, lack conviction. His batting scenes are poorly executed with an unconvincing grips and positioning.

Rafiath Rashid Mithila plays a young journalist, Jinia who occasionally loses direction. She is provided hurried efforts to maintain continuity within the storyline. Mithila's performance is commendable, though her screen time is limited compared to others, despite being a major draw in the trailer and marketing strategy.

Cinematographer Suman Sarker, known for his previously notable Bangladeshi projects, adds his personal touch with beautifully framed indoor shots. However, the series struggles to capture the kinetic energy of cricket matches, using a style ill-suited to broadcast sports.

The editing, including basic tasks like on-screen scoreline updates, is botched. For instance, MH Munna's over is inaccurately marked, and the score remains unchanged in subsequent overs. In another scene, Officer Mokarram Hossain exits at 11:40, but the clock shows 11:30 in the next shot.

Colourist Chinmoy Roy's work is exquisite, particularly in scenes like Topu's mother wearing an abaya indoors. The impact of costumes on colour balance is evident, showcasing how they can greatly influence character portrayal in fiction.

Setting aside technical faults, Baaji narrates the story of a societal class crucial to our structure. Their proximity to power may limit audience relatability, yet depicting them in fiction helps viewers understand their real position, marking Baaji's indirect success.

Scriptwriter Hasanat endeavours to infuse the screenplay with subplots and dialogues that touch on family life, internal police biases, power dynamics, and the influence of "editor's choice" in journalism.

Khaleda in Evercare CCU

He asked for prayers from the public, saying, "I urge everyone to pray for madam's early recovery. May Allah grant her good health."

Khaleda's physician Professor AZM Zahid Hossain said Fakhrul visited the hospital and discussed with the medical board members the BNP chairperson's health condition and treatment.

"Madam is under intensive observation in the CCU. The treatment is ongoing," he said.

Khaleda Zia was rushed to Evercare Hospital in an ambulance around 3:30am as she suddenly fell ill at her residence, "Firoza" in Gulshan.

She was quickly admitted to the CCU, where medical treatment began under the supervision of the medical board.

The medical board members, led by specialist physician Professor Shahabuddin Talukdar, had several meetings to discuss the former prime minister's current condition and her treatment.

Khaleda went to Evercare Hospital on May 1 for a health check-up. During that visit, doctors treated her at the CCU for two days.

The former prime minister, aged 79, has long battled various ailments, including liver cirrhosis, arthritis, diabetes, and issues related to the kidney, lung, heart, and eyes.

Since her conditional release from prison in 2020, the BNP chief has been receiving medical care repeatedly at the hospital under the supervision of a medical board headed by cardiologist Prof Shahabuddin Talukder.

Khaleda's doctors have been advising sending her abroad since she was diagnosed with liver cirrhosis in November 2021.

On October 26, last year, three US specialist doctors completed a hepatic procedure known as the transjugular intrahepatic portosystemic shunt (TIPS procedure) to stop water accumulation in Khaleda's stomach and chest, and bleeding in her liver.

Spectrum of ties widens

in terms of trade and energy interdependency, which delivers a win-win scenario for both nations. Meanwhile, Dhaka's economy dictates it sees its future linked with Central and Southeast Asia's markets, in which the geography and bureaucracy of India will continue to play a role.

It was encouraging that the re-elected Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi extended his government's hands to build digital and green partnerships for a sustainable future; Bangladesh's prime minister held forth the necessity of cooperation to make shared waters sustainable.

Noteworthy, Modi reminded his friends of Bangladesh's contribution to India's connectivity needs, which have direct effects on the Indian economy by connecting its hinterland with the cardinal economic hubs. Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina, as generous as she has been, warmheartedly recognised India's contribution to the Bangladesh Liberation War of 1971 and, of course, the economic growth that both nations enjoy.

Regionalism was further highlighted during this visit. SAARC and BIMSTEC will continue to be priority institutions in Bangladesh's approach to the regional commonwealth.

SAARC originates in Dhaka, and BIMSTEC's headquarters is also in the Bangladeshi capital. At least, the bilateral talks aim to meaningfully revive BIMSTEC, with Modi's renewed attention to it being a great move.

Not surprisingly, the talks featured defence cooperation -- a crucial aspect in the context of South Asian geopolitics, in the form of defence production to modernise the armed forces.

Bangladesh seeks to diversify and modernise its military capabilities to withstand conventional threats emanating from Myanmar and unconventional threats sweeping in from unmanned sources.

The idea of the practical feasibility of defence cooperation will be put to the test in the coming years as the India-Myanmar-China triad will remain a key boiling point for Dhaka's defence interests.

Moreover, as always, counterterrorism, combating fundamentalism, and peaceful border management were raised during the talks.

But the people in Dhaka and beyond won't hesitate to ask for the specificity of these issues when the global community notes Dhaka's extraordinary capabilities in countering terrorism or extremism.

My best review of this summit-level visit lies in my Machiavellian understanding that foreign relations are not based on charity and that nations will always maximise their national interests.

Teesta basin, for example, is home to around 30 million people, two percent of whom are in Sikkim, 27 in West Bengal, and 71 in northwest Bangladesh. The northwest population is a crucial part of Bangladesh's LDC graduation in 2026.

The question that would loom large is how fast we can solve the issue through our bilateral ties. The Farakka and the other 50 rivers are still dwindling in the public memory.

Geostrategically speaking, for Bangladesh, India is the future of South Asian stability, depending on its success in managing its neighborhood-first policy and the northeast or religious plurality. Meanwhile, for India, Bangladesh is the future of its regional leadership as Bangladesh continues to significantly contribute to the Indian economy and security.

The visit, hence, deserves to be seen as a stocktaking of the past and future based on mutual capabilities and genuineness in commitments.

In terms of politics, Hasina stands firm in parliament with her absolute majority, making her the prime foreign policymaker in Dhaka, while Modi returned to power with the return of coalition politics.

Bangladesh's prime minister has expressed her interest in further involving the new leadership in India in Bangladesh's economy. She has also clearly indicated the need for further talks on a comprehensive economic partnership that should be based on mutual interests by not bypassing its Indo-Pacific partners.

This means the future of bilateral cooperation is astronomically high, but pragmatism and mutual capabilities should be the key determinants if I see Bangladesh's national interest, be it in terms of water management or the politics of external powers.

Therefore, both nations have promised deep cooperation that should be equal-handed in the coming days.

the headlines "Benazir's ghost also in police telecom" and "Factory in China, police officers visit Malaysia".

"On June 12, the newspaper published a rejoinder sent by the police telecom. The department said it procures necessary radio equipment from international and local suppliers through international or local tenders," said the letter.

It further reads, "Publication of negative news about the Bangladesh Police in various newspapers and electronic media outlets, has increased noticeably and those reports often do not mention any sources. Such unverified and false reports could harm the police force's reputation and undermine the morale of its members ... "

Given this situation, there is a need to verify the accuracy and authenticity of the published reports, the letter said.

The information ministry should verify the authenticity of those published reports and take appropriate measures to ascertain the sources of the information, it added.

on the sanctuaries so that we can protect the various fish species that have been washed away from local farms and ponds during the flash floods."

Meanwhile, the divisional agricultural extension department reports that farmers in the region are looking at a significant loss of paddy and vegetables, as over 26,000 hectares of farmland have been submerged.

The flood-affected croplands comprise 17,460 hectares of Aush paddy, 1,123 hectares of Aush seedbed, 167 hectares of Aman seedbed, and 7,656 hectares of vegetables.

Mati Lal Halder, a sub-assistant agriculture officer at the divisional DAE, said, "We have not estimated the financial loss yet because a large amount of paddy and vegetables may survive once the water recedes. We will estimate the financial loss once the floodwaters have receded completely."

With only a trace of rainfall and occasional sunny skies, the water level of the Surma River was rapidly receding yesterday, improving the flood situation in vast areas.

The river at Sylhet City Point fell below the danger mark yesterday morning, while it flowed slightly above it at other points.

The flood situation in Moulvibazar and Habiganj is also starting to get better as the water levels in the Manu, Khowai, and Dhalai rivers fell below the danger marks.

However, the Kushiyara River continued to be above the danger level at Fenchuganj point as well as at all other points in Sylhet and Moulvibazar.

Just 2mm of rain fell on Sylhet city in the 24 hours till yesterday morning, while Moheshkhola in Sunamganj recorded the most at 121mm.

The flood situation in the Sylhet region is expected improve in the next 72 hours, according to yesterday morning's forecast by the Flood Forecasting and Warning Centre and Water Development Board.

A total of 21.08 lakh people have been affected by the flash floods in Sylhet, Sunamganj, and Moulvibazar districts with 53,244 people residing in the shelter centres as of yesterday afternoon.

In the past three weeks, Sylhet city has been inundated five times due to heavy rains, affecting hundreds of areas and causing untold suffering to the dwellers.

Earlier, on May 29, heavy rains and hill torrents from upstream caused flooding in Sylhet. The flood situation began to normalise on June 8.

However, continuous rains starting in the early hours of June 17 led to another flood in the district.

Prior to this, in May, floods were caused by hill torrents and rains from upstream in India.

Tigers on brink of elimination and hope that the Australia-India clash tomorrow in Saint Lucia does not get washed out.

Bangladesh openers Tanzid Tamim (13 off 10) and Liton Das (29 off 31) stitched a 35-run stand -- the best showing by the Tigers' openers so far in the tournament -- but the required rate of above nine always looked to be out of reach for the Tigers.

Skipper Shanto tried to up the tempo with a few maximums -- two in the same over of Pandya and the other off Ravindra Jadeja -- but that never put India under any sort of pressure as they managed to maintain a tight grip throughout the game.

Shanto was dismissed by Jasprit Bumrah in the 16th over, with the Tigers getting reduced to 109 for five. Always struggling to keep pace with the asking rate, Bangladesh headed towards the inevitable as Rishad's 10-ball 24-run cameo -- including three maximums and a four -- only reduced the margin of defeat.

Earlier, Pandya smashed a quickfire unbeaten 27-ball 50 while Virat Kohli (37 off 28), Rishabh Pant (36 off 28), and Shivam Dube (34 off 24) made 30-odd scores at a brisk pace to propel India, who are almost certain to book a semifinal spot.

A waste of resources and knowledge

Why are medical, engineering graduates opting for BCS general cadre?

At a time when graduates' fixation with government jobs amid shrinking economic opportunities has emerged as a serious concern, it is perhaps not shocking that a large number of them are from medical and engineering backgrounds, who are forgoing careers in their specialised fields in favour of civil service positions. According to data from the Public Service Commission, approximately 30 percent of general-cadre recruits in the last three BCS exams came from medical and engineering backgrounds. The allure of these positions—coupled with perceived discrimination against non-admin cadres in terms of power, perks, and promotions—may make their choice a pragmatic one. But it's one that comes at a substantial cost to the nation.

The government invests heavily in the education of medical and engineering students, much more than it spends on students in general universities. Their migration, after graduation, to administrative roles thus represents a waste of both knowledge and resources. The migration of doctors is particularly troubling given the shortage of doctors in public healthcare. "When medical graduates prefer general-cadre positions to practicing medicine, or postings in city hospitals to services in rural health facilities, if recruited as doctors, it is the people that suffer as a result." This raises critical questions about our investment in—and allocation of—human resources in vital sectors.

But why are so many graduates opting out of specialised fields? According to our report, there are 13 categories in both general and specialised BCS. The former includes administration, police, and foreign services, while the latter includes education and health, among others. Those recruited in general cadres enjoy high ranks as well as substantial perks and benefits. They have the chance to be top bureaucrats. By contrast, those in specialised cadres face slower career progression, have fewer benefits, and mostly work under younger admin colleagues. This imbalance not only demoralises them but also undermines the sectors they serve.

Addressing this issue is almost as important as fixing the unhealthy fascination of graduates and would-be graduates with BCS exams in the absence of decent opportunities in the private sector. It is, therefore, imperative that the government reevaluates the incentives and career paths for specialised cadres. Equitable promotion opportunities, better benefits, and recognition of their critical contributions can help retain these professionals in their respective fields. Additionally, there needs to be a cultural shift within the civil service to value and integrate the expertise of doctors and engineers into policy-making and administrative roles that align with their training. We must ensure that our investments in education translate into tangible benefits for society.

JU needs a new master plan urgently

The uniqueness of its green campus must be preserved

It is deeply concerning that the Jahangirnagar University (JU) campus has lost nearly 40 percent of its waterbodies over the last three and a half decades. This has been revealed by a new study on JU land use that analysed data from 1988 to 2023. The study also found that the university's vegetation cover shrunk by 26.5 percent during the same period. By contrast, its built-up area went up by 159.3 percent, with around 172.5 acres being converted into built-up land.

In 1988, waterbodies covered an area of 122.4 acres on the campus, which dropped to 73.58 acres last year. At the same time, its vegetation coverage of 388.80 acres shrunk to just 285.88. The study does not mention how such vast areas of waterbodies have been lost—this is something that the JU authorities need to find out. We do, however, know that many trees have been felled in the name of development, and that green spaces have been decreasing at a worrying rate as a result. What is further concerning is that the JU's original master plan, designed by renowned architect Mazharul Islam in 1968, has been repeatedly neglected during the subsequent structural development phases, which is one of the reasons why the campus is losing its originality including its green spaces.

The architecture of the buildings constructed in the last two decades does not harmonise with the surrounding environment either, and does not utilise maximum airflow and natural lighting. Moreover, many abandoned structures remain in place, unnecessarily occupying campus space. The haphazard manner in which the authorities have been developing the campus is also harming its biodiversity and leading to its pristine beauty being lost. Hence, students and teachers have been organising protests demanding a new master plan. Even though the authorities have been claiming that they are in the process of preparing a new master plan for the last two years, nothing substantive has so far materialised. Their apathy and negligence in this regard are unacceptable.

The JU is one of the most beautiful universities in Bangladesh. For its campus to be treated the way it has been over recent decades is a great travesty. It is high time the authorities started taking proper care of the campus—particularly its natural beauty—and prepared a new master plan. They must cease construction or planning of any new building or structure in contravention of its master plan.

Why this intimidating police statement aimed at the media?

Kamal Ahmed
is an independent journalist. His X handle is @ahmedka1

KAMAL AHMED

The Bangladesh Police Service Association (BPSA), representing elite officers (BCS cadre) of the law enforcement force, has issued a strong and ominous message to the media. The statement was disturbing, as its tone and tenor appeared to intimidate journalists from reporting on corruption involving any of its members. In an unusually lengthy release (12 paragraphs and over 50 lines), the association did not cite a single report or name to which they objected for being slanderous.

The association's statement seems to place collective blame on the media, claiming, "Partial, motivated, and indiscriminate reports about former and serving members of the Bangladesh police are being published serially in the news media (print and electronic) and on social media."

While the association has every right to protest what it calls a "smear campaign" against its members, it did not name any alleged victims of defamation, making it difficult to justify accusing any media outlet of "publishing offensive and negative news reports" out of "personal vengeance and self-interests, which goes against journalistic ethics." Furthermore, the association issued an advisory to journalists, asking them to exercise caution and maintain journalistic principles when reporting on the police.

In recent weeks, the stories that shocked the nation involved alleged grand corruption and abuse of office by two top officials: former Inspector General Benazir Ahmed and former Commissioner of Dhaka Metropolitan Police (DMP) Mohammad Asaduzzaman Miah. Apart from these two retired top cops, there have been no major graft allegations against any serving officers in recent days, though this does not imply the force is corruption-free. Many would argue that reporting corruption against any in service official carries too much risks for journalists as individuals and the survival of their organisation.

This raises the question of why the association felt compelled to defend its former members. Has the current leadership of the organisation transformed it into a welfare association for retired police officers? Or is this a preemptive attempt by the BPSA to prevent the media from investigating some of its members who may have assisted their top boss in their alleged criminal enterprises, including providing police protection for land grabbing, as alleged by some members of the minority community in Gopalganj?

The BPSA release claimed that the police have always maintained a policy of "zero tolerance" against corruption, stating that if allegations of corruption are proven against any member, both departmental and legal actions are taken. However, had the BPSA leadership reviewed some of the speeches by former IGP Benazir, they might have refrained from using the term "zero tolerance." On June 16, 2022, he warned his force that those seeking to become wealthy through illegal means had no place in the police force. However, based on the court's seizure order, we now know that by the time Benazir made that speech, his list of real estate properties was extensive.

It's frustrating to hear the tedious argument that the police's departmental disciplinary procedure deals with all kinds of misconduct, including corruption. Who would believe that the force chief can be investigated by his subordinates freely and fearlessly? Numerous human rights groups have made allegations against him for commanding grave violations of human rights, which led to sanctions against him. Has there ever been any investigation into those charges?

VISUAL: STAR

Consider the Dhaka Boat Club incident, where actress Porimoni alleged rape attempts by one of the club executives. Subsequent investigations revealed that its founder president was then IGP Benazir Ahmed, and the club was set up on encroached and illegally filled-in portions of the Turag river. This issue was raised in the Jatiya Sangsad on June 16, 2021, by an opposition MP and was not contested by the treasury bench. Neither the Police Headquarters nor the home ministry investigated these allegations.

The BPSA's warning to the media is particularly concerning given the overall media environment in the country, which is intimidating and lacks meaningful freedom to hold power to account. On June 1, Mahfuz Anam, president of the Editors Council and editor of this daily, stated at a meeting in Dhaka that, "Benazir's case is a startling example where we, in the media, knew all these things. But we didn't dare to publish them." He noted that as the head of a powerful law enforcement institution, Benazir could have punished a journalist for reporting his corruption, and the government likely wouldn't have protected the media.

It is also worrying that some senior ministers have already deployed deflection tactics, claiming that certain quarters are trying to discredit the government by labelling "all as corrupt". This appears to be a desperate attempt to distance the ruling party from such corruption. Otherwise, why would someone give a clean chit to the former DMP commissioner before any investigation into his alleged conduct in office? We don't know whether the ministers' statements and the BPSA statement are synchronised, but neither is helpful for uncovering the truth through a credible investigation.

What if we finally recognised women's unpaid care work?

Mohin Uddin Mizan
is publication and communication professional at the Bangladesh Institute of Development Studies (BIDS), Ministry of Planning. He can be reached at mohinmizan07@gmail.com

MOHIN UDDIN MIZAN

In 1929, Virginia Woolf, in her essay A Room of One's Own, raised the issues of economic and social barriers faced by women, including their unpaid labour. However, she was not the first to bring this concern to light.

In her 1898 book Women and Economics, American sociologist and novelist Charlotte Perkins Gilman argued that women's dependence on men for economic support due to unpaid household labour was detrimental to their status and freedom. Another influential figure, British social reformer and economist Beatrice Webb, worked in the late 19th and early 20th centuries on issues of women's labour and the conditions of the working class. While her focus was not specifically on unpaid household labour, her broader social and economic reforms were relevant to understanding women's roles in the economy.

Canadian economist Margaret Reid conducted the first systematic economic analysis of unpaid household labour in her 1934 book Economics of Household Production. Her work laid the foundation for incorporating household labour into economic theory and measurement.

There has been a significant amount of literature on unpaid household and care work over the past three decades, both from local and global perspectives. Notably, a 2015 study conducted by the Centre for Policy Dialogue (CPD) and Manusher Jonno Foundation (MJF), titled "Women's Unaccounted Work and Contribution to the Economy", estimated the value of women's unpaid work in Bangladesh as 76.8 percent of the GDP in the fiscal year 2013-14 (on condition). It found that a female member in a household undertakes 12.1 non-SNA (System of National Accounts) activities in a day—activities not included in the national GDP—compared to only 2.7 activities for a male member.

In 2019, Oxfam and the International Labour Organization (ILO) released reports on the global perspective of unpaid work. Oxfam's study revealed that unpaid work done by women worldwide amounts to a staggering $10.8 trillion a year. ILO's report "Unpaid Care Work and the Labour Market" found that the value of unpaid care work is approximately $11 trillion, accounting for around 9 percent of global GDP. Without exception, women carry out 75 percent of unpaid care work, which is 88 percent in Bangladesh.

The issue gained further attention last year when Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina asked the Planning Commission, through the Bangladesh Institute of Development Studies (BIDS), to determine the actual contribution of women's unpaid household and care work to GDP. BIDS presented its findings (15 percent contribution to GDP) at its last Annual BIDS Conference on Development (ABCD) in December.

As a part of my regular editing job, reading an article in the Bangladesh Development Studies (BDS) journal titled "Economic Valuation of Women's Unpaid Household Service Work in Bangladesh," which detailed the study led by Dr Binayak Sen, sparked my interest in writing on this issue. Using the 2021 time-use survey by the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics (BBS) and BIDS survey of 64 villages in 2023, the authors calculated that women's contribution to GDP through unpaid non-market household and care work is about 15 percent. If unpaid work for both women and men were reflected in national accounting, it would add approximately 17.6 percent to Bangladesh's GDP.

Unpaid household and care work are crucial for developing the next generation's skills and knowledge, essential for a productive workforce. It strengthens family and community bonds, fostering social stability and reducing social strife. It also allows other family members to participate in the formal paid workforce, boosting overall economic productivity and ensuring the population's physical and mental well-being.

If unpaid household and care work were replaced by market services, it would significantly increase GDP; preventive and routine care at home reduces the burden on public healthcare systems, and parental involvement in education can improve outcomes, reducing the need for remedial education. When societal structures support unpaid household work, it enables higher female participation in the labour force, boosting economic growth. The indirect benefits of unpaid work can lead to increased productivity and economic activity in other sectors.

So, unpaid household and care work being the buzzwords, if the UN does agree to include it in the SNA and the world follows accordingly, some questions may arise: will we still not be satisfied with this crucial work they are doing? Will we value the work they do in agriculture, like livestock or poultry rearing?

The BIDS article suggests as policy implication that male contribution to household unpaid care work should be societally encouraged. This will help ensure—the article reads—the spread of care work across genders, ensuring gender equality in unpaid work. I do agree, but did we keep it in mind that people engaged in the formal labour force may end up working a "double shift" of paid and unpaid work, which has serious consequences for their health and well-being?

Wrapping up (leaving the questions) with a quote from Reid and another line from the BIDS article:

"The more we have concentrated on money values, the more we have overlooked that part of our economic system which is not organised on a profit basis."

Unpaid care work is an essential element of social reproduction—a process that supports individuals, families, and society to continue thriving.

89TH BIRTHDAY OF SERAJUL ISLAM CHOUDHURY

Celebrating our premier public intellectual

is currently summer distinguished professor of English & Humanities at the University of Liberal Arts Bangladesh (ULAB). He is director of the graduate programme in social innovation and a professor of interdisciplinary studies at Grand Valley State University in Michigan, US. He is also the vice-president of the US-based Global Center for Advanced Studies (GCAS).

AZFAR HUSSAIN

Today marks the 89th birthday of Serajul Islam Choudhury. At a conjuncture characterised by the constitutive contradictions and crises of such systems of exploitation and oppression as capitalism and imperialism, Serajul Islam's Choudhury's work continues to speak to the emancipatory struggles of the oppressed around the country, and even the world.

Literary and cultural critic, social and political analyst, media commentator, teacher, pedagogist, translator, editor, columnist, activist, and surely an outstanding teacher of English literature—Choudhury continues to be one of the most prolific writers in the Bangla language today. And it is no less significant that, even at 88, he recently led the Palestinian Solidarity rally in Dhaka, attesting to his characteristic activism that variously informs his written work.

Serajul Islam Choudhury is the author of more than a hundred books and numerous essays. He has also written several books in English, including some ground-breaking ones on the revolutionary Bangalee poet Kazi Nazrul Islam—Choudhury's all-time favourite. But, more than anything else, Serajul Islam Choudhury is a major and leading intellectual of our time, committed as he is to nothing short of the total emancipation of humanity in its entirety.

I cannot do justice to the entire range of Choudhury's massive work in this short piece. But I intend to touch on the significance of certain aspects of his work. To begin with, Choudhury's work remains organically responsive to and thoroughly informed by our own national liberation movement, class struggles, and other forms of struggle in Bangladesh. One who always historicises his own people's conditions of being and becoming, Choudhury continues to make interventions in such broad areas as society, politics, political economy, culture, and history, while making the points that telling without doing is profoundly insufficient and that gnosis (knowledge) without praxis (practice informed by knowledge) is simply empty.

Indeed, for about six decades now, Choudhury has been making an inventory of the daily acts of people's resistance and modes of forbearance and survival as well as their aspirations and hopes, exemplified in a range of his works from, say, his earlier book Nirasroy Greehi (1978) and Bangalee Kake Boli (1988), to Swadhinota Spriha Sammyer Bhoy (1988) and Gonotontrer Pokkho-Bipokkho (1991), to Rashtro o Sankskriti (1993) and Rashtrer Malikana (1997), to Bicchinnotay Osommoti (2014) and Pa Raakhi Kothay (2018), to Vidyasagar o Koyekti Prosongo (2021), among many others. One would also do well to cite yet another example. Choudhury used to write an immensely popular—if not populist—column called "Somoy Bahiya Jay" with commendable verve and unflagging enthusiasm in a style that is distinctively Choudhuryian. He has exemplarily evolved a prose-style that makes his work pleasantly readable and accessible. For him, this very question of style is not only an aesthetic question but also a political one.

Choudhury, consistently critical of individualism and opportunist liberalism, centres the struggles of ordinary people in his work, supports their movements, and writes extensively about them, exemplifying the role of a public intellectual in Bangladesh. Contesting corporations and politicians who invoke "people" to abuse them, Choudhury addresses real material contradictions and issues of class, gender, race, and nationality. His critiques of liberal humanism are evident in his incisive analyses of figures like Raja Ram Mohan Roy and E M Forster, just to provide two quick examples.

And, in opposition to the tradition named above, Choudhury clearly identifies the people for whom he tirelessly writes and fights. The people for him, then, are clearly the majority in the country—the toiling masses—peasants and workers, including women as well as ethnic, religious, and linguistic minorities, ignored and oppressed as they are. And he writes about them from the perspectives of their collective emancipation. To put it bluntly: human emancipation itself constitutes the most fundamental, abiding theme in Choudhury's work. In fact, the question of people's emancipation remains organic and integral to the entire constellation of Choudhury's interrogations and interventions from his early works to one of his major works called Jatiyotabad, Samprodayikota o Jonogoner Mukti (2015), which can justly be regarded as his historiographical tour de force.

Let me now briefly describe one of the predominant approaches used in Choudhury's work. Indeed, what—among other things—enables his interventions to remain attentive to both connectedness and contradictions as well as to the "specific" in its historical determinateness is dialectics itself. Dialectics is Choudhury's weapon. For him, dialectics—as a science of the general laws of contradiction, motion, and transformation—is not merely a scholarly or academic exercise; it is a radical tool. He sharpens and deploys the weapon of dialectics in his writing. In fact, it enables him not only to zero in on the specific or the particular as such, prompting him to advance a concrete analysis of a concrete situation, but also to discern and demystify both contradictions and connections between the specific and the general, between the particular and the universal, between the abstract and the concrete, between critique and action, between gnosis and praxis. But only discerning or demystifying contradictions and connections is never enough for Serajul Islam Choudhury. He identifies them in the interest of social transformation and emancipation, broadly speaking.

Further, in the Marxist tradition, Choudhury's approach reckons the class struggle as both the horizon and motor of world history. This approach enables us to see how the development of the productive forces brings into existence different production relations and different forms of class society. And this approach is also nothing short of a revolutionary one that makes us see how the question of the entirety of human emancipation remains connected to the transvaluation of the questions of property relations, the social division of labour, and the process of social reproduction, and so on—i.e., connected to the total abolition of value (exchange value) itself—"an abolition that can be effected only by a revolution," as Marx and Engels put it in The Communist Manifesto.

As the German Marxist theorist Walter Benjamin points out in his classic work On the Concept of History: Class struggle, which for a historian schooled in Marx is always in evidence, is a fight for the crude and material things without which no refined and spiritual things could exist. Choudhury's approach demystifies how the class struggle in its concrete historical-becoming is a fight for "the crude and material things" as much as it is a struggle for the "refined and spiritual things," interconnected as they are. Thus, his approach considers both political economy and culture as the dialectically interconnected sites of life-and-death struggles of the oppressed.

Serajul Islam Choudhury explores the role of intellectuals in his essay Buddhijibeeder Kajkormo o Daydayitto. While intellectuals like Antonio Gramsci, Noam Chomsky, and Edward Said—their different styles and approaches notwithstanding—accentuate the oppositional role of intellectuals committed to radical change, Choudhury supports a similar stance. He believes an intellectual must question oppressive systems and speak truth to power for revolutionary social transformation. Choudhury also stresses the importance of reaching others with these critical ideas, as collective effort is essential for change.

Choudhury's views on the role of intellectuals apply to himself, as he clearly identifies systems of oppression such as capitalism, imperialism, communalism, and patriarchy. He is recognised as Bangladesh's leading anti-capitalist, anti-imperialist, anti-colonial, anti-communal, and anti-patriarchal public intellectual.

Serajul Islam Choudhury is the author of more than a hundred books and numerous essays. He has also written several books in English, including some ground-breaking ones on the revolutionary Bangalee poet Kazi Nazrul Islam—Choudhury's all-time favourite. But, more than anything else, Serajul Islam Choudhury is a major and leading intellectual of our time, committed as he is to nothing short of the total emancipation of humanity in its entirety.

Beyond opposing these systems, Choudhury advocates for socialism, arguing there are no contradictions between socialism and democracy; rather, to be socialist is to be democratic.

A public intellectual as he is, Choudhury in his work touches upon almost every aspect of the life of the masses in Bangladesh. To the extent that he does it, he is bound to cross—and range across—disciplinary borders and boundaries, as he surely does in his work. This is why Choudhury is equally comfortable with producing literary and cultural criticism, political commentary, editorial essay, autobiographical narrative, tract and treatise, newspaper column, and so on, in which the linguistic, the literary, the social, the political, the historical, and the cultural interpenetrate and intersect, exemplifying a radical interdisciplinarity.

For instance, Choudhury has written on Tolstoy and on such modernists as Conrad, Forster, Lawrence, Joyce, Yeats, Pound, and Eliot, among others. Of course, Choudhury has written on every major, canonical Bangalee writer—Madhusudan Dutta, Ishwar Chandra Vidyasagar, Bankim Chandra Chatterjee, Rabindranath Tagore, Mir Mosharrof Hossain, Sarat Chandra Chattopadhyay, Bibhutibhushan Bandyopadhyay, Manik Bandyopadhyay, Tarasankar Bandyopadhyay, Kazi Nazrul Islam, Jibanananda Das, and Syed Waliullah. The list here is by no means exhaustive. Choudhury has produced a remarkable body of work that traverses a wide range of concerns directly relevant to the contemporary life of the suffering masses in Bangladesh. And it is in this body of work that Choudhury most exemplarily forges organic links among the political, the social, the historical, and the cultural all at once. Moreover, it is in that body of work that Choudhury has consistently advanced and relayed his formulation—one that appears fundamentally Gramscian to me—that there is no alternative to forging links between the intellectuals and the masses, if "the point is to change the world," to quote Marx's eleventh thesis on Feuerbach.

I have hitherto selectively drawn on Choudhury's range of works to underline a few of his historically significant and still relevant contributions. An outstanding critic and perceptive analyst, Choudhury teaches that producing knowledge is necessary but not sufficient. He emphasises that knowledge must be used for social change and the emancipation of the masses. Firmly committed to the Marxian principle of praxis, Choudhury values knowledge that transcends mere interpretation, aiming to transform people's consciousness.

As his former student and a member of the editorial board of his national weekly Somoy, I have learned immensely from Serajul Islam Choudhury. His work taught me that teachers, intellectuals, and educators must fulfil their social and political responsibilities and remain accountable for the knowledge they produce. On his 89th birthday, we owe Choudhury immense gratitude for his contributions to our country and even the world.

Gavi to boost access to life-saving human rabies vaccines in over 50 countries

Gavi, the Vaccine Alliance, is providing support for human rabies vaccines for post-exposure prophylaxis (PEP) as part of routine immunisation. Under Gavi's cofinancing policy, eligible countries receive guidance on accessing these vaccines, with the first round of applications due by mid-July 2024. Ninety-five percent of human rabies deaths occur in Africa and Asia, predominantly in marginalised communities lacking access to care.

This initiative aligns with the Zero by 30 campaign, led by United Against Rabies partners including the Food and Agriculture Organisation (FAO), the World Health Organisation (WHO), and the World Organisation for Animal Health (WOAH).

RABIES VACCINE

The campaign aims to eliminate dog-mediated human rabies by 2030.

In over 150 countries where dog rabies is a major public health issue, human rabies vaccine stocks are often limited, especially in marginalised communities. When PEP is available through private facilities, the cost can be financially catastrophic for families.

Rabies is a viral disease causing severe brain inflammation, transmitted in 99 percent of cases by rabid dogs. Once clinical symptoms appear, rabies is nearly 100% fatal. However, prompt PEP, including thorough wound washing and vaccine administration, can prevent infection.

The COVID-19 pandemic delayed the programme's initial inclusion in Gavi's 2021–25 vaccine strategy, but it resumed in mid-2023. All Gavi-eligible countries can apply for funding to procure vaccines and supplies. We will accept applications from July 15 to September 23, 2024, with subsequent windows opening three times a year.

High rates of low back pain plague Dhaka's ride-sharing motorbike drivers

DR MOHAMMAD ALI

Low back pain is becoming a significant issue for Dhaka's ride-sharing motorbike drivers, a new study reveals. These drivers, who navigate the bustling streets of Bangladesh's capital on a daily basis, are increasingly suffering from this painful condition. This not only affects their health, but also threatens their livelihood and overall quality of life.

Rising concerns

A recent study published in the ELSEVIER conducted between May and August 2023 sheds light on this growing problem. Researchers surveyed 633 ride-sharing motorbike drivers in Dhaka and found that nearly 59% of them experienced low back pain in the past month. This alarmingly high rate is concerning for a profession that is essential to the city's transportation network.

Who is at risk?

Several factors contribute to the high rates of low back pain among these drivers, according to the study:

1. Health issues: Drivers who have high blood pressure are more likely to suffer from low back pain. This suggests that overall health plays a crucial role in the well-being of these drivers.

2. Motorcycle condition: Those using older motorbikes face a higher risk. Older bikes may lack the ergonomic features that newer models have, which can lead to increased physical strain.

3. Safety gear: Drivers who do not wear proper riding gear, such as protective jackets and supports, are more likely to experience pain. This highlights the importance of using appropriate equipment while on the road.

4. Demographics: Older drivers and those with higher body weights are at greater risk. Additionally, the longer the distance a driver covers each day, the more likely they are to suffer from low back pain.

5. Workload: Drivers who worked for multiple ride-sharing companies at the same time reported higher rates of pain. This could be due to longer working hours and the physical demands of juggling multiple jobs.

What can we do?

You can implement several practical solutions to address this issue:

- Encourage exercise: Regular physical activity can strengthen the muscles that support the back. Simple exercises and stretches can make a significant difference.
- Promote weight management: Maintaining a healthy weight can reduce the strain on the lower back. These drivers can benefit from educational campaigns and support for healthy living.
- Update equipment: Using newer motorbikes designed with ergonomic features can help reduce physical strain. Ride-sharing companies can help by providing incentives for drivers to upgrade their bikes.
- Safety gear: Ensuring that all drivers have access to and use proper riding gear can prevent back pain. Companies might consider subsidising the cost of high-quality gear.
- Limit work hours: To prevent overexertion, encourage drivers to limit their daily driving hours. Implementing policies that promote regular breaks can also be beneficial.

A call to action:

This study calls attention to the urgent need for targeted interventions to improve the health and safety of ride-sharing motorbike drivers in Dhaka. By taking proactive steps, stakeholders—including ride-sharing companies, health organisations, and the drivers themselves—can work together to reduce the burden of low back pain.

Improving the working conditions for these drivers is not just about addressing their health issues; it is also about ensuring the sustainability of a vital transportation service in Dhaka. With concerted efforts, it is possible to create a healthier and more supportive environment for these essential workers.

As Dhaka continues to grow and evolve, the well-being of its ride-sharing motorbike drivers must be prioritised. By acknowledging and addressing the challenges they face, we can contribute to a more resilient and healthier community for all.

Severe health impacts of child marriage

STAR HEALTH DESK

Researchers in Liberia and Sierra Leone have found a close link between child marriage and negative reproductive and maternal health outcomes among young women. Researchers found that more than half of women aged 20–24 in these countries married before turning 18, and more than one in ten married before turning 15.

The study published in the PubMed, conducted with data from the 2019–2020 Liberia and 2019 Sierra Leone Demographic and Health Surveys, highlighted several troubling trends. Women who married before 18 were more likely to experience early and high fertility, meaning they had children at a younger age and often had more children. They also had less control over when and how many children they had.

SAY NO TO CHILD MARRIAGE

The situation was particularly severe for those married before 15. These young women faced greater challenges in accessing essential healthcare services. In Liberia's North Central region, those married at 15–17 were less likely to have skilled attendants during childbirth or to give birth in a medical facility. Similarly, in Sierra Leone's North Western region, women married before 15 were less likely to have institutional deliveries or receive adequate prenatal care.

These findings underscore the need for targeted interventions to address child marriage and improve health outcomes for young women. By focusing on education and healthcare access, especially in the most affected regions, it is possible to make significant strides towards better futures for these young women.

This study highlights the urgent need for action to support young women ensuring they have the health care and opportunities they deserve.

Unlocking the health benefits of Vitamin D

STAR HEALTH DESK

In our daily rush, it is simple to overlook the vital role that vitamin D plays in our health. Often called the sunshine vitamin, it is crucial for building and maintaining strong bones. But what happens when you do not get enough of it?

Understanding vitamin D deficiency:

Simply put, vitamin D deficiency means your body lacks this essential vitamin. There are several reasons this can occur: not enough sunlight exposure, certain medical conditions affecting absorption, or a diet lacking in vitamin D-rich foods. It is more common than you might think, and it can lead to serious health issues if left untreated.

Why it matters:

Vitamin D is not just about bones; it is a key player in overall health. It helps your body absorb calcium, keeping bones strong and reducing the risk of osteoporosis. Beyond bones, vitamin D supports your immune system, muscles, and even your mood.

Symptoms and risks:

Recognising a deficiency is not always easy. In children, it might show as bone deformities or muscle weakness. Adults might feel fatigued, experience bone or joint pain, or notice changes in mood. Research has linked long-term deficiency to increased risks of conditions such as heart disease, diabetes, and even certain cancers.

Causes of deficiency:

Many factors contribute to low vitamin D levels. Limited sun exposure (especially in colder climates or with excessive sunscreen use), darker skin tones (which absorb less sunlight), or medical conditions affecting nutrient absorption can all play a role. Additionally, diets lacking in vitamin D-rich foods or certain medications can hinder your body's ability to maintain adequate levels.

Testing and treatment:

Diagnosing a deficiency involves a simple blood test. Treatment typically includes supplements to boost vitamin D levels back to normal. The amount prescribed depends on the severity of the deficiency and individual risk factors.

Prevention tips:

Preventing deficiency is possible with a few simple steps:

- Diet: Incorporate vitamin D-rich foods like fatty fish (salmon, tuna), fortified dairy products, and eggs into your meals.
- Sun exposure: Spend 5–30 minutes in the sun each day without sunscreen, if possible, to allow your body to produce vitamin D naturally.
- Supplements: If diet and sun are not sufficient, talk to your doctor about supplements tailored to your needs.

Conclusion

Vitamin D deficiency is a serious health concern that affects many, yet it is often preventable and treatable. By understanding its importance and taking proactive steps to ensure adequate levels, you can safeguard your bone health and overall well-being. Remember, a little sunshine and a balanced diet go a long way towards keeping your body strong and healthy.

In a world where health is wealth, ensuring you have enough vitamin D is a smart investment in yourself.

Long COVID linked to lasting cognitive issues

A recent study published in the Brain found that people who suffer from long-term COVID may experience significant cognitive issues lasting for over a year. The research, conducted during the first wave of the pandemic, compared COVID-19 patients with ongoing symptoms to those who fully recovered.

Out of the 105 patients studied, 83 reported long-term neurological symptoms such as memory loss and difficulty concentrating. Common complaints included severe fatigue (82%), headaches (72%), anxiety (58%), weakness in the limbs (57%), insomnia (57%), and depression (46%).

Key findings showed that nearly half of those with long COVID had noticeable memory problems, including difficulties with both verbal and visual memory. Around 27% of patients showed significant issues with attention, verbal working memory, processing speed, and verbal fluency compared to healthy individuals and recovered COVID-19 patients. Furthermore, 20% of those affected had severe cognitive impairment.

Brain scans revealed that patients with long-term COVID had noticeable changes in their brain structure, particularly in areas linked to memory and attention. These brain changes were more common in patients who had severe initial COVID-19 infections.

The study highlights the serious and lasting impact of long-term COVID on mental functions, underscoring the importance of recognising and addressing these long-term symptoms. This study emphasises the need for ongoing support and treatment for those affected.

Another day to forget for Shakib and Tigers

ASHFAQ-UL-ALAM

Shakib Al Hasan and the Bangladesh team had another forgettable day at the office yesterday, as the all-rounder once again showed signs of losing his edge with the bat and the ball, and the Tigers meekly surrendered against a superior Indian side in their Super Eights match of the ICC T20 World Cup in Antigua.

Bangladesh were the inferior side on display throughout the match and unsurprisingly suffered a 50-run drubbing.

There were some flashes of positives for Bangladesh in the match, like Tanzim Sakib's fiery spell and a late 10-ball 24 assault from Rishad Hossain, but these efforts were overshadowed by the long list of subpar performances, headed by another rocky showing from Shakib.

For the last four weeks or so, Bangladesh's cricket fans have been watching and slowly coming to terms with the fact that perhaps Shakib Al Hasan, like all who played the game before him, is gradually conceding defeat to the perpetual pendulum of time.

One of the tell-tale signs that a player's career is nearing its end is that the skills that once were second nature to them, which they could execute without even thinking, become difficult.

In Shakib's case, it was his bowling that Bangladesh could depend on most days without a second thought. But in this edition of the ICC T20 World Cup, he has been used more like a part-time option and at times had to be shielded from the batters.

Yesterday, Shakib became the first and only bowler to claim 50 wickets in T20 World Cups when he took the wicket of Rohit Sharma. But before getting that wicket, the left-arm spinner was taken for 25 runs off his first nine deliveries, which allowed India to race to 53-1 in the Powerplay.

Shakib ended with 1-37 in three overs, not finishing his quota for the fifth time in this tournament. In Bangladesh's six matches, the left-arm spinner has bowled his full quota only against the Netherlands and was not brought into the attack in the rain-curtailed match against Australia.

It's not like Shakib has only been struggling on the wicket's column. Till now, he has bowled only 13.2 overs in the tournament and conceded at a rate of more than eight runs an over -- the most expensive of all Bangladeshi bowlers.

Shakib couldn't really make up for his shortcoming with the ball with bat in hand either, making just 11 off seven balls before getting caught at extra-cover.

The dip in Shakib's bowling, something the all-rounder has always said came to him naturally and he admitted to not have paid too much focus on it, projects a dire signal.

Considering Shakib's age, 37, his decline shouldn't be that much of a surprise. But as the all-rounder has expressed his desire to feature for Bangladesh in the next T20 World Cup as well, this dip is a worrying sign.

His batting has been subpar since the issue with his eyes has surfaced. If the all-rounder wishes to continue being an asset for Bangladesh cricket, not a liability, perhaps it is time for him to change his ways and seriously work on his bowling.

As for the Tigers, they still have one match left in the Super Eights against Afghanistan on Tuesday, where they will have a chance to end their campaign on a high.

SCORES IN BRIEF

India: 196-5 in 20 overs (Pandya 50 not out, Kohli 37; Sakib 2-32; Rishad 2-43)

Bangladesh: 146-8 in 20 overs (Shanto 40, Tanzid 29, Rishad 24; Kuldeep 3-19, Bumrah 2-13, Arshdeep 2-30)

Result: India won by 50 runs

Player of the Match: Hardik Pandya

We did not show as much intent as we needed with the bat. When we are chasing 190 (plus score), we needed to show more intent; especially in the first six overs.

NAJMUL HOSSAIN SHANTO

In T20s, I don't believe we need to get fifties and hundreds, what matters is the pressure you put on the bowlers... and that's how we want to play.

England's drive for semis, USA's final flourish

STAR SPORTS DESK

As the T20 World Cup heats up, holders England face co-hosts USA in a crucial Super Eights fixture at the Kensington Oval Stadium in Barbados on Sunday.

Both teams have different stakes in this match, with England likely to go all out, aiming for a comprehensive win to boost their net run rate and secure their place in the semi-finals, while USA will be looking to upset the odds and conclude their fairytale World Cup journey.

England enter the match with a mix of urgency and optimism. Their recent game against South Africa saw them fall short by seven runs, but a valiant 78-run partnership for the fifth wicket by Harry Brook and Liam Livingstone was instrumental in keeping England's semifinal hopes alive.

With the West Indies' dominant win over USA, England find themselves third in Group Two, tied with the Men in Maroon on points but way behind on net run rate – 0.412 compared to 1.814. For England to secure a semi-final spot, a win against the USA is crucial, especially if group leaders South Africa -- on four points with a net run rate of 0.625 -- lose to the West Indies.

One of the tournament's surprise packages, USA have showcased their potential on the world stage. Despite a recent nine-wicket loss to the West Indies, they have demonstrated exceptional performances, including victories over Pakistan and Canada.

USA's journey in the T20 World Cup has been a testament to their growth as an Associate nation. Captain Aaron Jones said, "Over the last couple of weeks, starting from winning the series against Bangladesh [prior to the T20 World Cup], it really opened the eyes of everybody."

As both teams take the field, fans can expect an exciting clash that encapsulates the spirit and unpredictability of T20 cricket.

Proteas-Caribbeans clash in high-stakes affair

AGENCIES

Hosts West Indies and undefeated South Africa will clash in a high-stakes Super Eight match on Monday in Antigua, the outcome of which will have huge implications in the semifinals race from Group 2 in the ongoing ICC T20 World Cup.

After an unbeaten run in the group stage, the men in maroon were rocked in their first Super Eight game when England defeated them by eight wickets. However, they bounced back with a comprehensive nine-wicket win over co-hosts USA on June 21.

Not only did they gain two crucial points, but also improved their net run rate substantially. They are now placed second in the Group 2 table and a strong win in their next game can help seal a semi-final spot.

South Africa sit at the top of the table with four points and a net run rate of +0.625. England and West Indies are at two points each, but the latter are ahead based on a superior net run rate of +1.814 as compared to England's +0.412. USA are fourth with zero points.

This means that irrespective of the result in the England-USA fixture, West Indies can secure a semi-final spot if they manage to win against South Africa and maintain a superior net run rate over Jos Buttler's men.

For the Proteas, a win will ensure a berth in the final four and a defeat could see them exit the tournament if England beat the USA handsomely and overtake South Africa in net run rate.

Up against the Proteas on Sunday evening, West Indies all-rounder Roston Chase said that despite South Africa's undefeated run, they are not going to budge away from a contest.

"We're going to be coming hard," Chase said. "So, we'll collide, and whoever's the strongest, I think, will win. So, it's just for us, as I say, to just go there and give it your all. As I say, it's a win-win situation."

For South Africa, opener Quinton de Kock has found form at precisely the right moment, scoring two superb knocks in succession to help South Africa to the top of Group 2.

Their bowlers have been on point throughout the tournament and David Miller has been efficient in the middle-order, bailing them out of tricky situations a number of times.

South Africa, who have managed to eke out victories under pressure on a few different occasions in this T20 World Cup, find themselves in a tough spot once again as a defeat against the Caribbeans could pull the plug out of what has thus far been a promising campaign. If the Proteas indeed succumb under pressure, their reputation as cricket's ultimate chokers, a moniker they have been trying to get rid of, will grow further.

'Calm' Endrick hopes to leave his mark

REUTERS

Brazil's teenage prodigy Endrick will be hoping to make his first appearance for the national team at a major tournament when his country take on Costa Rica in their Copa America opener on Monday.

The 17-year-old striker, who joined Real Madrid from Palmeiras, knows he has a long way to go to break into the Brazilian starting line-up in a squad that includes Raphinha, Vinicius Jr and Rodrygo in attack.

"Only God knows (when I will start). I am very grateful to have Abel (Ferreira) as a coach, he knew when to play me. Everything is up to God and Professor Dorival Jr. He is a spectacular coach. He is doing what is best for the Brazilian team," Endrick told a press conference on Friday.

Endrick, who in March became the youngest player to score in an international match at Wembley when he gave Brazil a 1-0 win over England, made his mark in the other warm-up fixtures ahead of Copa America with a goal in a 3-2 victory over Mexico, having also scored against Spain.

"I have always been very precocious in my life and since I became a professional I have played against opponents who have always teased me, insulted me, talked about my family, my girlfriend," he said.

"But I got used to it quickly because I was 16. I'm calm and I hope I can help, I think it's right, in football you have to destabilise the other player. It's been like that since I arrived, so I've adapted and I'm very confident that I can help the team."

'Rejuvenated Germany can win Euros'

REUTERS, Berlin

German fans welcomed the start of Euro 2024 on home soil more in hope than expectation, but their performances have surprised many and they are now serious contenders to win the title, German World Cup winner Olaf Thon told Reuters.

The 58-year-old, who scored a memorable goal against Denmark in his home town of Gelsenkirchen in the 1988 European Championship, has remained in the game through his punditry work for Sport1, where he provides expert analysis on the Bundesliga and the German national team.

"Last year, I would have predicted that Germany would not make it very far, but based on the group stage games and the performances of other good teams such as Spain and France, I'd say we can definitely keep up with them," Thon said in an interview.

"We have a home advantage, with the fans as 12th player ... and now, I believe that everything is possible for Germany. We can win the title," he added.

The modest pre-tournament expectations of Thon and many German fans were heavily influenced by a run of bad results in 2023, during which Germany drew two and lost six of their 11 friendlies.

They made a fast start at Euro 2024, however, with a 5-1 thrashing of Scotland and a comfortable 2-0 win over Hungary ensured the Germans were the first team through to the knockout stage, leaving coach Julian Nagelsmann with tough calls to make for their final group game against Switzerland.

"It is the dream of every head coach to send the same starting XI out on to the pitch. However, 'never change a winning team' has its perils," Thon said.

"I expect Nagelsmann to start the same players again, if no one gets injured. However, it is the group stage where you have to manage the workloads and act strategically.

For Thon, who coached for a brief period before pivoting to his media career with Sport1, the current German team is reminiscent of the one that was taken over by Franz Beckenbauer in 1984 and won the World Cup in 1990.

"In 1988 the Euros on home soil, Germany lost against the Netherlands in the semis, who then went on to win the tournament. In 1990, there was revenge - Germany beat the Netherlands and won the title confidently," Thon recalls.

"It is therefore possible that Julian Nagelsmann first starts with this attempt and doesn't win the title right away, but instead builds up something to win in 2026."

Portugal's Bernardo Silva celebrates scoring their first goal with Joao Cancelo during their 3-0 win against Turkey in a Group F fixture of Euro 2024 at the BVB Stadion in Dortmund yesterday. The result ensured the 2016 champions enter the last 16.

Tigers on brink of elimination

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh batters were not up to the task of chasing down a 197-run target set by India as the Tigers stumbled to a 50-run defeat in their crucial Super Eight fixture on Saturday, seeing themselves all but out of the ongoing T20 World Cup.

Skipper Najmul Hossain Shanto scored a team-high 40 off 32 deliveries and Rishad Hossain dealt a few lusty blows at the death but those were not nearly enough as Bangladesh were restricted to 146 for eight after an unbeaten Hardik Pandya fifty and a number of quickfire knocks from India batters saw them amass 196 for five.

In order to progress to their maiden semifinal, Bangladesh will now have to hope for a series of unlikely events, starting with banking on Afghanistan to cause an upset against the mighty Aussies in Kingstown today. The Tigers would then have to beat Afghanistan in their final Super Eight game on June 25 by a big enough margin to boost their current net run-rate of -2.489

Farmers count the losses

DWOHA CHOWDHURY and MINTU DESHWARA

As soon as the second wave of flash floods hit Sylhet in the early hours of June 17, Moklisur Rahman, a fish farmer in Gowainghat upazila, knew he was going to lose all his fish, which he had worked very hard to raise in his three ponds.

"I immediately rushed to the ponds, but it was too late for anything to be done. Within hours, I lost fish worth at least Tk 7 lakh," lamented Moklisur, a resident of the upazila's Nayagram Uttar village.

Like him, thousands of fish farmers in Sylhet, Sunamganj, and Moulvibazar have lost their prized possessions as the flood washed away as many as 13,650 ponds, said the divisional fisheries department.

Abdal Miah of Chanpur village in Sylhet's Fenchuganj upazila said, "Even as my house was flooded to the waist, we stayed back to protect the cattle. But, sadly, we could do nothing about the fish in the pond worth at least Tk 50,000."

Md Arif of Rahimpur village in Moulvibazar's Kamolganj upazila said, "After the dyke of the Dhalai River broke and the flash flood inundated the village, I lost fish worth around Tk 1 lakh. I now have nothing."

Fish farmers in the region have incurred a substantial loss of Tk 133.61 crore, of which Tk 101.18 crore has been lost in the Sylhet district alone, according to the divisional fisheries department.

Md Anowar Hossain, deputy director of the Department of Fisheries in Sylhet, said, "We are now keeping an eye

'Journos should be more cautious'

Says home ministry; BFUJ, DUJ express concern over threat to press freedom

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government wants media outlets to exercise more caution while publishing reports that may potentially tarnish the image of the police force.

The home ministry sent a letter to the information and broadcasting ministry on June 13 regarding this matter, which came to light recently.

The letter, signed by home ministry Deputy Secretary Israt Zahan, requested the information and broadcasting ministry to take necessary measures so that print and electronic media outlets exercise greater caution during the publication of news that could harm the reputation of the police force.

Earlier on Friday, a statement expressing similar concern was sent to the media on behalf of the Bangladesh Police Service Association.

JOURNOS EXPRESS CONCERN

Bangladesh Federal Union of Journalists (BFUJ) and Dhaka Union of Journalists (DUJ) issued a counter-statement yesterday.

In the joint statement, journalist leaders said the language used by some leaders and organisations in their reactions to certain news reports poses a threat to the freedom of the press.

"These reports are not published with any particular agenda; rather, responsible journalists believe that they are publishing verified information after thoroughly checking the facts and documents available to them."

Israel kills dozens in safe zone bombing

25 killed in shelling near Red Cross office; Lebanon border conflict escalates

AGENCIES

Israeli forces yesterday bombed several areas from air and the ground, killing dozens and forcing many families living in areas described as humanitarian-designated zones to leave northwards.

An Israeli attack on Friday near the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) base at the al-Mawasi camp, designated by Israel as a safe zone, that Palestinian officials say killed at least 25 people and wounded 50 others, involved two strikes, The Associated Press news agency reported.

An Israeli military spokesman did not acknowledge any role in the incident but said it was "under review".

"Firing so dangerously close to humanitarian structures puts the lives of civilians and humanitarians at risk," the ICRC said on X.

Meanwhile, one Israeli strike on houses in Al-Shati, one of the Gaza Strip's eight historic refugee camps, killed 24 people, Ismail Al-Thawabta told Reuters. Another 18 Palestinians were killed in a strike on houses in the Al-Tuffah neighbourhood.

Footage obtained by Reuters showed dozens of Palestinians rushing out to search for victims amid the destroyed houses. The footage showed wrecked homes, blasted walls, and debris and dust filling the street in Shati refugee camp.

At least 42 people were killed in Israeli attacks on districts of Gaza City in the north of the Palestinian enclave yesterday, the director of the Hamas-run government media office said.

Civil defence agency spokesman Mahmud Basal said five municipal workers died when a garage in the city was bombed.

Fighting continued yesterday morning, with witnesses reporting gun battles between Palestinian and Israeli forces in Gaza City.

- 37,551 people killed in Gaza since Oct 7
- At least 120 killed in Gaza over the past 48 hours
- Israeli strike kills Ayman Ghotmeh, leader of Lebanese Islamist group
- Hezbollah claims attacks on Israeli troops near Lebanon border

And in the city's Zeitun neighbourhood, Israeli helicopters fired at Palestinian fighters, witnesses said.

The health ministry in Hamas-run Gaza said yesterday that at least 37,551 people have been killed in the territory during more than eight months of Israel's offensive in Gaza.

Elsewhere, Lebanon-based Hamas ally Hezbollah claimed a number of attacks on Israeli troops and positions near the border on Friday, including two using drones.

The Israeli army said it had carried out multiple retaliatory strikes on both days.

Israeli jets on Friday struck a "Hezbollah military structure in the area of Khiam, a Hezbollah military post in the area of Mais al-Jabal," and Hezbollah infrastructure "in the areas of Taybeh and Tallouseh in southern Lebanon", the army said in a statement.

A security source said a leader of the Lebanese Islamist group Jamaa Islamiya, an ally of Hamas, was killed yesterday in an Israeli strike on a vehicle in eastern Lebanon.

"A leader of the al-Fajr Forces of the Jamaa Islamiya, Ayman Ghotmeh, was killed in an Israeli strike in Khiara in the western Bekaa," 10 kilometres from the border with Syria, the source told AFP on condition of anonymity.

The Fajr Forces, Jamaa Islamiya's armed wing, was established in 1982 to fight the Israeli invasion of Lebanon.

Lebanon's state-run ANI news agency reported one person killed when a car was targeted in Khiara, and that the victim was from the nearby village of Lala, without giving further details.

Israel's military said an aircraft carried out a "precise strike in the Beqaa area in Lebanon in order to eliminate" Ayman Ghotmeh, who they said supplied weapons to Hamas and Jamaa Islamiya in Lebanon.

Khaleda in Evercare CCU

UNB, Dhaka

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir said yesterday that the party Chairperson Khaleda Zia's health condition was very critical.

Speaking to reporters at Evercare Hospital, he called on the country's people to pray for her speedy recovery.

Fakhrul went to the hospital around 1:30pm and talked to the medical board members about Khaleda's condition.

The BNP chairperson has been receiving treatment at the Critical Care Unit (CCU) since she was admitted to the hospital early yesterday. Entry to the CCU has been restricted, except for medical board doctors and nurses, considering Khaleda's alarming condition.

"I visited Evercare Hospital around 1:30pm to see madam [Khaleda]. She is in the CCU. Her condition is extremely alarming, and doctors are restricting access to her room," Fakhrul said.

The BNP leader said he talked to doctors engaged in Khaleda's treatment to know her physical condition. "What I came to know from physicians is that her condition is very critical."

He said the medical board members will hold another meeting in the evening to determine the next course of her treatment.

Chimps help scientists find medicinal plants

INDEPENDENT.CO.UK

Oxford scientists have identified 13 plants that have potent wound-healing and infection-fighting properties in a "thrilling" discovery – with help from some wild chimpanzees.

Researchers observed the great apes in an African forest feeding on bark, dead wood and leaves from plants that were not part of their normal diet after becoming ill or injured.

Watching how chimpanzees – the closest living human relative – seek help from nature when unwell could fast-track the discovery of new drugs to treat chronic diseases and infections, the researchers said.

Dr Elodie Freymann, from the University of Oxford's School of Anthropology and Museum Ethnography, said: "Our study highlights the medicinal knowledge that can be gained from observing other species in the wild and underscores the urgent need to preserve these forest pharmacies for future generations."

ACC to sue Benazir after probe ends

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Anti-Corruption Commission is making preparations to file a case against former inspector general of police Benazir Ahmed, his wife Jisaan Mirza, and daughters Farheen Rishta and Tahsin Raisa.

An investigation into their wealth is almost complete, and the case will be filed after it is done, officials said.

The ACC asked him to appear at its office in the capital today.

Benazir and his family members reportedly left the country in early May and it is unlikely that he would appear at the ACC office today and meet the investigators.

ACC lawyer Khurshid Alam Khan said if Benazir remains absent, legal steps will be taken.

Benazir and his family members missed ACC appointments on June 6 and 9. The ACC then rescheduled the dates to June 23 and June 24.

The ACC on April 18 launched an inquiry into allegations that Benazir amassed huge wealth when he was the police chief.

Heap of stocks exposes Matiur's wrongdoing

AHSAN HABIB

NBR official Md Matiur Rahman, who has come under the scanner amid controversy over his wealth, has made a big fortune through investments in the stock market, raising questions about the means he applied in the process.

In a recent interview with private television ntv, Matiur, who was yesterday removed from NBR and attached to the finance ministry, admitted that he used his expertise and insights about the capital market to buy shares of ailing but potential companies to make financial gains.

In his own admission, the career tax official would sit with owners of listed companies and visit firms to identify their weakness and offer solutions for growth. In essence, he would buy company shares in their rainy days and trade them when the share value shot up.

"This gives you a good gain," he said, adding that he also offered consultancy for initial public offering (IPOs) to help companies float shares to raise money from the public.

Matiur's admissions offer vital clues as to how people with power and influence over public institutions can become a money-making machine. What happened in Matiur's case is simple yet intriguing: he entered the share market with insider information, an unlawful practice as per the capital market regulations, to mint money.

- Matiur and his family held over 3 crore shares in at least 10 companies
- He sometimes used insider information to buy shares of ailing but potential companies, which is illegal

The regulation against inside trading is meant to safeguard general investors against those with privileged information who can make gains or avert losses that the general investors cannot.

The controversy over Matiur and his family's wealth comes amid ongoing investigations and public discussions about massive wealth of a number of other top current and former government officials and their family members.

An initial tally by The Daily Star shows he and his company held more

ACC opens inquiry into graft claims

STAR REPORT

The Anti-Corruption Commission has launched an inquiry into the allegations of amassing illegal wealth and money laundering by Matiur Rahman, who has been removed from his post at the National Board of Revenue (NBR).

A three-member team has been formed to investigate the allegations against Matiur, ACC Secretary Khorsheda Yasmin told reporters during a press briefing at its headquarters yesterday.

The ACC's move came hours after Matiur, the president of the NBR's Customs, Excise, and VAT Appellate Tribunal, was transferred to the Internal Resources Division of the finance ministry.

Khorsheda said the commission decided on June 4 to initiate an investigation.

BPSA statement a threat against media freedom

Say Editors' Council, DRU, BJC and TIB

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Editors' Council yesterday protested and expressed concern over the Bangladesh Police Service Association's (BPSA) statement on recent news about the police force, saying it is a manifestation of an "indecent, illogical and irresponsible" attitude towards independent media and impartial journalism.

The statement, signed by Editors' Council President Mahfuz Anam and General Secretary Dewan Hanif Mahmud, said several media outlets have recently published reports on the unusual wealth of both current and former high- and low-ranking police officials.

In response to the reports, the BPSA sent letters to all media editors, expressing concern, which have been reported by various media outlets.

In the letters, sent on Friday, the BPSA urged journalists to be more cautious and follow the principles of journalism properly while publishing any report about the police force in the future.

The association described the recent media reports, mainly on graft allegations against some former and current officials, as a "smear campaign" by the media. It claimed the reports

AL 'indomitable as its strength lies in people'

Hasina urges unity to foil plots against the party

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Awami League President Sheikh Hasina yesterday said several attempts failed to destroy her party as the people and activists are its source of power.

The prime minister said, "The Awami League could not be wiped out despite repeated attacks. It rose again and again like a phoenix, as the main strength of the Awami League is the people. Our strength is our grassroots activists. They never bow down.

"Awami League leaders and activists uphold the organisation with their hard work, defying sufferings and repeated blows."

She was addressing a grand rally at the historic Suhrawardy Udyan marking the 75th founding anniversary of the party.

Referring to many senior leaders who left the party over the years, she said they considered themselves bigger than the party. "They were "stars" when they were in the Awami League, but those stars never shined again after they quit the party. Many [such stars] are dim, some went out.

"Some returned to the party after realising their mistakes, and we accepted them. Many are still dreaming of the fall of the government," Hasina said.

She said an attempt was made to ruin the party in 2007 by forming a king's party, but it failed as the people, grassroots, and dedicated leaders were the main strength of the AL.

"I would like to appeal to every leader and activist to make the party well-organised and stronger. If the organisation is strong and the support of the masses can be gained, all sorts of conspiracy can be foiled," Hasina added.

Describing AL's contribution before and after the birth of Bangladesh, Hasina said the AL was significantly involved in every achievement of the country.

"Awami League leaders have always stood beside the people. After the AL won 233 seats in the 2008 election and assumed power, the country never had to look back," she said.

"Extreme poverty fell to 5.6 percent from 25.1 percent in 15 years. Literacy rate was 45 percent when we came to power. It has now improved to 75 percent," she added.

Hasina said her government successfully transformed Bangladesh into Digital Bangladesh as per the

ADB to lend $20.8b in four years

The Asian Development Bank (ADB) is expected to provide $20.8 billion in loans to Bangladesh in the next four years as the country looks to accelerate economic growth and attain the upper-middle-income status in less than a decade.

The amount is 42.3 percent higher than the $12 billion the country received in the previous four years, documents from the Manila-based lender showed.

Of the expected financing, $16.4 billion, or 78.85 percent, will be extended as ordinary capital resources (OCR) loan, since the country's capacity to pay back has gone up.

The interest rate for the OCR portion is near market-based. The rest of the loan will be concessional.

MY DHAKA

Life with an urban monkey

AYMAN ANIKA

Living in Dhaka, one rarely expects encounters with wildlife, especially monkeys. However, my home at Shahjadpur, beside an enormous mango tree, became the stage for a rather unusual drama involving a lone monkey!

It all began as what I could only describe as a bittersweet – and often hilarious – relationship with one of the city's cheekiest primates.

I first noticed the visitor on my windowsill one fine morning. Far from a swinging, lively creature inhabiting the lush forests, this monkey appeared sad and lonely. Curious, I learned from my homeowner that this was the same animal raiding our mango tree.

Despite the landlady's frustration, my heart went out to this solitary figure. To lighten its spirits, I offered some fruits and biscuits, only to be rewarded with a scratch that sent me to the hospital for a rabies vaccine. Lesson learned -- not all monkey friendships start with a handshake!

This experience, although painful, got me thinking about the deeper issues at play.

Monkeys, once reigning supreme in the tree-laden areas of Old Dhaka -- particularly Gandaria and Wari -- now find themselves navigating the concrete jungle. With much of their natural habitat replaced by urban sprawl, these animals have been forced to adapt in unexpected ways.

Without their ancestral homes' abundant trees and natural food sources, they have now turned to scavenging human food. Rooftops and less crowded areas have become their new social hubs, where they can interact and play – albeit far from the ideal conditions of a forest.

Sometimes, their antics are as eccentric as children throwing tantrums. The monkey that visits my house has developed a peculiar habit of knocking on my window whenever it wants a snack. If ignored, it stages a mini-protest, banging its little fists like a pint-sized revolutionary.

The plight of these urban monkeys is a mirror reflecting our actions. The gradual erosion of green spaces in Dhaka has not only robbed these creatures of their homes but also of their independence.

Where once they thrived on the fruits of the forest, they now depend on the scraps from our tables. This dependence has led to conflicts and often misunderstandings on both sides. Monkeys stealing clothes and food has become a part of urban legends, and sometimes, they manage to outsmart us in ways that are as infuriating as they are funny.

Despite these challenges, there are moments of genuine connection and understanding. After my initial encounter, the same monkey has become a regular visitor. These visits have taught me about resilience and adaptability. Who knew that sharing a city with monkeys could be so entertaining?

As urban expansion continues, we must acknowledge and plan for the wildlife displaced by our actions. Instead of viewing them as intruders, perhaps we could see them as fellow city dwellers trying to navigate the complexities of urban life.

Simple steps like preserving existing green spaces, planting more trees, and creating urban sanctuaries can make a noticeable difference in the lives of these animals.

As we look towards the future, let's aim for a harmonious coexistence, where monkeys and humans share the cityscape with mutual respect. After all, in the grand symphony of life, every creature has its part to play, and sometimes, a good laugh is the best harmony of all.

Law doesn't allow sending Khaleda Zia abroad for treatment

Says law minister

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Law Minister Anisul Huq yesterday said there is no provision in law that would allow BNP Chairperson Khaleda Zia to go abroad for treatment.

"As far as I know, a process has been initiated to place a pacemaker in Khaleda Zia as part of her cardiovascular treatment. We received no request for sending her abroad," he said.

"Khaleda Zia's jail sentence has been suspended under an executive order, which was issued based on a [specific] law. Under the law, there is no scope for sending her abroad."

Anisul said this while answering questions from journalists after attending the inauguration of the training course for senior assistant judges at the Judicial Administration Training Institute (JATI) in Dhaka. He was the chief guest at the programme.

The minister said Khaleda was released from jail on March 25, 2020, after Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina suspended her sentence with an executive order on humanitarian grounds. "Due to this, Khaleda is being able to have treatment as per her own will in the country."

Replying to another question, he said it was not necessary to formulate a new law to collect the wealth statements of government officials, adding that the existing provision requires the officials to submit their wealth statements at the entry stage of their services, which have to be updated from time to time.

The law minister, however, urged journalists to be alert and not malign honest officials.

In response to a separate question, Anisul said there is a provision for the Anti-Corruption Commission to inform the government regarding taking action against any government official for corruption.

It has been incorporated in the law so that the government can be aware of the ACC's action and also think about what action it will take from its end against the official concerned.

JATI's Director General Justice Hasan Foez Siddique presided over the programme, where Law and Justice Division Secretary Md Golam Sarwar also spoke.

ACC opens inquiry into graft claims

The team members -- ACC Deputy Director Anower Hossen, Assistant Director Mahmudul Hasan, and Deputy Assistant Director Sabikun Nahar -- have already begun working on it.

In 2004, 2008, 2013, and most recently in 2021, allegations of corruption were made against Matiur, but the ACC never decided to look into them.

Asked why no probes were launched before, Khorsheda said, "The commission will review as to why. Now that new information has surfaced, a probe has been launched."

Meanwhile, the government asked Matiur not to attend the board meetings of Sonali Bank.

"We informed our board members about the government decision," Sonali Bank Chairman Ziaul Hasan Siddiqui told reporters after a board meeting yesterday.

He said it was not the responsibility of the board to appoint or remove Matiur, as he is a representative of the government on the Sonali Bank board.

Matiur has plunged into controversy over his wealth after his son, Mushfiqur Rahman Ifat, posted a photo of a sacrificial goat on social media and claimed to have bought it for Tk 12 lakh. There have also been media reports on his family's lavish lifestyle.

These raised questions about the income of this official at this grade (grade-1) with a basic monthly salary of Tk 78,000.

Photos of Ifat with various expensive cars and the family's properties, including flats and resorts in places like Dhaka, Gazipur, and Narsingdi, began doing the rounds on social media.

On Wednesday, Matiur told The Daily Star that Ifat was not his son and that he was a victim of a conspiracy.

Matiur claimed he has two children: a daughter and a son. His daughter lives in Canada, while his son graduated from a university in the US.

Later, media reports, quoting lawmaker Nizam Uddin Hazari of Feni-2 and local leaders, said Ifat is the son of Shammi Akhter Shibu, who is Hazari's cousin and Matiur's second wife.

than 3 crore shares of at least 10 companies – but this figure may rise.

Matiur, who also worked at Chattogram Customs and Large Taxpayer Unit (LTU), VAT, told ntv on Wednesday that he started investing in the capital market in 2008.

He also acknowledged that he made "abnormally high" money from the shares of Fortune Shoes. He bought the company's shares at Tk 8 whose face value was Tk 10, and sold them at Tk 54 each.

"I had a deal with the owner of the shoemaker to offer consultancy to bring the company to the stock market. In return, the owner gave me shares at Tk 8."

He did not respond to our calls and text messages over the last two days.

According to the Companies Act, a company can sell shares at a discount price but with approval from the High Court, and it must be shown in the company's financial reports.

However, the company did not take any approval and did not show it in the financial report of 2015-16 when it got listed. Moreover, the IPO prospectus showed that all shareholders bought shares at face value of Tk 10 each.

Under service rules, government officials cannot work as consultants to facilitate companies to be listed in the capital market. The securities rules also have no option for any individual to offer consultancy related to IPO listing.

It is the job of merchant banks with issue management licences, and there are 66 such merchant banks in Bangladesh, according to BSEC data.

The merchant banks offer their service against a fee, and cannot accept any shares from the company, according to company listing regulations of 2015.

"The issue manager is in no way connected with the issuer and does not hold any of its securities," the regulations say.

Faruq Ahmad Siddiqi, a former chairman of BSEC, said a public service-holder should not offer such consultancy. The securities rules also have no option for that.

"Why did the company give him shares at Tk 8? This is a serious allegation of irregularities that the official himself revealed. It should be investigated thoroughly," he said.

A top merchant banker, who usually offers IPO consultancy service, said Matiur indicated in the interview with that he got shares before listing and no company in Bangladesh sells shares at discount.

"Most companies have to give shares to some influential people as bribes without getting any money or at a lower price."

Usually, companies provide placement shares to regulatory officials to curry favours, he added.

According to the IPO prospectus of Fortune Shoes, Matiur received 5 lakh shares of the company, which was 0.67 percent of the total shares of the company in its pre-IPO period.

His second wife Shammi Akter (Shibli) received 10 lakh shares; his daughter Farzana Rahman 16.50 lakh shares; and his son Ahmed Tawfiqur Rahman Arnab 9 lakh shares, according to the prospectus of Fortune Shoes.

He also received shares from ACME Pesticides, Associated Oxygen, C&A Textiles, Dominage Steel, Lub-rref (Bangladesh), Mamun Agro, ML Dyeing, Ring Shine and SK Trims, according to the company prospectus seen by The Daily Star.

He received 37 lakh shares from Acme Pesticides and 14.5 lakh shares from Associated Oxygen. His first wife Laila Kaniz Lucky had 4.5 lakh shares and his son Ahmed Tawfiqur Rahman Arnab 5 lakh shares from Associated Oxygen.

From a single company -- C&A Textiles -- he and his family members got 47.3 lakh shares.

Additionally, he received 88.83 lakh shares from SK Trims, 21 lakh shares from Kattali Textiles, 16 lakh shares from ML Dyeing, 10 lakh shares each from Mamun Agro Products and Ring Shine and 8 lakh shares each from Dominage Steel and Lub-rref (Bangladesh).

According to securities rules, any individual can get placement shares. Before getting listed with the stock exchanges, many companies sell placement shares to individuals, especially to friends and family.

Usually, they sell shares at face value or at a higher price considering that the share would be traded at a higher price after listing. In the meantime, investors can make money by holding the shares for one year or more.

But if the same people buy shares from many companies, it raises question as to whether they are getting preferential treatments to buy shares from all companies, said Siddiqi, the former chairman of BSEC.

The government should investigate whether the person offered any illegal benefits to the companies in return for those placement shares, he added.

A top official of the BSEC said there is no ban on government officials to buy and sell shares on the stock market. But ideally, those having policymaking roles in the stock market or have conflict of interest in the sector should never be allowed to invest in the speculative market like stock exchange.

"The rule should be applied to people who work in offices such as the Securities and Exchange Commission, the central bank or NBR."

BSEC Spokesperson Mohammad Rezaul Karim said if any company sells shares at discount prices, it must take approval from the High Court, but Fortune Shoes did not do that. It only took approval from BSEC to issue shares at face value.

"We have no information as to how he [Matiur] got the shares at Tk 8. Only the company and the person involved can say it."

Any company can offer placement shares to anyone. So BSEC has nothing to say or do if any company sells its shares at face value, he added.

Riaz Uddin Bhuiya, company secretary of Fortune Shoes, said the company sold shares to Matiur at Tk 10.

Matiur is now working to enhance the share price of another company.

"At present, I am working with Silva Pharmaceuticals. Its growth will triple within one year. Its price will also double," he told ntv.

According to a BSEC order, no one is allowed to publicly predict share prices. Also, the Government Servants (Conduct) Rules 1979 says no government official shall speculate in investments.

On the other hand, no company can sit privately with a minority shareholder. The company can talk with minority shareholders in AGMs only.

Buying and selling of shares based on such sittings and confidential information are seen as insider trading, which is illegal, market analysts say.

But Matiur sees it differently.

"I always invest in stock market this way," he told ntv, adding that he made Tk 14 crore by investing Tk 1 crore once.

ACC sources said Benazir's letter was addressed to the ACC chairman, two commissioners, director general (money laundering) and the head of the investigation team.

Benazir wrote that he was staying abroad with family for medical and other personal reasons.

He said he worked in different districts and it would take time for him to collect documents, records, and files relating to his assets and prepare a statement.

a pacemaker in her chest considering her physical condition," he said earlier.

Zahid sought prayers from the people of the country for her speedy recovery.

The BNP chairperson has been receiving treatment at the CCU since she was admitted to the hospital early Saturday.

Khaleda was rushed to Evercare Hospital in an ambulance around 3:30am as she suddenly fell ill at her residence, "Firoza" in Gulshan.

She was immediately admitted to the CCU, where medical treatment began under the supervision of the medical board.

Earlier, when Khaleda went to Evercare Hospital on May 1 for a regular health check-up, doctors treated her at the CCU for two days.

The former prime minister, 79, has long battled various ailments, including liver cirrhosis, arthritis, diabetes, and issues related to the kidney, lung, heart, and eyes.

Since her conditional release from prison in 2020, the BNP chief has been receiving medical care on several occasions at the hospital under the supervision of a medical board headed by cardiologist Prof Shahabuddin Talukder.

Khaleda's doctors have been advising sending her abroad since she was diagnosed with liver cirrhosis in November 2021.

On October 26, last year, three US specialist doctors completed a hepatic procedure known as the transjugular intrahepatic portosystemic shunt (TIPS procedure) to stop water accumulation in Khaleda's stomach and chest, and bleeding in her liver.

commitment made before the 2008 election. "Today's Bangladesh has gained dignity as we worked for the people."

"After being elected the president of the Awami League [in 1981], I returned to the country, depriving my children of mother's love and affection, mainly to implement the dream of my father to give the people beautiful and improved lives by changing their fate," she said.

The AL had a series of events over three days to mark its 75th founding anniversary. The last programme was yesterday's grand rally.

The rally was scheduled to start at 3:00pm but the leaders and activists of the party and its various affiliated organisations started gathering at the venue as the gates were opened around 11:00am.

Hasina arrived around 3:30pm.

After reaching the venue, Hasina hoisted the national flag as the national anthem was playing. AL General Secretary Obaidul Quader hoisted the party flag. They then released doves and balloons.

The opposition leader and Jatiya Party chairman, leaders of the AL-led 14-party alliance, and foreign diplomats, among others, were present.

A cultural programme was held on the stage, during which artistes of Shilpakala Academy sang the theme song of the founding anniversary and other patriotic songs, and danced.

Marking the day, Hasina paid homage to Father of the Nation Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman by placing a wreath at his portrait at the Bangabandhu Memorial Museum on Dhanmondi-32 in the morning.

Yet another investigator

Ferdous Doreen told reporters after meeting Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan that she heard a vested quarter was trying to get some of the arrestees out of jail.

On June 16, Saidul Karim Mintu, the general secretary of Jhenaidah Awami League, who allegedly told the assailants that they would get the blood money, was sent to jail before his eight-day remand was complete.

Mintu was placed on an eight-day remand, but the Detective Branch (DB) of the Dhaka Metropolitan Police, sent him to court within three days.

He did not make a confessional statement and maintained that he was not involved in the murder.

Asked why Mintu was taken to jail before the remand period was over, DB chief Harun said, "No law has been violated. It is the investigating officers' discretion. If officers believe there is nothing more to learn from a suspect, they can take the person to a court and the court can send them to jail.

"Had there been any pressure, we would not be able to accomplish so much. The home minister repeatedly said that there was no external pressure. He has instructed us to investigate impartially. No innocent person will be harassed."

Aktaruzzaman, who allegedly planned the murder, and several others have not been arrested yet, he said.

As the US and India have an extradition treaty, the authorities have requested Indian police to bring Aktaruzzaman back from the US.

Besides, the Interpol was contacted over the matter, and detectives have talked to the US Embassy in Dhaka.

"The investigation is winding up. We have arrested many. We have got some names. We are trying to arrest them."

Asked whether Doreen was going to Kolkata to give DNA samples, Harun said, "Indian police through the embassy requested Doreen to go to India. We spoke to her. She has been suffering from a fever for a few days."

Azim went to Kolkata on May 12. On May 22, India and Bangladesh police said the lawmaker was murdered.

BNP worried over BPSA statement

UNB, Dhaka

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday expressed concern over the Bangladesh Police Service Association's statement regarding media reports on corruption allegations against its former and current officials, calling it a threat to the media uncovering the truth.

"You have seen the corruption stories of several police officers (exposed by the media). The stories regarding corruption allegations against some other police officers are also surfacing," he said.

"But I am surprised to notice that the police association sent a statement to journalists, threatening them not to publish the truth, fearing it might tarnish their image," Fakhrul said.

He was speaking at a doa and milad mahfil at BNP's Nayapaltan headquarters.

Earlier on June 21, the BPSA issued a statement condemning what it termed a "smear campaign" orchestrated by certain media outlets against current and former members of the police force.

It claimed that recent reports against police members were exaggerated, partial, and intentionally misleading.

Publish list of loan defaulters in JS

Demands AK Azad, slams the provision to whiten black money

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Independent MP AK Azad from Faridpur-3 yesterday demanded that the government publish a list of loan defaulters in parliament.

He said these loan defaulters looted the bank's money and laundered it abroad.

Azad made this statement during the general discussion on the proposed budget for the 2024-25 fiscal year in parliament.

According to Bangladesh Bank, the official amount of defaulted loans is around Tk 1.82 lakh crores, but the actual amount is closer to Tk 5 lakh thousand crores, Azad claimed.

"Everyone knows who took this money. I have requested the finance minister to reveal their names in parliament for the sake of transparency and accountability. They are the ones who looted the bank's money and laundered it abroad," he said.

Azad also opposed the proposal to allow the whitening of black money with a 15 percent tax, arguing that it contradicts the Awami League's election manifesto, which declared zero tolerance for corruption.

"It is not understandable how the sovereign parliament can legalise the laundering of black money," he said, questioning why the source of black money cannot be scrutinised.

He praised the leadership of the prime minister, noting

AL 'lost its pro-people image'

Activists express concerns over party's deviation from core ideals

ASHIK ABDULLAH APU

Leaders and activists from various levels of the ruling Awami League have voiced concerns that the party has strayed from its founding principles, urging a focus on devoted activists rather than infiltrators.

"The ideology that inspired us to do Awami League's politics no longer exists. Here, the opportunists are getting more importance than the dedicated activists. Division within the party has become more acute due to personal interests," said Ajgar Hossain, former information and research affairs secretary of Pallabi thana unit AL, at a rally.

Hossain, a 70-year-old AL politician, expressed his frustration over the lack of disciplinary action against leaders who prioritise self-interest. He emphasised that activists who stood by the party during its darkest times are the true loyalists.

"If they are not given due importance and respect, who would protect the party and its ideology? The devotion that the activists of the 80s or 90s had is now missing," he added.

Amid such concerns, thousands of activists and leaders from AL and its affiliated organisations gathered at Suhrawardy Udyan in the capital yesterday to celebrate the party's platinum jubilee.

Carrying party and national flags, they arrived in buses, cars, trucks, and on foot, wearing colourful T-shirts and caps, creating a festive atmosphere as the ruling party marked 75 years.

Rajibul Islam, an activist from Ashulia upazila AL, believes the party has become its own worst enemy.

"Awami League is gradually drifting from its ideology and principles. The core activists of the party have been cornered by the hybrid ones. Businessmen are dominating the party politics. The party lawmakers have created their own circle in their areas, intensifying feud at the grassroots," he said, calling for steps to resolve these conflicts.

An anonymous AL activist from Gazipur said, "There has been a trend that doing Awami League's politics means acquiring huge wealth. It is an ominous sign. If this trend continues, dedicated leaders will be hard to find."

Some activists acknowledged public dissatisfaction over corruption and price hikes, expecting the party to address these issues.

"People have discomfort and complaints with the party over the failure to control price hikes of commodities and corruption. I expect the party would handle these issues with firm hands and prove it as a true pro-people party," said Murad Hossain, president of ward 19 unit of Dhaka north.

Pannu Mia, an AL leader from Nababganj upazila, remarked that the party had lost its "pro-people" image due to some "wrong decisions". He expressed hope that the party would consider public sentiments and re-establish itself as a party of the masses once again.

With flood situation in Sylhet improving, many started rebuilding damaged homes

DWOHA CHOWDHURY and MINTU DESHWARA

With water levels receding, hundreds of people in Sylhet are returning to their homes from shelter centres. Many have begun rebuilding their damaged houses.

Sitara Begum, 60, of Jamura village in Sunamganj's Chhatak, returned from the shelter centre yesterday, only to find her house badly damaged.

"The 2022 flood destroyed my old house completely. I then took a small loan to rebuild it and am still paying for that loan. Now that my home is damaged again, I don't know what to do," she said.

Khosru Uddin, who was in the Maizpara shelter centre on the banks of the Manu river, said their house has been damaged by floods twice. It is now too dangerous to stay in that house, he added.

Shayesta Mia, a resident of Shamshanghat area, said water levels in the river started falling since Friday (June 21).

On Friday night, the mayor of Moulvibazar municipality gave 10kg of rice per household. Government and private food assistance is much lower than the demand, said locals.

BLOGGER OYASIQUR MURDER

Trial yet to see closure in 9 years

Complainant still 'unavailable'

EMRUL HASAN BAPPI

Nine years into the murder of blogger Oyasiqur Rahman Babu, the trial of the case is yet to see any closure as the complainant and other witnesses are not appearing before a Dhaka court for statements.

A gang of banned militant outfit Ansarullah Bangla Team (ATB) hacked Oyasiqur, known for his secularist views and write-ups against fundamentalists, in broad daylight at the Tejgaon industrial area on March 30, 2015.

Locals caught two of the attackers on the spot and handed them over to the police.

The prosecution said 24 witnesses out of 40 testified in the case, but the complainant, Monir Hossain Masud, did not appear before the court in the last eight years to testify.

Till May 16 this year, the court summoned Masud, a cousin and also the brother-in-law of Oyasiqur, 77 times and even ordered his arrest, only to get his testimony, but the prosecution and the police could not produce him before the court.

"One year ago, we received the case for disposal. No witnesses appeared in this court [since they received the case] till May 16 this year," Khondaker Mohibul Hasan Apple, assistant public prosecutor of the Additional Metropolitan Sessions Judge's Court-12 of Dhaka, told The Daily Star recently.

On the day of the attack, Masud filed a murder case against four named and some unknown persons with the Tejgaon Industrial Police Station.

In July 2022, The Daily Star caught up with the complainant, Masud, at the capital's Arambagh, where he used to run a grocery shop.

At that time, he showed his reluctance to testify before the court. "Actually, I have no interest in the case now," he had said without any elaboration.

Now, he is not available there and he cannot even be reached over the phone.

KURIGRAM FLOOD

Rafts only means of transport for 150 families

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Lalmonirhat

At least 750 people from 150 families in Banglabazar Char Baralai village, Baravita union under Kurigram's Phulbari upazila, are facing commuting difficulties due to flooding.

In 2017, around 200 metres of the flood-control dyke in the area collapsed. Since then, the village has faced constant flooding every monsoon, forcing locals to rely solely on rafts made from banana trees to commute.

Children and the elderly use these rafts at great risk. Eighty students in the village, attending various schools and madrasas, have no choice but to use rafts to travel to and from their educational institutions.

Locals reported that the public representatives visited the area several times and promised to repair the collapsed dyke, but no action has been taken.

During the dry season, villagers can move around on foot, but in the monsoon, rafts become their only means of transport.

"It is very risky to travel this way as anyone can fall into the water anytime," said Golenur Bewa, 68.

Shah Alam, a member of the Baravita union parishad, said he had appealed to the local lawmaker to repair the collapsed dyke, adding that the MP has given assurances.

"The union parishad cannot carry out the repair work on its own due to a lack of funds. The lawmaker's representative visited the site," said Ataur Rahman Mintu, chairman of the union parishad.

Contacted, Hamidul Haque, lawmaker of Kurigram-2 constituency, said a project would be initiated during the next dry season to repair the dyke.

"Till then, boats will be arranged for the villagers' commute so they won't have to use rafts with risk," he added.

Three bodies recovered in Dinajpur, Rangpur

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Dinajpur

The police yesterday recovered three bodies from separate locations in Rangpur and Dinajpur.

The deceased are Mohammad Ali, 16, an easy bike driver of Mithapukur upazila in Rangpur; Shahinur Islam, 35, of Ghoraghat upazila in Dinajpur; and Md Mominur Rahman, 60, of Phulbari upazila in Dinajpur.

Rangpur Sadar Police Station Officer-in-Charge Bazlur Rashid said they recovered the body of Mohammad Ali from a crop field at Katabari village.

Ali had been missing since Friday. Police suspect that criminals killed him and snatched his easy bike.

Shahinur, who had been missing since Saturday afternoon, was found dead on the bank of the Karatoa river.

Meanwhile, Mominur died at a hospital yesterday, more than a month after he was attacked over family dispute.

42 more hospitalised with dengue

UNB, Dhaka

Of them, 12 patients were hospitalised in Dhaka, according to the Directorate General of Health Services (DGHS).

Haradhan Mallik, 70, the sixth generation descendant of Gopinath, still resides next to the temple at Mallikbari.

"Radha-Govinda idols were installed in the temple. The idol of Govinda was made of touchstone, and the idol of Radha was made of brass. Both idols were lost during the Liberation War in 1971. At present, a portrait of Radha-Madhav is installed in the temple," said Mallik.

"Locals still come here to worship. Researchers and university students sometimes come to visit the temple and take notes," he added.

According to Mizanur Rahman's book "Khulnar Purakirti", the temple was built with contributions from others and was later renovated by Satish Chandra Mitra, author of "Jasohar-Khulnar Itihas", about 100 years ago.

Humayun Kabir Boby, president of Sommilito Sangskritik Jot in Khulna, said, "The temple is of immense historical and archaeological importance. It is necessary to bring it under the archaeology department for preservation."

Lovely Yasmin, regional director of the Department of Archaeology, said the temple is in the process of being declared a protected antiquity under the Antiquities Act, 1968.

"A letter has been sent to the deputy commissioner and the local police administration last month to ensure the temple is protected," she added.

Sajjad Hossain of Bhukshimoil area of Kulaura upazila said his area is still waterlogged.

The situation in Kulaura, Juri, and Barlekha upazilas has also not normalised yet.

Javed Iqbal, executive engineer of the Water Development Board in Moulvibazar, said the water of the Monu and Dhalai rivers in Moulvibazar has started decreasing and is under the danger level.

The second round of floods started early on the night of June 17. Over 2.2 million people in Sylhet, Sunamganj, and Moulvibazar districts were affected.

The flood forced around 58,000 people to move to shelter centres, while thousands took shelter in other people's houses, high roads, and rail tracks.

Though water has receded, the administration is yet to calculate the losses incurred in terms of houses and other infrastructures.

Water levels in the Surma and Kushiyara rivers are still flowing above the danger level at some points, prolonging flooding in many areas.

The Surma was flowing 22 cm above the danger level in Sylhet's Kanaighat, while the Kushiyara was flowing 99 cm above danger level in Sylhet's Fenchuganj and 40 cm in Zakiganj.

According to BWDB, the Juri river of Moulvibazar contributes to the water level of the Kushiyara.

Sarder Uday Raihan, executive engineer of the Flood Forecasting and Warning Centre, said the flood situation in the Sylhet region will improve in the next 72 hours which started from Sunday morning.

Given the improved flood situation, tourist spots in Sylhet and Sunamganj -- including Jaflong, Sadapathor, Ratargul, and Tanguar Haor -- have been reopened by the administration.

Over the killing of Oyasiqur, Shah Md Mashiur Rahman, an inspector of the Detective Branch, submitted a charge sheet to a Dhaka court on September 2, 2015, accusing five members of ABT.

The Additional Metropolitan Sessions Judge's Court-3 of Dhaka on July 20, 2016 framed charges against the five ABT members -- Zikrullah, Ariful Islam, Saiful Islam, Akram Hossain Hasib alias Boro Bhai and Junayed Ahmed alias Taher.

On December 1 of 2022, the case was transferred to the Additional Metropolitan Sessions Judge's Court-12 of Dhaka.

Of the accused, Zikrullah, Ariful and Saiful are behind bars, while the other two are on the run.

The court set October 27, 2020 for delivering judgement in the case, but withheld its decision following a petition from the prosecution for adding section 120B (criminal conspiracy) of the Penal Code.

The court on November 4, 2020 reframed the charges against the accused.

After reframing charges, some of the key witnesses have been recalled, but Masud never appeared, said the prosecution.

Speaking to the reporters at the foreign ministry, Hasan Mahmud said the way the news about Matiur Rahman was published in the media was unexpected.

"Investigation will be done into the allegations against him. If the allegations are found true, action will be taken," he said.

The minister said he has already talked to the NBR chairman and Matiur has been removed from there.

He also talked to the Bangladesh Bank governor and initiatives have been taken to remove him from the Sonali Bank board. Yesterday, the government asked Matiur not to attend the board meetings of Sonali Bank PLC.

275-year-old temple on verge of ruin

Locals call for urgent conservation

DIPANKAR ROY, Khulna

A 275-year-old Jor Bangla temple, located in Khulna city's Maheshwarpasha area, is on the verge of collapse.

Built in 1749 by Gopinath Goswami during the reign of Nawab Alivardi Khan, the temple is a fine example of southern Bengal's architectural heritage.

It features the typical Jor Bangla style, consisting of two traditional "do-chala" village huts with curved roofs and square bases, placed side-by-side.

WHAT IS JOR BANGLA STYLE

The term "Jor Bangla" translates to "twin huts" or "pair of Bengal huts".

"Do-chala" refers to a traditional Bengali hut. The roof is curved, resembling the thatched roofs of rural Bengal, and is divided into two parts. Each part slopes downwards from a central ridge. In the Jor Bangla style, two of these huts are placed side-by-side. One hut typically functions as a porch.

The other serves as the main shrine or sanctum.

The walls of the temple are adorned with terracotta motifs and carvings depicting scenes from the Ramayana and the Mahabharata.

YEARS OF NEGLECT

A recent visit revealed that the temple, built on a three-foot-high platform, faces south and is visible from the road. Part of the front roof has collapsed, but the main structure, including its three arches and pillars, survives.

The temple was constructed with Jafri bricks and mortar made from lime and brick powder, and features a neo-classical triple-arch style.

Many terracotta plaques that once adorned the temple's walls are lost, though a few remain, depicting war scenes, animals, and floral motifs.

Many locals, like Shyamal Kumar Das, fear the temple may collapse any time.

The descendants of Gopinath Goswami, now lacking the financial means for restoration, hope for intervention from the Department of Archaeology under the Antiquities Act 1968 (amended 1976).

Probe body formed over bridge collapse

Locals allege substandard materials used in construction

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Patuakhali

A committee has been formed to investigate the incident in which a microbus carrying the bridal party plunged into a canal after an iron-made bridge collapsed, killing at least nine.

The accident occurred at Amtali in Barguna.

Amtali Fire Service Station Officer Noor Hossain said there were 13 passengers in the microbus.

Barguna Deputy Commissioner Md Rafiqul Islam formed the six-member probe body, which has been directed to submit a report within the next seven days.

Amtali Police Station Officer-in-Charge Shakhwat Hossain Tapu said an unnatural death case was filed on Saturday night and the bodies were handed over to the families.

Meanwhile, locals alleged that substandard materials were used in the bridge during the construction. They protested in Haldia Bazar area yesterday, demanding punishment for the contractor concerned.

The protestors said the bridge was constructed in 2008. After only five years, it became vulnerable.

Nearly 50,000 people of four villages have to use the bridge as there is no alternative to cross the canal.

According to LGED Amtali Upazila Engineer's office, the then Haldia UP chairman and union Awami League president Shahidul Islam Mridha was the contractor for the construction of this iron bridge with a project cost of Tk 2 crore.

Contacted, Mridha said, "I've constructed the bridge properly. I didn't commit any irregularity in the work."

DC Rafiqul Islam said legal action will be taken if any irregularity is found.

'WRONG TREATMENT'

Clinic manager, pathologist held in Mymensingh

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Mymensingh

Seven people were sued over the death of a farmer due to "wrong treatment" at a private clinic in Sherpur's Sreebordi upazila on Saturday afternoon.

The deceased is Maidan Ali, 55, a resident of Mamdamari in the upazila.

Quoting the victim's family members, police said Maidan's family members took him to a Unique Diagnostic Center for operation after being persuaded by brokers.

Shahin Miah, a staffer at the Sreebordi Upazila Health Complex, also works in the private clinic as a part-time staffer.

"After Maidan was admitted to the clinic, Shahin pushed an injection into Maidan's body. After some time, Shahin's condition started deteriorating and he died," said Qayum Khan Siddiqui, officer-in-charge of Sreebordi Police Station, quoting the victim's wife Morsheda Begum.

The victim's son filed a case accusing seven people yesterday, said Jalal Uddin, sub-inspector of the police station. Police have arrested the clinic's manager Jewel Mia and pathologist Tamim Miah. Drives are underway to arrest others, said Jalal.

Contacted, Dr Md Rahat Chowdhury, Sreebordi upazila health and family planning officer, said Shahin is a fourth-class staffer at the government health complex, and he does not have the jurisdiction to push an injection.

that Bangladesh is on the verge of transitioning from an underdeveloped country to a middle-income one by 2026.

However, he raised concerns about the budget allocation, noting that operational expenditure is estimated at Tk 5 lakh 6 thousand 971 crores, with 22.1 percent allocated to public administration.

He suggested forming an administrative committee to evaluate the necessity of so many ministries and departments.

Azad criticised the expenditure on vehicles for ACs and UNOs, questioning the necessity of such expenses when, in neighbouring India, ministers often use personal cars.

He also highlighted the challenges faced by entrepreneurs, including high interest rates on loans, insufficient electricity and fuel, and increased transport costs, contrasting this with the investment incentives offered by Indian states.

Jatiyo Party MP Masud Uddin Chowdhury also criticised the government's policy on whitening black money, arguing that it discourages honest taxpayers.

"Fifteen percent tax is being imposed to turn black money into white. It will discourage honest taxpayers and encourage black money holders who do not pay taxes," he said.

Independent MP from Kishoreganj-2, Suhrab Uddin, however, argued that a 15 percent tax would not incentivise people to disclose black money. He suggested reducing the tax to 5 percent to encourage the declaration of undisclosed income.

SUPERUNA
BAPPI LAHIRI PRESENTS RUNA LAILA

Runa Laila is a globally acclaimed artiste who has made her mark with various achievements including being honoured with the coveted Independence Award. This esteemed singer, famed especially in the subcontinent, began her singing career 60 years ago, observing six decades in music today.

Addressing the love, the songbird has been receiving all these years, she expressed, "Completing 60 years in music is a significant milestone in my career."

SHAH ALAM SHAZU

She has captivated the hearts of billions with her songs, by performing in 18 different languages. Her contributions have elevated Bangladesh to a distinctive level of international recognition.

In honour of her 60th anniversary in the industry, the singer spared some time to The Daily Star to convey her thoughts.

"Frankly speaking, it is surprising for me to even think that I have been singing for 60 years as I continue to remain in this profession. I plan to keep singing in the future as well. For this, I am deeply grateful to Almighty Allah. Through my ability to sing, I have received love, respect, and admiration from people. Claiming to be a lucky person, she stated, "I have been singing for a very long time and consider myself fortunate to be able to still perform. Just a few days ago, I recorded two new songs. I have the unwavering support of my family, and I continue to receive love from people. For these reasons, I truly feel lucky."

Addressing the love, the songbird has been receiving all these years, she expressed, "Completing 60 years in music is a significant milestone in my career. Even after six decades, I continue to receive love from so many people. Their numerous heartfelt messages and words of devotion touch my heart profoundly, making me very emotional. It is difficult to express just how emotional I feel. I can't help but feel like repeatedly conveying my love and gratitude to everyone."

"Today, Channel i has organised an event to commemorate my 60 years in music. I extend my love and gratitude to them," she informed.

Finding it difficult to choose a particularly memorable encounter with fans because she has had so many wonderful experiences, she said, "Throughout my decades' worth of career in music, I have gained many fans and audiences, both at home and abroad, who have shown me, immense love. It is hard to single out any particular experience because all of them mean so much to me. In one sentence, I extend my heartfelt thanks and gratitude to everyone. Although I am not physically close to them, I hold them dear in my heart as I remain indebted to them."

Elaborating on her plans with music, she communicated, "I still sing and continue to learn, as there is no end to learning music. I want to learn more. At this age, I realise that Allah has given me so much more than I could ever ask for. I don't seek anything more; I just want to continue giving through my songs."

In staying true to music and the coming days, she admitted, "Positive thinking has always been effective for me. Throughout my life, I have approached everything with a positive outlook. Even now, I focus on what can be achieved. I strive to create new songs and melodies, collaborating with new talents to help them progress. I have a deep appreciation for newcomers and their contributions."

"In 60 years of my musical journey, I hold deep love for everyone and extend infinite gratitude to all," she concluded.

BPSA statement a threat against media freedom

being run by print, electronic, and social media outlets are "partial, motivated, exaggerated, and misleading".

The Editors' Council, in its statement, said that by issuing a sweeping statement, the BPSA has brought forth the culture of "blame game".

It added that the authorities concerned could have gone to the Press Council following proper rules and regulations regarding any doubt over media's responsibility in publishing the news.

Instead of doing so, it resorted to the "blame game" by protesting the reports and issuing threats to the media in the name of "being extra cautious" while reporting on the Bangladesh police force in the future – this goes against independent media and impartial journalism.

The statement further said that the media also publish positive reports regarding the police force. However, the media, at the same time, also publish investigative reports with due professionalism on the accumulation of illegal wealth by the government officials in responsible positions.

The Council added that it expects continued support from the police force in the media's efforts to implement the government's anti-corruption policies.

DRU, BJC STATEMENTS

Two more journalist organisations -- Dhaka Reporters' Unity (DRU) and Broadcast Journalist Center (BJC) -- yesterday criticised BPSA's statement, stating that such a response is detrimental to independent journalism.

In separate statements, they said the BPSA statement may encourage individual corruption and create an atmosphere of threat in society.

"In recent times, some reports were published on the unusual asset amassment by some former and current officials. We don't think they were published with any specific intent," said the DRU statement.

"Journalists publish responsible and information-based news, and all the news about some of the current and former police officers is a continuation of that. The language in which some quarters and organisations are reacting to the news is against independent journalism.

"If an official is involved in corruption, it's his personal matter; it's not a decent job of the Police Service Association to blame the media over this. Rather, it could encourage personal corruption."

Meanwhile, BJC in its statement said, "At a time when it's necessary to continuously improve the environment of independent journalism in the interest of the public, such a statement targeting the media from an association of professionals will create a culture of threat in the society.

"Police officials, on different occasions, have said the institution will never take responsibility for any individual's wrongdoing. By making such a statement, isn't the institution taking on the responsibility of the individuals?"

BJC further said that issuing such a statement without any investigation into whether the media reports are true or false calls the BPSA's professional responsibility into question.

In the statement, BJC said if the reports about the former and current police officials are untrue and not based on evidence, the individual concerned can go to the Press Council to seek legal action.

Instead, the BPSA's statement terming all the reports "motivated" is tantamount to interference in independent journalism, it added.

On Saturday, Bangladesh Federal Union of Journalists and Dhaka Union of Journalists also protested the BPSA statement, terming it a threat to independent journalism.

TIB'S RESPONSE

Transparency International Bangladesh (TIB) yesterday strongly condemned the BPSA statement, calling it a direct threat to press freedom and an attempt to suppress the media's voice.

In a statement, the TIB said the association's statement appears to be a deliberate attempt to hinder the exposure of corruption, particularly in the recent cases of former top police officials who have amassed significant wealth, and an attempt to shield them.

TIB Executive Director Dr Iftekharuzzaman said, "The statement by the police association dismissing the recent reports of corruption involving former officials raises a red flag. It's not unreasonable to say that such a statement by the police officers' association potentially indicates a systematic effort to shield those accused within the force.

"On one hand, this statement by the country's law enforcement officers' association is a direct threat to press freedom and an attempt to suppress the voice of the media. On the other hand, it's a clear violation of the citizens' constitutional right to information. It would not be an exaggeration to say that the BPSA is attempting to 'bury its head in the sand like an ostrich' by essentially denying reality."

He blasted the BPSA's claim that reporting corruption tarnishes the police image. He pointed out that media reports detailing extensive investigations into corruption by former top police officials are being met with the weak argument of "tarnishing the police image".

"This raises concerns about the police forces' capability and integrity to stop corruption. A more constructive approach would have been a prompt announcement of an internal investigation or support for an independent probe into these serious allegations. Such a move would demonstrate the force's commitment in tackling corruption."

About the BPSA statement regarding the police force's contribution, Iftekharuzzaman said, "We always recognise and appreciate the police's contributions in various struggles, disasters, and crises, starting from the war of independence in Bangladesh. However, we can't recognise their abuse of power and corruption, and let their contribution be used as a licence to commit crimes or as a tool to protect criminals. This raises serious ethical concerns about the law enforcement agency."

Referring to the home ministry's letter to the information ministry, the TIB said it is as an ominous signal not only for media freedom in the country but also for the entire accountable democratic system.

The TIB reiterates the need for the home ministry and the BPSA to perform their constitutional duties and carry out thorough inquiries into these claims with transparency.

Brazil start

title before accepting the Brazil job in January.

Dorival had a lot on his plate with the national team as, while Brazil waited for Ancelotti, they went through a spell in the wilderness during which they had historic negative results.

They suffered defeat in three consecutive World Cup qualifiers for the first time, their first loss to Uruguay for 22 years and saw the end of a 58-match unbeaten home streak in the qualifiers, which led to their worst campaign ever with seven points from a possible 18 after six rounds.

Add to that the loss of talisman Neymar, with a ruptured anterior cruciate ligament and meniscus in his left knee on international duty in October, and Brazil hit rock bottom.

With no Ancelotti and a team in turmoil, Dorival turned his attention to recovering the confidence and self esteem of a young and revamped squad in which Vinicius Jr claimed the responsibility of carrying the load as Brazil's key player.

With two months to prepare for matches against England and Spain, Dorival relied on his players' grit and pride, fixing up a team that was more feisty than colourful.

They got a 1-0 win over England at Wembley and fought back to draw 3-3 with Spain at the Bernabeu earlier this year.

In both games his hero was teenage sensation Endrick, who became the youngest to score at Wembley aged 17 and a few days later got the equaliser against Spain, leaving Real Madrid fans salivating as he is will soon join the European champions.

The Copa America will be the first time Dorival has had time to work extensively with his players, who face Costa Rica following a three-week training camp in Florida before taking on Paraguay and Colombia in Group D.

With most of the attention on world champions Argentina and Lionel Messi, now playing in the MLS, Brazil will start their Copa America campaign without great expectations - something Dorival will be familiar with from his experience at club level.

A strategic mishap

Eights. But ace all-rounder Shakib Al Hasan was of the opinion that the said freedom could never kick in as the batters' willow rarely did the talking.

"Obviously, we have a shortage of runs as a batting unit. So, the freedom we needed, the confidence we needed, I don't think it was there," Shakib said at the press conference after the game against India.

What has the coaching staff done to improve batting efforts?

Nic Pothas had previously handled the Tigers' batting unit before David Hemp took over the responsibility. It is, however, clear that batting has decayed in recent times and has not been helped by the surfaces at home. Even though those surfaces had been prepared as per the team management's wishes, Bangladesh batters have fared well neither on sporting tracks, like the one in Antigua, nor on the more difficult and slower tracks in this World Cup.

In fact, when push came to shove, they dropped one pacer, Taskin Ahmed, from the lineup to make room for an extra batter -- wicket-keeper batter Jaker Ali. Taskin has been able to set the aggression of the bowling unit on various surfaces recently but the advantage that the management felt could be availed by making this change, was not evident. The extra batter did not mean Bangladesh went for the game head-on, evident from yet another meek Powerplay effort while in chase of a 197-run target.

If attack and freedom to attack were what Bangladesh went for, strategically, they barred themselves from going on the attack with their strongest department which is their bowling. Instead, they stacked the lineup with the underperforming batters against India.

The Tigers' think tank also read the pitch wrong and it led to massive ineffectiveness in their bowling effort. Questions were raised as to why Bangladesh opened with spinners from both ends against two of the best players of spin like Rohit Sharma and Virat Kohli.

Understandably, Shakib did not take responsibility for the decision to bowl first and also use spinners so extensively in the Powerplay, mentioning that it is "the coach and captain's decision." However, Shakib did mention that the team management's decision could be based on their perception of playing on a slower surface.

After Afghanistan's historic win over Australia yesterday -- which kept the Tigers afloat in the mega event -- their skipper Rashid Khan outlined that their coaching staff are often reminding them of specific plans discussed in team meetings. Bangladesh, on the other hand, looked desolate, without a particular strategy they could exploit.

Majumder is to retire on July 19, and Anti-Terrorism Unit (ATU) Additional Inspector General SM Ruhul Amin on July 30, according to the police database.

Sources said there are discussions regarding the extension of Mamun's tenure for another six months.

However, two new names -- Additional Inspector General (admin and operations) of PHQ Kamrul Ahsan, Additional Inspector General (crime and operations) of PHQ Md Atikul Islam -- prominently came up for the next possible IGP.

A highly-placed source at PHQ said Kamrul Ahsan is ahead in the race.

Another source said Krishna Pada Roy is expected to replace Banaj Kumar Majumder as the new PBI chief.

Md Saiful Islam, chief of the Metro Rail Police wing of the PHQ, will replace Krishna Pada Roy as the new CMP commissioner, reads the home ministry order.

Md Jamil Hasan, DIG of the Barishal range, against whom corruption allegations recently surfaced in media reports, has been transferred to the Highway Police unit. PBI DIG Eliash Sharif will replace Jamil as the new Barishal Range DIG.

Official from UK PM's party probed over election bets

REUTERS, London

An official from Prime Minister Rishi Sunak's Conservative Party is being investigated by Britain's gambling regulator over allegations he placed bets on the date of the general election before it was announced, the Sunday Times reported.

Britain's Gambling Commission has already been reported to be investigating two Conservative election candidates and the party's director of campaigning over bets on date of July 4 polls.

The widening scandal has further damaged Sunak's attempts to catch the opposition Labour Party, which is far ahead in opinion polls in run-up to the polls.

The official was named as Nick Mason, chief data officer at the Conservative Party. Mason did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

Bangladeshi-origin minorities voted for Congress

Claims Assam CM

HINDUSTAN TIMES ONLINE

Assam Chief Minister Himanta Biswa Sarma has claimed that the Bangladeshi-origin minority community members "overwhelmingly" voted for the Congress in the just concluded Lok Sabha elections, without considering the "developmental work done for them by the BJP-led governments at the Centre and in the state."

Sarma alleged that the Bangladeshi-origin minority community is the only one in Assam which indulges in communalism, PTI reported.

The Bharatiya Janata Party-AGP-UPPL coalition won 11 out of 14 Lok Sabha seats in Assam, while the Congress won the remaining three.

"If we analyse the 39 percent votes of the Congress, it is not spread across the state. Fifty percent of it is concentrated in 21 assembly segments which are minority dominated. In these minority-dominated segments, BJP got 3 percent votes," he claimed while speaking at the felicitation programme of the winning BJP candidates.

Continuing further, Sarma said, "This proves that Hindus do not indulge in communalism. If anyone indulges in communalism in Assam, it is only one community, one religion. No other religion does it."

The Assam chief minister said that the minority-dominated areas have voted for Congress and did again, despite not having roads and electricity.

Israeli forces tie injured Palestinian to jeep in raid

REUTERS, Jerusalem

Israeli army forces strapped a wounded Palestinian man to the hood of a military jeep during an arrest raid in the occupied West Bank city of Jenin on Saturday.

A video circulating on social media and verified by Reuters showed a Palestinian resident of Jenin, Mujahed Azmi, on the jeep that passes through two ambulances.

The Israeli military in a statement said Israeli forces were fired at and exchanged fire, wounding a suspect and apprehending him.

Soldiers then violated military protocol, the statement said. "The suspect was taken by the forces while tied on top of a vehicle," it said.

The military said the "conduct of the forces in the video of the incident does not conform to the values" of the Israeli military and that the incident will be investigated and dealt with.

The individual was transferred to medics for treatment, the military said. Reuters was able to match the location from corroborating and verified footage shared on social media that shows a vehicle transporting an individual tied on top of a vehicle in Jenin. The date was confirmed by an eyewitness interviewed by Reuters.

According to the family of Azmi, there was an arrest raid, and he was injured during the raid, and when the family asked for an ambulance, the army took Mujahed, strapped him on the hood and drove off.

Food piles up at Gaza crossing in south

Aid agencies say they are unable to work due to continued Israeli strikes, breakdown of public order

AFP, Jerusalem

Days after Israel announced a daily pause in fighting on a key route to allow more aid into Gaza, chaos in the besieged Palestinian territory has left vital supplies piled up and undistributed in the searing summer heat.

More than eight months of offensive have led to dire humanitarian conditions in the Gaza Strip and repeated UN warnings of famine.

Desperation among Gaza's 2.4 million population has increased as fighting rages, sparking warnings from agencies that they are unable to deliver aid.

Israel says it has let supplies in and called on agencies to step up deliveries.

"The breakdown of public order and safety is increasingly endangering humanitarian workers and operations in Gaza," the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, OCHA, said in a briefing later on Friday.

"Alongside the fighting, criminal activities and the risk of theft and robbery has effectively prevented humanitarian access to critical locations."

But Israel says it has allowed hundreds of trucks of aid into southern Gaza, trading blame with the United Nations over why the aid is stacking up.

It shared aerial footage of containers lined up on the Gazan side of the Kerem Shalom crossing and more trucks arriving to add to the stockpile.

With civil order breaking down in Gaza, the UN says it has been unable to pick up any supplies from Kerem Shalom since Tuesday, leaving crucial aid in limbo.

A deputy UN spokesman this week said the crossing "is operating with limited functionality, including because of fighting in the area".

William Schomburg, International Committee of the Red Cross chief in Rafah, said arranging lorries from the Egyptian side in particular was complicated.

Philippines won't be intimidated

Says Marcos amid China row

AFP, Manila

President Ferdinand Marcos said yesterday the Philippines "will not be intimidated" by anyone after a violent clash between the Filipino navy and the Chinese coast guard in the South China Sea.

The confrontation took place last Monday off Second Thomas Shoal as the Chinese sailors foiled an attempt by Philippine forces to resupply marines stationed on a derelict warship that was deliberately grounded atop the disputed shoal in 1999 to assert Manila's territorial claims.

It was the latest and most serious incident in a series of escalating confrontations between Chinese and Philippine ships in recent months as Beijing steps up efforts to push its claims to nearly all of the strategically located waterway.

"We will never be intimidated or oppressed by anyone," Marcos said in a speech during a visit to the headquarters of the Philippines' South China Sea forces on Palawan island.

Marcos awarded medals to 80 sailors who took part in the resupply mission, urging them to "continue to fulfil your duty of defending the nation" even as he said the situation has become "dangerous".

Second Thomas Shoal lies about 200 kilometres from Palawan and over 1,000 kilometres from China's nearest major landmass, Hainan island.

Trump courts Black voters in Philadelphia

Asks Christians to back him one last time

REUTERS, Philadelphia

Donald Trump made two speeches on Saturday, urging Christian supporters to go to the polls for him one last time and courting Black voters in Philadelphia by promising to fix a city "ravaged by bloodshed" even as data shows a decline in violent crime.

If elected in November, the Republican presidential candidate told a rally of several thousand at Philadelphia's Temple University, he would give police "immunity" to do their jobs and "surge" federal resources to cities battling violence.

Trump dismissed as "fake" FBI statistics that showed a continued drop in levels of violent crime and murder across the country in the first three months of 2024, and accused Democratic President Joe Biden of lying about the data.

"Under crooked Joe Biden the City of Brotherly Love is being ravaged by bloodshed and crime," Trump said in an arena in a historically Black neighbourhood, addressing an audience more diverse than a typical rally, but still largely white.

"Under the Trump administration we are going to bring law and order and safety back to our streets."

The promise to fight crime was part of a larger pitch to Black and Hispanic people, who form more than half the city's population.

Deaths from Indian toxic alcohol rise to more than 50

AFP, Chennai

The death toll from a batch of toxic illegal alcohol in India has risen to 53, media reported yesterday, as more victims in hospital succumbed to the poisonous brew.

Tamil Nadu state Chief Minister M.K. Stalin has said the locally brewed arrack drink was laced with poisonous methanol, killing 37 within hours after they drank the illegal alcohol on Tuesday.

More than 100 people were rushed to hospital, but some were too sick for medics to save.

An AFP photographer, who had visited the hard-hit Kallakurichi district during the first wave of deaths, reported how the sky was darkened by plumes of smoke that rose from dotted funeral pyres, as wailing relatives gathered to mourn.

Hundreds of people die every year in India from cheap alcohol made in backstreet distilleries, but this poisoning is one of the worst in recent years.

To increase its potency, the liquor is often spiked with methanol which can cause blindness and death.

The Indian Express yesterday quoted a local councillor, Palraj, describing how poor labourers in Kallakurichi regularly bought the liquor in plastic bags costing 60 rupees, which they would drink before work.

Superrich politicians, superrich officials

Will there be no accountability for those exploiting public office?

Another day, another unsavoury disclosure about a public official. The latest in a series of recent scandals involving potential abuse of public office for personal gain has—as its protagonist—a female upazila parishad chairman, at Narsingdi's Raipura upazila. According to an investigative report by this daily, Laila Kaniz Lucky, also a retired government college teacher, has amassed substantial wealth that does not align with her known sources of income. Fittingly titled "How Lucky got so lucky!", the report delves into the discrepancies in her declared assets, which were either hidden or massively undervalued.

Her wealth statement, filed with the Election Commission before this year's Narsingdi upazila polls, claims she is worth Tk 10.31 crore. However, detailed investigations suggest her actual wealth could be dozens of times higher. Her properties include extensive land holdings and multiple flats in prime locations in Dhaka, but those have been valued suspiciously low. Certain assets were also omitted, such as her co-ownership of the Wonder Park and Eco Resort, a sprawling green expanse with a lake and lakeside cottages, or her lavish mansion with an approaching road named after her. This further deepens the suspicion of financial misrepresentation. For a public representative who only broke into politics in recent years and lives on a pension of Tk 4.65 lakh per year, having so much wealth indeed raises eyebrows.

This last part is where ongoing speculations surrounding her husband make better sense. Lucky is married to Matiur Rahman, a high-ranking official at the National Board of Revenue (NBR), who recently came under the spotlight after his son from his second marriage posted about an expensive sacrificial goat on social media. NBR sources and documents seen by The Daily Star suggest that he along with his close and distant family members have great wealth, including significant stakes in various companies. Matiur has been removed from his NBR post after recent controversies, and an investigation by the Anti-Corruption Commission (ACC) is under way. But given Lucky's questionable tax filings, one cannot shake off the suspicion that Matiur might have used her as a vessel or front to obscure their wealth and avoid scrutiny.

All this indeed deserves a thorough investigation. The Lucky revelations have again brought three sociopolitical trends to the fore: the growing number of superrich politicians and officials in Bangladesh, gross undervaluation of assets in affidavits submitted by political candidates to election authorities, and widespread corruption in public sector—all of which are going unchecked. Recent disclosures about the alleged involvement of retired top security officials in various irregularities have further underscored the lack of accountability for those holding public office and the corrupt influences of power. We must check these disturbing trends. We must ensure that those in public office are held up to the highest standards of integrity, accountability, and transparency.

Preserve the past, protect historic sites

Mymensingh's Alexandra Castle must be renovated urgently

Bangladesh has a rich history and culture, but when it comes to preserving our heritage sites, we do a poor job. The Alexandra Castle in Mymensingh city is a glaring example of our apathy towards preservation work. A report in this daily details how this beautiful 145-year-old structure, built mostly with wood and iron, has fallen into ruins as a result.

Built as a guest house in 1879, the two-storied, tin-shade building once lodged dignitaries including Rabindranath Tagore and Mahatma Gandhi. Since the Partition, it has been used by Teachers' Training College for various purposes. The first floor was used as a teachers' dormitory, which had to be moved later because of the floor's precarious condition. The ground floor has a library, but it is seldom used. That this beautiful architecture, popularly known as "Lohar Kuthi", has been in dire need of renovation for years is evident everywhere, from the plinth on which the building stands to the iron balusters, the louvered shutters on the balcony, the decorative balusters on the roof, and even the two partially broken Greek sculptures on the building premises.

According to the Department of Archaeology (DoA), the kuthi was enlisted as an archaeological site in 2018. It is obvious that the department did not carry out any renovation on the building in the last six years. A top official told our district correspondent that necessary funds for renovation and restoration of all archaeological sites in Dhaka and Mymensingh have been approved, and that the work will start in the next fiscal year, meaning sometime between July 2024 and June 2025.

Such a statement should make us hopeful, but it is difficult to take DoA at its word. The department's past performance in terms of protecting, preserving and restoring heritage sites has been quite disappointing. It has 113 archaeological sites under its protection, but the conditions of many of those remain far from protected, with many facing threats of ruin and illegal occupation. We urge the DoA to push aside its lacklustre attitude and realise its mandate to restore and preserve these historical landmarks, keeping their architectural integrity intact.

THIS DAY IN HISTORY

CIVIL WAR IN MYANMAR

Bangladesh must show firm stance regarding territorial integrity

M Humayun Kabir, president of Bangladesh Enterprise Institute (BEI) and a former ambassador, talks to Tamanna Khan of The Daily Star about the implication of the ongoing conflict in Myanmar's Rakhine state between the country's military and the Arakan Army.*

Myanmar's internal conflict has been affecting our southeastern border, especially St Martin's Island. How do you analyse this situation?

It is a very complex and difficult situation because we have a problem with the Rohingya population that have taken shelter in Bangladesh. We have been bearing their responsibility for the last seven years. On top of that, a new problem has cropped up: the internal conflict in Myanmar that has now come to our border. In recent times, some bullets and shells from across the Myanmar border landed on Bangladesh. In the last two or three weeks, we have been having some difficulty also in the southeastern border areas, particularly around Cox's Bazar. We have seen St Martin's Island coming under fire from the Myanmar side as well.

We have taken a somewhat benign approach to this issue because we consider whatever is happening in Rakhine to be an internal matter of Myanmar. That's why we have refrained from taking any initiative other than the diplomatic one. We have lodged protests through the diplomatic channel against cross-border firing and also protested whenever there has been a report on border violations. We have also tried to maintain calm and arranged return of groups that entered Bangladesh. In the process, we sent a clear signal to the Myanmar side and to the international community that Bangladesh considers the ongoing conflict as an internal affair of Myanmar, and we have no intention and no interest to get involved in this process. Our key interest is to facilitate the quick return of the Rohingya population that have taken shelter in Bangladesh back to Myanmar as soon as possible. That remains our priority.

What implications does this conflict have for Bangladesh?

It looks like the military conflict is intensifying and there is a growing prospect of the Arakan Army dominating the Rakhine landscape and taking control of the region from the Myanmar military. If that happens, it will create a situation that we have never faced before. For example, we want to maintain our relationship with Myanmar as a neighbouring country. If the Rakhine state, which is the connecting point between Myanmar and Bangladesh, goes under the Arakan Army's control, the question then will be: what kind of relationship should we maintain with the Myanmar government? Under that hypothetical scenario, what will happen to the repatriation possibility of the Rohingya? The Bangladesh government does not recognise the Arakan Army as a political entity. If they physically control Rakhine, what kind of relationship will we have with them? So, this internal armed conflict in Myanmar is opening up a scenario which is a potential diplomatic challenge for Bangladesh. Additionally, it will further complicate the Rohingya repatriation issue.

As for the firing on Bangladeshi boats from the Myanmar side, it makes our population living near the Myanmar border vulnerable. This also hampers communication between the mainland and St Martin's Island. In the last two to three weeks, there has been no regular traffic between the mainland and the island. Of late, we have heard remarks from different quarters about St Martin's. If the island comes under any kind of threat from the Myanmar side, it will raise questions about our territorial integrity. For Bangladesh, it means we are facing a three-dimensional threat: diplomatic, military, and strategic. That's why it is extremely important now for Bangladesh to not only diplomatically engage with Myanmar and let them know that we are not involved in their internal affairs, but also take appropriate action to defend our territorial integrity, should the situation aggravate further along the border.

M Humayun Kabir

Is there anything else that we should do?

I think that some kind of demonstration of our determination is also required. If needed, we can go back to our old playbook that could guide us to tackle any kind of challenge around St Martin's Island. I think since the issue is affecting our national security, we should be firm and then demonstrate that firmness to Myanmar. At the same time, we should convey that message to the Arakan Army too. At this point, I don't believe that they are intentionally violating our territorial integrity or shooting at St Martin's. Even in that kind of situation, it is important for us to convey a message to them that this is not acceptable. And if this continues, Bangladesh will have to protect its territorial integrity.

Previously, you talked about Bangladesh facilitating a ceasefire. Is that still an option?

At that time, that could have been a possible move. But the situation has taken a different turn now. So, I do not believe that we are at that stage to talk about a ceasefire. Now, it looks like the conflict may take two shapes. Under the first scenario, the conflict in Rakhine may intensify with the Myanmar military deploying their land and air assets to overpower the Arakan Army, which seems remote. The second scenario could be that the Arakan Army takes full military control of the Rakhine state and then possibly negotiates a ceasefire. Whichever situation arises, new options have to be explored.

Do you think more Rohingya refugees might try to enter Bangladesh as the conflict escalates?

Well, there have been reports in the international media and humanitarian organisations in recent weeks that the Rohingya are being used or abused by both sides. There are reports that the Myanmar government is using the Rohingya. Some reports mentioned that some of the Rohingya are working for the Arakan Army as well. As a result, the Rohingya population is facing great difficulty within Myanmar and particularly in Rakhine now. There are reports that in the Buthidaung town, the Arakan Army burned thousands of houses of the Rohingya, but they issued statements denying their role in the arson and accusing the other side. The Rohingya are caught in the crossfire. There are about 600,000 Rohingya still living in Rakhine. If they are in difficulty, there is a possibility of them trying to cross over to Bangladesh, despite Bangladesh clearly stating that no more Rohingya will be accepted. So, multiple challenges are brewing up on the Myanmar front: diplomatic, humanitarian, military, and strategic. As a way forward, it is extremely important that we discuss this issue with our friends in India, China, Japan and Thailand—those who can somehow influence Myanmar and other groups, including the Arakan Army. One could also think of raising this issue with the United Nations. On our part, we should also take appropriate steps to protect our territorial integrity and safety of our own people, continue our work to ensure earliest possible repatriation of the Rohingya population back to Myanmar, and reach out to all actors to achieve our objectives.

Why are gas prices so volatile?

MOSTAFIZ UDDIN

The invasion of Ukraine by Russia in 2022 had significant implications for the global gas supply chain, and caused what many termed a gas crisis. The reduction in supply led to a dramatic rise in gas prices globally.

Indeed, gas prices in Europe reached unprecedented levels, impacting energy costs across the continent. The price hikes were not limited to Europe; they affected global markets as countries competed for alternative sources of natural gas. The increased demand for liquefied natural gas (LNG) further strained global supply chains and drove up prices.

Yet, at the start of 2024, gas prices plunged globally, before rising again in recent weeks.

This volatility of the global market has had an impact on Bangladesh and its industrial base, which mostly depends on gas to remain operational. Natural gas is the primary source of energy in the country, used extensively for electricity generation, industrial processes, and others.

If manufacturers crave anything, it is stability. Sharp movements in commodity prices create uncertainty and can have a huge impact on the balance sheet.

With energy being a huge variable cost for manufacturers, the question arises: what has been causing the gas price volatility around the world?

There are several factors at play. First, supply and demand are the primary factors influencing gas prices. When supply exceeds demand, prices tend to fall, whereas prices rise when demand outpaces supply. Factors affecting supply include natural gas production levels, import/export volumes, and storage inventories. Demand is driven by consumption in residential, commercial, and industrial sectors, as well as power generation. Seasonal variations, such as increased heating in winter and cooling in summer, also play a significant role. Technological advancement in extraction methods can boost supply, while economic growth can drive higher demand. Conversely, a slowdown in industrial activity or warmer-than-expected winter temperatures can reduce demand, leading to lower prices.

Second, extreme weather events, such as cyclones, can disrupt gas production and distribution infrastructure, causing supply shortages and price spikes. Seasonal weather forecasts and unexpected weather patterns can therefore create significant fluctuations in the gas market. Accurate weather forecasting is crucial for market participants to anticipate demand changes and manage price risks. Overall, weather remains one of the most unpredictable and influential factors in gas price determination.

Third, the overall economic environment heavily influences gas prices. Economic growth generally leads to increased industrial activity and higher energy consumption, including natural gas. Conversely, during economic downturns, industrial activity slows, reducing demand for gas and exerting downward pressure on prices. Inflation and currency fluctuations can also affect gas prices by influencing production costs and the purchasing power of importing countries. Additionally, economic policies, such as interest rate changes, can impact investment in gas infrastructure and production capabilities.

Fourth, global market dynamics, including geopolitical events, trade policies, and competition with other energy sources, significantly impact gas prices. Geopolitical tensions in key gas-producing regions can lead to supply disruptions and price volatility. For instance, conflicts in the Middle East or trade disputes involving major exporters like Russia can create uncertainties in supply chains. International trade policies, including tariffs and export regulations, also affect the flow of natural gas across borders. Moreover, the competition between natural gas and other energy sources, such as oil, coal, and renewables, influences pricing. When prices of alternative fuels change, it can shift the demand for natural gas. Global market influences emphasise the interconnected nature of energy markets, where events in one region can ripple across the world, affecting gas prices.

Fifth, government policies and regulations are also crucial in determining gas prices. Environmental regulations, such as carbon pricing and emissions standards, can affect production costs and operational practices in the natural gas industry. Subsidies or incentives for renewables can also shift demand away from gas, influencing its market price. Policies related to exploration and drilling, such as permits and land use regulations, impact the availability of natural gas supplies. Additionally, international agreements and policies on trade and energy cooperation can affect gas exports and imports. Strategic reserves and emergency response policies can mitigate price spikes during supply disruptions.

Overall, government actions at local, national, and international levels play a significant role in determining the regulatory landscape, market behaviour, and ultimately, the price of gas.

So, how can Bangladeshi manufacturers withstand the impact of fluctuating gas prices? The obvious ways are via diversification of energy use and energy efficiency improvement.

Manufacturers can also use financial instruments such as futures, options, and swaps to hedge against natural gas price volatility. These financial tools allow companies to lock in prices or set price caps, providing more predictable energy costs.

Finally, negotiating long-term supply contracts with natural gas providers can offer price stability. These contracts often include fixed or capped prices, which can shield manufacturers from short-term market fluctuations.

Of professors and publications

Md Mahmudul Hasan
is professor in the Department of English Language and Literature, International Islamic University Malaysia. He can be reached at mmhasan@iium.edu.my.

MD MAHMUDUL HASAN

I have been editing the Scopus-indexed journal Asiatic since 2020. It is arguably one of the prestigious publications on Asian (literary) themes and writers. In this role, I have interacted and made friends with a great number of academics who seem to be grateful for their experience with the journal's editorial process. I have high regard for their interest in knowledge production and for their academic competence. But I have also come to know some others whose approach to research, scholarly insight, and academic prowess have not been very impressive.

Once I had email exchanges with an academic from a far-off country. Before formally submitting their manuscript to Asiatic, they wanted to tell me about themselves and to know more about the journal.

They introduced themselves to me with a great emphasis on their designation, that is, "full professor." Soaring above prejudice or preconceived notions, I requested them to submit their work for evaluation and consideration for publication in the journal. They obliged.

However, the quality of their work didn't go very well with their professional identity on which they were laying so much emphasis in the email communication. Very basic norms of research that I teach undergraduate students were absent in the work they submitted. It was desk-rejected. I asked a member of the editorial board to send the "full professor" a polite rejection letter.

Last year, I was conversing on the phone with an academic friend who is affiliated with a university in Bangladesh. I tried to encourage them to do research and publish. I even mentioned that they might consider submitting their work to Asiatic for publication. But I was not prepared for what they told me in response to my suggestion.

They told me that research and publication were not prerequisites for promotion to professor. With age and teaching experience, they would be a "full professor" automatically. Initially, I shuddered at this process of promotion to professor, but eventually came to terms with the reality in Bangladesh. What they said is true.

The preponderance of professors on the lists of academics in various departments of Bangladeshi universities is simply staggering. Undoubtedly, those lists contain names of many gifted professors with impressive academic credentials and achievements. But there are also others who became "full professors" through the process that my friend mentioned to me.

I strongly believe that promotion of undeserving academics to the rank of professor is an insult to those who have moved their way up the academic ladder the harder way: through genuine scholarship and valuable academic contributions. Promoting undeserving colleagues to the rank of professor definitely causes disquiet among worthy professors. And the anguish of the latter often remains suppressed. Let me repeat: promoting incompetent academics to professorship amounts to a total disregard to the academic commitment and devotion of sound and true professors.

In June 2010, I joined the Department of English Language and Literature at the International Islamic University Malaysia (IIUM) as an assistant professor, leaving my academic position at the University of Dhaka. I am the only one in my department at IIUM to have been promoted to professor since then. In nearly 14 years, most of my esteemed colleagues who have retired from the department have done so as assistant or associate professors.

Most of my colleagues who are currently assistant or associate professors, or those who have retired with these ranks, have terminal degrees from universities in (English-speaking) countries. I will be remiss if I don't mention that many of my assistant and associate professor colleagues are no less competent than those who carry the title of "full professor" in certain countries.

University teachers generally remain busy with their work with little time to bother about the writing of fellow academics. But my role as the editor-in-chief of Asiatic has offered me a window of opportunity to read and evaluate the work of academics from various countries. While I remain awed and inspired by the writing skills and abilities of many academics, there are others whose work cannot be regarded as a mark of academic competence.

In my experience of reading manuscripts produced by university academics, unfortunately, in many cases I have not noticed much difference in the quality of work produced by professors and non-professors. Often, I have felt embarrassed to have had to decline to publish manuscripts produced or submitted by professors. In some cases, I have read manuscripts with multiple authors including professors, but their quality does not reflect the experience and expertise expected of those senior academics. A disconcerting question I often ask myself is: has the professor really contributed to such a manuscript whose author list includes their name? If the answer to this question is in the affirmative, one would form a very poor impression about their academic abilities. Conversely, if the answer is in the negative, we are face to face with an ethical crisis here. Is it morally acceptable to insert one's name in the author list of a manuscript to which one has not contributed sufficiently enough to deserve authorship?

What I dare suggest in this column is that there are fundamental issues in the way academics in some countries are promoted to professor. Therefore, the difference in the quality and academic commitment of professors and non-professors is increasingly becoming blurred. I do not doubt the inherent potential of professors who may not be worthy of the designation that they carry. It may well be the case that years of non-involvement in meaningful research have blunted their academic abilities. Their writing skills may have rusted from all those years of not writing and not publishing. What's more, the opportunity for them to become co-authors of manuscripts to which they make little or no contribution has rendered them averse to putting efforts that are needed to produce quality materials.

The non-involvement of professors in significant research and scholarship has far-reaching consequences. It negatively affects the quality of instruction they provide to students. If they themselves are not good (academic) writers, one may ask: how can they train their students to be competent future writers and scholars?

I am not proposing to the authorities and stakeholders of universities to strip (incompetent) professors of their titles. Instead, through anecdotes and personal observations, I want to make a moral appeal to senior academics to be more active in research and publication and to have unwavering commitment to quality work. Their meaningful engagement in research and publication will have a positive impact on the way they teach and on the course content that they transmit to their students. Needless to say, that will help protect their country from intellectual slavery to hegemonic foreign powers. Therefore, this is the best way for academics to serve their country and its people. If they choose otherwise and remain busy establishing links with, and seeking favours from, the corridors of powers, they may gain instant perks and popularity, but that will amount to intellectual betrayal to the nation.

The case for an AI law in Bangladesh

Warda Ruheen Bristi and Shafin Haque Omlan
are research associates at Bangladesh Institute of Governance and Management (BIGM).

WARDA RUHEEN BRISTI and SHAFIN HAQUE OMLAN

On March 13, 2024, the European Union (EU) passed the world's first Artificial Intelligence (AI) Act. In an era defined by rapid technological advancement, the rise of AI presents both unprecedented opportunities and complex challenges for nations worldwide, and the EU has become the first entity to formally address those. In Bangladesh, a country in the midst of a rapid technological evolution, the emergence of AI stands as a pivotal moment with far-reaching implications. As the nation seeks to harness the potential of AI for societal advancement and economic growth, the importance of establishing a robust legal framework to govern AI-related issues cannot be overstated.

First, let's talk about the potential of AI. In short, it is vast and varied, touching virtually every aspect of human life. AI has the capability to automate repetitive tasks across various industries, freeing up human workers to focus on more creative and strategic endeavours. In healthcare, AI can assist in diagnosing diseases, analysing medical images, and personalising treatment plans, leading to more accurate and efficient healthcare delivery. Similarly, AI has the potential to revolutionise education through personalised learning experiences, adaptive tutoring systems, and virtual classroom assistants. In transportation, AI-powered autonomous vehicles can enhance road safety, reduce traffic congestion, and improve transportation efficiency. The financial sector can benefit from AI algorithms used for fraud detection, risk assessment, portfolio management, and customer service. Additionally, AI can contribute to environmental conservation efforts by analysing large datasets to monitor and predict environmental changes, optimise resource management, and develop sustainable solutions. In the realm of entertainment, AI-generated content such as music, art and literature can inspire creativity and offer new forms of entertainment.

Already, multiple countries have approved or are on their way to approving regulations regarding AI. The EU's AI Act is helping them focus on establishing a common cybersecurity framework across the bloc, enhancing security certifications for ICT products, and strengthening the role of the European Union Agency for Cybersecurity. The EU has also drafted a Cybersecurity Act. India has passed the Digital India Act, 2023, which aims to update and modernise India's digital governance framework. It addresses cybersecurity, data privacy, and ethical AI use. Vietnam also has approved a national digital transformation plan, which aims at promoting a digital transition in governance, the economy, and society more broadly, as well as establishing Vietnamese technology firms as global players. Under this plan, several goals are laid out to be achieved by 2025. They have also developed a national strategy for research, development and application of AI by 2030. This strategy outlines a number of key goals and directives for developing AI technology in Vietnam. It's clear that Vietnam is committed to a digital transition and cannot ignore the role that artificial intelligence will play to that end.

Similarly, our aspirations for a Digital Bangladesh hinges on our ability to navigate the complexities of AI responsibly. When talking about establishing a regulatory framework for Bangladesh, the heart of the discussion lies within the imperative to strike a balance between fostering innovation and safeguarding fundamental rights. A balanced regulatory framework is essential not only for spurring innovation and attracting investment, but also for safeguarding against potential risks associated with AI.

VISUAL: STAR

Aside from the potential of AI, there are concerning reasons too for which an AI law is necessary. AI poses several risks to personal and organisational safety, hence it must be carefully managed to ensure responsible and ethical use of the technology. For individuals, AI can compromise privacy if systems improperly collect, store, or use personal data without consent or appropriate safeguards. This can lead to identity theft, unauthorised surveillance, and exploitation of personal information. We are already seeing lots of examples of deepfake videos where the faces of famous personalities are used in spreading rumours or damaging their reputation. If AI is not regulated quickly, these incidents may soon get out of hand, and for a country like Bangladesh, where people are somewhat susceptible to rumours, they might spread like wildfire. AI systems may also perpetuate bias or discrimination if not properly designed and vetted, impacting individuals unfairly in areas such as hiring, lending or legal judgments.

Moreover, in order to shed light on Bangladesh's aspiration to become a digital powerhouse and a hub for innovation, the enactment of an AI law is instrumental in enhancing the country's competitiveness and global standing. By aligning with international best practices and standards, the country can foster international collaboration, attract foreign investment, and strengthen its position in the global AI landscape. The timely development of an AI act will present an opportunity for Bangladesh to showcase its commitment to ethical AI governance and responsible innovation to the rest of the world. By engaging with stakeholders across the government, industry, academia, and civil society, policymakers can leverage diverse perspectives to develop inclusive and forward-thinking AI policies that reflect the country's values and priorities.

Seizing the momentum of the current trend and developing a legal framework for AI-related issues is crucial for Bangladesh's continued progress in the digital age. Aligning with international best practices and standards is essential to enhance the country's competitiveness and credibility in the global AI landscape. By demonstrating a commitment to ethical AI governance, Bangladesh can attract foreign investment, foster international collaboration, and strengthen its position as a leader in responsible AI development.

RAMMOHUN ROY'S Grammar(s) of Bangla

Rammohun wrote a grammar of what was the written norm of the day, the standard written dialect of Bangla, otherwise called the Sadhu Bhasha, without ignoring the spoken colloquial standard form. He also was the first Bengali to write an original grammar of the language.

PABITRA SARKAR

Although Rammohun Roy was notably many things, he was not an unlikely person to write a grammar—or, in fact, two grammars: one in English and one in Bangla, the latter being a free translation of the former. He was a polyglot, and once you know more than one language, you are naturally curious about the structures of them—how different or how alike they are. And next a deeper question begins to haunt you: Why are they alike or different? If, however, the languages in question are genetically related, their structures and vocabulary may have something in common. But if they come from different and unrelated families, the areas of surface divergences may be wide. Rammohun (1772-1833) knew languages that were quite different from one another, Bengali, English, Arabic, Persian, Sanskrit, etc.

It is, however, quite a happy fact that he did not write a comparative grammar of the languages he had known, but, avoiding the temptation, he decided to write a grammar of his own language, Bangla. Of course, one knows that there are hundreds of kinds of Bangla—its dialects, class varieties, or sociolects, Bangla of different times, etc. But Rammohun wrote a grammar of what was the written norm of the day, the standard written dialect of Bangla, otherwise called the Sadhu Bhasha, without ignoring the spoken colloquial standard form. He also was the first Bengali to write an original grammar of the language.

The earlier grammar of Mitrityunjay Vidhyalankar was not an original work, but arguably a translation of William Carey's grammar.

As we have hinted before, Bengalis were not the first to write grammars of Bangla. It was a Portuguese churchman, Fr. Manoel da Assumpcam, who first prepared a sketch of Bangla grammar in his Vocabulario em idioma Bengalla e Portugueze divide em duas partes (1742?), that is, 'Vocabulary and Idioms of Bangla and Portuguese divided in two parts.' The second Bangla grammar, this time a fuller treatment, was also written by a foreigner, the Englishman Nathaniel Brassey Halhed (1751-1830), whose Grammar of the Bengal Language, written at the behest of Governor General Warren Hastings (1732-1818), was published in 1778. This was a much fuller treatment of the language, and demonstrates Halhed's full grasp on what should be the components of an academic grammar. And it also carried the first experiments with movable Bangla types, whose shapes were curved by Charles Wilkins (1749-1836) and his Bengali assistant Panchanan Karmakar. Bengali printing would see its formal inauguration in this book and would begin being independently used in about two decades.

The third notable grammar of Bengali would come from the hands of yet another Englishman, William Carey (1761-1834). He came to India as a Protestant missionary, but, noting his inclinations, he was later entrusted with some academic responsibilities by the East India Company or the Governor General (1798-1805), Lord Wellesley, who founded Fort William College in 1800. Carey served the college as the head of the department of its Indian languages teaching program, and in the course of his work, wrote a Bengali grammar, a book of Bangla conversation, and a dictionary of the language. Moreover, he prompted others to write Bangla textbooks, to be published by the college.

Carey was also a polyglot and, in addition to that, had grown a special love for Bangla because of its relative 'closeness' to Sanskrit. The first Bangla textbooks, as well as those in other Indian languages, were written under his direction and published by the college, but they were mainly for the young Englishmen who had come to serve India as civilians. Carey, as we have said, has at least three important works that are closely connected with the teaching of the language. They are, chronologically, A Grammar of the Bengalee Language (first published in 1801, but later enlarged and revised to be republished in 1805), a book of Bangla dialogues, Kathopakathan (1801), and a table-size dictionary of English and Bengali (combined volume 1825). His grammar was also later translated into Bangla, in which Mrityunjay Vidyalankar (1762-1819) had a hand. Carey, of course, also wrote grammars of Marathi and Sanskrit.

A portrait of Rammohun Roy by Rembrandt Peale(1833)

In 1801, the Russian adventurer, Gerasim Stepanovich Lebedev (1749-1817), also published a fragmented Bangla grammar in his A Grammar of the Pure and Mixed East Indian Dialects. Later in the same century, as well as in the next, quite a few Englishmen (and others) would write grammars of Bangla, but Rammohun Roy intervened to become the first Indian and Bengali to write such a grammar, first in English (1826, called Bengalee Grammar in English Language), and then in Bangla (1833, called Gaudiya Byakaran, tadbhasha-birachita).

When a grammar of Bangla is written in English, the Bengali reader's access to it is limited, and the authors know it. They write it mostly for users of English, Englishmen in general. These readers do not come to the language with any basic command of it and have to learn everything from the bottom up—the pronunciation, word formation, sentence formation and sentence patterns, correct usage, speech manners in appropriate social contexts, and the intricate rules of writing—from the alphabet to the orthography. A grammar written in Bangla for the Bengali audience may, on the other hand, have a different focus. I want to add that this may not always be true, as ancient models (Sanskrit or Latin, for example) often dominate and control the author's outlook, and a straitjacket frame is often adopted.

It is true that Rammohun's grammar was shaped on a Sanskrit model, but had an originality of outlook and a fresh approach. Das (1407 BE, pp. 135-6) gives an outline of the personal and social background which prodded Rammohun to write the grammar. The English version begins with a short discussion on the origin of human language, prompted probably by his exposure to the early deliberations of the Indo-Europeanists like William Jones. But his definition of a grammar sounds strikingly modern—"Grammar explains the principles on which conventional sounds or marks are composed and arranged to express thoughts." We will, however, focus on the Bengali version more, in order to underscore the originality of his approach. The Bangla grammar was, of course, written for a Bengali audience, for which the author could assume some native command of the language on the part of the user. But, as we know, in the grammars of the time, the Standard Written Bangla or the Sadhu Bhasha was emphasized, which was not a spoken form, so preference was almost always on how to write that 'chaste' variety. The author thought that that would benefit all Bengalis, including those who spoke a local dialect at home.

Let us say at the outset that we have consulted the 1845 text available on Google, which consists of 116 pages in total. Other editions are also available. For a grammar of a language, it looks quite small, unless it was intended as only a primary sketch. The publisher is the School Book Society, which the East India Company founded in 1817, with David Hare (1775-1842) at its head. Rammohun could barely submit his manuscript before he left for England in 1830, and due to his death there, he could not attend to its printing and publication. It was probably David Hare who took great care to have it published, as the preface mentions.

The grammar contains 38 prakaranas, or 'topics', organized sequentially, which are subsumed under 10 adhyayas, or chapters. One who has a basic notion about the structure of a grammar knows that a traditional one consists of sections like phonology (discussion of sounds in the language), morphology (how the sounds are combined to build meaningful forms like words, etc.), and syntax, in which the rules of making sentences are dealt with. In modern 'linguistic' grammars, other sections are added, but it was, naturally, far from being the practice then. And we must remember, instructions on writing were an important component. Rammohun follows the general pattern of the Sanskrit grammars and hence adds a further section on prosody.

A detailed discussion of the prakaranas will be too much for the uninitiated reader. We will therefore mainly focus on what distinguishes this grammar from others. The author was always keenly aware of the distinctive pronunciation of Bengali. He takes pains to tell us that all letters of our alphabet are not pronounced in Bengali speech, nor are they needed to be written outside of 'Sanskrit' words. He points out how two ja-s, na-s, and three sha-s are pronounced almost alike. After locating contexts where sha is pronounced as s, he also lets us know about the practice of Muslim Bengali writers to write Musalman with a chha, in place of a sa. It is quite noticeable that he dispenses with the Sanskrit sandhi rules, which, we think, should never have been a part of a Bangla grammar.

He, however, follows the traditional Sanskrit grammar in emphasizing morphology (twenty-one topics in all) or word formation and their roles in sentences. For the notion of 'person,' he uses prathama, dvitiya, and tritiya purush, by translating the English system, which looks much more reasonable than uttama, madhyama, etc., which were added later to the confusion of learners. He discards the so-called Sampradana Karaka, in which he was, again, quite ahead of his time. Syntax (anvaya) is dismissed in one topic, and so is prosody. Neither shows much light on the processes that had by then grown historically as quite complex systems.

He makes some innovations in terminology, which strike us as very original. For example, he regards a verb as an adjective. Only in twentieth-century grammatical thought was a close derivational relationship between verbs and adjectives critically discussed, so we are somewhat taken aback by his prescience. Still, we think that the two cannot be merged into a single category, as, syntactically, the verb plays a totally different role from that of an adjective. However, his postulation of four karakas for Bangla, to the exclusion of those of Sampradana and Apadana, is once again quite acceptable from a modern standpoint.

To sum up, one can say that this grammar, although it followed the Sanskrit framework, was written with a keen sense of the distinctive features of Bengali and shows a deep appreciation of the structure and function of the language as it had evolved till then. It is an unfortunate fact that this emphasis on the Bengali-ness of Bengali was ignored in most of the later school grammars, which almost put Rammohun's grammar out of use.

The best compliments for the grammar come probably from none other than Sukumar Sen, who says, "As this grammar was on hand, that is probably why Vidyasagar did not attempt to write any grammar of Bengali."

Tigers in search of intent against buoyant Afghans

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh will take on Afghanistan in their last Super Eight fixture of the ongoing ICC T20 World Cup on Tuesday at the Arnos Vale Ground in St. Vincent, hoping to salvage pride following dismal outings against Australia and India respectively which has left their semifinal hopes hanging by a thread.

Afghanistan have beaten Australia handsomely at Arnos Vale Ground, a win that would surely see them enter the contest against the Tigers as favourites in terms of form.

The Tigers, meanwhile, would be hoping that their unbeaten run in ICC events against Afghanistan, which currently stands at four, would help them thwart the Afghans once again under the bright lights.

In St. Vincent, Afghanistan's openers set the plot for the win as they kept Australia on a tight leash throughout the game and sealed a convincing win. Now, if the Australia-India game goes in India's favour, Afghanistan can make the semis by beating Bangladesh.

Bangladesh, on the other hand, go in to the game, still in search of impetus to take the game by the scruff of the neck in key match situations.

First and foremost, the Powerplay effort with the bat has been grim. Against India on Saturday, Bangladesh managed just 42 for 1 in chase of 197, which forced them to play catch up for the rest of the way.

» Afghanistan edge Bangladesh in head-to-head records in T20Is with six wins against the Tigers' five in 11 meetings. However, in their only meeting in the T20 World Cup, Bangladesh beat Afghanistan by nine wickets in the 2014 edition.

» The average first innings total at the Arnos Vale Stadium in St.Vincent, the venue for the match, is 132 after four T20 World Cup matches. Bangladesh won both their group-stage fixtures against Netherlands and Nepal while Afghanistan pulled off their historic upset over Australia at the venue.

With batters out of form and no one settled in well enough to score runs on a good batting surface, Bangladesh could not make a game of it.

Barring the skill gap, the lack of intent has been Bangladesh's problem in games against big sides, which was glaringly evident against India On Saturday.

Such was the brunt of the defeat, that Shakib Al Hasan, one of the team's most experienced players, gave up any hopes of making it to semifinals, even though after Afghanistan's win over Australia yesterday, the Tigers have a route to the semis, no matter how unlikely it seems at the moment.

"To be honest, I don't think we have a chance to play the semifinal anymore after today's [Saturday] loss," Shakib said after the defeat against India.

"But having said that, the next game will be an opportunity for us to get a win under our belt before we finish up this tournament. We'd love to finish this tournament on a high.

"We have to face Afghanistan which is a very good side. So, we have to be at our best to be able to win against them," he added.

With Afghanistan flying high, finding themselves at ease in conditions in St. Vincent, Bangladesh will have to bring their A game to even be competitive.

The wicket is unlikely to be very batting friendly and Bangladesh found that out for themselves during their game against Nepal in the venue, where they were unable to even play the full 20 overs.

While Bangladesh have been unable to show signs of improvement against big sides, Afghanistan excelled in that challenge and conjured up a win against Australia which will be remembered for a long time.

"It's not just like a bilateral game. It's a World Cup game, and definitely in a World Cup, you're beating a best side. It's a great achievement," an overjoyed Rashid Khan said after leading his side to win over Australia.

Even though Bangladesh will have a mathematical chance of making it to the semis if India beat Australia today, the only realistic target for the Tigers would be a better showing against Afghanistan and try to end with a win. Anything past that will be the very definition of bonus gains.

SHORT CORNER

Mbappe recovery continues but return for France remains unclear

France forward Kylian Mbappe is continuing to recover from his broken nose even though it is not yet sure whether he will play on Tuesday in his side's last group game at the European Championship, coach Didier Deschamps said on Sunday. France's captain fractured his nose last Monday in their opener against Austria.

Cummins creates history with second consecutive T20 WC hattrick

Australia quick Pat Cummins created history in St Vincent on Saturday when he became the first player to register a hattrick in consecutive ICC Men's T20 World Cup matches. Cummins registered a hat-trick over two overs against Bangladesh on Thursday and the right-armer completed the feat once again against Afghanistan.

De Bruyne leads from front to get Belgium firing again

Belgium's fearsome forward line needed only 73 seconds to finally come alive at Euro 2024 on Saturday but almost 80 minutes later they were still trying to deliver the knockout blow on Romania. Then the masterful Kevin De Bruyne took matters into his own hands with his 28th goal for his country to totally change the feel of the night.

Qualification race heats up as India face Australia

AGENCIES

Afghanistan exercised the demons of their defeat against Australia in the previous ODI World Cup with their victory over the Aussies in yesterday's Super Eight fixture and in the process have thrown open the Group 1 with all four teams in with a chance to make it to the semifinals with one match in hand.

The first of the remaining two Group 1 fixtures – India-Australia – will take place today in St. Lucia, where India have a chance to exact revenge for the scarring defeat in the final of last year's ODI World Cup final in home turf by putting Australia at the precipice of getting knocked out.

If India win, they would move onto the semis with six points and Australia would remain on two points and their qualification hopes will be depend on the outcome of the Bangladesh-Afghanistan match the next day.

If the Afghans defeat the Tigers, they would move onto the semis for the first time as group runners-up with four points, sending Australia and Bangladesh packing.

However, if the Afghans lose, Australia, Bangladesh and Afghanistan will finish the Super Eight stage with two points and the qualification race will be decided on the basis of net run rate, which would put Mitchell Marsh's team in poll position to qualify.

Even if Afghanistan lose by just one run, Australia will need to lose by 31 for their run rate to slip below that of Afghanistan. Bangladesh will need to win by 31 runs for their net run rate to sneak ahead of Afghanistan's, but they will also need Australia to lose by 55 runs, to finish second in the group.

However, if Australia come out on top against India, it would end Bangladesh's hopes of playing the semis and the other three teams will finish on four points.

If Australia win by a run, Afghanistan will need a 36-run win over the Tigers to overtake Australia on net run rate. If Australia win a run-chase off the last ball, Afghanistan will have to win their game in 15.4 overs or sooner, assuming first-innings scores of 160.

For India to get knocked out, Australia will need to beat India by 41 runs to go past them on run rate, while Afghanistan will have to beat Bangladesh by at least 83 runs.

Despite the precarious position of his team, Marsh remained confident to win against India and making it to the semifinals.

"We have a lot of belief in our group. Yes, tonight [yesterday] we had an off night, but I guess there's also a positive in the fact that in 36 hours we go again," Marsh said after the 21-run defeat against Afghanistan. "I think if you look back at the short history of this team, I know for a fact that it brings out the best in our guys."

JUNIOR AHF CUP

Girls pull a big surprise as boys retain title

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh men's team became unbeaten champions in Men's Junior AHF Cup with a 4-2 win over China in the final while women's team emerged runners-up in Women's Junior AHF Cup with a 7-1 win over Singapore in their last pool match in Singapore yesterday.

The achievements also ensured qualification for the Junior Asia Cups for both men and women.

The title for men, under coach Ashiquzzaman, was quite expected as they had won this twice in five previous editions, those two coming in 2014 and in 2023. However, the women's achievement was far more difficult, given that their only previous experience was in the same tournament five years ago where they finished fifth out of six teams and a five-a-side tournament last year.

The women in red and green, however, did a tremendous job as they won five out of six matches this time and gave stiff challenge to eventual champions Chinese Taipei before going down 3-0.

"To be honest, we also did not expect such results from the girls because they did not get the opportunity to play any practice matches before the tournament. No one knew the hidden power of this group of girls, who have been training together since 2000 at BKSP," head coach Zahid Hossain Raju told The Daily Star yesterday.

Out of the 18 players, 15 are from BKSP.

"We have been training the girls two sessions each day in a scientific way which has built a good bonding, understanding among the players," Raju said. "So, they were confident to perform collectively on the pitch."

Croatia face Italy in survival clash

AFP, Leipzig

Group B was dubbed Euro 2024's 'Group of Death' but while Spain soared through with a game to spare, heavyweights Italy and Croatia meet on Monday fighting to stay in the competition.

Both sides were outclassed by Spain, and while reigning champions Italy edged Albania 2-1, Croatia could only draw 2-2 with the minnows.

It gives Italy the upper hand ahead of their clash in Leipzig, with Croatia's golden generation at risk of a disappointingly early exit if they fail to win.

Croatia, who reached the 2018 and 2022 World Cup final and semifinal respectively, may make several changes as they scrap for Euros survival.

Midfielder Marcelo Brozovic, playing in Saudi Arabia, has come in for criticism after sub-par outings in the first two matches, while Real Madrid's Luka Modric, 38, has also struggled.

Full-back Ivan Perisic has looked a shadow of himself, still to find his footing after a long injury lay-off.

Youngster Luka Sucic could replace Brozovic, as he did at half-time against Albania.

Striker Bruno Petkovic, who missed a penalty in the 3-0 beating by Spain, called on Croatia to deliver for their vast support in Germany.

"The responsibility is on us, we owe it to our fans to show more," he said.

"I expect us to beat Italy, and I hope it's going to happen."

» This will be Croatia and Italy's third meeting at a major tournament, all taking place in the group stages.

» Since gaining independence in the early 1990s, Croatia are unbeaten in their eight meetings against Italy (W3 D5). Their last three encounters have all ended 1-1.

Italy need a draw against Croatia to claim second place but after being thoroughly outplayed in their 1-0 loss to Spain, expectations are not high for the Azzurri.

Italy coach Luciano Spalletti could also ring the changes with striker Mateo Retegui in contention, along with defender Matteo Darmian, who could replace Giovanni Di Lorenzo after a torturous night against Spain's Nico Williams.

Even Italy's opening victory over Albania was not without its challenges -- Sassuolo's Nedim Bajrami put Albania ahead with the fastest goal in Euros history on 23 seconds. Hence, as things stand, with defending champions Italy fighting to regain their old glory days and Croatia desperate to bounce back, fans can expect a fiery clash.

40 top, mid-ranking cops transferred

14 districts get new SPs

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

In a major reshuffle, 40 top and mid-ranked police officials were transferred to new postings yesterday, weeks before three of its top officials, including the IGP, are scheduled to retire.

The home ministry made the transfers through three circulars signed by Sirajum Munira, deputy secretary of its Public Security Division.

Among those transferred, Additional Inspector General (supernumerary) Krishna Pada Roy, commissioner of Chattogram Metropolitan Police (CMP), was reassigned to the Police Headquarters (PHQ) in Dhaka.

The other transferees include nine deputy inspectors general (DIGs), 15 recently promoted additional DIGs, and 15 superintendents of police (SPs).

Talking to this newspaper, a high official at the PHQ said that the transfers were long overdue and were on hold for the national election.

With the order, at least 14 districts -- Rangpur, Kushtia, Cumilla, Sylhet, Patuakhali, Barguna, Bogura, Feni, Pabna, Tangail, Nilphamari, Jashore, Madaripur, and Sunamganj -- have gotten new SPs.

Meanwhile, the current Inspector General of Police Chowdhury Abdullah Al Mamun is scheduled to retire on July 11, after the end of his one-and-half-year contractual appointment. Meanwhile, Police Bureau of Investigation (PBI) Additional Inspector General Banaj Kumar

A strategic mishap by Tigers

ABDULLAH AL MEHDI

Bangladesh team management made a few strategic mistakes in their 50-run defeat to India in a crucial Super Eight clash of the T20 World Cup in Antigua on Saturday. It leaves question marks over the Tigers' planning around the biggest matches on the biggest stages.

It is not regular for Bangladesh to make the Super Eight of a T20 World Cup.

If the bowlers had carried them to the Super Eight stage, the batters failed to live up to international standards throughout the tournament -- especially in the two Super Eight matches against Australia and India.

The head coach had talked about playing with freedom, given that they had already achieved their target of making the Super

Benazir again skips ACC quizzing

DIPAN NANDY

Former police chief Benazir Ahmed has again skipped the Anti-Corruption Commission's questioning over allegations that he amassed huge wealth through corruption.

He sent a letter to the commission on Friday, claiming the allegations were false, and not mentioning anything about why he was not responding to ACC's summons, said ACC Secretary Khorsheda Yasmin yesterday.

She did not go into further details about the letter and said the team investigating him and his family members will decide what to do next.

On May 28, the ACC issued a notice, asking Benazir to appear at its office on June 6, and his wife and two daughters on June 9.

In separate letters, they requested the ACC to defer the appointment for 15 days.

The ACC then asked Benazir to appear on June 23 and his family members on June 24.

If Benazir's wife and daughters also skip the quizzing session today, the investigators will take action as per the law, according to Khorsheda.

47 more Palestinians killed in Israeli strikes

Residents say tanks at edge of Mawasi refuge zone

AGENCIES

Israeli forces bombed across the Gaza Strip yesterday, and tanks advanced to the edge of the Mawasi displaced persons' camp in the northwest of the southern Gaza city of Rafah in fierce fighting with Hamas-led fighters, residents said.

Images of two Israeli tanks stationed on a hilltop overlooking the coastal area went viral on social media.

"The fighting with the resistance has been intense. The occupation forces are overlooking the Mawasi area now, which forced families there to head for Khan Younis," said one resident, who asked not to be named, on a chat app.

More than eight months into Israel's offensive in the Palestinian enclave, its advance is focused on the two areas its forces have yet to seize: Rafah on Gaza's southern tip and the area surrounding Deir al-Balah in the centre.

Residents said Israeli tanks had pushed deeper into western and northern Rafah in recent days, blowing up dozens of houses, reports Reuters.

The Israeli military said it was continuing "intelligence-based, targeted operations" in the Rafah area and had located weapons stores and tunnel shafts, and killed Palestinian gunmen.

The armed wings of Hamas and the Islamic Jihad movement said their fighters had attacked Israeli forces in Rafah with anti-tank rockets and mortar bombs and pre-planted explosive devices.

Elsewhere, an Israeli airstrike killed eight Palestinians in Sabra, a suburb of Gaza City in the north, and another strike killed two people in Nuseirat in central Gaza.

The military said it had struck dozens of targets throughout the Strip.

In Beit Lahiya in the northern Gaza Strip, health officials at Kamal Adwan Hospital said a baby had died of malnutrition, taking the number of children dead of malnutrition or dehydration since October 7 to at least 30, a number that health officials say reflects under-recording.

The health ministry in Hamas-run Gaza said yesterday that at least 37,598 people have been killed during more than eight months of offensive. The toll includes at least 47 deaths over the past 24 hours, a ministry statement said.

8 killed in attack on synagogues, churches in Russia

AFP, Moscow

Gunmen yesterday attacked synagogues and churches in Russia's North Caucasus region of Dagestan, killing a priest, six police officers, and a member of the national guard, security officials said.

The attacks took place in Dagestan's largest city of Makhachkala and in the coastal city of Derbent, where gunfights were ongoing.

Russia's Investigative Committee said it had opened criminal probes over "acts of terror", while the hunt for the gunmen was ongoing.

Witnesses could hear shooting near a church in Makhachkala while shootouts were continuing in Derbent, the TASS state news agency reported. Dagestan's interior ministry said it had killed two of the gunmen in Makhachkala.

Sunday is a religious holiday in the Russian Orthodox Church called Pentecost Sunday. Dagestan is a largely Muslim region of Russia, neighbouring Chechnya.

"This evening in the cities of Derbent and Makhachkala armed attacks were carried out on two Orthodox churches, a synagogue and a police check-point," said the National Antiterrorism Committee in a statement to RIA Novosti news agency.

"As a result of the terrorist attacks, according to preliminary information, a priest from the Russian Orthodox Church and police officers were killed."

In all, six police officers had been killed and another 12 wounded in the attacks, the spokeswoman for Dagestan's interior ministry, Gayana Gariyeva, told RIA Novosti.

Russia's National Guard said one of its officers had been killed in Derbent and several others wounded.

A 66-year-old priest was killed in Derbent, the press secretary of Dagestan's interior ministry, Gariyeva told the agency.

Brazil start Copa America mission

REUTERS

Brazil open their 2024 Copa America campaign against Costa Rica on Monday in Los Angeles with a whole new look almost from top to bottom, with Real Madrid's rising star Vinicius Jr leading a group that were waiting for an opportunity for a fresh start.

The match will start on Tuesday at 7:00 am Bangladesh time.

After a heartbreaking shootout defeat by Croatia in the World Cup quarter-finals at Qatar 2022, Brazil went through two caretaker managers as they waited for almost an year trying to lure manager Carlo Ancelotti from Real Madrid.

But after the Italian extended his contract with the Spanish giants, Brazil settled on journeyman Dorival Jr.

Dorival built a reputation as a versatile coach specialising in working his magic as fixer by taking over struggling teams halfway through a season with a remarkable success.

He won the Copa Libertadores and the Copa do Brazil with Flamengo a few months after taking over and when his six-month contract was not renewed he joined Sao Paulo and led them to a Brazilian Cup

Ukraine missile attack on Crimea kills 5

Russia blames US for setting the missile's flight coordinate

REUTERS, Moscow

Russia said yesterday that the United States was responsible for a Ukrainian attack on the Russian-annexed Crimean peninsula with five US-supplied missiles that killed at least five people including three children and injured 124 more.

The Russian Defence Ministry said four of the US-delivered Army Tactical Missile System (ATACMS) missiles, equipped with cluster warheads, were shot down by air defence systems and the ammunition of a fifth had detonated in mid-air.

The ministry said US specialists had set the missiles' flight coordinates on the basis of information from US spy satellites, meaning Washington was directly responsible.

"Responsibility for the deliberate missile attack on the civilians of Sevastopol is borne above all by Washington, which supplied these weapons to Ukraine, and by the Kyiv regime, from whose territory this strike was carried out," the ministry said.

The United States began supplying Ukraine with longer range ATACMS missiles, which have a 300-km range, earlier this year.

IMF approves 3rd tranche of $1.15b loans

The funds will be added to the reserves in two days

REJAUL KARIM BYRON

The International Monetary Fund yesterday approved the third tranche of $1.15 billion loans in a boost to Bangladesh's foreign exchange reserves.

'Not feasible to share Teesta water'

Mamata writes to Modi, also asks not to hold talks on Teesta, Farakka without involving West Bengal

OUR CORRESPONDENT, New Delhi

West Bengal Chief Minister Mamata Banerjee yesterday said no discussion on sharing the Teesta and Ganges waters should be held with Bangladesh without the involvement of the West Bengal government.

Sharing Teesta water with Bangladesh is not feasible, she wrote in a letter to Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi.

"The interest of people in West Bengal is paramount which should not be compromised at any cost," she wrote.

If Teesta water is shared with Bangladesh, "lakhs of people in North Bengal will get severely impacted due to inadequate availability of irrigation water".

Teesta water is also needed for meeting drinking water requirements of the residents of North Bengal, she said.

She wrote the letter a couple of days after prime ministers Sheikh Hasina and Narendra Modi held talks in New Delhi where the Indian PM announced a technical team would be sent to Bangladesh soon for conservation and management of water in the Teesta and discussions would soon start on the renewal of the 1996 Ganges water-sharing treaty which expires in 2026.

Mamata also stated that West Bengal shares "a very close relationship with Bangladesh geographically, culturally and economically. I love and respect people of Bangladesh and always wish for their well-being".

The wife of former police chief Benazir Ahmed and their two daughters yesterday skipped the Anti-Corruption Commission's questioning over the allegations of amassing wealth illegally.

Jissan Mirza and her two daughters Farheen Rishta Binte Benazir and Tahseen Raisa Binte Benazir were scheduled to appear before the ACC at its headquarters yesterday.

Speaking to reporters, ACC Secretary Khorsheda Yasmin said the three did not submit any time petitions. However, they sent written statements to the commission on Thursday explaining their positions on the corruption allegations.

"The ACC inquiry team is taking necessary actions in line with the law. We hope to submit the inquiry report within the stipulated time," Khorsheda said.

TAKEAWAYS: HASINA-MODI TALKS

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina and Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi held a meeting in New Delhi on June 22, in which they discussed both bilateral and regional cooperation. Former foreign secretary Md Touhid Hossain and former ambassador M Humayun Kabir shared their views with The Daily Star's Porimol Palma.

Our concerns were largely unaddressed

Md Touhid Hossain

The statements from the two leaders of Bangladesh and India appear to be quite ambitious. However, they don't address the challenges that the people of Bangladesh face.

The issue of sharing Teesta water did not come up. India has spoken about sending a technical team to look into how the Teesta water in Bangladesh can be conserved and managed, but how long it will actually take to ensure that the people in Bangladesh get enough water in the northwestern region remains a serious question. We know that China was interested to fund the Teesta

The statements from the meeting suggest we have moved from resolving smaller bilateral issues, which traditionally dominate the relations, to bigger visions and broader strategic aspects. There are definitely some positive outcomes from the visit, on which both Bangladesh and India can build up the future cooperation. At the same time, some of the lofty ideas are too complex to have their possible implications deciphered.

Energy cooperation with Nepal and Bhutan through India could open up a strategic window for all four countries. We have never tried to look into regional Court slaps travel ban on Matiur, family

COURT CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka court yesterday imposed a travel ban on Matiur Rahman, former member of the National Board of Revenue, his wife and son in connection with allegations of corruption against them.

The travel ban was requested by Anowar Hossain, deputy director of the Anti-Corruption Commission.

As per the order issued by Judge Mohammed Ash-Shams Joglul Hossain, Matiur, his first wife Laila Kaniz Lucky, and their son Ahmed Taufiqur Rahman Arnob cannot leave the country unless the restriction is lifted.

The commission's lawyer Mir Ahmed Ali Salam wrote in the application that the family was making arrangements to leave the country and syphon money out of Bangladesh.

Matiur is a former president of the NBR's Customs, Excise and VAT Appellate Tribunal and his wife is the upazila parishad chairman of Narsingdi's Raipura.

A three-member team of the ACC is investigating allegations of corruption made against them.

MOHIUDDIN ALAMGIR

The government is likely to reintroduce mid-day meals at primary schools in 150 upazilas after a gap of two years with the view to ramping up school attendance and bringing down the dropout rate.

The school feeding programme is expected to resume in August, The Daily Star has learnt from primary and mass education ministry officials informed of the proceedings.

The three-year project, which will cover about 37 lakh students at 19,000 government primary schools in mostly poverty-prone areas, will cost about Tk 4,700 crore, according to the ministry's development project proposal.

Of the estimated cost, Tk 4,181 crore will go towards food procurement and the rest will be spent on paying contractors, transport, service charges, food distribution and packaging.

The World Bank will provide assistance for the project, said Farid Ahmed, secretary of the primary and mass education ministry.

Help us resolve Rohingya crisis

PM urges China during meeting with Chinese minister Liu Jianchao

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday sought Chinese support to solve the Rohingya crisis quickly.

"It has already been six years since the influx of the forcibly displaced Myanmar nationals to Bangladesh. Bangladesh is now very much worried about the Rohingya crisis due to the uncertainty in finding solutions," she said.

The premier said this at a meeting with visiting Minister of International Department of the Communist Party of China Liu Jianchao at her Jatiya Sangsad Bhaban office, reports BSS.

PM's press secretary M Nayeemul Islam Khan briefed the reporters afterwards.

Nayeemul quoted Hasina as saying, "It [Rohingya crisis] is very much frustrating and worrying for us." He said the premier told the Chinese minister that "It's a special message [from myself] to convey to the Chinese president [to resolve the Rohingya issue]."

Liu Jianchao said China is committed and working with Myanmar to facilitate repatriation of the Rohingyas from Bangladesh, adds UNB.

"Even the Myanmar government does not have the position to implement any plan [regarding this issue]. The civil war situation has turned into a complex issue due to the conflicting situation [in Myanmar]," he said.

Jianchao also said China realises that Bangladesh is affected due to the Rohingya issue and they highly appreciate that Bangladesh is supporting the Rohingyas on humanitarian grounds.

'Drive on to recover Babu's three mobile phones for evidence'

MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN

Kazi Kamal Ahmed Babu, the relief and social welfare affairs secretary of the Jhenaidah Awami League, has allegedly used his cell phone to communicate and exchange photos with the suspected killer of lawmaker Anwarul Azim Anar.

Babu communicated with the alleged coordinator of the killing mission Amanullah alias Shimul Bhuiyan in phases, on behalf of Saidul Karim Mintu, general secretary of Jhenaidah AL, claimed detectives.

Mintu advised Babu to dispose of three cell phones used in communication to destroy evidence. Subsequently, the phones were discarded in two ponds near Payra Chattar in the district. Babu then filed a general diary reporting his phones were lost as per Mintu's direction, the cops said.

An official investigating the incident and a report submitted to the court by the Detective Branch of Dhaka Metropolitan Police revealed this information.

According to the investigation progress report, Amanullah returned from Kolkata after executing the killing mission on May 15 and communicated with Babu on May 16 night to give him updates.

At one stage, Babu and Amanullah held a meeting at Bhanga in Faridpur and

CTG KALURGHAT RAIL AND ROAD BRIDGE

Project to see light of day after nearly a decade

Loan agreement with S Korea to be signed Thursday

TUHIN SHUBHRA ADHIKARY

AT A GLANCE

- Project Cost Tk 11,561cr
- South Korea to provide Tk 7,128cr loan
- Project Deadline Dec 2030
- 1 year defect liability period
- Project first taken in 2014
- Initial estimated cost Tk 1,163.27cr

After nearly a decade of planning, the complexities surrounding a project for a rail and road bridge at Kalurghat in Chattogram are finally set to be resolved with a loan agreement to be signed this week.

The Economic Relations Division (ERD) will sign a loan deal with South Korea on Thursday for the Tk 11,561 core project, officials said.

The Development Project Proposal (DPP) of the long-awaited project is now pending with the Planning Commission after the completion of all procedures and is expected to be approved soon, they said.

The new dual-gauge double-line rail plus double-lane road bridge is expected to replace the existing dilapidated bridge within the next five and a half years.

The proposed deadline for the project is December 2030, with a one-year defect liability period.

"With the signing of the loan deal, we hope all uncertainty over the project will be dispelled," Sardar Shahadat Ali, director general of Bangladesh Railway, told The Daily Star yesterday.

Built in 1931, the metre-gauge single-line rail bridge was reconfigured in 1962 so that vehicles could use it too.

But the bridge has become almost unsafe and the authorities have to repair the bridge occasionally, with the latest one in last year, to keep it usable. Trains have a speed limit of 10 kmph on the bridge.

Construction of the new bridge became more important after the opening of Chattogram-Cox's Bazar rail line last year, as the capacity of the new line could not be used due to bottlenecks.

However, the process to replace the bridge started in 2014 when the government

Govt preparing list of top loan defaulters

Finance minister tells JS

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The list of top loan defaulters, both individuals and organisations, is being prepared, Finance Minister Abul Hassan Mahmood Ali informed parliament yesterday.

This announcement came in response to a query from Awami League MP Farida Yasmin, who asked for the names of the top 30 loan defaulters and the amounts they owe.

Meanwhile, AL MP Nurunnabi Chowdhury of Bhola-3 inquired about permanent measures taken to prevent loan scams in banks and financial institutions.

In response, the minister highlighted several initiatives, including amending the Bank Companies Act, 1991, issuing guidelines for identifying and addressing willful defaulters, conducting regular inspections and monitoring by Bangladesh Bank, implementing a specific action plan to reduce the classified loan ratio below 8 percent by June 2026 and ensure corporate governance in the banking sector.

The Finance Company Act, 2023 was also enacted to enhance transparency, accountability, and systematic management in finance companies, the minister added.

Road crashes kill 262 in 13 days

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

At least 262 people were killed and 543 were injured in 251 road crashes in the 13 days centring the Eid-ul-Azha holiday, said Road Safety Foundation yesterday.

Of them, 32 were women and 44 children.

Of the casualties, 104 were killed in 129 bike-related crashes between June 11 and June 23, which is 39.69 percent of the total deaths, it said through a press release.

The rate of motorcycle accidents was 51.39 percent, a 13.31 percent rise compared to the same period last year.

During this time, there were seven waterway accidents, resulting in 12 deaths and 3 injuries. There were also 16 railway accidents in which 14 people were killed and eight injured. Regional statistics of the accidents indicate that 28.68 percent of the accidents occurred in Dhaka division. Of them, 18 took place in the capital, resulting in 14 deaths and 11 injuries.

The organisation has also identified 10 main causes behind these road accidents, which include faulty vehicles, reckless speeding, incompetence and physical-mental illness of drivers, plying of slow-moving vehicles on highways, and reckless bike riding by the youth.

It has also made several recommendations, like ensuring strict monitoring systems on roads, waterways, and railways before and after Eid, formulating sustainable transport strategies, and implementing the "Road Transport Act-2018" without any hindrance.

Road Safety Foundation prepared the data by compiling several media reports. Referring to the IRAP (International Road Assessment Programme) method, the organisation said the country incurred a Tk 998.55 crore loss of human resources due to road crashes.

'BPSA statement to encourage corrupt people'

The recent statement by the Bangladesh Police Service Association regarding the media and journalism would embolden corrupt individuals, said Bangladesh Sommilito Peshajibi Parishad in a statement yesterday.

The BSPP, a platform of pro-BNP professionals, described the police association's statement as a veiled threat to independent media and impartial journalism, aimed at shielding corrupt officials.

In the statement signed by its convener Dr AZM Zahid Hossain and member secretary Quader Gani Chowdhury, the BSPP said such threats are indicative of a police state.

Regarding Hasina's upcoming visit to China in next month, Jianchao said it will further strengthen the extraordinary friendship between the two countries.

"This visit will further cement our relationship," he was quoted as saying.

Earlier, Jianchao had a meeting with Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud at a city hotel.

Talking to reporters after the meeting, the minister said the premier is expected to visit Beijing between July 8 and July 11.

"We expect that the prime minister's upcoming visit to Beijing will significantly advance the development cooperation between Bangladesh and China," he told reporters.

"Liu's visit before our prime minister's visit to Beijing is significant... we are also looking forward to her visit," he said.

He said key issues such as trade and security will be prioritised during the PM's visit to China.

BLOGGER NAZIMUDDIN MURDER

Court frames charges against 4 accused

COURT CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka tribunal yesterday framed charges against four members of the banned militant outfit Ansar al Islam in blogger Nazimuddin Samad murder case.

The four are Syed Ziaul Haque alias major (sacked) Zia, Akram Hossain, Sheikh Abdullah and Rashed-Un-Nabi Bhuiyan alias Tahsin.

Judge Md Majibur Rahman of the Anti-Terrorism Special Tribunal of Dhaka read out the charges to them, assistant public prosecutor Golam Sharuar Khan told The Daily Star.

Before that, the judge dismissed the petition submitted for discharging them from the charges.

The tribunal also discharged five accused -- Mozammel Hossain Saimon, Arafat Rahman Siam, Asadullah alias Foyjul, Sabbirul Haque Chowdhury and Junaid Ahmed alias Maulana Junaid -- from the case.

The judge set August 6 for starting trial of the case, said a staffer of the tribunal.

Among the accused, major (sacked) Zia, Akram, Asadullah, Sabbirul and Junaid have been absconding since filing of the case.

On April 6 of 2016, the 28-year-old law student of Jagannath University was hacked and shot to death by unidentified assailants in Old Dhaka's Sutrapur area.

Nazimuddin, who was critical of extremism on his Facebook posts, moved to Dhaka from Sylhet for higher studies.

The day after Nazimuddin's murder, Sub-inspector Nurul Islam filed a case with Sutrapur Police Station against some unknown assailants under the Anti-Terrorism Act.

On August 20, 2020, the Counter Terrorism and Transnational Crime unit of police submitted a charge sheet before the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate's Court of Dhaka, accusing nine members of Ansar al Islam.

'ARBITRARY JAILING'

Sherpur journo Rana acquitted

OUR CORRESPONDENT, M'singh

A court yesterday acquitted journalist Shafiuzzaman Rana in a case, for which he was sentenced to seven months' imprisonment on March 5.

Rana, 45, Nakla correspondent for a Bangla daily, was sent to jail for allegedly misbehaving with a government official and an office staffer while trying to collect information from the UNO office in Nakla.

Following the allegation from Nakla UNO Sadia Ummul Banin, police arrested him. Later a mobile court sent him to jail.

Additional District Magistrate Jabun Nahar handed down the verdict, said Rana's lawyer Md Abdur Rahim Badal.

On March 5, Rana went to the UNO's office and entered the room of confidential assistant Shila Akter, looking for some documents. When Shila refused to deliver the documents without permission, Rana allegedly misbehaved with her, alleged the UNO.

Following Rana's arrest, Information Commissioner Shahidul Alam visited Sherpur to have a detailed inquiry on the matter.

Later, the commission recommended the public administration ministry for departmental action against the UNO.

decided to build the new bridge and decommission the British-era single-lane rail and road bridge there.

A feasibility study, financed by South Korea, was conducted in December 2015 that recommended building a two-lane road and single-line rail bridge.

A DPP for the new bridge with an estimated cost of Tk 1,163.27 crore was placed before an Ecnec meeting in August 2018, which decided that it would build a dedicated rail bridge with double lines.

In 2019, another feasibility study was launched but it was suspended as the authorities realised that the Bangladesh Inland Water Transport Authority in November 2018 put the Karnaphuli river in a different category for which the bridge would need to give more clearance to vessels.

In the meantime, BR continued to go back and forth over the design.

Another Korea-funded study was launched in 2021 and it preliminarily recommended a double-decker bridge with a double-lane road on top and a dual-gauge double-line rail line on the bottom.

But the Prime Minister's Office in August 2022 directed that the bridge be single-decker with a double-line dual-gauge rail line and double-lane road, sources said.

The study estimated the cost would be Tk 13,824.19 crore (US $1=Tk 103). However, some changes were made in the cost estimation while BR submitted the DPP.

Following a meeting of the Project Evaluation Committee in April this year, the DPP was re-casted and the cost was put at Tk 11,561 crore, of which South Korea will give Tk 7,128 crore as loan, shows project documents.

"All the procedures are done and we hope the project will be approved by Ecnec soon," a BR official told The Daily Star yesterday.

Asked about the reasons behind the sharp rise in project cost, the official said when the DPP was prepared in 2018, the length of the proposed bridge was 3km, with 1km of the main bridge and 2km of embankments, with a vessel clearance of 7.62 metres.

Now the clearance has to be 12.2 metres and this has increased the total bridge length to 11.74km -- 1km of main bridge, 5km of viaducts on both sides and 5.74km of embankments on both sides, he added.

"This is a major reason behind the cost escalation," he said, wishing anonymity.

He also said the decision to have a bigger bridge with more capacity and the price of construction materials were the other reasons behind rise in project cost.

the decrease in financial institution deposits to attractive investment opportunities in public and private sectors, rather than a lack of confidence or inflation.

NO LIQUIDITY CRISIS, BUT CHALLENGES PERSIST

Addressing AL MP Mahbubur Rahman from Chattogram-1, the finance minister said there is no liquidity crisis in any bank currently operating in Bangladesh.

However, he acknowledged that some banks face high non-performing loans, capital shortages, and liquidity problems.

To address these issues, Bangladesh Bank has assigned an observer to the board of directors of nine banks and a coordinator to seven banks, he said.

INFLATION PROJECTIONS

The minister expressed optimism that inflation will be controlled in the next financial year due to falling global prices of fuel, food products, and fertilisers, as well as initiatives to maintain food supply.

"The annual average inflation is estimated to be 6.5 percent at the end of the fiscal year 2024-25," he added.

exchanged photos of MP Azim's "murder" scene.

Between May 17 and May 19, Babu communicated with Amanullah on WhatsApp in phases and exchanged messages.

They talked about the lawmaker's murder and payment for the killing, said investigators.

Mintu, currently in jail after a three-day remand, has not confessed any involvement in the killing, according to sources.

Meanwhile, a Dhaka court yesterday rejected the request for a five-day remand for questioning Babu. Instead, the court ordered Babu to be transferred to Jhenaidah District Jail within 10 working days.

The investigation officer plans to conduct a search, supervised by a first-class magistrate, to locate the mobile phones Babu used to communicate with Amanullah via WhatsApp after the lawmaker's killing in Kolkata, as ordered by Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Akhtaruzzaman.

Earlier on June 9, Babu was placed on a seven-day remand. Later on June 14, Babu admitted his involvement with the killing and gave a confessional statement.

Harun Or Rashid, additional commissioner (DB) of the DMP, said they have received information about the destruction of evidence in Jhenaidah.

"Since there is digital evidence in Babu's phone, we will interrogate him further and try to recover where he dropped the phones," he added.

Besides Babu and Mintu, detectives also arrested three other accused for their alleged involvement with the killing. They are Amanullah, his nephew Tanvir Bhuiyan, and Celesty Rahman.

Lawmaker Azim went to Kolkata on May 12. Nine days later, India and Bangladesh police said he was murdered at a Kolkata flat.

facing issues with obtaining KDA approval for construction on their plots.

"I bought an 8-decimal plot in 2016, being unaware that it lacked approval. Now, I can't get my plan approved by KDA despite repeated attempts," said Abida Sultana, a retired school teacher from Dumuria.

The DoE has remained silent on these projects, which violate the Environment Conservation Act, 1995.

"Most of these projects have occupied khas lands, water bodies, cultivable lands, and tidal floodplains over the last two decades, which is illegal," said Gouranga Nandy, chairman of the Center for Environment and Participatory Research.

Prof Abdullah Harun Chowdhury of Khulna University said, "Unplanned housing in tidal floodplains damages natural systems and ecology, disrupting natural drainage."

Tanvir Ahmed, a KDA planning officer, emphasised that housing projects need registration and KDA approval per the Real Estate Development and Management Act, 2010.

"Each project should have at least 10 acres, with specified road widths and civic facilities," he said.

KDA has identified 126 projects failing to meet these requirements.

"Only 18 applied for registration. We demolished structures of 15 projects and issued notices. Further actions will follow," Ahmed added.

Illegal housing mushrooms

153 projects running without KDA, DoE approval

DIPANKAR ROY, Khulna

As many as 153 housing projects have sprung up illegally in Khulna and its adjoining areas without approval from the city's development authority and the Department of Environment.

These developments are primarily in Dumuria, Batiaghata, Rupsha, and Phultala, where government khas lands, waterbodies, arable lands, and tidal floodplains are being encroached upon, aided by the inaction of the authorities.

Agricultural lands are being filled with sand for these projects, notably in Koiya Bazar, Jolma, Zero Point, Labonchhara, and Horintana. Experts warn these areas are crucial tidal floodplains.

In 2007, Khulna City Corporation proposed extending its boundary by 40.10 sq km from the existing 45.65 sq km. Since then, unplanned constructions have proliferated in these areas. Mentionable, the areas are under the jurisdiction of Khulna Development Authority.

"If unplanned housing continues, the city corporation will struggle with waste management, street lighting, roads development, and other services. Residents will suffer, and the areas will turn into concrete slums," said Abirul Jabbar, KCC's chief planning officer.

Several housing companies are defying the Land Development Rules, 2004 (amended in 2012 and 2015). The KDA's master plan spans 824 sq km, covering areas from Jashore's Noapara municipality in the north to Bagerhat's Fakirhat upazila in the south.

Any development within this area requires KDA approval.

Biswas Properties, Khulna's largest housing project, lacks KDA approval. The project, which has sold 4,000 plots, features narrow roads and no playgrounds or school compounds, despite these being advertised.

"We have applied for project registration with KDA," said Asgar Biswas Tara, owner of Biswas Properties. "It is impossible for any housing project to fully comply with KDA's rules given Khulna's context," he said.

Other projects, including Ujan Nibash, Bismillah, Tanisha Residential Projects, Arafat Housing, Shikder Residential Projects, and Golden City, also lack KDA approval. Yet, they continue to sell plots.

The living 'dead'

Mystery death certificates strip four disabled citizens of allowances

MINTU DESHWARA, Moulvibazar

Md Enamul Haque, a living and breathing individual, has recently discovered a shocking truth.

According to the local social service office, he's been dead for nearly three years!

Enamul, a physically challenged individual of Goalbari union under Moulvibazar's Juri upazila, has been receiving disability allowance since 2018.

But the payment suddenly stopped towards the end of 2023. So he recently visited the social service office with his allowance card in hand to learn the reason.

"You have been dead for three years," an official told Enamul. The official records showed Enamul breathed his last in April 2021.

The cause of this celestial confusion? A death certificate, signed by the Goalbari Union Parishad Chairman Md Abdul Qayyum and Member Zainal Abedin, declaring Enamul deceased.

Meanwhile, he has not received his monthly allowances since 2023. "I am a person with disability. I need the money to survive," he told this correspondent recently.

Enamul Haque

Enamul is not the only soul in the union experiencing "afterlife" while being very much alive.

Shaira Begum, Sharijun Nesha and Anjali Rani Deb of the union have also been removed from the disability allowance list thanks to a mysterious update in October last year. The three were shown dead in July 2021.

The four now find themselves in the strange predicament of having to prove they are still alive to a system that is already convinced of their demise.

Unless new paperwork declares their resurrection, these four individuals of Goalbari union won't receive their rightful allowances.

Contacted, UP Chairman Abdul Qayyum said, "We were asked to issue death certificates for the mentioned individuals by the upazila social service office, so we did. Later, I found out that these people are alive, and new certificates have been requested to include them in

Digitalisation push to cost CWasa Tk 200cr

Installed a few years ago, 90,000 meters worth Tk 27cr to be replaced; experts, residents skeptical

SIFAYET ULLAH, Ctg

The Chattogram Water Supply and Sewerage authority purchased and installed 90,000 water meters at a cost of around Tk 27 crore between 2018 and 2022 to collect bills from consumers properly.

However, CWasa recently sent a development project proposal to buy 90,000 digital meters at an estimated cost of Tk 200 crore to replace the existing meters, aiming for digitalisation and upgrading of the existing billing process.

This DPP is now with the Planning Division to be sent to the Executive Committee of the National Economic Council for approval.

"If government approves the project, we will purchase these digital meters," said Maksudul Alam, chief engineer of CWasa.

The state agency earlier bought the existing meters in two phases -- 50,000 in 2018-19 at a cost of Tk 10.39 crore and 40,000 more between 2020-22 at a cost of around Tk 16.50 crore, according to documents.

As such, the agency's expenditure of around Tk 27 crore to purchase and install these meters will become nothing but a waste of public money, said experts and consumers.

Muhammad Rashidul Hasan, head of the Department of Urban and Regional Planning at Chittagong University of Engineering and Technology, questioned why CWasa had installed these meters earlier without doing the necessary study.

If CWasa installs digital meters without using service life of the existing mechanical meters, it will be a sheer waste of public money, he said.

Rokeya Begum, a resident of Mokbul Ahmed Society in the port city's Patenga area, alleged that CWasa has been continuously collecting money from us, citing improvements in service including pipeline renovation, and meter change, all while not supplying water properly.

"First supply us water regularly, then think about installing digital meters," she added.

Asked why CWasa bought analogue meters instead of digital ones earlier, Maksudul Alam claimed that digital meters were not popular in the country at that time.

> First supply us water regularly, then think about installing digital meters.

> ROKEYA BEGUM, a resident of Patenga

SM Nazer Hossain, vice president of Consumers Association of Bangladesh, termed the CWasa's initiative a waste of money in the name of digitalisation.

"The consumer has to bear the cost of installing digital meters. The state agency's officials took commission from meter supplying companies," he alleged.

The government should take action against those responsible for such unplanned activities, he added.

CMC, CRB see 5hr power cut over outstanding bills

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

The authorities of Power Development Board, Chattogram yesterday morning snapped the power connection of Chittagong Medical College and Central Railway Building, the headquarters of Eastern Railway, over outstanding bills.

The power supply to these two institutions remained disconnected for around five hours from 10:00am before it was resumed around 3:00pm.

According to CMC sources, PDB staffers snapped its power connection around 10:00am, adding that the power supply to the hospital, however, was not disconnected.

According to PDB officials, Eastern Railway and CMC have outstanding bills of Tk 1.58 crore and Tk 1.29 crore respectively.

There are two connections on CMC campus, one for the college and the other for the hospital. We disconnected the power connection of CMC's academic building as they did not pay bills for six months despite repeated notices, said Humayun Kabir, chief engineer of PDB, Chattogram.

"However, we did not disconnect the hospital's power supply for the sake of patients," he also said.

"The authorities of Eastern Railway and CMC in separate letters assured us to pay their outstanding

REMAL'S AFTERMATH

400km rural roads damaged in Bagerhat

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Bagerhat

The Cyclone Remal in its trail of destruction left 400 kilometres of rural roads significantly damaged in Bagerhat.

At least 120 other structures, including bridges and culverts, also sustained damages.

The damage is estimated to be worth around Tk 150 crore, according to Local Government Engineering Department in Bagerhat.

While urgent repairs are needed to the damaged roads, bridges and culverts, there has not been any steps taken to this end, leaving the residents amid immense sufferings.

Visiting different areas in Morrelgonj, Sharankhola, Mongla, Rampal and Sadar upazilas, this correspondent observed that the tidal surge under influence of the cyclone had washed away bitumen from paved roads and bricks and soil from unpaved ones, rendering those unusable for vehicular movement as well as for pedestrians at many places.

The damaged bridges and culverts further added to the woes. At many places, locals resorted to constructing makeshift bamboo bridges for movement.

The main road in Ghoshiakhali area of Baharbunia union in Morrelganj upazila has been found broken in several places, with bricks and soiling washed away into nearby waterbodies.

"It has already been a month since the disaster and no step has been taken to repair the damaged road," said Sattar Sheikh of Ghoshiakhali area.

Ruhul Amin from Khaulia village echoed him.

Contacted, Md Sharifuzzaman, executive engineer of LGED in Bagerhat, said they have assessed the extent of damage to the roads and other infrastructures sustained in the cyclone.

Morrelganj upazila has been the most affected, he said.

"We have started repairing some rural unpaved roads temporarily with soil. Major repairs to the damaged roads and other infrastructures will begin once new budget allocation comes in this regard," he added.

'THE WAR IS NOT OVER YET'

Mashruk Ahmed tells of 1971's unsung heroines

FAHIN RAHMAN AUNGKITA

"If only they knew how we fought, with our life and with our youth, with weapons and in life later on... I will fight more wars. I will keep fighting till death."

Halima Parvin, Jessore

> Everyone who will see, listen, and read about these stories will be overcome with several questions in silence. This experience will prove to be thought-provoking for all, while also helping to give a voice to the unheard.
> MOFIDUL HUQ, Bangladesh Liberation War Museum trustee

Entering the photo exhibition's gallery, white curtains gently swayed, displaying cyanotype prints of the portraits of Birangonas (Bangladeshi female freedom fighters), much like how their valiant stories have been hidden behind the curtains for far too long.

The aforesaid arrangement is regarding Mashruk Ahmed's exhibition, The War Is Not Over Yet, which was inaugurated on June 21 at La Galerie, Alliance Française de Dhaka (AFD). It not only attempts to bring the war heroines' stories to the forefront but also enables an exploration of the places where each of their stories culminated. The exhibition, the photographer's first major work, tells the tale of 30 female freedom fighters of Bangladesh's Liberation War of 1971.

In monochrome photos, there is an intrinsic sadness juxtaposed with utmost dignity on each face of the women who lost everything during the Liberation War. Jubilant in portraits, prominently hued in blue, these photos of 30 brave women are accompanied by their oral testimonies, video footage, and written statements. A space at the heart of the gallery also features handwritten notes, letters, and photographs collected from the freedom fighters. Through their aching voices, one can hear the fearless accounts of many who are with us no more today.

PHOTOS: RATUL CHOWDHURY

Mashruk Ahmed, the Bangladesh-based documentary photographer, completed this project in seven years for which he reached out to the female freedom fighters in person and visited each of the sites that the war heroines described in their stories. His objective was to take photographs of those places where it all happened in an attempt to reconstruct the memories for the audience. In the photo exhibition, colourful photos of those sites paint the walls beside the accounts of the incidents that took place at the locations Mashruk visited. He said, "After taking the photos, I realised each of these is a large story in itself. I, therefore, tried to make sure every individual's story is presented in the way they wished."

The inauguration ceremony of the exhibition was graced by numerous distinguished guests including Mofidul Hoque, writer, researcher, and trustee of Bangladesh Liberation War Musem; Navine Murshid, writer and associate professor of the Department of Political Science at Colgate University; Saiful Huq Omi, photographer and founder of Counter Foto; Durjoy Rahman, art collector and founder of Durjoy Bangladesh Foundation (DBF); and curator ASM Rezaur Rahman. Also present throughout the event was Francois Grosjean, director of Alliance Française de Dhaka.

Saiful Huq Omi of Counter Foto, stated with pride, "Mashruk's courageous work is an example of how stories of past events can be told, especially those that people do not like to discuss." Durjoy Rahman also spoke on the need to inspire platform providers to enable artistes to inspire a wider audience through their art.

The voice of history has characteristically been told by men, about men, and rarely have women been brought up in mainstream discussions with due recognition. The title of Birangona or war heroines is one that was stigmatised and taken advantage of as well. Their war continues to this day; it is not over yet.

Navine Murshid, the only female guest on the panel, hence stressed the masculine narrative throughout the course of history. In a discomforting yet necessary conversation between rape victims and the patriarchy, a male curator has presented a male photographer's research on many women. She thereafter asked, "Would it have been a slightly different story if these were said to a female artiste? Most of these stories are told in a certain way to a certain person. What Mashruk has done is put forward everything for the rest of the world to participate in and be a part of the interpretations that emerge from here.

Mofidul Huq, Bangladesh Liberation War Museum trustee, described the exhibition as a silent experience for every spectator. He said, "Everyone who will see, listen, and read about these stories will be overcome with several questions in silence. This experience will prove to be thought-provoking for all, while also helping to give a voice to the unheard."

The exhibition was attended by a diverse crowd of all ages, including nationals, foreigners, and well-known personalities such as photojournalist Shahidul Alam. However, the center of all attraction were the stories themselves — the stories of women who endured inhumane torture and, as victims, were inspired to continue to liberate this country.

The research and dissemination are because of these women: Aklima Begum, who took her favourite dog Bhulu with her to listen to Sheikh Mujibur Rahman speak on March 7; Halima Parvin, who fled her home at 17 to take up arms; Maimuna Khatun, whose husband left while the Pakistani army raped her; Shamsun Nahar, who lived in the woods, helped freedom fighters with food, and punched a soldier in the face when attacked; Kakon Bibi, who spied as a beggar to gather intel and misled the military to save the Muktibahini; Kanchanmala, who returned to her house after independence to only be tortured and humiliated by her husband; Razia Khatun, accused of giving birth to a Pakistani child; Ferdousi Priyabhashini, the first woman to publicly take on the mantle of a Birangona; and many others whose stories remain unsung.

The exhibition, currently underway at La Galerie, Alliance Française de Dhaka (AFD), is supported by Durjoy Bangladesh Foundation, Counter Foto, and Alliance Française Dhaka. It will run until June 26 from 3pm to 9pm every day, except Sundays.

BPSA statement a moral support misleading reports for the sake of "public safety and public order".

It also requested the media to be "more cautious and follow the principles of journalism properly" while publishing any report about the police force.

The NOAB yesterday said the media publish reports regarding the achievements and positive works of the police force.

The media with due professionalism also run investigative reports on the accumulation of illegal wealth through abuse of power by government officials, it added.

"In case of any errors in reporting on these issues, the responsibility lies with the respective media outlet. In this regard, the institution or the individual concerned, if necessary, may take the issue to the Press Council following the relevant rules and regulations," said the statement.

Instead of doing so, the BPSA resorted to "blame game" by protesting the reports and threatening the media in the name of asking it "to be extra cautious" while reporting on the police force, said NOAB.

The association expressed optimism that the police force will continue its support for the media's efforts to implement the government's anti-corruption policies.

'WITHDRAW STATEMENT'

Crime Reporters' Association of Bangladesh (CRAB) in a statement yesterday demanded withdrawal of the BPSA statement, saying it is detrimental to independent journalism.

Expressing grave concern, the CRAB said such a statement may encourage corrupt officials.

The journalists' platform said investigating corruption and irregularities and exposing the abuse of power is part of responsible journalism.

"Recently, some reports were published on the amassing of unusual assets by some former and current officials. We don't think those reports were run with any specific intent," said the statement.

The CRAB said the language of the BPSA statement is against independent journalism.

The organisation sought cooperation from all quarters to implement the government's "zero tolerance" policy against corruption.

Earlier, the Editors' Council, Bangladesh Federal Union of Journalists (BFUJ), Dhaka Union of Journalists (DUJ), Dhaka Reporters' Unity and Broadcast Journalists' Centre issued separate statements protesting the BPSA statement.

In reply to a query from ruling Awami League MP Ali Azam from Bhola-2, Ali said the per capita income of Bangladesh in fiscal 2023-24 is $2,784 as per the temporary account of the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics.

Replying to another query of Jatiya Party MP ABM Ruhul Amin Hawlader from Patuakhali-1, Ali said the gross foreign reserves stood at $24.2 billion as of May and $18.63 billion as per the BPM6 methodology of the International Monetary Fund.

The country can meet the import bills of four-and-a-half months with the gross foreign currency reserves, he added.

About the volatile situation in the foreign exchange market, he said if a country has an import cover of three months, it is not considered a crisis.

"Bangladesh's current reserve amount is about $24.40 billion, which is enough to pay about five months of import liabilities. This means the foreign exchange market is stable," Ali said.

In his question, AL MP Afzal Hossain from Kishorganj-5 asked whether it is true that two-thirds of the businessmen think that corruption, bureaucracy and the volatile situation in the foreign exchange market are the biggest obstacles to doing business in Bangladesh.

The ruling party MP also wanted to know whether the government had taken any effective initiative to stop corruption in business.

In response to a query from Laxmipur-2 MP Nur Uddin Chowdhury Nayan, Ali said a total of $10.57 billion came as remittance between January and May, with the highest amount coming from the UAE.

throw Group 1 wide open.

Josh Hazlewood drew first blood as he bounced out Virat Kohli for a duck after Australia elected to field.

Rohit has not been in the best of form but the India captain threw Starc out of the attack by hitting the fast bowler for four sixes in a 29-run over.

Pat Cummins, who claimed back-to-back hat-tricks in his last two games, was pressed into service to end the batting carnage.

Rohit greeted him by depositing the seamer's first ball on the roof of the stadium for a monster six en route to a 19-ball fifty, his first of the tournament.

India raced to the 100-mark in the ninth over but Starc returned to deny Rohit what could have been the first hundred by a batter in this tournament.

Suryakumar Yadav (31) and Shivam Dube (28) produced breezy cameos and Hardik Pandya made 27 not out to propel India to their first 200-plus total of the tournament.

Arshdeep Singh rattled Australia by removing David Warner in the first over in what could be the opener's last game in an Australia shirt.

Mitchell Marsh (37) joined Head and they counter-attacked to put Australia's chase back on track.

Axar Patel leapt to take a stunning one-handed catch at deep square leg to dismiss Marsh but Head raced to a 24-ball fifty.

Kuldeep Yadav castled the dangerous Glenn Maxwell (20) and Jasprit Bumrah effectively sealed India's victory when he dismissed Head with a clever change of pace.

Once a victim himself, Noyon now fights

According to the State Department report, Noyon is a welcoming first face to trafficking survivors and migrants as they return to Bangladesh.

In his capacity as manager of BRAC Migration Welfare Center onsite at Dhaka airport, Noyon has supported more than 34,000 Bangladeshi trafficking survivors and migrants over the last 15 years.

"As a fellow trafficking survivor, he is uniquely qualified and motivated to help them rebuild their lives."

Born to a family of modest means, his dream of a better life turned into a nightmare when he fell victim to trafficking in Malaysia in 2007.

"But, as he now shared, that is not how his story ends. His motivation to support fellow survivors has long motivated him to serve as a member of ANIRBAN, a trafficking support platform made up of survivors who raise awareness about human trafficking and advocate for survivors and their rights," says the report.

Noyon believes education is one of the best ways to insulate Bangladesh's next generation from the perils of human trafficking.

In a reaction to the recognition, Noyon said he understands the pain of those who fall victim to trafficking.

"Upon return, I started working for the migrants and trafficking survivors. I try to stand beside such victims at home and abroad as a manager of BRAC Migration Welfare Centre.

"I also got in trouble while working to support them. I was imprisoned for working for the trafficking victims."

Others who received the award include lawyer Sonia Marcela Cecilia Martinez Sempertegui of Bolivia; Brig Mustafa Ridha Mustafa Al Yasiri of Iraq; Edith Wairimu Murogo of Kenya; Oumou Elkhairou Niare of Mali; Samson JR Inocencio of the Philippines; Majijana Savic of Serbia; Rosa Maria Cendon Leris of Spain and Letitia Agnes Pinas of Suriname.

Jisanul the information over his official WhatsApp number.

The PHQ made the move after GMP Deputy Commissioner (south) Mohammad Nazir Ahmed Khan submitted a probe report, read the letter.

The GMP initiated the probe after a journalist made a social media post regarding Asaduzzaman. In the post, the journalist posted a Telegram channel link where NTMC-verified information of Asaduzzaman was available.

It was found that the information was downloaded using the ID of the assistant sub-inspector, read the PHQ letter signed by Mohammad Anowar Hossain, additional DIG of the PHQ.

Former DMP commissioner Asaduzzaman recently hogged headlines for alleged corruption.

The action against Jisanul was taken days after the Bangladesh Police Service Association (BPSA) in a letter on Friday urged journalists to be "more cautious and follow the principles of journalism properly" while publishing any report about the police force.

The association described recent media reports, mainly on graft allegations against some former and current officials, as a "smear campaign". It claimed that the reports being run by print, electronic, and social media outlets were "partial, motivated, exaggerated, and misleading".

He said the US Financial Intelligence Institution has shown that $7 billion is being smuggled out of Bangladesh every year and being invested in "Begum Para" in Canada, second homes in Malaysia, modern shopping malls in Singapore and Dubai, and real estate and hundi businesses.

There is no initiative to bring back the laundered money, but the expatriates are being taxed on the income they send home, he added.

"One of the means of earning illegal wealth is taking a loan from the bank and not returning it."

Menon opposed the provision of whitening black money in the proposed budget, saying, "All the arguments being given in its favour are not only baseless but also contrary to the previous position of the government in this regard.

"I hope the finance minister will withdraw this proposal and rid the parliament of this burden."

Referring to the murder of ruling AL MP Anwarul Azim, he said the image of the parliament and its members are in question because of the media publishing stories about gold and drug smuggling, and the criminal underworld in the southwestern part of the country.

"This matter needs to be further looked into. Self-criticism is needed."

He said rising commodity prices, corruption, money laundering, embezzling, anarchy in the banking sector and defaulted loans have left the country's economy in a fragile state.

"It's necessary to restore the economy, to bring back relief to the public and state life. But no effective measures are seen in the budget for that purpose."

Russia warns US after Ukraine strikes Crimea

Summons US envoy

REUTERS, MOSCOW

The Kremlin yesterday directly blamed the United States for an attack on Crimea with US-supplied ATACMS missiles that killed at least four people and injured 151, and Moscow formally warned the US ambassador that retaliation would follow.

The war in Ukraine has triggered the biggest confrontation between Russia and the West since the 1962 Cuban Missile Crisis, and Russian officials have said that the conflict is entering the most dangerous escalatory phase to date.

But directly blaming the United States for a deadly attack on Crimea - which Russia annexed in 2014 and now considers to be Russian territory although most of the world considers it to be part of Ukraine - is a step further.

"You should ask my colleagues in Europe, and above all in Washington, the press secretaries, why their governments are killing Russian children. Just ask them this question," Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov told reporters of the attack.

At least two children were killed in the attack on Sevastopol on Sunday, according to Russian officials. People were shown running from a beach near Sevastopol and some of the injured being carried off on sun loungers.

Russia said that the United States had supplied the weapons, while US military specialists had aimed the weapons and provided data for them.

Meanwhile, a Russian missile attack on Ukraine's eastern town of Pokrovsk killed at least four people and injured 34 more, the regional governor said yesterday. Two children were among the injured, Vadym Filashkin said on Telegram.

Israel's offensive shatters Palestinian pupils' dream

85pc of educational facilities are out of service in Gaza

Teenagers across the Gaza Strip should have been taking their final exams this month, a last hurdle before university and lifelong dreams, but the Israeli offensive in the Palestinian territory has crushed those hopes.

According to the education ministry in the Hamas-run Gaza Strip, 85 percent of educational facilities in the territory are out of service because of the offensive.

"I was eagerly awaiting the exams, but the offensive prevented that and destroyed that joy", said Baraa al-Farra, an 18-year-old student displaced from Khan Yunis in southern Gaza.

"At first we were waiting in the hope that the offensive would end and we would catch up," he said.

But "we don't know how long it will last or how many years it will deprive us of our educational lives."

The Education Cluster, a UN-backed organisation, estimated in a report this month that more than 75 percent of Gaza's schools would need full reconstruction or major rehabilitation to reopen.

Many have been turned into shelters for Gaza's displaced and others have been damaged in bombardment.

Liliane Nihad, an 18-year-old displaced to Khan Yunis from Gaza City, in the territory's north, said she and her fellow students had "been waiting 12 years to take these exams and pass and feel happy and enter university... but we have been deprived of all that by this damned offensive".

Nihad said she had been hoping to study English and to get a doctorate, "but all of that has evaporated".

Displaying their anger at the situation, dozens of students and teachers held a protest in Gaza City's Al-Rimal neighbourhood on Saturday. "We demand our right to take high school exams" and "We want books, not bombs" they chanted, while empty chairs were laid out to symbolise those students killed in the offensive.

In the West Bank, violence has further escalated since the start of the Gaza offensive. According to the Palestinian official news agency Wafa, 20 high school students are among the hundreds of Palestinians killed there.

Wafa reported that 89,000 students from Gaza and the West Bank had been expected to take high school exams this year. Back in Gaza, however, there will be no exams at all.

The UN, citing the Palestinian ministry of education, said about 39,000 high school students in Gaza are unable to take their tests.

Sulaf Mousa, an 18-year-old from Al-Shati Camp west of Gaza City, hit by a deadly air strike on Saturday, said he had hoped to study medicine and become a doctor.

"Now, we hope we will survive the offensive and not lose more than we have already lost," Mousa said.

INDIA PARLIAMENT

Modi appeals to opposition for 'consensus'

AFP, New Delhi

Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi yesterday appealed to an emboldened opposition for "consensus", as parliament opened following an election setback that forced him into a coalition government for the first time in a decade.

Expected in the first session, which will run until July 3, is a preview of Modi's plans for his third term and the likely formal appointment of Rahul Gandhi as leader of the opposition -- a post vacant since 2014.

"To run the country, a consensus is of utmost importance", Modi said in a speech shortly before entering parliament, calling on the opposition to play a constructive role.

"People want substance, not slogans," he said.

Autocracy is 'evil'

Says Taiwan president after China threatens death for separatism

REUTERS, Taipei

Democracy is not a crime and autocracy is the real "evil", Taiwan President Lai Ching-te said yesterday after China threatened to impose the death penalty in extreme cases for "diehard" Taiwan independence separatists.

On Friday, China ramped up its pressure on Taiwan by issuing new legal guidelines to punish those it says support island's formal independence, though Chinese courts have no jurisdiction on the democratically governed island.

Blaze in South Korea battery plant kills 22 workers

AFP, Hwaseong

Twenty-two people were killed in a massive fire at a South Korean lithium battery plant yesterday, most of them Chinese nationals, in one of the country's worst factory disasters in years.

Over 100 people were working in the factory when workers heard a series of explosions from the second floor, where lithium-ion batteries were being inspected and packaged, a firefighter said.

In the blaze that ensued, 22 people were killed, including 20 foreign nationals -- 18 Chinese, one from Laos, and one of unknown nationality, he said.

MYANMAR CRISIS

First junta conscripts to begin duty at end of month

AFP, Yangon

A first batch of 5,000 conscripts called up by Myanmar's junta will begin duty at the end of this month, military sources told AFP yesterday, as the generals struggle to crush opposition to their coup.

The junta enforced a conscription law in February, three years after it seized power and sparked a widespread armed uprising that has spread across swathes of the Southeast Asian country.

The law allows the military to summon all men aged 18-35 and women aged 18-27 to serve in the armed forces for at least two years.

"The first batch of recruits, who started in early April, will conclude training at the end of this month," one military source said.

The source said that upon graduation the 5,000 conscripts would be posted to "different military commands around the country to serve their duty", without giving details on how they would serve.

He requested anonymity as he was not authorised to talk to the media.

VIOLATING CRASH SETTLEMENT

US prosecutors for charging Boeing

REUTERS, WASHINGTON

US prosecutors are recommending to senior Justice Department officials that criminal charges be brought against Boeing BA.N after finding the planemaker violated a settlement related to two fatal crashes, two people familiar with the matter told Reuters.

The Department of Justice (DOJ) must decide by July 7 whether to prosecute Boeing. The recommendation of prosecutors handling the case has not been previously reported.

In May, officials determined the company breached a 2021 agreement that had shielded Boeing from a criminal charge of conspiracy to commit fraud arising from two fatal crashes in 2018 and 2019 involving the 737 MAX jet.

Under the 2021 deal, the Justice Department agreed not to prosecute Boeing over allegations it defrauded the Federal Aviation Administration so long as the company overhauled its compliance practices and submitted regular reports. Boeing also agreed to pay $2.5 billion to settle the investigation.

Boeing declined to comment. It has previously said it has "honored the terms" of the 2021 settlement, which had a three-year term and is known as a deferred prosecution agreement. Boeing has told the Justice Department it disagrees with its determination that the company violated the settlement, Reuters reported this month.

A spokesperson for the Justice Department declined to comment.

The two sides are in discussions over a potential resolution to the Justice Department's investigation and there is no guarantee officials will move forward with charges, the two sources said. The internal Justice Department deliberations remain ongoing and no final decisions have been reached, they added.

Criminal charges would deepen an unfolding crisis at Boeing, which has faced intense scrutiny from US prosecutors, regulators and lawmakers after a panel blew off one of its jets operated by Alaska Airlines ALK.N mid-flight January 5, just two days before the 2021 settlement expired.

The sources did not specify what criminal charges Justice Department officials are considering, but one of the people said they could extend beyond the original 2021 fraud conspiracy charge.

Alternatively, instead of prosecuting Boeing, the DOJ could extend the 2021 settlement by a year or propose new, stricter terms, the sources said.

In addition to financial penalties, the strictest settlements typically involve installing a third party to monitor a company's compliance. The DOJ can also require the company to admit its wrongdoing by pleading guilty.

DAGESTAN ATTACK

Death toll rises to 20

Moscow launches terror probe

REUTERS, MOSCOW

The death toll from a series of brazen attacks on churches and synagogues in Russia's mainly Muslim region of Dagestan rose to 20 yesterday after gunmen went on the rampage in coordinated attacks in two of the republic's most important cities.

Gunmen with automatic weapons burst into an Orthodox church and a synagogue in the ancient city of Derbent on Sunday evening, setting fire to an icon at the church and killing a 66-year-old Orthodox priest, Nikolai Kotelnikov.

In the city of Makhachkala, about 125 km (75 miles) north on the Caspian Sea shore, attackers shot at a traffic police post and attacked a church.

Gun battles erupted around the Assumption Cathedral in Makhachkala and heavy automatic gunfire rang out late into the night. Footage showed residents running for cover as plumes of smoke rose above the city.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility. Russia's Investigative Committee said 15 policemen and four civilians were killed.

BPSA stance a threat to media freedom

Police would be better off focusing on investigating graft allegations

We are troubled by the Bangladesh Police Service Association's (BPSA) scathing assessment of recent media reports on the alleged involvement of some retired and serving police officials in corruption, which it termed "partial," "ill-motivated," and "exaggerated." In letters sent to all media editors on Friday, the BPSA came down heavily on the media for what it called a "smear campaign" against police. As has been pointed out by the journalist community, the tone and disposition of the statement appeared to intimidate journalists, urging caution about reporting on the police force. This, along with the news of some BPSA members apparently demanding legal action at an internal meeting of the platform, rightly got journalists worried at a time when independent journalism is already under serious strain.

The reports published in the media made serious allegations of corruption against certain police officials. But they didn't portray the whole force as being corrupt. Therefore, the claim that the reports were aimed at "tarnishing police image" is a slippery slope argument. In fact, the media has constantly played a significant role in celebrating and pointing out the critical role played by any police force, including ours. At the same time, it is the duty of the media to hold those in power to account for any abuse of authority. Reports unearthing corruption by police officials are but an exercise in that vein. Instead of deeming them as ill-motivated, a more appropriate response would have been a prompt announcement of internal investigations or support for independent probes into these serious allegations, as correctly pointed out by the Transparency International Bangladesh.

Interestingly, even though said media reports do not make a blanket accusation against the police force, the BPSA seems to do just that in its portrayal of the media. Moreover, while calling out the reports as a "smear campaign" against its members, it did not name any victims of alleged defamation, which is necessary. The importance of being precise and accurate, whether in journalism or police work, cannot be overstated. In any case, independent media certainly deserves a more considerate appraisal of the crucial role it plays in upholding democracy and people's constitutional rights.

What we are most worried about is the effect of such statements. At a time when police are failing to show "zero tolerance" for corruption within the force, even in the small number of cases that are reported, a defensive and thinly-veiled intimidating statement may further shrink the space for investigative journalism that brings out such instances of corruption. Moreover, for the police administration to use the association, which involves all in the police, for this purpose sets a dangerous precedent. Therefore, we hope that the police administration will take cognisance of these concerns, bolster its internal investigative and disciplinary mechanisms to stop corruption, and extend unconditional support to the media to perform its duty of keeping the nation informed.

Clamp down on online misogyny

Malicious Facebook content targeting female politicians raises alarm

In a country that has been governed only by women for the last 33 years (barring two years of state of emergency), it is distressing to see how misogyny is still the weapon of choice to dissuade, intimidate and harass women seeking leadership roles. A recent study on Facebook content posted around the time of the 12th national election of Bangladesh reveals a disturbing picture: gendered disinformation was used to attack female leaders (on both sides of the political aisle) as well as journalists and analysts. This is another proof that online violence against women continues unabated amid feeble government attempts to regulate cybercrimes.

As part of an investigation into technology-facilitated gender-based violence (TFGBV), the research analysed nearly 25,000 pieces of Facebook content—collected between December 1, 2022 and January 15, 2024—to see how gendered disinformation was used during the election. Among them, more than 1,400 posts contained gendered attacks, a staggering 70 percent of which were of sexual nature. Incorrect and made-up content, deep-fake content, doxxing, hate speech, violent threats, and unwanted explicit content were some of the prevalent forms of TFGBV that were used. The number of female BNP politicians who were subjected to such violence compared to their Awami League counterparts is tenfold, according to the study. Among the high-profile victims were BNP's Khaleda Zia, Shama Obaid and Rumeen Farhana, as well as Awami League's Sheikh Hasina and Momtaz Begum.

What does it say about a country that boasts of facilitating women's empowerment? In recent elections, women's participation in politics has been on a downward trend. In the last election, less than five percent of all candidates were women. The political landscape of Bangladesh has generally been unfavourable for women due to the age-old bias that politics is the realm of men. So, when women defy social norms to participate in civil and political activities, gendered intimidation tactics are readily used to dissuade them. We have seen in recent years how rape has been used as a tool of political intimidation against both voters and candidates.

This state of affairs is absolutely unacceptable. We need to bring in more women in policy- and decision-making roles, and gendered attacks and disinformation, especially on social media, will only act as a deterrent. The government claims to be working on installing various mechanisms to monitor and regulate the cyberspace to curb cybercrimes, including circulating disinformation. But we need results, not reassurances. Therefore, it must rethink its work plan and undertake strict measures against TFGBV. That should be one of the top priorities in Smart Bangladesh.

TROUBLED

Mental health challenges of our school children

Dr Syed Saad Andaleeb is distinguished professor emeritus at Pennsylvania State University and former vice chancellor of BRAC University.

SYED SAAD ANDALEEB

When Ms Matin saw Mamun after a decade since his kindergarten years, she was appalled. The child she knew was happy and energetic: what became of him in his adolescent years? Mamun looked frail, lacked energy, and had a distant and troubled expression on his face. His father recounted how Mamun had withdrawn from his friends and social activities, had difficulty concentrating on studies, and suffered bouts of headaches and other ailments that did not respond well to treatment. His friends seemed to have abandoned him and his teachers left him alone, whispering among themselves about this strange and alien being. Here was an adolescent child drifting away, far from friendly shores, alone and helpless.

Mamun's mental health situation is not uncommon and probably reaching contagion proportions in schools worldwide. In Bangladesh, the subject is taboo. Lack of understanding, fear, and social stigma often prevent school children and their families from seeking timely help. This exacerbates the child's difficulties and hinders her/his overall well-being. Unfortunately, a child like Mamun is often told, "get over it" or "it's all in your head." The problem gets quickly swept under the rug with its attendant burdens and severe consequences.

VISUAL: SHAIKH SULTANA JAHAN BADHON

Troubled school children suffer mental stresses for a variety of reasons: The competitive education system, family and societal expectations, emphasis on academic success over learning, authoritarian teachers, and insensitive peers who make life miserable. Many children find themselves struggling with high academic standards without guidance or support, abused by the acerbic tongue of some teachers, and being bullied day in day out by peers. It's a rough world for the throbbing little hearts, yearning to be free like the butterfly; yet being battered constantly by the whirlwinds of family, teachers, and peers.

> Family dynamics and expectations are the starting point of the travails of many children. High expectations, strict parenting styles, pressures to conform to societal norms, and career aspirations deemed prestigious or financially rewarding begin to build pressure at home with crushing force. Some children find their achievements constantly compared with the children of other family members, friends, or peers. Constant criticism or disapproval when the child is unable to perform leaves her/his self-esteem in tatters and contributes to feelings of rejection.

Sources of mental challenges

Family dynamics and expectations are the starting point of the travails of many children. High expectations, strict parenting styles, pressures to conform to societal norms, and career aspirations deemed prestigious or financially rewarding begin to build pressure at home with crushing force. Some children find their achievements constantly compared with the children of other family members, friends, or peers. Constant criticism or disapproval when the child is unable to perform leaves her/his self-esteem in tatters and contributes to feelings of rejection. Families also have specific expectations for how boys and girls should behave and what career paths they should pursue even if their abilities and interests are at cross-purposes. Beyond academics, families may also expect their children to excel in extracurricular activities such as sports, arts, or music. In some families, the emphasis on success is so high—to claim "first boy" status—that "second boy" is not acceptable! Expressing vulnerability, seeking emotional support, or even giving up under the circumstances is not an option and severely discouraged. The constant demands of family expectations can significantly impact, even cripple, the mental health of school children, sometimes leading to suicidal inclinations.

Parents must understand the weight of their words on their children and take a balanced approach to academics, emphasising individual growth over strict achievement targets. They must learn to open up communications channels to understand the academic challenges of their children and engage in open discussions about career aspirations in a supportive environment. When they begin to appreciate the uniqueness of each child and their individual strengths, abandoning comparisons and providing a supportive environment where even small achievements are celebrated, it is a win-win situation. Encouraging their progeny to learn from mistakes as a natural part of development can also help raise a child's self-worth and create conditions for a healthy mind to evolve.

Teachers can also trigger mental health breakdowns, knowingly or unknowingly, that significantly impacts school students. While a great number of teachers are devoted to fostering a positive learning environment, some of them stand out for their abysmal and erroneous demands in the classroom that include excessive demands to perform, frequent testing, and creating intense competition among peers to create a high-stress environment. A rigid teaching style that doesn't appreciate or accommodate alternative learning styles may also lead to frustration and a feeling of inadequacy among many learners who learn differently. Placing them in "learning cages" with no manoeuvrability is simply inappropriate.

> It is important for teachers to focus on holistic learning and individual progress in a collaborative and supportive learning environment where teaching methods cater to different learning styles. Teachers must also encourage open communication and be receptive to students' concerns by cultivating positive and two-way communication, providing constructive feedback, and offering encouragement. These traits are not necessarily inborn; they must be nurtured.

Then there are teachers who do not hesitate to utter biting comments, express constant criticism, or display dismissive behaviour that affect a student's self-esteem and confidence. Mistakes of students are sometimes rebuked with ill temper instead of using positive communication, constructive feedback, and encouragement. Some teachers are prone to treating mistakes as opportunities to punish learners—a dreaded classroom environment. Favouritism is also a trait some teachers exhibit openly; those in disfavour experience sour behaviour and unfair treatment. Unrealistic expectations of teachers regarding classroom behaviour, performance, or conformity may similarly lead to stress and anxiety. These teachers need training to be sensitive or identify signs of mental health challenges of the young learners.

It is important for teachers to focus on holistic learning and individual progress in a collaborative and supportive learning environment where teaching methods cater to different learning styles. Teachers must also encourage open communication and be receptive to students' concerns by cultivating positive and two-way communication, providing constructive feedback, and offering encouragement. These traits are not necessarily inborn; they must be nurtured. Teachers receiving mental health awareness training must also develop adequate skills to recognise signs of distress to assist and guide young learners or refer them to appropriate support services.

Peers are an additional source of severe mental stress, especially when students are exposed to bullying which is manifested in a variety of ways. Verbal bullying involves using words to hurt, threaten, or manipulate another person. This can include name-calling, teasing, taunting, and spreading rumours that can induce low self-esteem, anxiety, depression, and a sense of powerlessness in the victim.

Physical bullying involves the use of physical force to harm another person. This may include hitting, kicking, pushing, or any form of physical aggression that may result not only in physical injuries but also emotional trauma.

Social bullying involves manipulating social relationships to harm, control, or exclude someone. This can include spreading rumours, gossiping, or intentionally excluding individuals from social groups that create feelings of isolation, loneliness, and rejection.

Another hurtful practice is prejudice-based bullying which involves targeting individuals based on their race, ethnicity, religion, gender identity, physical handicap, or even a spoken dialect that is perceived as different. Such practices are manifested in discriminatory behaviour, hate speech, or exclusion.

Sexual bullying involves inappropriate comments, gestures, or actions of a sexual nature. This can include sexual harassment, inappropriate touching, or making explicit remarks, resulting sometimes in post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD) for which victims may struggle with issues related to body image and self-worth. When teachers engage in sexual bullying, that should call for immediate termination.

Of late cyberbullying has emerged through social media, messaging apps, and online forums. These digital platforms are used to harass, embarrass, or intimidate others. It's important to note that the various forms of bullying are often interconnected, and an individual may experience multiple types of bullying simultaneously.

Educational reforms are being introduced in several South Asian countries to alleviate the mental abuse of school children. Some initiatives include curriculum revisions to promote holistic learning, integrating mental health education into the curriculum, and introducing counselling services within schools to provide emotional support to students.

Important interventions

When children feel compelled to fulfil their family's career expectations, it can lead to a sense of inadequacy or dissatisfaction if their own interests and passions are compromised. Family counselling programmes and workshops are thus vital to help parents understand the impact of their expectations on children's mental health. Parental education programmes must emphasise the importance of a balanced approach, fostering positive communication within the family, and supporting children's emotional well-being.

Professional development opportunities for teachers include learning to use varied teaching methods and to be flexible and adaptable in instructional approaches that promote the importance of learning (not regurgitating) and emotional intelligence. They must also be trained to encourage open communication and empathy. Teachers who employ negative reinforcement, criticism, or an authoritarian approach must receive special training to change the uncomfortable and anxiety-inducing classroom atmosphere they create and to encourage a supportive and respectful classroom culture where students feel safe and encouraged to express themselves.

It is also important to introduce recognition programmes, positive feedback, and two-way communication. Cultivating a culture of appreciation and involvement with the school community can go far in building an exemplary learning environment that recognises and respects mental health issues.

Schools and affiliated communities can prevent bullying by fostering a culture of empathy, promoting awareness, and implementing anti-bullying policies and counselling interventions for both victims and perpetrators. Early identification and appropriate intervention are key to mitigating the long-term mental health effects of bullying on school children.

Educational initiatives must also be designed to foster togetherness and empathy among students by creating a more inclusive and supportive school environment. Such an environment conveys the language of fellow-feeling and love every beating heart understands, empathy connects each soul, and inclusiveness is the playground where the children can flourish in camaraderie, team spirit, and mutual respect. Let the processes begin—now!

Finance is key to Bangladesh's energy transition is lead energy analyst for Bangladesh at the Institute for Energy Economics and Financial Analysis (IEEFA).

Shafiqul Alam

SHAFIQUL ALAM

Bangladesh is facing a double whammy. On one hand, climate-change induced events continue to ravage the country, compelling it to spend 6-7 percent of its annual budget on adaptation each year. On the other hand, transitioning to capital-intensive clean energy is also a necessity for the country given its reliance on fossil fuels, which increases costs and drives up inflation. These competing priorities mean that Bangladesh will need to consistently invest in critical climate-resilient infrastructure and clean energy technologies in the next several decades.

To achieve these goals, it is important that Bangladesh streamline its funding schemes and identify viable sources of financing.

Drivers of a clean energy transition

Cyclone Remal, which hit Bangladesh in May 2024, affected as many as 3.8 million people, damaging 150,000 houses. This was not a one-off event. Although Bangladesh is prone to cyclones of similar magnitude or more, such extreme events are likely to become frequent in future. As a result, the country will need more funding to adapt to climate change.

There are several reasons why Bangladesh should invest in clean energy. Dependence on imported fossil fuel has proven costly for Bangladesh. Apart from the high price volatility of fossil fuels in the international market during 2022-23, the recent devaluation of the Bangladeshi taka by Tk 7 per US dollar in May 2024 has made fossil fuel imports more costly. As a result, the Bangladesh Petroleum Corporation (BPC) incurred an additional cost of roughly Tk 5 billion ($42.3 million) to import fuel oil in May 2024. BPC's annual cost may increase by Tk 60 billion ($511 million), which is enough to install a combined rooftop solar capacity of more than half a gigawatt (GW).

Since importing fossil fuels such as liquefied natural gas and coal is also expensive now, the government will feel the pressure of increasing tariffs for electricity and gas.

However, raising tariffs cannot eliminate the subsidy burden. The subsidy for the power sector soared to Tk 395.35 billion ($3.34 billion) in fiscal year (FY) 2022-23 from Tk 296.58 billion ($2.51 billion) in FY2021-22 despite the 15 percent tariff hike on electricity between January and March 2023.

Bangladesh must invest more in renewable energy and energy efficiency to reduce fossil fuel imports to reverse the increasing trajectory of the subsidy burden.

Energy transition will necessitate billions in financing

According to the Integrated Energy and Power Master Plan (IEPMP 2023), Bangladesh plans to install a total of 37.8GW new renewable energy (primarily solar and wind) capacity until 2050 under the advanced technology scenario (ATS) (taking the in-between growth scenario which considered the average of the growth rates projected in the country's perspective plan and the International Monetary Fund's estimates). The IEPMP estimates that the combined capacity of 37.8GW renewable energy without energy storage systems will cost Bangladesh $37.4 billion.

However, renewable energy capacity may reach 26.2GW in 2050 under the in-between growth case, excluding ATS. The changed IEPMP scenario indicates that the country may have 17 percent renewable energy by 2050, implying that the installed renewable energy capacity will be less than 20GW.

According to IEEFA's estimate, even the installation of 20GW renewable energy capacity with battery storage for 30 percent of the capacity for four-hour back-up may require around $1 billion investment a year through 2050.

Bangladesh should set a mission that is fit-for-purpose to lead an effective energy transition, with finance at its core. This is not only due to insufficient financing schemes, but also the challenges posed by the current banking and finance framework in the country. For instance, Bangladesh Bank's refinancing scheme of $33.84 million for environment-friendly projects has recently been increased to $84.6 million, but the cap for a loan to a solar park is only $2.54 million. The loan amount is inadequate in relation to the required finance volume even for a 10MW solar power project.

Financing the energy transition

Bangladesh should set a mission that is fit-for-purpose to lead an effective energy transition, with finance at its core. This is not only due to insufficient financing schemes, but also the challenges posed by the current banking and finance framework in the country.

For instance, Bangladesh Bank's refinancing scheme of Tk 4 billion ($33.84 million) for environment-friendly projects has recently been increased to Tk 10 billion ($84.6 million) but the cap for a loan to a solar park is only Tk 0.3 billion ($2.54 million). The loan amount is inadequate in relation to the required finance volume even for a 10 megawatt (MW) solar project.

To accelerate its energy transition, Bangladesh should explore available financing avenues, such as multilateral development banks (MDBs), green bonds, private equity funds, investment promotion and financing facilities.

The Infrastructure Development Company Limited, a non-banking financial institution (NBFI), finances utility-scale clean energy projects in Bangladesh with funding from multilateral and bilateral agencies. Likewise, another NBFI, the Bangladesh Infrastructure Finance Fund Limited, can extend debt finance to clean energy projects. However, other local financial institutions should also develop the capacity to access the low-cost finance offered by MDBs. As the country mostly imports clean energy technologies, funding in US dollars is of utmost importance to ensure a smooth opening of letters of credit (LCs) for projects.

Bangladesh Bank published a policy for the issuance of green bonds by banks and financial institutions in 2022. Green bonds can help expedite the clean energy transition in Bangladesh by raising funds for capital-intensive clean energy projects. Institutional investors have a major role to play as a large-scale renewable energy project may require funding worth several hundred million US dollars. It is imperative to incentivise individual investors with green bonds when the government's saving instruments provide lucrative returns.

A lack of equity among sponsors often delays renewable energy projects. Private equity firms with a focus on environmental, social and governance (ESG) may invest in renewable energy projects. These firms are still at a nascent stage in Bangladesh.

Bangladesh Bank's Investment Promotion and Financing Facility, supported by the World Bank, helped develop infrastructure projects in the country. While the funding phase has ended, a new phase, if launched, may speed up the energy transition. The scheme will be fit for purpose as the fund is disbursed in dollars with a tenor of 20 years.

Early preparation to identify and access finance while developing the capacity of local financial institutions is key to driving an effective and sustainable energy transition. The situation demands a bold response—defining a path that will not compromise the needs of the country, both on the climate adaptation and energy transition fronts.

Review of 'We Are the Leaders We Have Been Looking For' by Eddie Glaude Jr is a writer based in Ottawa.

AMITAVA KAR

A new book explores how people can regain their political fate from professional politicians and be the heroes that we need today. Eddie Glaude Jr, a professor at Princeton University and a preeminent scholar, is the author of We Are the Leaders We Have Been Looking For (2024). His previous best-selling books include Begin Again (2020).

It is a beautiful book—some called it "a lyrical meditation"—but in reading it, it also feels like there is an urgency to the writing. What is driving that? Professor Glaude contends that people have subcontracted their responsibility for democracy for too long. They have outsourced it to charismatic leaders and the so-called heroes. If we do not take responsibility now, we may very well lose it. And we are going to need to take a hard look at what we take ourselves to be.

What exactly would he like us to do?

His idea is simple. If people are going to become the leaders they have been looking for, they are going to have to become better people. And if they are going to be better people, they need to help make a more just world, because the world as it is currently designed, values self-centeredness and greed. It gives license to hate and fear.

He suggests that the messiness of the world is in part a manifestation of the messiness of our inner lives. We must start treating the wounds inside, so that we can open up to the beauty and the brilliance of other people, so that we can commit to the idea of immutable justice that we so often talk about. Reaching for a higher form of excellence in pursuit of a better world.

But isn't it human nature to turn people into heroes, to aspire to a higher ideal? Is he saying that it undermines democracy? He posits that when heroes become larger than life, we end up giving ourselves over to them. And the moment we start giving ourselves over to them, we stop doing the difficult work of becoming better human beings.

Professor Glaude contends that people have subcontracted their responsibility for democracy for too long. They have outsourced it to charismatic leaders and the so-called heroes. If we do not take responsibility now, we may very well lose it. And we are going to need to take a hard look at what we take ourselves to be.

He writes about Ella Josephine Baker (1903-1986), iconic leader of the civil rights movement who criticised professionalised, magnetic leadership and promoted grassroots organising and the ability of people to comprehend their conditions and advocate for themselves. She worked not only to lift those up who fall in the cracks and crevices of American democracy but also to create a politics where people could understand their own power. She believed in the hard work on the ground of creating the conditions of building community with others.

In the discussions about the search and effort to become a better person, Professor Glaude turns the lens on himself as well. He writes about what he calls his own primordial wound, one caused by his father. Why did he feel obligated to include that in the book? People often try to hide their vulnerabilities. Martin Luther King, for example, would not smoke in public. We only see glimpses of great leaders in their biographies.

What the renowned professor wanted to do was to heal his own wounds, to understand how his brokenness shaped who he turned out to be. He loves his father and has a wonderful relationship with him today. But he was terrified of him as a child. His father could just look at him and he would cry. By dint of the fear his father deposited in him, he thought he was a coward. And so, he reached for heroes. He found Malcom X—a form of masculinity in the face of what felt like being humiliated daily.

In the end, the book is a message of hope. And his is an abiding faith in the capacity of everyday people to act. Where does he derive that faith from? People. He reminds us that African- Americans who once were nothing but slaves, according to some, have come far. He, however, expresses his reservations about interpreting Obama's presidency as the eventuation of the civil rights movement. The quest for justice goes beyond mere representation.

Nothing makes sense anymore, remarked comedian Colin Jost at the 2024 White House Correspondents' dinner in April. The country will have a presidential election in six months. The Republican candidate reportedly owes millions in fines for bank fraud and has been found guilty on all 34 criminal charges in a porn star hush money trial. And the race is tied!

The book is written in the context of the United States. Its universality is undeniable.

AI is making way for a new era of soft skills. Here's how

SHAMS RASHID TONMOY

A common argument that often pops up nowadays is that AI is killing jobs. While such a bold statement may hold some truth for roles like data entry and supply chain optimisation, the fact that the rise of AI has given birth to new jobs and opportunities often goes unnoticed. With AI gaining popularity across various workplaces, there arises a demand for skilled professionals capable of effectively How to not handle a crisis communication: A lesson from Coca-Cola operating AI models to yield the most desirable outcomes. Moreover, beyond these roles, there is a growing need for positions that AI simply cannot replicate, owing to its inherently non-human nature.

The fact remains: AI cannot replicate soft skills

A recent blog by LinkedIn Learning supports this notion, indicating that the three most sought-after skills by employers in 2024 are: communication, customer service, and leadership. These skills are indispensable in almost any job, yet notably, none of them can be adequately replicated by modern AI. While it can be argued that automated customer service may outperform human agents in answering queries efficiently, AI cannot emulate the empathy, flexibility, and personal understanding that a human agent provides during customer interactions. Furthermore, communication and leadership, being inherently human traits, are cultivated through years of physical interaction with fellow humans in a variety of social settings. This, yet again, is a trait that AI cannot replicate.

According to a finding by Ryan Roslansky, CEO of LinkedIn, since November 2022, LinkedIn has witnessed a remarkable 21-fold increase in job postings mentioning 'GPT' or 'ChatGPT', a testament to how much value modern organisations place on employees with relevant AI skills. However, despite this undeniable emphasis on AI skills, Roslansky notes that there has also been a notable rise in demand for soft skills such as communication and flexibility. "In fact," he states in his blog, "based on LinkedIn's June 2023 Executive Confidence Index, 72% of US executives agree that soft skills are more valuable to their organisation than AI skills."

The ever-human trait of learning from experience

If there's one lesson we've learned from modern AI, it's that the demands of the job market can change rapidly. From the shift to remote work during Covid-19 to the recent surge in demand for AI-related skills in contemporary jobs, predicting the next significant trend in the ever-evolving job market is a tall order. However, certain timeless skills will always remain relevant. Seasoned leadership abilities and adaptability, refined through experience across different industries and workplaces, are among these enduring competencies.

If you're someone who has led different teams across different industries, you have been exposed to a wide range of workplace challenges, management styles, and organisational structures. As an experienced leader, you can adapt your approach and rethink strategies whenever an unforeseen situation may arise, and, based on your years of knowledge and emergency handling, you will be able to identify best practices and implement them effectively in new situations. This adaptability in leadership - a wholly humane trait through and through - has re-solidified itself as the skill modern companies want in higher-level employees.

It's the humane skill that counts

During a 2023 interview, Tim Cook, CEO of Apple, shared that degree or coding skills are not a requirement to get hired by Apple. Instead, the tech giant leader focused on three key soft skills: collaboration, curiosity, and creativity. While Cook probably didn't have AI skills in mind when sharing his company's hiring strategies, the pattern of companies valuing skills that cannot be replicated by AI is once again seen here. While it's true that AI can, and is meant for, handling repetitive tasks and data analysis, it often lacks contextual understanding and creative problem-solving abilities. This is where the aforementioned skills come in: the innovative curiosity of the human mind, when put into action through productive collaboration, can find unique and creative answers to the toughest of problems.

At the end of the day, it is impossible to tell what the most in-demand professional skills will be several years down the line. With transient technical skills often becoming devalued owing to the ease and accessibility of generative AI models, banking on the evergreen reliability of soft skills seems like the way to go. So, instead of resisting the ever changing trends, embrace them - and look into ways to further improve your soft skills. If not anything else, these are the skills that are sure to take you far in your long, winding professional journey.

> These skills are indispensable in almost any job, yet notably, none of them can be adequately replicated by modern AI. While it can be argued that automated customer service may outperform human agents in answering queries efficiently, AI cannot emulate the empathy, flexibility, and personal understanding that a human agent provides during customer interactions.

THE STORY OF NVIDIA

The world's most valuable company

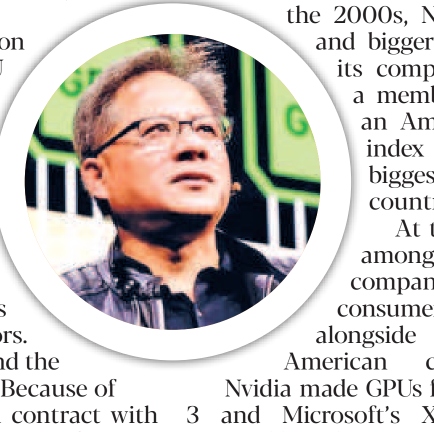
AZMIN AZRAN

There is a new winner in the race to become the world's most valuable company. On June 19, 2024, American tech giant Nvidia surpassed Microsoft to become the company with the highest market cap in the world — an eye-watering $3.34 trillion.

While previous members of the $3 trillion club, Apple and Microsoft, have vast consumer popularity to go with their enormous value, Nvidia operates from the background, relatively speaking. To video game and computer enthusiasts, Nvidia has long been the most popular and dominant graphics processing unit (GPU) manufacturer in the world. In fact, that is how the journey of Nvidia began.

In the early 1990s, when computers had just started entering the public consciousness, Nvidia's founders — Jensen Huang, Chris Malachowsky, and Curtis Priem — predicted a crucial detail in the future of computing. Video games, already popular at the time, were about to become the largest driver of revenue among computer applications, and increasingly complicated and visually engaging video games required computers that were capable of performing massive computations at breakneck speed. The central processing unit (CPU) of the computer bore that burden until then, but Jensen Huang and co. realised that this task could be more efficiently executed through dedicated GPUs that functioned parallel to CPUs.

All of this was discussed in an outlet of Denny's — an American-style diner chain — where Jensen Huang had worked as a busboy when he was a teenager. In 1993, however, when Nvidia was founded, Huang was a division head at LSI Logic, building specialised integrated chips (IC) for various computer products. He left that job to found Nvidia, a name that the trio came up with later by dropping the "i" from invidia, the Latin word for "envy".



Nvidia then embarked on the journey to solve the GPU problem, and it was a stop-start journey that began with a product called NV1 in 1995. It was a "graphics accelerator", which used quadrilateral (four-sided) shapes as the building blocks of computer graphics, as opposed to the triangles that were used by competitors. The triangle approach won, and the NV1 ended up being a failure. Because of this, Nvidia lost a substantial contract with Japanese video game console manufacturer Sega, and were at one point close to going bankrupt. But Sega saw the potential in Nvidia, and invested $5 million in the company.

The company was struggling when it shifted strategies to develop a graphics accelerator that worked with triangles. This new product, called the RIVA 128, was launched in 1996 and became a massive success. But even as it was released, the unofficial company motto had become "Our company is thirty days from going out of business". RIVA 128 changed that reality, and gave Nvidia the launchpad it needed to start the GPU revolution.

In 1999, the company released a product whose name gamers today will be able to relate to. The GeForce 256 was Nvidia's first proper GPU, and the name GeForce has managed to stick around to the present. Throughout the 2000s, Nvidia became bigger and bigger, acquiring much of its competition, and became a member of the S&P 500, an American stock market index for only the 500 biggest companies in the country.

At this point, Nvidia was among only a handful of companies who produced consumer grade GPUs, alongside AMD — another American chip manufacturer. Nvidia made GPUs for Sony's PlayStation 3 and Microsoft's Xbox. The company invested heavily in research and development (R&D) throughout, continuously improving its technology and taking video gaming technology to a whole new level.

In 2016, the GTX 1080 and 1070 were launched, bringing Nvidia massive success in the realm of PC gamers for whom discrete GPUs such as these marked a huge technological jump. These came on the back of GTX 700 and 900 series graphics cards, and Nvidia had become the overwhelmingly dominant force in this space.

Subsequent releases such as the GTX 1600 series, and the RTX 2000, 3000 and 4000 series have given Nvidia an unassailable share in the discrete GPU market. As of the first quarter of 2024, 88 percent of discrete GPUs in use today are Nvidia products, leaving competitors AMD and Intel (a new entrance) in the dust.

But video games and PCs were not enough to take Nvidia to the heights where it is now able to challenge software and mobile giants like Apple, Microsoft, and Google. What got them there was the buzzword of our times, Artificial Intelligence (AI).

Companies that use AI to develop cutting edge products like OpenAI's ChatGPT or Google's Gemini require computers that are capable of computing enormous mathematical calculations. Nvidia's GPUs, which were already capable of executing complicated mathematical functions for graphics usages, could also be used for the maths required for these AI training models.

At first, AI researchers needed to format their data to fit Nvidia's graphics focused products. In 2006, Nvidia introduced a new architecture, called CUDA, that would simplify the use of its products as parallel processors for computational problems.

Things have only gone from good to better since. When cryptocurrency started ballooning in value during the Covid-19 pandemic, Nvidia GPUs became the primary tool with which miners completed the computational tasks needed to produce more bitcoin, and Nvidia's sales skyrocketed as a result. Shortly followed by that were the large language models (LLM) that brought the power of AI to the forefront of public imagination, and as every tech company in the world started getting their hands dirty to develop their own AI products. Nvidia's GPUs, which would aid them in this process, fell massively into demand.

Nvidia was prepared for this. The GV100, followed by the A100 and subsequent models, have started targeting AI data centres where GPUs power the processing of massive amounts of data, engaging them in complex matrix calculations that are the building blocks of today's AI models. The rise of AI, and the competition between other tech giants to get their noses ahead in the AI rat race has benefitted Nvidia, who alongside developing their own AI products, supply the tools necessary to create machine learning models.

Nvidia stock has almost tripled since the beginning of 2024, and shows no signs of slowing down. Some who are sceptical think that this is all a result of an AI bubble, but Nvidia's standing is backed up by solid technology and consistently growing revenue. Jensen Huang, the superstar CEO and founder of Nvidia whom Mark Zuckerberg has called the "Taylor Swift of the tech world", cuts a calm but intimidating figure, as it's his shoulders and his company's on which the much promised AI future of mankind is being built.

Pothas cries 'power' crisis but offers no solution

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh assistant coach Nic Pothas has argued that batters did not have the required power to have confidence about them that they are going to make up for deliveries they use up to get in.

The South African used West Indies as an example, almost a near-exception in terms of power-hitting capabilities.

"I think one thing you've got to acknowledge is you can't fight genetics. You have to have a genetic predisposition to power initially. I mean, we've seen what Rishad [Hossain] can do. Rishad has improved and come on since that New Zealand series to now. But power is something that takes a lot of time. If you're not predisposed to being strong; West Indians don't have to find power. They're born with power. We're not born with power, so we have to do it a different way," Pothas said at a press conference in Antigua on Sunday.

While Pothas urged for 'finding power', it is well documented that the team's batting unit has digressed in terms of application during his tenure, which started in May 2023. Given how Bangladesh batters approached match phases such as Powerplays or death overs, especially during this T20 World Cup, it is evident that Pothas, like many others in the coaching panel, has failed to prepare batters tactically for the situations they face.

In fact, when asked how to solve the 'power' crisis, Pothas ended with 'we've got to find solutions.'

Generally, Bangladesh batters take a lot longer to settle in and play their shots. In majority of the competitive sides, there are big power-hitters who accelerate the scoring rate but Bangladesh have historically struggled to find batters of that nature. It should not need another World Cup to know that these problems existed.

Bangladesh batters have also struggled immensely with shot-selection in this World Cup. If it is argued that power-hitting capabilities can help them play more calmly, power would still not help batters pick the right deliveries to hit, or which bowlers to target -- the more tactical nuances of batting.

Yet, Pothas found something new to learn from the defeats to Australia and India in the Super Eight stage.

"I think we would be making a very big error if we didn't learn and understand why there is the gap between where we are and where the top teams are," he said. "One thing that is very, very obvious throughout this tournament, if you haven't got power, you can't compete. So, it's all about power."

Pothas argued that Bangladesh have not moved forward since the 2007 World Cup. When he should be answering questions about why the likes of Liton Das or Tanzid Tamim look shaky instead of being confident in their shot-making abilities, Pothas was suggesting about what questions have to be asked.

"If Bangladesh is still doing the same thing they were doing in 2007, then it shouldn't be a surprise that they haven't moved forward. And the rest of the world has moved forward, therefore the gap has become bigger. So that's the question we need to be asking. What is different now to 2007? Not what we need to do," he said, adding 'we need to find power from somewhere.'

He argued in the same press conference that Bangladesh needed power-hitting capabilities while suggesting that one has to find a different way if they are not born with it.

It seems that it is not just batting power that Bangladesh lack; there seems to be a need for some inspired brand of coaching too.

Orpita aims to lay women's hockey's foundation

Midfielder Orpita Pal played a vital role in Bangladesh's surprising runners-up finish in the just-concluded Women's Junior AHF Cup, scoring 10 of Bangladesh's 31 goals in six matches, during which she bagged three Player of the Match awards. Orpita, who orchestrated the build-up play and fed the scorers when required, also ended up becoming the joint second top-scorer along with eventual champions Chinese Taipei's Lai Ya-Han. The 11th-grade BKSP student spoke to Anisur Rahman of The Daily Star after the team's arrival from Singapore yesterday. Following are the excerpts of the conversation:

The Daily Star (DS): Your feelings after achieving a surprising result.
Orpita Pal (OP): We were given a big reception on our arrival at the airport, which we really did not expect to get. Of course, it has been a good feeling to achieve something more than what we expected.

DS: Despite hardly any international experience, how did it all materialise?
OP: Of the 18-member squad, 15 players are from BKSP where we have been training together by availing all facilities since 2020, so there has been a good bonding and understanding among the players. Besides, we also played under the same coach [Zahid Hossain Raju] who trained us at BKSP, so we were able to show our strength in Singapore. The coaching staff also provided a lot of mental support.

DS: Why did you choose hockey, which has almost no future in the country?
OP: Usually, I played athletics, handball, kabaddi, and basketball at the school level where I also succeeded in athletics, but I grew interested in playing hockey when hockey was being trained at our school -- Dinajpur Jubilee High School. Then I got admitted to grade seven at BKSP in 2020. [About hockey's future in Bangladesh] Yes, there is hardly any future in women's hockey in Bangladesh, but we want to lay a foundation of women's hockey from where others will step in to develop it.

DS: Your playing experience before getting admitted to BKSP?
OP: Before getting admitted to BKSP, I had been selected for the national women's U-21 hockey team, ahead of the Women's Junior AHF Cup in 2019, and I started in the best eleven in three matches out of five we played against Kazakhstan and played two matches from the bench.

DS: What do you expect from the federation ahead of the Women's Junior Asia Cup?
OP: We want the federation to take the initiative to have a long-term training camp and arrange warm-up matches abroad so that we can hone our skills more in a bid to produce good results against the strong teams in the Women's Junior Asia Cup. Besides, we also want the federation to introduce competitions for women, so that the girls can grow their interest in playing hockey in the future.

Powell praises Windies' revival despite exit

AGENCIES

West Indies captain Rovman Powell expressed pride in reigniting enthusiasm for Caribbean cricket during the ongoing ICC T20 World Cup, despite the team exiting in the Super Eight stage yesterday.

Needing a victory against South Africa in Antigua to advance to the semi-finals, the co-hosts fell short in a rain-affected match, losing by three wickets. Powell acknowledged the team's progress, saying, "I think the cricket that we've played in the last 12 months or so is commendable."

He praised the team for their significant improvement, moving from ninth to third in world rankings. Powell also highlighted the renewed excitement for West Indies cricket, attributing it to the team's performance and the passionate support from fans, both at matches and on social media.

"They [crowd] have been fantastic. It's good to see that some buzz is back in the Caribbean for cricket because we know for how long that has died down," he noted.

Reflecting on the team's history -- an all-conquering team whose authority faced since the late 1980s -- Powell hoped this tournament would signal a new beginning for the two-time T20 World Cup champions.

"Now is where the work starts for us to continue to work as a group [and] still be tight, and hopefully we can continue to climb the rankings and make the Caribbean people proud," he concluded.

Slowly shedding the 'Chokers' tag?

ASHFAQ-UL-ALAM

The stage was set for another classic South African choke in an ICC event when they took on West Indies in a virtual knockout fixture in the Super Eight stage of the ICC T20 World Cup yesterday in Antigua.

Even after winning all five of their previous matches, South Africa somehow found themselves in a do-or-die encounter against the Caribbeans, where the winner would move onto the semifinals while the loser's campaign would come to an end.

It was a low-scoring thriller, something the ongoing edition has seen plenty of, which also included a rain interruption in the Proteas' chase, adding more drama to an already nervy affair.

South Africa had already lost a couple of wickets in the first two overs when rain stopped play and once action resumed, they were set a revised target of 123 in 17 overs.

From there, what proceeded resembled a boxing bout between two heavyweights, constantly exchanging heavy blows but no one gaining the upper hand.

Almost every middle-order batter in the South African line-up got starts, reaching scores of 20s and thereabouts. But whenever it looked like the Proteas would take the ascendency, West Indies would counterpunch with breakthroughs.

Eventually, with 23 needed off 24 balls and five wickets in hand, it seemed like the Proteas had this one in the bag. But then set batter Tristan Stubbs succumbed to the pressure of the situation, just like many South African batters of the past in knockout scenarios, trying to hit a six off Roston Chase only to get caught at long-on.

The echoes of South Africa's past horrors in knockouts got even louder when Keshav Maharaj got caught off the same bowler in the penultimate over, with a risky shot when only 13 were required off 11 balls.

The raucous home crowd at the Sir Vivian Richard Stadium erupted at the dismissal, while the few South African fans present looked on fearing another heart-breaking elimination from a World Cup.

But the Aiden Markram-led side is different to the past South African sides in ICC events at least in one crucial account. Unlike past teams, this group of players have repeatedly shown they can hold their nerves till the end and eke out victories.

South Africa are the only team in the tournament who have won all of their matches, but their victories have been far from dominant. The Proteas have been in vulnerable situations in all of their matches and have had to scratch and claw themselves out of a hole, which was perfect preparation for the situation they found themselves in against West Indies yesterday.

With pressure mounting, Kagiso Rabada hit a crucial four in the final ball of the 16th, leaving five runs for the final over.

The pressure, this time, got the better of pacer Obed McCoy, who dished a ball right in Marco Jansen's hitting zone, who muscled it over long-on for a six and took South Africa to the semis.

The close wins in the first round and Super Eight, although impressive, are not enough to shed South Africa's dreaded choker tag. To get rid of that moniker, the Proteas must go all the way for the first time. But even before that, they need to win the semifinal, something they have never done in senior cricket.

Lacklustre England must make their presence felt

REUTERS, Blankenhain

While England already have one foot in the knockout round of Euro 2024 and can finish no lower than third in their group, they need to make their presence felt at a tournament that has seen optimism around them wither after two lacklustre games.

England need to avoid defeat against Slovenia in Cologne to guarantee progress and will definitely top the group with a win. If Denmark fail to beat Serbia in the other Group C match, England will qualify regardless of their result against Slovenia.

Slovenia will go through to the last 16 if they win.

Supporters and pundits have levelled scathing criticism at Gareth Southgate's England side after their 1-0 win over Serbia and anxious 1-1 draw with Denmark that saw fans boo them off the pitch.

Southgate had some concerning post-game comments, pointing to the players' conditioning after long and gruellingly seasons.

"We are not pressing well enough, with enough intensity," he said.

The biggest questions are around what changes Southgate will make after he went with the same lineup in both games for the first time in 16 matches.

Southgate took off Trent Alexander-Arnold, who is struggling out of position in midfield, early in the second half against Denmark, and forwards Harry Kane, Bukayo Saka, and Phil Foden followed some 15 minutes later.

Kane, who said he is fully fit for the game amid speculation about a back injury that bothered him late in the Bundesliga season, hit back at former England players for their scathing criticism of the team's performances.

"I would never want to be disrespectful to any player, especially a player who has worn the shirt and knows what it is like to play for England," said Kane.

"(But) the bottom line is we haven't won anything as a nation for a long, long time and a lot of these players were part of that as well and they know how tough it is."

Slovenia were heading for their first victory at a European Championship when Serbia's Luka Jovic equalised seconds before the final whistle to snatch a 1-1 draw.

"We have proven that we deserve to be at Euro 2024," Slovenia manager Matjaz Kek said. "Football can be really cruel. But I am convinced that this team will get its satisfaction."

England's defence could have their hands full coping with Slovenia striker Benjamin Sesko, who has drawn comparisons to Manchester City's towering forward Erling Haaland.

"(England) know we have played two great games, they are not at their best, they're still great of course, but I think now is the best opportunity to play against them and show them the best we can," said Sesko.

France need goals with or without Mbappe

REUTERS, Dortmund

France will try to finally get the goals flowing against already-eliminated Poland as they seek to finish top of their Euro 2024 group on Tuesday, but questions remain about the availability of key forward Kylian Mbappe.

The striker -- who broke his nose in France's opener against Austria and sat out the following game against the Netherlands -- donned a mask to take part in a practice match on Saturday.

France have so far failed to find the net themselves in Germany -- they beat Austria in their opener courtesy of an own goal and drew 0-0 with the Dutch -- so coach Didier Deschamps will be tempted to bring Mbappe back against Poland, especially since the striker scored twice and helped France to an easy 3-1 win when the two sides last met in a game in 2022 World Cup.

Netherlands sit top of Group D, having scored more goals than the French.

Should France finish in third place, they could face England or Spain in the last 16.

India marched into the T20 World Cup semifinals on Monday after skipper Rohit Sharma's blistering 92 set up their 24-run victory over Australia, who are now on the brink of elimination.

Rohit clobbered eight sixes in his 41-ball blitz to lay the foundation for India's imposing 205-5, their highest total in the tournament, in Gros Islet, St Lucia.

Travis Head led Australia's chase with a belligerent 76 but India managed to restrict them to 181-7 to remain unbeaten in the tournament.

ADC suspended for 'disciplinary rules violation'

He gave journo NID details of ex-DMP chief

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Additional Deputy Commissioner Jisanul Haque of the city special branch and protection unit of the Gazipur Metropolitan Police has been suspended for breaching disciplinary rules.

The Public Security Division of the home ministry suspended him after the Police Headquarters requested his suspension and departmental action. The PHQ accused Jisanul of providing a journalist with personal details of ex-DMP commissioner Asaduzzaman Mia, which were stored in the National Telecommunication Monitoring Centre (NTMC).

The ministry issued a circular, signed by Jahangir Alam, secretary to the Public Security Division, on Sunday stating that primarily the allegations against Jisanul have been found to be true.

On June 19, the PHQ wrote to the secretary saying Jisanul had asked an assistant sub-inspector of the Lawful Intersection Cell of the GMP for the National Identity Card (NID) details of Asaduzzaman against his mobile phone number.

The sub-inspector downloaded NID card details from the NTMC and provided

Israeli tanks push into north, west of Rafah

28 more Palestinians, including senior Gaza health official, killed in bombing

REUTERS, Cairo

An Israeli air strike at a medical clinic in Gaza City killed the director of Gaza's Ambulance and Emergency Department, the enclave's health ministry said yesterday, while Israel's military said the strike had killed a senior Hamas armed commander.

In Rafah, near the border with Egypt, Israeli forces which took control of the eastern, southern, and central parts of the city pursued their raid with tanks into the western and northern areas, said residents, describing heavy fighting.

The health ministry in Gaza said the killing of Hani al-Jaafarawi brought the number of medical staff killed by Israeli fire since October 7 to 500. At least 300 others have so far been detained.

In a statement, the Israeli military said the strike targeted Mohammad Salah, who it said was responsible for developing Hamas weaponry.

"Salah was part of a project to develop strategic weaponry for the Hamas terrorist organisation, and he commanded a number of Hamas terrorist squads that worked on developing weapons," it said.

More than eight months into the fighting, international mediation backed by the United States has so far failed to bring a ceasefire agreement. Hamas says any agreement must bring an end the offensive, while Israel says it will agree only temporary pauses in fighting until Hamas is eradicated.

In the north of the enclave, where Israel had said its forces completed operations months ago, residents said tanks had pushed back into Gaza City's Zeitoun suburb and were pounding several areas there.

The health ministry in Hamas-run Gaza said yesterday that at least 37,626 people have been killed during more than eight months of offensive. The toll includes at least 28 deaths over the past 24 hours, a ministry statement said.

Since early May, fighting has focused on Rafah, on Gaza's southern edge where around half of the enclave's 2.3 million people had been sheltering after fleeing other areas.

BPSA statement a moral support for the corrupt

In a press release, signed by NOAB President AK Azad and Vice-President ASM Shahidullah Khan, the association yesterday said the media has been threatened in the name of requesting to be more careful in publishing any report about the police force, and it is against the practice of independent media and impartial journalism.

'Will implement Teesta project with help from India'

Says PM, sees nothing wrong in maintaining ties with both India, China

- Some people make so much money that they have to flee the country
- Rail connectivity is for the development of both the countries
- Hasina invites Modi to visit Bangladesh as soon as possible

STAR REPORT

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina has said her government will implement the Teesta project with assistance from India and it has got assurances from the neighbouring country in this regard.

As Bangladesh has a longstanding issue with India over the sharing of Teesta waters, it would be easy for Dhaka if the Teesta project is implemented by Delhi, she said.

"As India has come forward, we think if we implement the Teesta project with India, we will not have to face problems regarding water every day. We will have that benefit," she said.

New deals with India 'go against country's interest'

Says Mirza Fakhrul

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

BNP has said the MoUs and agreements signed with India during the prime minister's recent visit are "against the country's interest".

The party said it will wage a movement protesting those agreements and MoUs.

"BNP is rejecting those agreements as those are against the interest of Bangladesh. I want to say that BNP was formed to protect the sovereignty of the country. The party will take all measures to protect the country's independence and sovereignty. We will hold a press conference on June 28. After that, you will know about the programmes to be taken up by us, if necessary," said Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir, secretary general of the party.

Speaking at a press conference at the party chairperson's Gulshan office in the capital yesterday, the BNP leader said the movement is not against India but against the Bangladesh government.

During a meeting, the BNP standing committee expressed concern over those agreements fearing they could jeopardise the country's sovereignty and independence, he said.

THE MINIKET MOCKERY

Rice millers defy ban, continue over-polishing in absence of government policy

SAJJAD HOSSAIN

Defying a ban, millers across the country continue polishing rice excessively and marketing it as "miniket" in the absence of monitoring.

In 2023, the government issued a ban on polishing rice and selling it under fake names, with the aim to protect the nutrients of the grains and prevent wastage.

According to the "Production, Storage, Transfer, Transportation, Supply, Distribution and Marketing of Food Products (Prevention of Prejudicial Activity) Bill-2023", manufacturing or marketing food products by removing or altering any natural ingredients in whole or partially is prohibited and a punishable offence.

The law also prohibits marketing foodstuff manufactured from an approved variety of food grain under a different or fictitious name without mentioning it as a by-product.

However, millers continued polishing different varieties of rice and were selling them as miniket, claiming they were yet to get a polishing guidelines from the food ministry.

In Bangladesh, rice is a staple food and the primary source of carbohydrates. Nearly 39 million tonnes of rice are produced annually, with an average per capita consumption of 493 grams per day, accounting for 58 percent of an individual's calorie intake, according to the Department of Agriculture Extension.

- Over 30pc rice sold as "miniket" in city markets
- Excessive milling removes vital vitamins and minerals
- 16 lakh metric tons of rice – 0.06 percent of the country's demand -- wasted in polishing process

Researchers said the excessive milling of rice removes essential nutrients like iron, calcium, and vitamin B, all of which are vital for health.

Polishing rice by 10 percent or above also reduces protein by 9-18 percent, fibre by 8-19, magnesium by 6-21, and folic acid by 8-50, shows a joint study by Dhaka University and Bangladesh Rice Research Institute (BRRI).

"Every year, polishing rice more than 10 percent results in the waste of 16 lakh metric tons --0.06 percent of the entire demand," DAE officials said.

Meanwhile, Habibul Bari Shozib, one of the researchers of the joint study, reiterated that vital minerals and vitamins are lost in the process of polishing rice by 10 percent or above.

According to the study, millers polish rice excessively to make it finer and market it as miniket to attract consumers, though no such rice variety exists.

ACC quizzes 8 officials over passports of Benazir, family

The ex-IGP allegedly misused power to get a passport renewed

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Anti-Corruption Commission yesterday quizzed eight officials of the Department of Immigration and Passports to get information on seven passports issued to former inspector general of police Benazir Ahmed and his family members.

Benazir allegedly obtained a general passport hiding the fact that he is a government official. Government officials get blue passports, lawmakers and diplomats get red passports while individuals get green general passports.

As a government official, he was supposed to have a blue passport, said sources in the ACC.

They said the passport-issuing authorities noticed that he had a green passport and halted its renewal.

At that time, Benazir was the director general of Rab and a letter in this regard was sent to Rab headquarters, they said. But Benazir managed to get his passport renewed by abusing his power, the sources added.

Matiur used clout to stop his transfers

MOHAMMAD SUMAN

So strong was the clout of former National Board of Revenue member Matiur Rahman that he could not be transferred unless he wanted to be transferred.

A number of high officials at the tax authority said Matiur has friends in high places, and he entertained many of them at resorts he or his family owns. He used his connections and influence to have at least two transfer orders, issued by the NBR cancelled.

Matiur had worked at the Chattogram Customs, Benapole Customs, Large Taxpayer Unit (LTU), Customs VAT Commissionerate in Dhaka and Chattogram, which are considered by many officials as "lucrative".

Matiur fell in hot water after his son posted on social media a photo of a sacrificial goat worth Tk 12 lakh. The photo went viral and questions were raised about his sources of wealth. Several mainstream media outlets reported on his and his families' huge wealth and lavish lifestyle.

Banks, NBFIs asked to freeze accounts of Matiur, family

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Two financial sector regulators yesterday asked banks and financial institutions to freeze all accounts of revenue official Matiur Rahman and his family members.

These include mobile financial service (MFS) accounts and beneficiary owner (BO) accounts used for investing in the share market.

"We have issued letters to all banks and non-bank financial institutions to freeze the accounts of Matiur Rahman, his two wives, and five children," said a top official of the Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit (BFIU) seeking anonymity.

The accounts should remain frozen for 30 days, the BFIU also ordered.

Meanwhile, the Bangladesh Securities and Exchange Commission (BSEC) also blocked the BO accounts of Matiur and his family members, said Rezaul Karim, spokesperson of the stock market regulator.

The banks, non-bank financial institutions, and MFS providers have also been asked to send the details of transactions and account opening data, along with KYC of all accounts of Matiur and family members, to the BFIU in the next five working days.

The development comes after the Anti-Corruption Commission (ACC) launched an inquiry into the allegations of amassing illegal wealth and money laundering by Matiur.

said, adding that, however, the scheduled exams were held.

FBUTA will hold similar programmes today and tomorrow.

Teachers of Dhaka University, Jahangirnagar University, Chittagong University, Rajshahi University, Bangladesh University of Engineering and Technology, and Shahjalal University of Science and Technology, among others, took part in the abstention programme yesterday, according to FBUTA.

They are protesting the government decision to include all officers and employees, joining the service of autonomous, self-governing, nationalised, statutory, or similar organisations and their subordinate institutions, under the UPSon or after July 1, 2024.

FBUTA said the teachers who will be newly appointed in public universities will fall under the new pension scheme instead of the current pension facilities offered by the universities.

They fear that many people will not join the teaching profession if the new scheme, which they termed "discriminatory", is implemented.

They have also been demanding the cancellation of the gazette in this regard through several peaceful protests since May 26.

Furthermore, the university teachers also demanded a separate pay scale and the inclusion of professors in the "super" grade.

"The government has completely failed to reach out to India or to have its demands met. You [government] are trying to sign agreements without getting water from the transboundary rivers."

The BNP leader said Bangladesh needs Teesta water first but the government wants to work on a Teesta project. "This is because the project involves a lot of money and the government is targeting that money."

Raising questions about the benefits of the agreements, Fakhrul said, "How will Bangladesh be benefited from the corridors? India will surely be benefited. Connectivity is essential, but it should be in our interest. It must not be done at the cost of our interest."

Criticising the government, he said the government kept mum on sharing water of the transboundary rivers and border killings.

"Sheikh Hasina has completely failed to secure anything from India. This has happened due to the subservient foreign policy of the government. This government has deliberately made Bangladesh dependent on India."

KHALEDA'S CONDITION STABLE

Talking about the health of BNP Chairperson Khaleda Zia, Fakhrul said her condition was "stable" following the installment of a pacemaker in her heart on Sunday.

"So far I know until this [yesterday] morning, she was shifted to a cabin with CCU facilities."

The BNP leader said all arrangements were made by Khaleda's family to send her abroad for treatment, but the prime minister turned down the application seeking permission in this regard.

Amid such a situation, the party's standing committee expressed concern over Khaleda's deteriorating health, Fakhrul said.

He said the BNP chief's imprisonment is "solely motivated by political vengeance". The BNP standing committee members deem this as unconstitutional and unlawful, he added.

Fakhrul alleged that Khaleda was sentenced and imprisoned on false charges as the government's primary objective was to removeher from politics.

He said the BNP standing committee also observed that the "illegitimate government is systematically preventing Khaleda from receiving advanced treatment abroad with an aim to kill her and consolidate its power".

Will implement Teesta project

to brief the media about the outcome of her June 21-22 state visit to India, report BSS and UNB.

Responding to a query from a journalist, the premier, however, said her government will accept either a Chinese or an Indian proposal for the Teesta Master Plan Project considering which one would be the most beneficial for the country.

"We have taken up the Teesta project. China and India have put forward separate proposals to implement the project.

"But we must consider which proposal will be beneficial for the people, how much loan we will take and how much we will have to repay after the completion of the project, and also the capability of repaying the loan," Hasina continued.

China has completed a physical survey on the Teesta project while India wants to carry out another one, she said.

The PM said India has expressed its willingness to send a technical team to Bangladesh in this regard and Bangladesh will sit with the team.

"We will accept that survey which would be more suitable and beneficial for us."

In her written speech, Hasina said, "We discussed renewal of the Ganges River Water Sharing Agreement and India's assistance in the Teesta River Water Management and Water Conservation Project in Bangladesh. However, this has no link with the long-standing Teesta water sharing issue.

"We will implement the whole Teesta project with assistance from India, and we have got assurances from India in this regard," she said.

The Teesta project involves dredging the river, building strong embankments and a water reservoir, setting up townships and industries on the banks of the river, and irrigation.

Replying to another query about a news on West Bengal Chief Minister Mamata Banerjee's objection to Indian government's move over the sharing of Teesta and Ganges waters with Bangladesh "bypassing her", Hasina said she does not want to make any comment on the issue as it is solely India's internal matter.

The premier, however, said she has a good relationship with all political parties in India, Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi and Chief Minister Mamata.

She said she particularly has a good relationship with Sonia Gandhi and their children, and the family members of late Indian president Pranab Mukherjee.

About balancing Bangladesh's relations with India and China, Hasina said there is nothing to balance as her government is following the foreign policy -- "Friendship to all, malice to none".

"India is very important for Bangladesh as they along with the freedom fighters shed blood for the independence of Bangladesh during the Liberation War in 1971," she said.

There are many things to be learnt from China about how a country can be developed, the PM said. "We maintain relations considering all these aspects."

She said she does not see any problem with maintaining relations with both India and China.

Hasina said those who say that her government is selling Bangladesh off to India have already sold themselves to India. "They criticise India publicly and flatter it secretly or they were the agents of Pakistan in 1971."

She said everyone should keep in mind that India was the only allied force in the world which left a country they helped liberate.

Talking about rail transit to India, the premier said everyone should keep in mind that she does not sell off Bangladesh as her party liberated the country.

She said Bangladesh and India are resuming rail connectivity which is beneficial for trade and commerce and socio-economic development of the two nations.

She came down heavily on those who criticise rail connectivity by describing it as an attempt to sell off the country.

The premier said, "Look at Europe where there are no borders. Is one country selling itself to another there? Every country is sovereign."

She questioned if Bangladesh would keep its doors shut.

Hasina said some people became greedy and made so much money that they could not keep the money at home, and thus they had to flee the country to keep the money abroad.

"What is the benefit if someone has to leave the country after making money?" she added.

Terming her India visit very successful, Hasina in her written speech said, "The visit was short but very fruitful. I think this visit will play a far-reaching role in strengthening the existing excellent relations between India and Bangladesh."

She said that the visit opened new avenues of cooperation for the socioeconomic development of the people of the two neighbouring countries.

"Bangladesh-India relations have grown to a unique height over the last 15 years. The people of both countries are enjoying the benefits."

Hasina said she discussed with Modi politics and security, peaceful and secured border management and curbing border casualty to 'zero' level, trade and connectivity, sustainable management of common rivers and water sharing, energy, regional and multilateral cooperation, among other issues of mutual interest.

She said Modi assured her that Bangladesh is at the centre of India's Neighbourhood First, Act East, and "Sea and Indo-Pacific" policies.

The PM said she invited Modi to visit Bangladesh as soon as possible at his convenience.

The miniket mockery

Over 30 percent of the rice sold in city markets in Bangladesh is refined into a different shape, size, and color and branded as miniket, according to an International Food Policy Research Institute (IFPRI) study published on May 1 this year.

The study titled "Research-backed policy to eliminate miniket rice in Bangladesh will improve nutrition", found that the so-called miniket rice is largely fashioned from rice varieties like BRRI-28 and BRRI-29 and has up to 70 percent less zinc than other varieties.

The report said that the name "miniket" was derived in 1985, when a high-yielding slender rice variety called Shatabdi was distributed in "mini kits" to farmers in India's West Bengal.

The IFRI report said the Shatabdi variety of rice is no longer produced.

According to Bangladesh Auto Major and Husking Mills Owners Association (BAMHMOA), rice is polished in at least 4,000 automatic rice mills across the country.

The Daily Star reached out to two dozen rice mill owners in Dinajpur, Dhaka, Narayanganj, Sunamganj, Chapainawabganj, Rangpur, Faridpur, Nilphamari, and Jashore.

All of them said they polish rice by 10-16 percent depending on the quality.

Sabbir Ahmed, general secretary of Sylhet Division Auto Rice Mills Owners Association, said, "As the government is yet to set any specific guidelines on an acceptable polishing limit, mill owners are polishing rice at will, potentially compromising public health."

Nirod Baron Saha Chandan, president of the Paddy-Rice Wholesalers and Traders Association in Naogaon, said millers across the country polish rice by 15 percent.

"People prefer whiter rice, so millers over-polish in the absence of any government guidelines," he said, adding that the government should introduce a policy in this regard soon.

Julfiqar Mahmud Niyaz, owner of Bhola Auto Rice Mills Limited and general secretary of Barishal Division Mills Owners Samity, and Masud Rana, owner of Ma Vandari Auto Rice Mill and co-organising secretary of the Auto Major and Husking Mills Owners Association in Kushtia, echoed Chandan's views.

HR Khan Pathan, general secretary of BAMHMOA, said polishing also hikes the prices of rice.

"After polishing, we get 26kg rice from 40kg paddy. But without polishing, we can save 1-1.5kg rice and the price could be reduced by Tk 2-3 per kg."

Food officials in different districts said they were unable to take any action against the millers in the absence of government guidelines.

Mohammad Babul Hossain, food controller in Kushtia, said, "There's no government policy ... We have not received any instructions on rice polishing from the government or high officials."

This correspondent contacted seven district food controllers, who said the same thing.

Ismiel Hossain, secretary of the Ministry of Food, told The Daily Star that the law clearly states that rice cannot be polished.

"[Though] the policy does not specify a percentage for rice polishing, there is no way to violate the law."

Kamal Hossain, public relations officer of the ministry, said, "A rice polishing policy has been prepared and is currently at Bangladesh Government Printing Office."

Talking to this correspondent on June 20, Food Minister Sadhan Chandra Majumder said, "Four crore tonnes of rice is produced in the country every year. This rice is polished five times to make it bright. This reduces the weight of the rice by 4 to 5 percent. As a result, the annual rice production is reduced by 16 lakh metric tons. If the polishing can be done only twice, the nutritional value of rice will increase, while the losses will come down."

"By adopting this approach, the cost of rice production will lower and the consumers will also get rice at more affordable prices."

ACC quizzes 8 officials

An ACC team led by its Deputy Director Md Hafizul Islam, head of the enquiry team formed to investigate the graft allegations against the former police chief, quizzed the officials at its headquarters in the capital for over three hours yesterday, said officials.

On June 13, the anti-graft body sent letters to passport officials -- Md Mohsin Islam, Abu Md Motaleb Hossain, Abdul Jalil Mondol, Munshi Mueed Ikram, Abdullah Al Mamun, Abu Naeem Masum, Saidur Rahman, and Subas Chandra Roy -- for quizzing.

Benazir and his family members had skipped the ACC's questioning over allegations that they amassed huge wealth through illegal means.

On May 28, the ACC issued a notice, asking Benazir to appear at its office on June 6, and his wife and two daughters on June 9.

In separate letters, they requested the ACC to defer the quizzing by 15 days.

The anti-graft body then asked Benazir to appear on June 23 and his family members on June 24.

Matiur used clout

The Anti-Corruption Commission finally launched an inquiry into his wealth a few days ago. At least four complaints were filed with the graft watchdog against him over the years, but the ACC did not launch a probe before.

On Sunday, he was transferred to the Internal Resources Division of the finance ministry.

Two NBR chairmen failed to have him transferred before.

During the caretaker government rule in 2007, then NBR chairman Badiur Rahman transferred Matiur from the Chattogram Customs House to the VAT Commissionerate in Rajshahi.

During a TV talk show recently, Badiur said, "As the NBR chairman, I ordered the transfer of Matiur. After the order was issued, Matiur visited my office and even went to my home to meet me. But I did not meet him. Later, I was surprised by what happened."

Badiur said then army chief Moeen U Ahmed and three other army officials had called him to stop the transfer.

"I did not cancel the order," he said, adding, "I told the army chief that transfer me if necessary and bring Matiur back, but I will not change the order."

And this is exactly what happened. Badiur was transferred elsewhere and Matiur returned to Chattogram Customs House within a month.

In July 2022, NBR Chairman and Senior Secretary of Internal Resources Department Abu Hena Md Rahmatul Muneem also failed to have Matiur transferred.

An order was issued to transfer Matiur again to the Rajshahi VAT Commissionerate from the Customs, Excise, and VAT Appellate Tribunal. He did not even join his new post in Rajshahi, and within 15 days a new order was issued cancelling his transfer.

NBR officials said in February that year, the government appointed Matiur as a director of Sonali Bank without the consent of the NBR chairman or clearance from the tax authority.

They claimed that, for this reason, Matiur was among 13 officials who were transferred as part of routine.

While the 12 others joined their new work places, Matiur did not. So strong were his connections and influence that he could have his transfer order cancelled, the officials said on condition of anonymity.

This paper has copies of the transfer orders.

The government on Monday removed Matiur from the Sonali Bank board of directors.

Following an ACC appeal, the Metropolitan Senior Special Judge's Court of Dhaka issued a travel ban on Matiur and two of his family members.

Assange set to be freed

embassy in London as he fought accusations of sex crimes in Sweden and battled extradition to the US, where he faced 18 criminal charges.

The US government viewed him as a reckless villain who had endangered the lives of agents through WikiLeaks' mass release of secret US documents - the largest security breaches of their kind in US military history.

But to free press advocates and his supporters, which includes world leaders, celebrities and some prominent journalists, he is a hero for exposing wrongdoing and alleged war crimes, and was persecuted for embarrassing US authorities.

Assange is due to be sentenced to 62 months of time already served at a hearing in Saipan in the Northern Mariana Islands, at 9:00 am local time.

The US territory in the Pacific was chosen due to Assange's opposition to travelling to the mainland US and for its proximity to Australia, prosecutors said.

Australian-born Assange left Belmarsh maximum security jail in the early hours of Monday, before being bailed by the London High Court and later boarding a flight, his wife, Stella Assange said. He was currently on a stopover in Bangkok, she said.

"I feel elated," Stella, who flew to Australia from London on Sunday with the couple's two children, told Reuters. "I also feel worried ... Until it's fully signed off, I worry, but it looks like we've got there."

A video posted on X by Wikileaks showed Assange dressed in a blue shirt and jeans signing a document before boarding a private jet. After the hearing in Saipan, Assange will fly to Canberra where he will arrive today, his wife said.

He had recently won permission to appeal against the approval of his US extradition and the case was due to be heard at London's High Court next month, a factor that Stella Assange said helped galvanise talks over a deal.

The Australian government, led by Prime Minister Anthony Albanese, has been pressing US President Joe Biden for Assange's release but declined to comment on the legal proceedings as they were ongoing.

"There is nothing to be gained by his continued incarceration and we want him brought home to Australia," Albanese said in the country's parliament.

WikiLeaks came to prominence in 2010 after it released hundreds of thousands of classified US military documents on Washington's wars in Afghanistan and Iraq along with swaths of diplomatic cables.

The trove of more than 700,000 documents included battlefield accounts such as a 2007 video of a US Apache helicopter firing at suspected insurgents in Iraq, killing a dozen people including two Reuters news staff. That video was released in 2010.

Sylhet Flood leaves wildlife in peril

MINTU DESHWARA, Moulvibazar

The ongoing flood across the Sylhet division has left wildlife in the region in peril.

Locals in Kamalpur village under Ajmeriganj upazila of Habiganj district on June 24 rescued a fishing cat from the overflowing Kalni river, barely clinging to its life by clutching at water hyacinths to stay afloat.

Zobair Ahmed Jabed, member of the local union parishad, said the fishing cat was fed after rescue and kept safe. Staffers of wildlife conservation department will come and relocate it, he added.

Another injured fishing cat was rescued in Sylhet's Companiganj upazila from a bridge.

Kabir Ahmed, a local, said the cat was there seeking shelter.

Continuous downpour, flood and landslides have caused significant damage to habitats of local wildlife as vast stretches of area have become inundated, leaving animals without food and safety.

Animals like fishing cats and foxes were seen looking for shelter in various localities, where they are unfortunately vulnerable to attacks by villagers.

Livestock are also suffering.

"Flood water inundated our area last week. Our house and cattle-shed are submerged. We are worried that the cattle might get bitten by snakes coming with floodwater," said Abdur Rashid of Mohammadpur village in Sunamganj.

Many others echoed him.

"The flood has left wildlife in Sylhet vulnerable. Also, ongoing panic over Russell's viper, instigated by misinformation, has left other snake species in danger. People are unaware and likely to kill other harmless snakes," said Abdul Karim Kim, general secretary of Bangladesh Paribesh Andolon's Sylhet Chapter.

Muntasir Akash, lecturer of zoology department at Dhaka University, expressed concern over possible loss of wildlife in Sylhet due to the ongoing flood.

Dr Jahangir Alam, divisional forest officer in Sylhet, said they are working on rescuing wild animals from flood-affected areas, when informed.

ROAD CRASHES DURING EID

Govt, NGO data don't match

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

At least 230 people were killed and 301 were injured in 235 road crashes across the country in 13 days during the rush centring Eid-ul-Azha, according to Bangladesh Road Transport Authority (BRTA).

BRTA Chairman Nur Mohammad Mazumder yesterday revealed the information at a press conference at BRTA headquarters in the capital's Banani.

However, the BRTA statistics are much lower than the road crash data of a non-government organisation for the same period.

13-DAY EID VACATION	BRTA	ROAD SAFETY FOUNDATION
Total accidents	235	251
Number of deaths	230	262
Injured	301	543

The growing number of road crashes and deaths has turned into a major concern lately and the number usually sees a rise during the Eid rush as the number of vehicles and road users rises sharply at this time.

Nur Mohammad said BRTA, along with other government agencies, took numerous steps to make people's Eid journey safe and hassle-free.

"Our steps worked and we could offer a relatively hassle-free Eid journey," he said, adding, "But road crashes and deaths often undermine the success."

He said between June 11 and June 23, around 230 people were killed and 301 were injured in 235 road crashes.

AFTERMATH OF FLOOD, REMAL

Over 250km of RHD roads damaged

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Over 250 kilometres of roads under 13 divisions of Roads and Highways Department were affected due to the ongoing flood in the northeast region and the cyclone Remal last month.

RHD, however, could not assess the financial losses caused by the flood and cyclone yet, officials said.

Earlier, floods in 2017, 2019, 2020, and 2022 damaged many roads under RHD network, and the authorities had to spend a large amount of money to repair them.

Transport experts and environmentalists often blame poor planning ahead of road construction and ignoring the impacts of climate change as the main reasons for floods causing so much damage to roads and resulting in high repair costs.

RHD officials, however, said although many roads built decades ago were not properly engineered structures, they were now constructing properly engineered structures with climate-adaptive designs.

According to RHD data, 25 roads under Sylhet, Sunamganj, and Moulvibazar with a length of 155.41km were damaged till June 23 due to ongoing flood.

A damaged road in Bagerhat after cyclone Remal.

Of the affected roads, 6.90km are national highways; 45.44 km are regional highways and 103.07km are district roads.

Some parts of these roads were washed out partially while the embankment of some roads collapsed and numerous potholes were developed in many roads, reads the preliminary report.

Zikrul Hassan, superintendent engineer (maintenance circle) of RHD, said they have already formed a monitoring team that will visit the affected areas next week.

They will give a report assessing the extent of damage caused by the flood and will take necessary measures accordingly, he told The Daily Star yesterday.

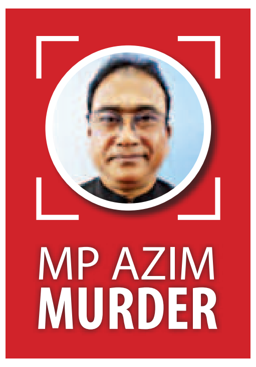
Daughter to visit Kolkata on July 3 for DNA test

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Mumtarin Ferdous Doreen, daughter of Jhenaidah-4 MP Anwarul Azim Anar, is scheduled to travel to Kolkata on July 3 along with family members and DB investigators. She will provide DNA samples to match against recovered flesh and bones from a septic tank and canal in Kolkata.

The results aim to confirm whether the remains belong to her father, MP Azim, who was allegedly murdered in a New Town flat in Kolkata.



Abdur Rouf, the lawmaker's personal assistant, said they are now waiting for the government's final approval for the trip. A source within DB has also confirmed the development.

Meanwhile, Kazi Kamal Ahmed Babu, the relief and social welfare affairs secretary of the Jhenaidah Awami League, was shifted to Jhenaidah prison from Keraniganj central jail yesterday following a court order.

Babu has allegedly used his mobile phone to communicate with and exchange photos with the suspected killer of Azim.

He later disposed of three mobile phones used in communication to destroy evidence, claimed DB.

The Russell's viper conundrum

Misinformation leads to killing of snakes, experts blame lack of awareness campaigns

SAJJAD HOSSAIN

Russell's viper is not a snake species of a foreign land, rather they have coexisted in the natural ecosystem of the Indian sub-continent for centuries.

Although the name gives off a mysterious vibe, these vipers also have a simple Bangla name -- Chandrabora.

These snakes are in fact, beneficial, especially to farmers, as they mainly feed on rats on agricultural lands.

Recently, however, their population has proliferated. This surge is linked to the decline of their natural predators -- mongooses, monitor lizards, forest cats, eagles, and cranes due to indiscriminate hunting.

Misinformation on social media fueled panic, leading people to kill any snake they saw, fearing it was a deadly viper. In the frenzy, many

ANTIVENOM

Govt served legal notice to ensure supply

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A Supreme Court lawyer yesterday served a legal notice on the government yesterday, asking it to ensure adequate supply of antivenom to every hospital, clinic and health centre.

Advocate Bahauddin Al Imran sent the legal notice to the secretary at the public security division of the home ministry; secretary at the health services division of health ministry; director general of Directorate of Health Services and director general of Directorate of Drug Administration for taking necessary measures in seven days.

Antivenom shortage at Barishal hospitals

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Barishal

Sher-e Bangla Medical College Hospital, the largest healthcare centre in Barishal division, does not have any antivenom in stock for treating snake bites.

Dr Saiful Islam, director of SBMCH, stated he plans to visit Dhaka soon to secure a supply.

He noted that in the last three days, three snake bite patients were treated, but none required anti-venom as the snakes were non-venomous.

On average, SBMCH treats 50-60 snake bite patients annually, with 80 percent bitten by non-venomous snakes.

Meanwhile, in the last three months, 70 snake bite patients were treated at upazila hospitals, with only seven bitten by venomous snakes.

However, three deaths were reported in the past two months in Bhola, Jhalkathi, and Barguna districts.

Dr Shyamal Krishna Mondal, director of the Divisional Health Office, claimed there are adequate antivenom stocks. However, medical staff and locals from the grassroots alleged otherwise.

Dr Shishir Kumar Gain, resident medical officer in Agailjhara upazila, said they have 30 vials of antivenom, sufficient for treating only three patients.

Arrest warrant issued against Mamunul

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A Narayanganj court issued an arrest warrant against former Hefazat-e-Islam leader Mamunul Haque yesterday.

Judge Nazmul Haque Shyamal of Narayanganj Women and Children Repression Prevention Tribunal passed the order as Mamunul was absent on the day of the cross-examination of witnesses, said Public Prosecutor Rakibuddin Ahmed.

Earlier, Mamunul got bail from the same court on April 4 in a case filed with Sonargaon Police Station in Narayanganj over rape charges.

Rakibuddin said the court had earlier fixed yesterday for cross-examination of witness SI SM Shafiqul Islam, the case's investigating officer, in presence of Mamunul.

On Mamunul being absent, Rakibuddin said, "Defence is trying to delay the trial at the last stage."

However, defence lawyer Omar Faruk Nayan said Mamunul was ill and doctors prescribed him bed rest.

The defence pleaded for another date, but the court denied the plea bargain and issued an arrest warrant.

harmless snakes lost their lives.

At least eight snakes -- four buff striped keelback, one python and common wolf snake, and two Siebold's snakes -- were killed in a single week.

Additionally, at least 16 Russell's vipers were beaten to death in the last two weeks, eight in Rajshahi, five in Munshiganj, two in Faridpur, and one in Madaripur, as per officials.

Russell's viper is protected under the Wildlife (Conservation and Security) Act, 2012, as it plays a crucial role in controlling rodent population and its venom is used to produce life-saving medicines. Killing these snakes is a punishable offense.

Meanwhile, nine people have died from Russell's viper bites in the last three months, with five deaths in Manikganj, three in Rajbari, and one in Faridpur.

Experts have pointed fingers at the government, criticising their lack of public awareness campaigns.

Health Minister Dr Samanta Lal Sen has instructed public hospitals to maintain an adequate stock of antivenom.

"The most important task is to take snakebite victims to a doctor at the quickest possible time... timely medical intervention can fully cure snakebite victims through proper treatment," he said.

INADEQUATE AWARENESS CAMPAIGNS

In Bangladesh, there are around 100 snake species, with 37 being venomous, including Russell's viper.

A 2018 study by Professor Farid Ahsan of Chittagong University suggested arranging training for medical staff and awareness campaigns for people in areas where such snakes are present.

However, after talking to government officials from 14 districts, this correspondent found that campaigns were conducted in only five districts.

Forest officials of these districts said they did not get any direction from the ministry.

Imran Ahmed, conservator of forests at the Wildlife and Nature Conservation Circle, admitted that awareness programmes are inadequate.

As such, people resort to killing snakes after being misled by rumours.

"We are issuing letters to involve local administration in awareness raising activities and developing long-term plans to overcome the panic," he added.

POPULATION BOOM

Killing natural predators of the viper is the main reason behind their increase in number. Besides, an improved irrigation system now allows year-round crop cultivation, increasing the rodent population, which is the snake's main food source, said Kamrul Hasan, professor of Zoology at Jahangirnagar University.

Also, rising temperatures in the Rajshahi-Barendra region have increased the female snake population to 80 percent, he said.

Russell's vipers, being good swimmers, have spread from Rajshahi to other riverside districts via the Padma.

As many as 235 people were treated at Rajshahi Medical College Hospital over 11 years after being bitten by the viper. Around 29 people have died in the region during this time. They were mostly brought in after it was too late, RMCH sources said.

Imran Hossain Shajib, Boalkhali UNO, said actions would be taken following an investigation.

He said the madrasa covered some medical costs following the complaint.

Over 250km of RHD

Cyclone Remal hit the coastal area of the country on May 26, which damaged 69 roads under 13 RHD divisions. The divisions are: Khulna, Bagerhat, Satkhira, Patuakhali, Barguna, Barishal, Pirojpur, Bhola, Faridpur, Sylhet, Sunamganj, Moulvibazar, and Noakhali.

Of the 98.47km of affected roads, 18km were national highways, 10.01km were regional highways and 70.47km were district roads, according to RHD data.

Zikrul said all the affected roads have already been made passable except for a ferry service in Bagerhat.

He said they were assessing the financial losses caused by cyclone Remal and will take necessary steps following the assessment.

RHD is responsible for a 22,476km network of roads and bridges across the country.

Apart from the RHD roads, many local roads under Local Government Engineering Department have also been affected by the floods and Remal.

Amtali upazila, said they are yet to take any measures due to a lack of allocation to this end.

"Due to the high level of salinity in water in this region, the iron pillars of the bridges are getting corroded, leaving those in a dilapidated state, while some have already collapsed," he said.

"We have sent a proposal to the higher authorities for construction of girder bridges in place of the existing bridges. The construction will begin once allocation is received," he added.

Govt, NGO data

However, Road Safety Foundation, a non-government organisation working on road safety issues, on Monday published a report on road crashes during the Eid rush.

The organisation, compiling media reports, said at least 262 people were killed and 543 were injured in 251 road crashes in the 13 days from June 11 to June 23.

Without mentioning the name of the organisation, Nur Mohammad said, "The report of such an organisation is not acceptable and the data mentioned in their report is confusing."

He mentioned 10 reasons behind the road crashes during Eid journey, including riding bikes without helmets, rash driving and over-speeding, risky overtaking, drivers not following traffic signs and road markings, and the carelessness of pedestrians while crossing the road.

Nur Mohammad said executive magistrates of BRTA and district administrations filed 3,739 cases against errant vehicles and drivers and realised Tk 85.41 lakh from them between June 13 and June 24.

He, however, said it is difficult to get the expected results in curbing a multifaceted problem like road accidents only with the enforcement of law and taking administrative measures.

Everybody has to obey traffic laws and above all, a social movement has to be launched to reduce road crashes, he said.

Meanwhile, Barishal General Hospital has 60 vials, enough for six patients.

As of Monday, upazila-level hospitals in Barishal had 280 vials, enough for only 28 patients, confirmed Dr Maria Hasan, civil surgeon of Barishal.

She said arrangements are being made to send enough antivenoms in these hospitals so that each facility can treat at least 20 patients.

There are rumours of Russell's viper snakes in Barishal, but no confirmed bites have been reported, she added.

The officials also urged people to maintain caution.

Daughter to visit

He has been shifted to Jhenaidah prison as drives will be conducted with him to recover the discarded phones, said Harun Or Rashid, additional commissioner of the Detective Branch of Dhaka Metropolitan Police.

Local police are ensuring no one recovers the phone before investigators reach the spot, Harun said.

Magistrates, fire service divers and fishermen will be present in the drives to recover the phones, he said.

"Babu initially filed a general diary reporting lost phones, but later gave confessional statements saying he discarded them in a pond on a leader's order," the DB chief said.

Azim went to Kolkata on May 12 and stayed at a friend's house for a night. He left the following day, saying that he would visit a doctor.

On May 22, India and Bangladesh police said the lawmaker was murdered.

Besides Babu, detectives also arrested four other accused for their alleged involvement with the killing. They are Mintu, general secretary of Jhenaidah AL, Amanullah, suspected coordinator of the killing mission, his nephew Tanvir Bhuiyan, and Celesty Rahman.

Be scared of humans

Gono Bhaban held over the outcome of her recent visit to India.

Journalist Shykh Seraj in his question said a panic has been created on social media centring Russell's viper. He asked if the government would take any steps to raise awareness in this regard.

In response, the prime minister said animals are important to maintain the ecological balance. She suggested people to remain cautious. "You [people] should be scared of humans, not animals or snakes," said Hasina.

Currently, a series of stories regarding Russell's viper are getting viral on social media as the snake has reportedly spread alarmingly in the country. Some people even announced a bounty for killing the reptile.

BRIDGES OVER HALDIA CANAL

Seven collapsed, 5 more unfit for use

SOHRAB HOSSAIN, Patuakhali

In Barguna's Amtali upazila, there used to be a total 12 bridges in different areas on the 25-kilometre-long Haldia canal.

Of those, seven have already collapsed while the rest five are in a dilapidated condition and largely unfit for use by vehicles and pedestrians.

The bridge adjacent to Haldia Bazar collapsed on June 22, leaving at least nine people dead.

The locals have long been calling upon the authorities concerned to take steps for repairing the existing bridges and construction of new bridges in place of the collapsed ones. However, no step has yet been made to this end.

The Local Government Engineering Department constructed the bridges on the canal in different areas under the upazila between 2002 and 2010 to allow movement of light vehicles like rickshaws and motorcycles as well as to pedestrians.

About one lakh people from Haldia, Chwara and Amtali Sadar unions use these bridges to travel to the upazila town and to neighbouring Patuakhali district headquarters.

The bridges that have collapsed so far are: one in Haldia Bazar, one near Haldia Hat Government Primary School, one in Chawra village, one near Hafezia Madrasa in Lodha area, one near Ibrahim Academy, and one each in Chila and Rari Bari areas.

"We have been communicating to different departments in this regard, urging for initiative to repair the bridges, but no step has been taken yet," said Asaduzzaman Mintu Mallick, chairman of Haldia union parishad.

Student loses eyesight after being 'caned' by teacher

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

A seven-year-old madrasa student has reportedly lost vision in one of his eyes after allegedly being caned by a female teacher in Soroatoli union of Chattogram.

The incident, which occurred on May 25 at Tahfizul Quran Ideal Madrasa, came to light yesterday after victim Ayatul Islam's mother, Spana Akhter, lodged a complaint with the upazila nirbahi officer's office.

According to Spana Akhter, her son was beaten for failing to prepare his lesson, resulting in severe injury to his left eye.

After the victim was taken to Pahartali Eye Hospital on May 29, doctors diagnosed extensive damage to his cornea, leading to irreversible loss of vision.

The family has expressed their inability to afford treatment in India, which

JAMUNA EROSION

A village on verge of disappearance

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Tangail

At least 50 families residing in Char Poulee village under Tangail Sadar upazila are passing sleepless nights as the Jamuna river's erosion worsened this monsoon.

Previously, more than half the village was lost to the river's erosion.

Locals alleged that delay in necessary river bank protection efforts by the authorities gave way to this situation.

"Many houses were lost to the river last Tuesday," said Belal Hossain, member of a local social organisation that helps erosion victims relocate to safety.

Abdul Kader, a villager, said, "Earlier, our ancestral house was lost to the river. On Tuesday, the house we built later was also devoured. How will we survive with no place to live?"

Hunufa Begum, another villager, said her homestead was lost to the river right before her eyes. "We don't want relief. We want a permanent solution," she said.

Local Mohammad Hasan said, "Despite repeated assurances from public representatives, no durable embankment has been constructed yet. Around 1,600 metres of the river bank still lies unprotected. We demand urgent measures to provide protection from erosion."

Sources at Bangladesh Water Development Board said geo-bags have been dumped on the river bank from Nagarpur upazila to Char Poulee in Sadar upazila, while there is an embankment from Patharghat in Kalihati to Alipur.

But in between, at least 1,625 metres of the river bank lies unprotected.

Nazrul Islam, a Kakua union parishad member, said, "At least 35 families lost their houses in a single day, and a 1.5-kilometre stretch of the village was lost to erosion. Construction of an embankment is urgently needed to save the village."

Contacted, Sazzad Hossain, executive engineer of BWDB in Tangail, said emergency works are ongoing to protect erosion-affected areas.

"New projects have been approved for constructing 1,625 metres of embankment in Char Poulee, as well as Bhairabbari and Alipur areas of Kalihati upazila. It will be implemented in the next dry season," he added.

KURIGRAM SADAR UPAZILA

Dharla devours homesteads, land

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Lalmonirhat

Erosion caused by the Dharla river has taken a severe turn at Satkaluya village of Holokhana union in Kurigram Sadar upazila. Around 14 homesteads, three fruit orchards, two bamboo clusters, 100 bighas of arable lands and around 200 metres of paved road were devoured in the last couple of days.

Some 80 families and over 400 bighas of arable land are still at risk of river erosion.

Holokhana Union Parishad member Abul Kalam and Chairman Rezaul Karim confirmed the information to The Daily Star.

Locals have now taken refuge on a Water Development Board dyke. They have no means of earning and are merely surviving with their families.

One such victim of river erosion, Shefali Begum said their homestead and two bighas of land were consumed by the Dharla before their own eyes. They were only able to save the tin-sheets from two out of their three homes and have now had to settle on the WDB dyke.

They have not received any government support as of yet, she said.

Another victim, Majibur Rahman said he her lost three bighas of arable land and homestead. Last year, he lost four bighas of arable land as well.

UP Member Abul Kalam said there used to be around 250 families in Satkaluya village. For the last three years, the village has been severely impacted by river erosion.

Currently, there are only 80 families living there. They are under serious threat if the erosion is not stopped on an urgent basis. Otherwise, the village will disappear into the womb of the Dharla.

UP Chairman Rezaul Karim said a list of erosion-hit families has been prepared and sent to the upazila nirbahi officer for government assistance. An application has also been made to the WDB authorities to take urgent measures to stop the erosion, he said.

Sub-divisional engineer of WDB in Kurigram Ismat Toha said a project has been taken up to permanently solve the river erosion at Satkaluya village.

It will be started by appointing a contractor within the next three months. So, no allocation is available to prevent erosion on an emergency basis, he added.

Kurigram Sadar UNO said he visited the affected area and measures will be taken to rehabilitate the affected families soon.

26,181 illegal river bank structures removed in 10yrs

Says state minister

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

From 2014-2024, 26,181 illegal structures have been removed nationwide, recovering approximately 1,160.62 acres of river land, State Minister for Shipping Khalid Mahmud Chowdhury told parliament yesterday.

He said the total length of the circular waterway around the capital Dhaka is 110km -- surrounded by Buriganga, Turag, Balu, Dhaleswari and Shitalakshya rivers.

There are four inland river ports at Dhaka, Narayanganj, Tongi and Mirkadim on the banks of these rivers for the transportation of passengers and goods by inland waterways.

A World Bank study on river restoration has led to a proposed Umbrella Investment Program involving all stakeholders. A national committee has been formed to implement this proposal, aiming to eliminate pollution and promote sustainable development of Dhaka's surrounding rivers, he said.

The state minister also said Chattogram port handles about 92 percent of the country's import-export trade and 98 percent of containerised goods.

PADMA BRIDGE

Tk 1,648cr in tolls collected in 2yrs

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Road Transport and Bridges Minister Obaidul Quader yesterday said a total of 1.27 crore vehicles used the Padma Bridge in the past two years.

The bridge authority has earned Tk 1,648 crore from tolls since the bridge's inauguration on June 25, 2022, he said. Quader made the remarks following a board meeting of Bangladesh Bridge Authority at Setu Bhaban. The BBA, the project's implementing agency, has repaid Tk 948 crore to the Finance Division in six installments.

"Today is a historic day. On this day in 2022, Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina opened the bridge."

He said three crore people in 21 districts in the southwestern region are benefiting from the bridge.

Preparing for Modi to visit Russia

Says Kremlin

AFP, Moscow

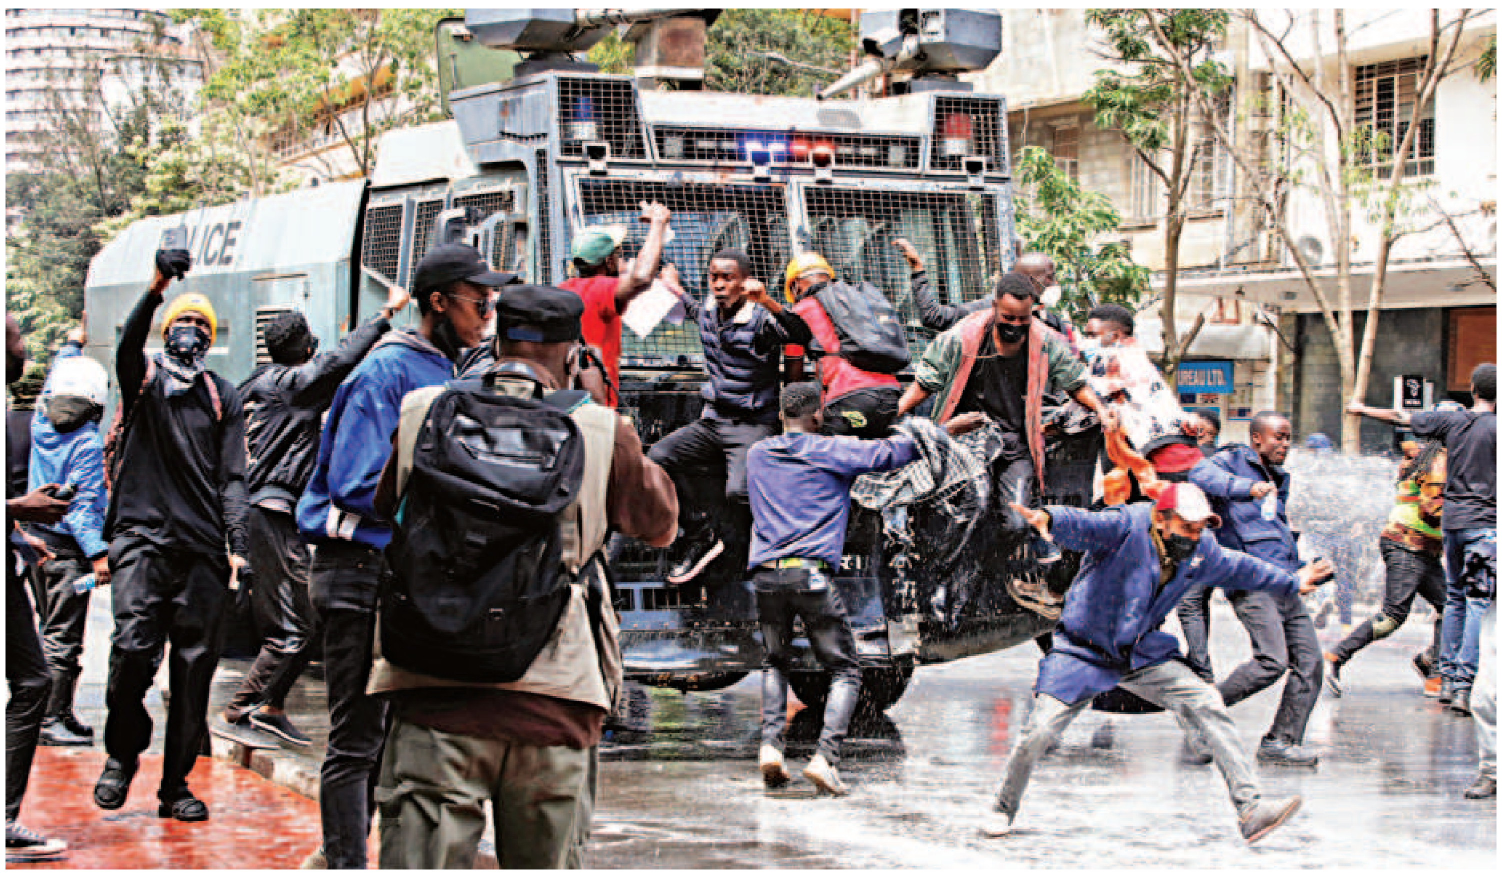
The Kremlin yesterday said it was "preparing" for Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi to visit Russia in the near future, but declined to give a specific date.

The trip would be Modi's first to Russia since Moscow launched its full-scale military offensive on Ukraine more than two years ago, a conflict which has tested relations between Moscow and New Delhi.

"We are preparing for the visit. We will inform you in a timely manner," Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov told reporters when asked about earlier reports in Indian and Russian media that Modi was planning to visit Moscow in early July.

Putin sees India and Modi as a potential diplomatic and economic ally.



Demonstrators try to obstruct a police vehicle as police use water cannons to disperse protesters during a demonstration against Kenya's proposed finance bill 2024-2025 in Nairobi, Kenya yesterday. At least ten people were shot dead in the Kenyan capital, a paramedic said, as protests against tax legislation turned into violent clashes with police. PHOTO: REUTERS

CORRUPTION CASE

India court blocks Kejriwal's release from prison

AFP, New Delhi

An Indian court yesterday stopped the release from jail of one of Prime Minister Narendra Modi's chief opponents, a day after he was granted bail in a long-running corruption case, reports said.

Arvind Kejriwal, the chief minister of Delhi and the leader of the opposition Aam Aadmi party, denies the charges as a "political conspiracy" by Modi and his Hindu-nationalist Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP).

He was released from detention to campaign partway through India's weeks-long general election but returned to jail after voting ended this month.

A trial court ordered his release late Thursday, but before he could walk out of jail on Friday the country's top economic crimes investigative agency, the Enforcement Directorate (ED), appealed to the Delhi High Court.

It suspended his release until it could decide on the appeal, local media reported. The decision could come in "two-three days", legal news portal Live Law posted on social media platform X.

ICC issues arrest warrants for Russia army chief, former minister

AFP, The Hague

The International Criminal Court yesterday said it had issued arrest warrants for Russia's top army chief and former defence minister over strikes on Ukrainian infrastructure that constituted alleged war crimes.

The ICC warrants are the latest in a series of actions by the court over the Ukraine war, including an arrest warrant for Russian President Vladimir Putin.

The warrants concerned the Chief of the General Staff Valery Gerasimov, and former defence minister Sergei Shoigu. The pair are accused of the war crimes of directing attacks at civilian targets, as well as the crime against humanity of "inhumane acts" in Ukraine, the ICC said in a statement.

ICC judges said there were "reasonable grounds to believe that the two suspects bear responsibility for missile strikes carried out by the Russian armed forces against the Ukrainian infrastructure from at least 10 October 2022 until at least 9 March 2023."

OCEAN WATER

Antarctic faces melting 'tipping point'

AFP, Paris

Scientists have discovered a new tipping point toward "runaway melting" of Antarctic ice sheets, caused by warm ocean water intruding between the ice and the land it sits on, according to a study published yesterday.

While this type of melting has been previously studied, models used by the United Nation's Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) to project the impact of global warming on the Antarctic have yet to factor in this phenomenon.

They have also systematically underestimated ice loss seen thus far, said the study, published in the journal Nature Geoscience.

UKRAINIAN REFUGEES IN EUROPE

EU extends refugees' right to stay to 2026

AFP, Brussels

The European Union yesterday extended the right of Ukrainian refugees to stay in the bloc for another year to March 2026, as Russia's war ravages their homeland.

Currently some 4.2 million Ukrainians are registered as refugees across the EU, with Germany, Poland and the Czech Republic hosting the biggest numbers.

"Day after day, Russia terrorises the Ukrainian people with its bombing war. These are not safe circumstances," Nicole de Moor, Belgium's secretary of state for asylum and migration, said in a statement on the extension's adoption.

"Those who fled from Russia's aggression can continue to count on our solidarity," added de Moor, whose country holds the rotating EU presidency until the end of the June.

The 27-nation European Union first granted Ukrainians the right to stay in the weeks after Moscow launched its all-out invasion in February 2022. The measure had been due to expire on March 4, 2025.

People benefitting from temporary protection enjoy the same rights across the EU, including a residence permit, access to the labour market and housing, medical assistance, social welfare and access to education.

The latest extension comes as Ukraine's forces struggle to hold the front line.

Meanwhile, Kyiv's ambassador to Berlin yesterday hit back against "populist" calls for Ukrainian refugees in Germany to find a job or go back to their war-torn home country.

Senior conservative politician Alexander Dobrindt on Sunday told the weekly Bild am Sonntag that Ukrainians should "start working or return to safe areas in west Ukraine".

Rahul Gandhi to be leader of opposition in Lok Sabha

NDTV ONLINE

Taking the fight to India's ruling BJP-led NDA, Rahul Gandhi has accepted a decision by the Congress Working Committee and will take up the mantle of the Leader of the Opposition in the Lok Sabha.

The decision comes hours before the first big battle of the 18th Lok Sabha, between a resurgent opposition and a diminished ruling coalition, over the post of Speaker.

Denied an assurance that an opposition member would be given the post of Deputy Speaker, as is the tradition, the Congress and the INDIA bloc decided to force an election for the post of Speaker at the last minute by putting up K Suresh as its candidate against the BJP's pick, Om Birla, who was the Speaker in the last Lok Sabha.

Congress, the key party in a disparate anti-Modi alliance, nearly doubled its parliamentary numbers, its best result since Modi was swept to power a decade ago.

Gandhi, 54, is the scion of a dynasty that dominated Indian politics for decades and is the son, grandson and great-grandson of former prime ministers, beginning with independence leader Jawaharlal Nehru.

'Come, let's have a debate'

"It's an open secret that Hasina is consumed with jealousy that Yunus won the Nobel Peace Prize given her repeated snubs," the article read.

The prime minister opposed the assertion, saying she does not care for any Nobel Prize, nor does she have "sufficient money for appointing lobbyists" to land the prize.

"Sheikh Hasina is not jealous of anyone," she said.

The PM said she is proud that she is the daughter of Father of the Nation Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman. "No one can get this position. I'm proud of it," she said, adding that the prime ministership was temporary.

She said the Grameen Bank was not founded by Yunus; he used to work there as its managing director and drew salaries.

"You might remember that the Grameen Bank was set up during the tenure of General HM Ershad. There was a position for MD, and Dr Yunus was made the MD of the bank."

The Grameen Bank is a statutory body and the money and salaries were all paid by the government, she said, adding, "During his service, he [Yunus] portrayed the bank in a way as if he founded the bank."

Hasina said he attempted to float a party in 2007.

"So why did he fail to float the political party? If he has given so much to the rural people, then why did those people not come forward? It was because they were under the huge burden of interest," she said.

Hasina said Yunus got benefits from her the most, and now he is running a propaganda against her.

"It is true, we promoted him a lot."

Hasina said, "I helped him the most in getting to the place where he is today."

She said she promoted microcredit at home and abroad, thinking it was good for poverty alleviation.

"His microcredit was not much credible globally. I participated as a co-chair [in Microcredit Summit], brought a proposal before the United Nations and explained it to everyone because I thought it was a good move to lift people out of poverty."

She said she eventually realised that microcredit was nurturing poverty instead, and the poor people after working day and night needed to pay high interests.

Stating that she gave Yunus the business of Grameenphone, the premier said she helped the Grameen Bank survive by giving it Tk 400 crore in the 90s.

But he did not give a single penny to the bank from the business of Grameenphone, she added.

The prime minister said Grameen Telecom received a lot of donations from abroad, but how much of it went into the Grameen Bank? "Every time, he started a new business with the money," she said.

Hasina blasted Yunus also for failing to pay taxes. She said whenever cases were lodged against him for dodging taxes, Yunus paid some money and proved he had indeed evaded tax.

She said Yunus had not paid any money to the labour welfare fund since 2006. So, the Grameen Bank employees filed a case against him at the labour court, and he was convicted in the case.

"What is my fault here?" she said.

The prime minister said that whenever the labourers placed their demands or wanted promotion, they were sacked.

"[So] they [labourers] filed a case. I didn't even know this. And he was convicted in the Labour Court. Don't the labourers have any right? Those who talk about labour and human rights, where are they now? Why are they silent? Have they stood beside the labourers? They did not."

She wanted to know the source of money that Yunus invested abroad.

"There was so much investment abroad. Where did the money come from? Whose money was it, and how was the money earned? No one is asking these questions. Let him answer it."

Hasina said she always protects the interests of the country. "I never sell the country or the interests of the country [to anyone]. And that's why I could not come to power many times."

She said she always works to protect the country's independence and sovereignty, and for the people so that they can move ahead raising their heads high.

GAZA OFFENSIVE

Int'l probe highlights 'attack on press freedom'

AFP, Paris

A collaborative investigation by international media outlets yesterday shed light on the circumstances behind more than 100 Palestinian journalists and media workers being killed in the Gaza offensive, some while wearing a press vest.

A consortium led by investigative outlet Forbidden Stories and involving around 50 journalists from 13 organisations including AFP and The Guardian took part in the probe.

It looked into strikes involving journalists and media infrastructure since Israel launched a devastating offensive in the Gaza Strip on October 7.

"More than 100 journalists and media workers have been killed," Forbidden Stories' Laurent Richard said in an editorial accompanying the Gaza Project's publication.

People gather to fill up their water containers from a truck loaded with water cisterns in Rafah in the southern Gaza Strip yesterday. Ten children on average per day in Gaza are losing one or both of their legs in the offensive raging in the besieged territory, the head of the UN agency supporting Palestinian refugees said.

'RETALIATORY' MOVE

Moscow to block access to 81 EU media outlets

AFP, Moscow

Russia said that yesterday it would block access to 81 EU media outlets, including AFP's websites, as a "retaliatory measure" after Brussels imposed broadcasting bans on several Russian state media outlets.

The European Union in May said it had decided to block access to four Kremlin-controlled media for being "instrumental in bringing forward and supporting" Moscow's Ukraine offensive.

Moscow said it was responding to that move. "Counter-restrictions are being introduced on the access from Russian territory of broadcast resources of media outlets from EU member states," Moscow's foreign ministry said in a statement, publishing a list of media outlets and blaming Brussels for the restrictions.

The list included AFP's homepage afp.com and its client portal afpforum.com. France's Le Monde, Germany's Der Spiegel and Spain's El Mundo were also among the media outlets named on the list.

Russia denounced the EU sanctions as "politically motivated" and said the bloc's decisions were "forcing Moscow to take mirror and proportionate countermeasures".

It said it would "revise" the restrictions if sanctions on Russian media were lifted. Russia has already blocked access to much of the Western media since sending troops to Ukraine.

High risk of famine persists across Gaza

Says global hunger monitor as Israeli offensive in the Palestinian enclave continues

AGENCIES

A high risk of famine persists across the whole of the Gaza Strip as long as Israeli offensive in the Palestinian enclave continues and humanitarian access is restricted, according to an assessment by a global hunger monitor.

More than 495,000 people, or more than one fifth of Gaza's population, are facing the most severe, catastrophic level of food insecurity, an update from the Integrated Food Security Phase Classification (IPC) said, a copy of which was seen by Reuters ahead of its release yesterday.

The IPC said increased deliveries of food and nutrition services to northern Gaza in March and April appeared to have reduced the severity of hunger in the area, where the UN-backed body had previously projected that famine was likely, reports Reuters.

But it also said improvements seen in April could rapidly be reversed.

"The humanitarian space in the Gaza Strip continues to shrink and the ability to safely deliver assistance to populations is dwindling. The recent trajectory is negative and highly unstable," the IPC update said.

French President Emmanuel Macron and King Abdullah II of Jordan Monday called on Israel to lift all land-based "restrictions" on the delivery of aid to Gaza, the presidency said.

UN agencies have repeatedly warned of severe shortages of vital supplies in Gaza, exacerbated by restrictions on access by land and the closure of the key Rafah crossing with Egypt since Israeli forces seized the Palestinian side in early May.

Over lunch at the Elysee Palace, Macron and Abdullah II reiterated the need for an "immediate and lasting ceasefire in Gaza" and called for the release of all hostages -- including two French nationals.

The leaders also "expressed their deep concern about the situation in the West Bank and strongly condemned the violence committed by settlers", the Elysee Palace said in a statement.

Over 495,000 Palestinians are facing the most severe, catastrophic level of food insecurity.

They agreed to continue to work together on a "lasting and credible solution" to the offensive based on the "two-state solution" and welcomed reforms undertaken by the Palestinian government and called for them to be continued, reports AFP.

Referring to the intensification of tensions on the Israeli-Lebanese border, Macron and Abdullah II warned against a "conflagration that would be catastrophic for the region", and reiterated their calls to all parties for "responsibility and restraint".

Meanwhile, the US State Department on Monday said a video of a wounded Palestinian man strapped on a military jeep by Israeli forces was "shocking" and urged a swift investigation to hold those responsible to account.

GAMBLING PROBE

UK Conservatives drop support for candidates

REUTERS, London

Britain's Conservative Party said yesterday it had withdrawn support from two parliamentary candidates who are being investigated over alleged bets placed on the timing of next month's national election.

The escalating scandal, a blow to Prime Minister Rishi Sunak in the run up to a July 4 vote his Conservatives are forecast to lose, has also embroiled party's campaign director and a London police officer.

"As a result of ongoing internal enquiries, we have concluded that we can no longer support Craig Williams or Laura Saunders as parliamentary candidates at the forthcoming general election," a spokesperson for the party said.

Earlier this month Williams, a close aide to Sunak, apologised for a "huge error of judgment" in placing a bet on when the election would happen.

Media then reported last week the country's betting regulator, the Gambling Commission, was looking into allegations of improper betting by a second candidate, Saunders, and her husband Tony Lee, the party's campaign director.

Reuters was unable to reach Saunders or Lee to seek comment. The party said at the time it had been contacted by the Commission "about a small number of individuals". It also said Lee had taken a leave of absence from his role.

The Conservative spokesperson said the party had checked with the Gambling Commission to ensure its decision to withdraw support did not compromise its inquiries. The Commission has not named anyone in relation to its investigation.

British bookmakers allow bets on politics, and the timing of an election is a popular bet. But placing bets with insider knowledge is a crime. Sunak, who took most lawmakers and voters by surprise when he announced election date, has said he was "incredibly angry" to hear about the allegations.

IRAN PRESIDENTIAL VOTE

Khamenei urges 'high participation'

AFP, Tehran

Iranian Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei yesterday called for "high participation" in Friday's presidential election to replace Ebrahim Raisi, who died last month in a helicopter crash.

"We emphasise the importance of high participation (in the election) because it is the pride of the Islamic republic," Khamenei declared in a televised speech three days ahead of the vote.

"In every election where the turnout was low, the enemies of the Islamic republic have denounced us," he added.

Voters have the choice between six candidates, who were selected by the Guardian Council -- an unelected body dominated by conservatives -- from the 80 hopefuls who had filed their candidacy.

The three frontrunners are considered to be conservative parliament speaker Mohammad Bagher Ghalibaf, ultraconservative former nuclear negotiator Saeed Jalili and reformist lawmaker Massoud Pezeshkian.

During the last presidential election, in 2021, the government invalidated many reformists and moderates, which allowed Raisi, the candidate of the conservative camp, to be easily elected and succeed moderate president Hassan Rouhani.

Turnout was at 49 percent, the lowest rate for a presidential election since the Islamic Revolution of 1979.

POST-COUP CRISIS IN MYANMAR

Ethnic armed groups battle junta in west, north

AFP, Yangon

Myanmar ethnic armed groups seized a popular beach resort town in the west of the country and launched dawn attacks on junta positions in the north, a military source and residents told AFP yesterday.

Fighting is raging across swathes of the Southeast Asian nation as ethnic armed groups and pro-democracy "People's Defence Forces" battle the military, which seized power in a 2021 coup.

In western Rakhine state, Arakan Army (AA) fighters have battled security forces for days around Ngapali beach, home to upmarket hotels and resorts owned by military-backed businesses.

Junta troops and police had retreated to an airport in the town of Thandwe, around two kilometres (more than a mile) away, a military source, speaking on condition of anonymity, told AFP.

Hundreds of kilometres away in northern Shan state, the Ta'ang National Liberation Army (TNLA) launched dawn attacks on the military in the town of Kyaukme, the group and residents said.

One resident of the town, which sits on a vital highway to China, said they had heard artillery and gunfire around the town since the morning.

"Most people from the town are hiding inside their houses," another Kyaukme resident who works for a volunteer rescue team told AFP.

The TNLA had restricted travel around Kyaukme, they said, requesting anonymity for security reasons.

The AA and TNLA are members of the so-called "Three Brotherhood Alliance" that launched a surprise offensive against the junta last October across northern Shan state.

Their fighters seized swathes of territory and several lucrative trade crossings with China, dealing the junta its biggest blow since it seized power.

In January, China brokered a ceasefire that allowed the alliance to hold on to territory it had captured, but both sides have recently accused each other of breaking the truce.

The town of Thandwe, a few kilometres from Rakhine's Ngapali beach and home to the local airport, was largely deserted as of Monday, a resident who fled that day told AFP. "Almost everyone in the town has fled... Very few people are now in Thandwe," said the resident, who requested anonymity for security reasons.

Khulna must resist unplanned growth

Illegal housing projects could jeopardise the future of the region

For a region prone to natural disasters because of its low elevation, Khulna really cannot afford unplanned development any more than a highly congested and polluted Dhaka, or Chattogram, can. The region is yet to recover from the devastations of Cyclone Remal that struck a month ago. Extreme events like this serve as a wake-up call for what must be done or changed. But the region seems to have been set in the opposite direction as, far from reducing its vulnerabilities, ongoing developments in Khulna city and adjoining areas could set them up for more challenges in the future.

According to a recent report by this daily, as many as 153 housing projects are operating illegally without necessary approvals from the Khulna Development Authority (KDA) and Department of Environment (DOE)—encroaching upon government khas lands, waterbodies, arable lands, tidal floodplains, etc. Clearly, the negligence of the authorities, both in enforcing regulations and in overseeing the approval process, has allowed these projects to proliferate unchecked. Partly responsible for this situation is the proposed expansion of the Khulna City Corporation's boundaries in 2007, which ignited a frantic wave of housing initiatives. These areas fall under the jurisdiction of the KDA, so it must take responsibility for this situation.

Of particular concern here is the encroachment of waterbodies and tidal floodplains. These serve as crucial natural buffers against floods, and their transformation will only increase the risk of flooding in the future, which is really disturbing. Reportedly, thousands of plots have been developed and sold by filling up such low-lying areas. As well as the natural risks that it poses, this unplanned sprawl also threatens to overwhelm Khulna's urban infrastructure, making it increasingly difficult for the city corporation to manage waste, develop necessary roads, and provide other essential services. Experts have, therefore, alluded to the grim prospect of these unauthorised and unplanned areas devolving into concrete slums eventually. Already, in a sign of the crisis that is about to unfold, the lack of land approvals has left over 30,000 plot owners facing legal issues with building construction.

The situation demands a critical intervention from the authorities. Going forward, they must ensure that no more arable lands and tidal floodplains are encroached. We cannot continue to allow the destruction of such crucial lands and waterbodies and hope to get away without any consequences. Moreover, the authorities should enforce stringent compliance with the Real Estate Development and Management Act, 2010 and other regulations in all housing projects. That means each project must adhere to the stipulated requirements including adequate acreage, specified road widths, and essential civic facilities.

Online gambling is spreading unchecked

Multi-faceted actions necessary to prevent this crime

The recent disclosure that about 50 lakh people in Bangladesh are engaged in online gambling has come as a shock to many people. Its proliferation is concerning for several reasons. Besides this activity being illegal, its addictive nature, inherent monetary risks, and potential connection to criminal activities and platforms also make this a social threat, especially for the young people who are most vulnerable to it.

One may even argue that the prevalence of online gambling is more disturbing than casino-based or other traditional gambling activities because anyone with a smartphone or digital device can access betting and gaming websites, take part in this illegal activity, and complete monetary transactions using mobile financial services (MFS)—without the knowledge of their family members and well-wishers. In fact, the daily Manobjamin quoted the ICT state minister on the popularity of online gambling among young people as well as retired persons.

Although the minister told the media that gambling websites are being shut down regularly, the circulation of surrogate advertisements by betting companies on social media platforms, YouTube, and even television channels during sports events remains a concern. According to a Prothom Alo report, several Bangladesh government websites too are riddled with betting pages/advertisements. There have been reports of the involvement of celebrities in the promotion of these illegal activities. Fake videos of celebrities were also used to lure the audience towards online gambling.

It is, therefore, pertinent that the government takes a stricter stance against online gambling. Existing legal provisions must be updated to better address this threat, and relevant authorities must coordinate with social media platforms to regulate access to online betting pages. Those promoting gambling must also be monitored and regulated. Awareness campaigns targeting different age groups are also required to educate people about this social ill. Recently, the state minister for finance remarked about the involvement of personal MFS accounts in money laundering through online gambling and betting, further highlighting the danger. Clearly, strict interventions are required from the authorities. In the long run, the government should also focus on improving people's financial security so that economic desperation does not push anyone towards risky activities like gambling.

Why we must rethink university faculty recruitment is a researcher in the field of science, technology, innovation and entrepreneurship. He can be reached at arif.ku.business@gmail.com.

Arifuzzaman Khan

ARIFUZZAMAN KHAN

The Global Innovation Index (GII) ranks world economies based on their innovation capabilities, using approximately 80 indicators to capture the complex nature of innovation. In the 2023 GII, Bangladesh ranked 105th out of 132 economies. A crucial component of GII, as well as other science, technology, and innovation (STI) indicators, is the performance of tertiary educational institutions.

Unfortunately, Bangladeshi universities are underperforming compared to other countries at similar development levels. Patent statistics from the Department of Patents, Designs, and Trademarks (DPDT) further highlight this issue. Over the past three decades, Bangladesh has seen approximately 100-400 patent applications annually, with 320 applications in 2023. In stark contrast, India filed over 77,000 patent applications, while emerging Asian countries such as Thailand, Vietnam and the Philippines filed over 8,600, 8,700, and 4,700, respectively, in 2023. South American countries also file thousands of patents each year. Thus, when adjusted for population, our patent per capita ratio is dismal.

Bangladesh's research article production also remains modest compared to other Asian countries. In 2023, as many as 12,879 citable research documents were published from Bangladesh. This number is significantly lower than in several neighbouring countries. For instance, India produced 269,183 documents, while 37,937 documents were published from Pakistan in the same year. Countries like Thailand and Vietnam also outperform Bangladesh, with Thailand contributing approximately 25,430 citable documents and Vietnam producing around 18,290 documents annually. China leads Asia as well as the whole world with an astounding 1,018,423 citable research papers, showcasing its robust investment in research and development. Meanwhile, Japan has about 124,330 publications, and South Korea and Taiwan contribute approximately 97,487 and 41,654 citable documents, respectively.

VISUAL: SALMAN SAKIB SHAHRYAR

Several factors contribute to this difference. One major issue is the limited focus on research at universities in Bangladesh. Additionally, there is a lack of adequate funding and infrastructure to support extensive research programmes. Other Asian countries have invested heavily in research and development, fostering a robust research culture within their academic institutions.

The Triple Helix model, which describes the interaction between universities, industries, and government, is essential for fostering a robust STI ecosystem. However, this collaborative framework is still largely absent in Bangladesh. To address this, we must focus on introducing reforms that can catalyse broader collaboration. Universities in Bangladesh primarily function as teaching institutions, particularly at the undergraduate level, where teachers act as facilitators between textbooks and students. Here, a good teacher is often defined as someone who delivers lectures well and explains concepts clearly, typically from textbooks. This approach, akin to training rather than teaching, may suffice for undergraduate education, but is inadequate for postgraduate studies.

In the developed and many developing countries, university faculty are primarily researchers, and some do not teach at all. Their value lies in their research contributions, which directly impact the STI ecosystem. In contrast, the current faculty recruitment process in Bangladesh rewards academic diligence during undergraduate and graduate studies, sometimes resulting in faculty members who do minimal research beyond the required publications for promotion.

To transform universities into hubs of knowledge creation, we must overhaul the faculty recruitment process at universities in the country. Universities are meant to generate new knowledge, not merely disseminate existing information. The University Grants Commission's decision to allow private universities to offer PhD degrees is a right step to this end. A robust PhD programme is crucial for fostering a research culture and improving faculty quality. Pursuing PhD transforms individuals from knowledge users to knowledge creators, enabling them to think independently and contribute to knowledge production. Further, understanding a subject deeply enough to challenge existing ideas or create new ones enhances the capacity for innovation and critical thinking.

There are several ways to bring in this transformation. For one, only PhD-qualified faculty members should be recruited to lead research projects. To attract high-quality candidates with advanced degrees, they should be offered extra incentives compared to other jobs that only require aaa bachelor's or master's degree. Departments at universities should start PhD programmes funded by the government or private sector, allowing universities to produce knowledge and establish strong industry ties. If PhD researchers receive substantial scholarships, it will attract strong candidates to pursue PhDs and eventually transition into teaching roles. Additionally, these researchers can take on roles as teaching and research assistants, further enhancing the academic environment.

Universities should also emphasise research at the master's level. Elite and established universities can pilot this model. Finally, undergraduate education needs to be redefined with a focus on research.

Implementing these changes can position Bangladeshi universities as key players in the global innovation landscape, fostering a vibrant ecosystem of knowledge creation and application.

Bigger isn't always better

Our appetite for more is killing the planet

Debra Efroymson
is executive director of the Institute of Wellbeing, Bangladesh.

DEBRA EFROYMSON

Big banks, big stores, big corporations. Some politicians and economists would have us believe that bigger is always better, and that modernisation means replacement of local vendors, small shops, and other small independent businesses with giant global chains. We, the consumers, are meant to go along passively with the trend, even to celebrate the availability of a range of global, heavily advertised—and thus seemingly glamorous—products and services.

But despite what we are told, there are options. It is possible to resist the trend towards ever-bigger corporations, ever-more billionaires, and the ongoing entrenched poverty. It is possible to create a movement that is powerful enough to shift the economy away from the big and powerful and back to the local, in a way that supports our livelihoods and our well-being—both individual and planetary.

There are two clear and divergent paths into the future. One involves constant hurry, ever-more movement at ever-greater speeds and sizes, including financial transactions which can collapse an entire economy. It involves becoming even more wrapped up in our technologies, even more dependent on AI to guide us. The other involves slowing down, going local, and reconnecting to our communities, our values, and to the environment that sustains us.

The belief shared by corporate and government leaders that bigger is always better is founded on the false assumption that humanity is somehow divorced from nature, that technology can replace finite resources, and that we can live without a healthy environment. This belief also promotes competition at the expense of cooperation, of living in harmony with our neighbours and our ecosystems.

The belief shared by corporate and government leaders that bigger is always better is founded on the false assumption that humanity is somehow divorced from nature, that technology can replace finite resources, and that we can live without a healthy environment. This belief also promotes competition at the expense of cooperation, of living in harmony with our neighbours and our ecosystems.

In order to pursue our false dream of "sustainable development," where development means ever-increasing mobility and consumption rather than guaranteeing that the basic needs of all are met, we must extract even more resources and create more pollution, thereby contributing to the climate emergency. Not only our air, water, soil, and finite resources are sacrificed, but also vulnerable populations, such as the Indigenous and poor, and recently, the middle classes in industrialised countries.

The results of our pursuit of speed, growth, and wealth include a degraded environment, unbearable heat, ever-more intense storms, and the concentration of wealth and power into the hands of the few. Rather than celebrating local cultures and economies, we see an effort to homogenise people's desires, so that they can be met with mass-produced (and often harmful and unnecessary) items.

But the local, though stifled, has not disappeared. In country after country, people are looking to ancient ways of life to proffer wisdom in these troubled and destructive times. People are seeing and sharing the benefits of strong communities and a close connection to earth. People are allowing "common" sense, intuition, and holistic awareness to guide them towards ways to protect diverse cultures and species, to revitalise healthy food and fibre systems, and to forge or restore human-scale political and economic institutions.

Yes, we are bombarded with messages about the alluring and inevitable march towards the huge and monolithic, even when it means making our air unbreathable and our temperatures unbearable. But people remain roughly the same size, with the same core values, despite the changes around us. People still care deeply about a good education for their children, about living a healthy life, about having access to nature, about having strong social connections, and, vitally, about maintaining a liveable planet. We need voices that highlight the better, brighter path that takes us away from pollution, from AI, from ever-increasing concentration of wealth and power into the hands of the few.

Those of us concerned about terrifying global trends can and must make clear what will, and what won't, bring us closer to those deeper relationships with real people and living places for which we all long. We must continue to speak up, to educate those around us, and to make decisions in our daily lives that support the local. We must also push for local, regional, and national policies that shift subsidies from global corporations to local businesses, that shift wealth from the billionaires to the impoverished, and that seek to restore, rather than continue to destroy, the environment that enables our healthy existence on this cherished but abused planet.

CIVIL WAR IN MYANMAR

Bangladesh should revisit its national security strategy

A CLOSER LOOK

TASNEEM TAYEB

As fighting between the military junta and ethnic groups rages on in war-torn Myanmar, its neighbours Bangladesh, India, China and Thailand are finding it difficult to keep violence off their own borders.

Bangladesh, for instance, is facing major national security challenges at multiple layers as a result of the uncontained and reckless fighting between the Myanmar military and the armed rebel groups.

Intense gun battle along the Naf River, earlier this month, cut off Bangladesh's communications with its only coral island, St Martin's, located about nine kilometres off the mainland, for about a week. As a result, the island, with a population of about 11,000, was exposed to security risk and essential supplies crisis. Around the same time, heavy explosions along the Naf also caused panic among the residents of Shah Porir Dwip, another island situated at the southernmost point of Bangladesh. It was also reported that a Myanmar warship had been spotted opposite the island.

Indeed, these fears and security concerns are not unfounded. Since 2022, Myanmar has continuously violated Bangladesh's territorial integrity, with the former violating the latter's air space as early as in September 2022, with two shells falling inside the Bangladesh territory, and multiple rounds being fired from fighter aircraft.

As fighting between the factions and Myanmar military escalated, multiple killings and injuries were reported inside Bangladesh's territory. In February this year, two were killed by a mortar shell fired by Myanmar on Bandarban's Gumdhum border, with a child being injured. As recently as April this year, two Bangladeshi fishermen in Teknaf were injured when Myanmar's Border Guard Police (BGP) opened fire.

The misadventures, if not provocative posturing, by both the Myanmar military and the armed rebel groups around the Bangladesh borders, including in the Bay of Bengal, pose major threat to Bangladesh's national security. The Bangladesh government must be commended for the restraint it has exercised in addressing the situation so far, but it seems that this patience is being misinterpreted by all the factions in Myanmar. While Bangladesh keeps trying to address the situation through meaningful dialogues in a constructive approach, the Myanmar factions have been pushing the nation further to the brink: Bangladesh has now threatened counterfire if Myanmar resumes violent activities along the restive border areas.

However, the security concerns for Bangladesh does not end here. It has been reported by multiple media sources that armed gangs operating inside Rohingya camps inside Bangladesh—Rohingya Salvation Organization (RSO), Arakan Rohingya Army (ARA), and Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army (ARSA)—are actively and forcefully recruiting Rohingya men and boys (as young as 12) to fight in the civil war. In cases where the refugees are understandably unwilling to join, they are being kidnapped by the gangs. It has even been suggested that the recent arson incidents in the Kutupalong camp have been orchestrated by these gangs to coerce the refugees into joining the civil war. A recent turf war between ARSA and RSO has resulted in the death of three refugees.

What is even more alarming is that many of the refugees who have been forced away from the camps are currently being held inside the Bangladesh territory in the depths of the Bandarban hills, waiting to be pushed into Arakan. Many of the refugees, fearing illegal conscription by the various factions, including the Tatmadaw proxies, are voluntarily fleeing the camps and randomly spreading out across the greater Bandarban region, where it has been alleged that they are trying to assimilate with the locals.

If this is indeed the case, then the local authorities should beef up surveillance to avert internal security risks, given that the refugees are vulnerable to being manipulated by various quarters to serve their vested interests, and there is a high risk that the ones who are fleeing the camps could also potentially be exploited by groups with nefarious intentions.

In addition, Bangladesh has witnessed a new influx of refugees in recent months, as anticipated earlier, in the face of growing violence in the Rakhine state. A Bangladeshi official involved in refugee relief and repatriation told the media that many of the new refugees have been allowed to enter into Bangladesh territory unofficially. While Bangladesh has been generous in opening its doors to the Rohingya refugees, allowing them to do so unofficially or without tracking and accountability is a crisis in the making.

The misadventures, if not provocative posturing, by both the Myanmar military and the armed rebel groups around the Bangladesh borders, including in the Bay of Bengal, pose major threat to Bangladesh's national security. The Bangladesh government must be commended for the restraint it has exercised in addressing the situation so far, but it seems that this patience is being misinterpreted by all the factions in Myanmar.

It is a no-brainer that in a desperate situation such as this, it would be difficult to keep the refugees from crossing over into Bangladesh. Under the current circumstances, without beefing up border security—and if required, ensuring a safe, official passage of the recently displaced Rohingya—infiltration would continue, resulting in the creation of small, sporadic pockets of illegal refugee settlement across the Chittagong Hill Tracts (CHT). The people in these pockets, desperate and vulnerable to the lures of various vested groups, can pose national security threats in the medium to long terms.

Bangladesh needs to revisit its national security strategy and adapt it to effectively navigate the shifting landscape. We need a multipronged approach to mitigate the emerging security threats.

First, we must acknowledge that our border security needs immediate attention and should do a thorough risk analysis with the support of defence experts and analysts, and come up with a comprehensive plan to counter these challenges.

Second, instead of hoping that the Rohingya refugees would not cross into Bangladesh, we should take stock of the situation and if required allow them official safe passage with strict monitoring of their whereabouts. This would be better than the refugees illegally infiltrating and then spreading across the greater CHT region, without any sight of their movement.

Third, the government should work in close collaboration with key regional players including India and China, since both have leverage with the Myanmar military and the armed factions in some cases, especially China—earlier this year, China brokered a ceasefire between the Myanmar junta and the armed groups—to convince all the parties to come to a negotiating table and discuss and ink a sustainable permanent ceasefire.

Fourth, Bangladesh should continue using diplomatic channels to convince the international community to increase funding for the desperate Rohingya refugees, whose living conditions have declined over the years with aid dwindling fast.

Finally, the Bangladesh government should negotiate a practical and sustainable repatriation deal for the refugees with the Myanmar authorities with the mediation of China. Once peace is restored in Myanmar, China can play a pivotal role by leveraging their influence to offer the refugees a dignified life in their own homeland with full citizenship, rights and security.

The Myanmar civil war is the result of decades of non-democratic rule by authoritative, military regimes, resulting in the persecution of minority groups, which has inflicted deep wounds within the communities. Its solution lies in the return of democracy and acceptance of all its people. The wounds are deep, but in a true democratic system, with rights and dignity restored to all the ethnic groups and communities, and everyone given their due representation and voice, Myanmar can heal, and prosper even, realising the full potential of the diversity the country is gifted with.

In light of the ongoing situation, it is high time Bangladesh revised its national security strategy and worked in close collaboration with the other key regional players to help Myanmar find peace.

SUDAN CRISIS EXPLAINED

Why wars are not a matter of the past

To look away from Sudan, at this time, is tantamount to complicity to the ongoing crisis.

After the October 7 Hamas attacks and Israel's genocide in Gaza that followed, much of the world is reckoning with the consequences of persisting imperialism. The nature of the interweaved global politics of modern times has become evident not just through the sales of consumer goods, but also the sale of arms. In this regard, the crisis in Sudan is in many ways similar, with horrific news repeatedly coming out about the state in which the civilians have been living.

Starting in April 2023, well over a year has passed since the eruption of the crisis that is now termed a civil war. The chilling lines from a UNHCR report that the war has turned "homes into cemeteries" provide a glimpse at the terror that now encompasses the lives of those locked by the fight between the Sudanese government forces and the Rapid Support Forces (RSF). According to a UN report, only 16 percent of the target have been met for humanitarian aid allocated for Sudan.

According to Al Jazeera, 10 million people have been displaced in Sudan, a matter only exacerbated by the fact that 2.83 million people were already displaced by "previous conflicts." Of the 48 million people in Sudan, more than a quarter have had to flee, with two million crossing borders in fear of their lives. Many Sudanese civilians have fled to Chad, Uganda, Ethiopia and South Sudan—the exodus may place pressure on these nations and cause another cycle of violence. The overall death toll remains unclear, with some estimates of 150,000 according to Tom Perriello, the US special envoy for Sudan. As per the British Red Cross, 25 million people are in need of urgent humanitarian assistance as of April 2024. By some estimates, the current situation in Sudan could surpass the horrific famines in Ethiopia 40 years ago, which was said to have taken the lives of approximately one million people. At present, it is estimated that 18 million people in Sudan are "acutely hungry" and among children, 3.6 million are "acutely malnourished"—excluding severe injuries, both physical and psychological, that will be carried by the affected population for years, if not decades, to come.

Sudan's history is one that is rife with issues, from its independence from British and Egyptian rule in 1956 to the 22-year conflict in 1983-2005 to the present day, with famine and ethnic cleansing being recurring events over many years. The hope that had come in 2019 with the ousting of Omar al-Bashir, who had ruled Sudan for 30 years, was quickly extinguished in 2021, when the already fragile state of democracy in Sudan was ruptured by a coup organised jointly by army General Abdel Fattah al-Burhan and Mohamed Hamdan Dagalo, better known as Hemedti.

However, the current conflict occurred when the relationship between the two military leaders festered. Burhan, the commander of the Sudanese Armed Forces (SAF), and Hemedti, the leader of the RSF, were once allies. While Hemedti believed that the dismantling and then reintegration of the RSF into the army would require 10 years, the SAF commander believed it could be done in two. The ensuing crisis that emerged from this conflict has had devastating consequences and a grueling genocide, one which the world has not been ready to tackle, and one which has received far less coverage than the genocide in Gaza.

A line from a 2004 article in Mother Jones about the Sudanese civil war stated, "If it has learnt from Rwanda, the West should act to stop mass killings in Sudan."Almost two decades later, the dismal fact of the matter is that the situation has not changed. As Europe lurches to the far-right, with the stoking of Islamophobia and anti-immigration sentiments as one of its most potent tools, we must remember that the sales of weapons from the West has for decades propped up authoritarian regimes in parts of the world called the Global South.

Another recent article in Le Monde claims that "some states are actively fuelling the conflict by providing arms and ammunition." From the Russian Wagner group to the United Arab Emirates (UAE), arms have reportedly been supplied to perpetuate the conflict in Sudan, and these groups have reportedly profited from the horrific situation—just as it has been in other conflicts, particularly genocides, throughout modern history.

From the Russian Wagner group to the United Arab Emirates (UAE), arms have reportedly been supplied to perpetuate the conflict in Sudan, and these groups have reportedly profited from the horrific situation—just as it has been in other conflicts, particularly genocides, throughout modern history.

To look away from Sudan, at this time, is tantamount to complicity. Innocent people losing lives and many barely surviving in a conflict created not by nature but by humans should make us pause, because it lays bare one of the cemented beliefs about the 21st century—that war is a matter of the past. In truth, wars, genocides, and the military industrial complex are well and alive. As is frequently seen with conflicts today, it is rarely one country or the forces within the borders of a single nation involved in widespread systemic violence of the kind that is happening in Sudan.

The consequences of such decisions place, as usual, the lives of the innocent in grave danger. Sudan as of now has the largest internally displaced population in the world because of both the current conflict and the others that preceded it. The world has had the chance to bear witness to such atrocities through platforms that are not yet regulated the way traditional media has been—through personal phones and social media accounts broadcasting information and current events at a fraction of the cost it takes for traditional newsrooms to show the world what is occurring. It is what allowed young journalists in Gaza to show what was happening on the ground even as the most powerful countries in the world worked to side with Israel.

Yet, many today feel powerless: the nature of modern world politics, as facilitated by civilian and military technology, prolongs wars that could have perhaps been snuffed out had external influences not existed in the pernicious ways that it does. To counter the immense powerful network that works against the innocent, it is imperative that at the very least we pay attention to conflicts such as the one in Sudan.

injury but was at the stadium as a fan, could not hide his dismay.

The broadcast showed his reaction in the stands when the stadium speaker announced the change, exclaiming "Vini?" repeatedly, with his arms open, looking at his friends in disbelief.

Vinicius arrived at the Copa America as a strong contender to win the Ballon d'Or after a hugely successful season with LaLiga winners Real Madrid.

The 23-year-old netted their second goal against Borussia Dortmund in the Champions League final as Real claimed a record-extending 15th European crown.

The jet-heeled forward torments defences and always seems to come to the fore when the pressure is at its highest, scoring 24 goals for his club last season.

He was rarely substituted by Real manager Carlo Ancelotti, who often said Vinicius was at his most dangerous late on in games and gave the forward the freedom to roam across the front line.

Things are different with Brazil.

Vinicius is deployed as more of an orthodox forward wide on the left and has scored only three goals in 31 games for Brazil.

Dorival's decision to take him off on Monday brought back memories of the 2022 World Cup quarter-finals, when then manager Tite also substituted Vinicius early in the second-half against Croatia, a game Brazil ended up losing on penalties.

On Monday, Vinicius struggled to make an impact from the left wing and exited the game without a shot on target.

Dorival said he tried moving Vinicius around before replacing him with 17-year-old forward Endrick.

"We tried with him on the wing and we didn't succeed. Then put him inside and we couldn't find a way through either ... he was very well marked," Dorival said.

"We had to find a solution, I was trying to make a change. We tried various alternatives, several situations were created, but in the end we were unsuccessful with our finishing."

The challenge for Dorival in Brazil's upcoming games will be finding a way to balance their attack without sacrificing his best player.

runs, leaving the qualification hopes of the 2021 champions hanging by a thread, then the Bangladesh bowlers, who deserved all the credit for completely saving the team's blushes, combined to set the stage for a great climax by restricting Afghanistan to a modest total of 115-5.

What initially appeared as only a mathematical equation for the Tigers, the bowlers turned into a reality. But ultimately, Bangladesh's batting once again proved that they lacked the firepower and right mindset to overcome the challenge.

Achieving the target in 12.1 overs to secure the semifinal spot was tough but not impossible. However, it required some clarity in approach, which was missing in the Bangladesh batting unit or the team management throughout the tournament.

As a result, the Tigers had to finish the campaign with the consolation that they won three first-round matches and qualified for the Super 8s. Once the dust settles after a sordid campaign, the team management must realize the obvious: with an amateurish batting approach and mindset, a team cannot succeed in a tournament where the challenges and stakes are so high.

Back to the Saint Lucia classic, what did the Bangladesh team's think-tank want to achieve: a mere win or a place in the semifinals? If the batting order is scrutinized, for instance, where Shanto and Shakib Al Hasan were sent ahead of someone like Soumya Sarkar – an opener by trade and known for his exploits against the pacers in Powerplay – during a chase requiring over 10 runs per over, we can get a grasp of the negative mindset of the team management.

Another contentious decision was not promoting a power hitter in Rishad Hossain ahead of Mahmudullah Riyad, while the asking rate required for a semifinals berth begged for a few lusty blows in quick succession to peg back the Afghans.

It did not reflect well on the team when captain Shanto revealed that they gave up hope after losing three early wickets and focused on winning the match from then on -- quite baffling that in a match of such magnitude, there should not have been any line of thinking other than what ensured a semifinals entry.

Then again, when head coach Chandika Hathurusingha marked his charges' Super 8s entrance as a "bonus" rather than a new challenge, one could not have expected more from this team than what transpired.

At the end of the day, an increased number of wins may save someone's job, but it will not serve the purpose of the team. While Rashid's team, having stunned Australia in the Super 8s, made their people back home happy with "a big achievement," Shanto apologized for letting down their fans.

Unlike his coach and a more decorated senior teammate, the Bangladesh captain was honest enough to admit that as a team they have "disappointed" fans and, as a batting group, they weren't able to deliver, irrespective of the fact that this T20 World Cup churned out their best-ever results.

Bangladesh won three first-round matches, despite firing without the batting cylinder, but their overall performance was nowhere near to showing any improvement as a team.

As the Tigers sign off from another global event, leaving many questions unanswered, will anybody be held accountable? If the past trends are anything to go by, there may not even be a sliver of hope.

The ACC urged the BFIU and BSEC to freeze all financial transaction-related accounts of the family.

Over the last two days, the finance ministry removed Matiur from the position of director of state-run Sonali Bank PLC.

It also transferred him to the Internal Resources Division from his position as president of the customs, excise, and VAT appellate tribunal at the National Board of Revenue.

Matiur came into the spotlight after controversy over his wealth and source of income.

The controversy surfaced after Matiur's son, Mushfiqur Rahman Ifat, posted a photo of a sacrificial goat ahead of Eid-ul Azha on social media and claimed to have bought it for Tk 12 lakh.

This raised questions about the income of this official, with a basic monthly salary of Tk 78,000.

dire situation, and no remediation at all of its victims," he added.

Malaysia's systemic inability to meaningfully combat labour trafficking, ensure remediation of victims and accountability of perpetrators indeed warranted its immediate downgrade today to Tier 3 in the 2024 TIP Report, he said.

"Today's upgrade is therefore disappointing and raises for me genuine concern about the legitimacy and accuracy of the US government's country-based human trafficking assessments."

In April, independent experts said the conditions of Bangladeshi migrants were "unsustainable and undignified" warning that "certain high-level officials" in both Malaysia and Bangladesh "are involved in this business or condoning it".

At the end of May, thousands of migrant workers from Bangladesh rushed to Malaysia to beat a hard deadline of May 31 for them to enter there.

Despite the TIP upgrade, the Malaysian government still has to sort out other "blunders" in how it handles migration, Adrian Pereira of the North-South Initiative in Kuala Lumpur told Channel News Asia.

Successive Malaysian administrations have refused to adopt proposals made by the Independent Committee on the Management of Foreign Workers that was filed by a committee of former judges, lawyers and other experts as early as 2019.

"They refused to adopt the recommendations, meaning either the politicians or the civil servants were conniving to ensure the status quo. [Anwar Ibrahim's administration] has to take it seriously, they can't think that they can do business as usual," Pereira said.

The association described the recent media reports, mainly on graft allegations against some former and current officials, as a "smear campaign" by the media. It claimed the reports being run by print, electronic, and social media outlets are "partial, motivated, exaggerated, and misleading".

Hanif said salaries of government employees have been hiked on different occasions. Their benefits have been enhanced. "Why do they still indulge in corruption?"

"They [corrupt government officials] are being allowed to keep their jobs paying nominal fines," he said.

He said there are thousands of Matiurs, a former NBR official who is making headlines for alleged corruption.

Hanif said if there is a criminal case against a politician, there is no need to take permission to arrest them. But in similar cases against government officials, permission of higher officials is required.

He said the Government Service Act-2018 is encouraging officials to indulge in corruption. They will not be fired if they are punished for less than a year, which is not conducive for good governance.

Hanif asked for amending the law.

Opposing the proposal to allow legalising black money, Hanif said it was illogical that people pay 30 percent tax on legal earnings while people who make money illegally pay 15 percent.

AL lawmaker Motahar Hossain said bureaucrats say that all politicians are corrupt and do nothing. They only build houses at home and abroad and deposit money with Swiss banks.

partnership and friendship as both countries are developing fast and both governments are committed to delivering for the people and to the modernisation drive.

"Strong friendship and trust have been developed between the two peoples during their fight for national liberation and independence. The seed of this friendship was planted by Father of the Nation Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman."

The Chinese Embassy in Dhaka hosted the dialogue titled "Looking Towards the Future of China-Bangladesh Relations: A Conversation with the CPC Delegation" at the Renaissance Hotel.

In his opening remarks, Jianchao expressed his enthusiasm about the visit to Bangladesh, saying, "I was really excited about this trip even before I came. Not only because I've never been to Bangladesh, but also because in recent years, I've been hearing about the economic miracle of this great country. In the last two-three days, I've been moving around, meeting local people, visiting projects contracted or supported by China, such as the Padma Bridge..."

He also met President Mohammed Shahabuddin, Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina, and Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud.

"I had a strong sense that the China-Bangladesh partnership and friendship have remained very strong. Next year, we're going to celebrate the 50th anniversary, half a century of excellent relationship between our two countries.

"Our relationship has become a paradigm of equality, mutual benefit, mutual respect, and harmonious coexistence between neighbours. The Chinese Dream and the Sonar Bangla dovetail each other and can enable each other's success."

Earlier in the day, during his meeting with the president at Bangabhaban, Jianchao said that China is willing to continue all possible cooperation for the development of Bangladesh.

President Shahabuddin said China's cooperation in implementing various mega projects, including Padma Bridge Rail Link, Karnaphuli Tunnel, and Elevated Expressway, has accelerated economic development in Bangladesh.

A defeatist mentality, leading nowhere

ABDULLAH AL MEHDI

It was a day to seize an opportunity, perhaps the biggest one in Bangladesh's recent history. After their solid effort with the ball against Afghanistan in St. Vincent yesterday, the context and match scenario all pointed to going on an all-out attack in chasing 115. It simply required taking those runs in 12.1 overs to make the T20 World Cup semifinals or fall trying. A defeatist mentality, however, surprisingly turned the whole game away from their grasp.

What was an inspiring challenge and opportunity would leave a big gash on Bangladesh's cricket history as, given the context of Group One of the Super Eights and the game itself, the only thing at stake was having the heart to go for the game for a place in the semis; for winning in itself was not as important, akin to making it a dead rubber final appearance in the marquee event.

But could more be expected when the head coach Chandika Hathurusingha remarked that anything gained from the Super Eights will be a "bonus", or when Shakib Al Hasan jumped to conclusion that they do not have a chance of making the last-four stage anymore following defeat to India?

While it boiled down to a make-or-break situation for the Tigers at the Arnos Vale Stadium, Mahmudullah Riyad played out five dots when the equation was to get 43 off 19 deliveries. It really showed where the confidence level of the batting unit was, given how Bangladesh planned for the chase. Did the Bangladesh think tank not know what kind of game they ought to be preparing for?

Even before the game against Afghanistan, Bangladesh knew they needed a 62-run win if they batted first. Thus, they had to be aware that they needed to chase any target in and around 11 to 13 overs. But skipper Najmul Hossain Shanto said something about winning being the initial plan; as if the equation at hand was an irrelevant burden.

Most importantly, in a game where the batting order had to be shuffled to make the chase in 12.1 overs, Bangladesh resorted to normalcy.

"First of all, we wanted to win the match. That is the initial plan. After the first innings, when we saw 115 on the board, we had a plan that we could win in 12.1 overs," Shanto relayed at yesterday's press conference.

He stated more clearly during the post-match presentations the approach the batting unit carried. "The normal plan was first three wickets we go hard, especially in the first six overs, and if we lose early wickets we play normally," Shanto had said.

Afghanistan, on the other hand, played out of their skin while Bangladesh were humbled by their own abysmal planning. If the idea was to attack in the Powerplay, the first six overs, Bangladesh did the opposite by not taking risks and sending in the likes of Tawhid Hridoy or Soumya Sarkar earlier -- batters who are ready to take advantage of field settings.

Instead, Shanto and Shakib Al Hasan, who have struggled immensely throughout this tournament, came in and departed in back-to-back deliveries, leaving them at 23 for 3 in 2.5 overs. With their plans, Bangladesh looked to be heading neither here nor there.

The Powerplay produced 46 for three and after that, Liton tried for a while, and Hridoy was the only other batter who looked like he wanted something different inside the 12.1 overs. Once the latter departed, along came that pivotal 10th over where veteran Mahmudullah picked up just four off Noor Ahmed -- the epitome of Bangladesh's defeatist mentality -- and they lost the plot from there. Liton at one point stuck to the norm to at least ensure a win, but Afghanistan seized momentum from what intent Bangladesh had lost by not getting more in the Powerplay.

There was no qualification at stake to another tournament, as was the case during the last game Bangladesh played in the 2023 ODI World Cup against Sri Lanka. Only winning would bring nothing of importance. Shanto said that "the whole batting line-up made very bad decisions", but bad decisions started from the very top with the team management, Hathurusingha and Co.

Argentina and Chile set to renew rivalry

REUTERS

Argentina and Chile will write a new chapter in their long-standing rivalry on Tuesday's Copa America Group A clash at MetLife Stadium in East Rutherford, New Jersey, the same stage where "La Roja" thwarted the reigning world champions in the continental final in 2016.

Argentina boss Lionel Scaloni said that his side has put behind them the painful memory of the second successive Copa final they lost to their bitter rivals, which followed a 2015 final loss in Santiago.

In both cases, Lionel Messi's Argentina lost to Chile on penalties.

"Nothing is left of the 2016 final. Just as we are world champions, what I said the other day, that's over and football is like this," Scaloni told reporters on Monday.

"It goes on, the wheel goes on, the ball doesn't stop and there's absolutely nothing left. Everything else is history, it doesn't make much sense to go back."

Argentine-born Chile coach Ricardo Gareca, appointed earlier this year, has said it is always special for him to face his home country, who beat Brazil in the last Copa America final, in Rio in 2021.

The 66-year-old will be looking for his first win against the defending champions, having recorded two draws and two defeats at the helm of Peru in South American qualifiers between 2015 and 2022.

"It's always special to face Argentina, it's not just any national team," he said. "Beyond the importance of Argentina on its own, of what it represents, for me logically it is always special, these are not common clashes.

"I live it intensely, of course, totally focused on the Chile national team, but they are special matches."

Group A leaders Argentina can clinch a spot in the quarter-finals after their 2-0 win over Canada in their opening match. Chile have one point after a goalless draw against Peru.

Hazlewood doubts 'drastic' changes for Australia

AFP, Gros-Islet

Fast bowler Josh Hazlewood believes there is no "drastic" need to cull Australia's ageing squad despite the failure to make the semi-finals of the T20 World Cup.

Australia's 24-run loss to India on Monday pushed them to the brink of elimination from the last-four chase before Afghanistan's dramatic victory against Bangladesh nudged them over the cliff.

By the time the next World Cup rolls around in India and Sri Lanka in 2026, only one of the current 15-man squad -- Cameron Green -- will still be well under 30.

Green, a 24-year-old all-rounder, didn't get to play a game.

"There might be a couple of changes, but a lot of the guys still play in the franchise cricket if they're not playing for Australia, so they're available to be picked," said Hazlewood, himself 33.

"There's some class players in our 15, And we've got a couple on the bench as well. So, you'd think it'd be an actual slow change. I don't think there'd be anything drastic."

What does need drastic attention is Australia's woeful performance in the field at the tournament.

Afghanistan win, so does cricket

SPORTS REPORTER

'Seriously, who writes these scripts!'

Pommie Mbangwa, a Zimbabwean commentator, said this line twice on air yesterday during the final Super Eight match of the ongoing ICC T20 World Cup between Afghanistan and Bangladesh in St. Vincent.

On both occasions, he said this after Afghanistan, while trying to defend a paltry 115, had claimed a wicket at the right time to halt Bangladesh's progress, a match that they eventually won and booked a spot for the semifinals for the very first time.

Mbangwa's genuine reaction at Afghanistan's never-say-die attitude could also be used to describe this team's incredible journey in cricket, which separates it from every other nation that has ever played the game at the highest level.

For a country like Afghanistan, which has been ravaged by wars for decades and is treated as an outcast by most of the world, mere participating in a World Cup should be hailed as an achievement.

Afghanistan, a team first formed with players who learnt the game in refugee camps in Pakistan, could also be referred to as cricket's only refugee team, as they have never played an international game at home and are unlikely to do so in the near future.

Given the lack of infrastructure at home, never getting to experience true home support and having no real cricketing heritage, Afghanistan have no business contesting against top sides in ICC events, let alone beating them.

But Rashid Khan and his team didn't get that memo.

Even with Afghanistan's lethal spin attack, hardly anyone hedged their bets on Afghanistan making it to the semifinals. The reason for that, perhaps, was their poor record in T20 World Cups.

They have featured in every T20 World Cup since the third edition in 2010 but before the ongoing tournament, had only one win over a top side, which came against West Indies in 2016.

This time, the Afghans were pitted in the group of death in the first round, alongside New Zealand, West Indies, Papua New Guinea and Uganda, with only two teams set to move onto the Super Eight.

The Afghans first showed signs that this edition will be different when they crushed the Kiwis by 84 runs, a victory that booked them a place in the next phase.

Afghanistan's challenge got even tougher in the Super Eight, when they got pitted against two tournament favourites in India and Australia along with Bangladesh in Group 1.

A 47-run defeat against India didn't do their qualification chances any favour. However, after Rashid's team sprung a surprise on Australia and India aided the South Asian neighbours with a win over the Aussies, Afghanistan needed just one more win against the Tigers to reach the promised land, which they did.

Afghanistan's incredible rise has been international cricket's biggest feel good story for some years now. Their triumph came on the backs of players like Rashid, Mohammad Nabi, Rahmanullah Gurbaz and Co, all of whom could've easily abandoned the national side and played exclusively in franchise cricket. But this Afghan team has long been on a mission, to bring smiles to their countrymen who don't have much to celebrate. This determination has brought this side into the semis and two matches away from the coveted trophy.

Modric wants to carry on

REUTERS, Leipzig

Croatia captain Luka Modric said he would look to continue playing on despite his country's likely elimination from the European Championship after conceding a last-gasp goal in a 1-1 draw with Italy in their final Group B game on Monday.

Modric suggested he wanted to carry on even after 178 internationals since his debut in 2006.

"I'd like to keep playing forever but there probably will come a time when I must hang up my boots. I'll keep playing on, but I don't know for how much longer," the 38-year-old midfielder told reporters.

Modric was resigned in his analysis of the game.

"That was very stressful. We kept battling right until the end but, unfortunately, football was merciless with us tonight. It was cruel above all today but also in our last match (a 2-2 draw with Albania) when we also conceded a late goal," said Modric.

Spalletti unhappy with leaks and talk of pacts

REUTERS, Leipzig

For Italy's media, the 1-1 draw with Croatia on Monday which sent them through to the last 16 of Euro 2024 was a miracle, but despite the euphoria of a late equaliser, manager Luciano Spalletti appeared far from happy.

The defending champions were 1-0 down going into the final minute of added time before substitute Mattia Zacagni's goal salvaged a draw.

At Spalletti's post-match press conference he responded angrily to one reporter asking if his 3-5-2 formation was the result of a pact with his players.

"In my opinion, this is what you were told," Spalletti said, before asking the reporter his age.

"Fifty-one, you still have 14 years before you get to 65 like me. I speak to the players, I need to hear with their ears and see with their eyes, so I talk to them, what is the problem?"

At the reporter's insistence that nobody had told him about a pact, Spalletti repeated his idea that someone had spoken out of turn.

"But don't claim that this is your poetic licence, this is just a weakness of those who leak things," Spalletti said.

"There is an internal environment and an external one and if in the internal environment there are those who speak of certain things outside, it's someone who harms the national team.

"I did my thesis at Coverciano on the 3-5-2. I'll let you see it later, so it's only natural that I speak to the players."

Italy came into the game with Croatia knowing a draw would guarantee a place in the last 16, and despite leaving it so late to secure qualification, fear is not something which concerns Spalletti.

"What kind of question is it, what if we get knocked out? Am I afraid? What am I afraid of? Otherwise I would have just come here like you guys and watched the games," Spalletti said.

"I would have done another job. I know so many people they would have given me a free ticket. It's only natural that there's pressure and responsibility, but we go out there to play."

La Gazzetta dello Sport went with the headline "Italian Miracle", and said the Azzurri were saved not only by Zaccagni's moment of magic but also keeper Gianluigi Donnarumma's fine saves.

La Stampa went with the same headline, and called Zaccagni "an accidental hero of a bad game", while La Repubblica said the "Azzurri reached the last 16 by the skin of their teeth".

Italy face Switzerland in the last 16 on Saturday.

Bangladesh's faulty mindset exposed in exit

BISHWAJIT ROY

No shortage of excitement, tension, and twists with the semifinals spot at stake: one could not have expected more drama than what unfolded during an absorbing T20 World Cup Super Eights contest between Bangladesh and Afghanistan at the Arnos Vale Stadium in Saint Vincent yesterday.

Eventually, the Najmul Hossain Shanto-led side were on the wrong side of the outcome as Rashid Khan's Afghanistan secured a famous eight-run victory, booking their semifinals ticket while sending title-aspirants Australia back home.

Bangladesh, however, can only blame themselves for squandering a glorious opportunity to sneak into the last four, especially if they question themselves on whether they truly aimed to achieve the jackpot -- what appeared to be a near-impossible feat following back-to-back heavy defeats against India and Australia in the Super Eights.

If India had set the stage for this drama after beating Australia by 24

'Sharifa's Tale' to be removed from textbook

Decides edn ministry upon experts' advice

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The education ministry has decided to remove the story titled "Sharifa's Tale" from the seventh-grade history and social science textbook following recommendations of a probe committee.

The ministry wrote to the National Curriculum and Textbook Board (NCTB) recently instructing it to take necessary steps regarding the decision, Prof Md Moshiuzzaman, acting NCTB chairman, told The Daily Star yesterday.

"The education ministry's letter said the controversial story should be replaced by another story," said Prof Moshiuzzaman.

He added that the story would be replaced in the next academic year. The textbook would still have a topic for the same learning outcome, but with a different narrative.

"Sharifa's Tale" was included in the history and social science book for seventh grade in a section on "human Rights activists criticise Malaysia's improved ranking

TRAFFICKING IN PERSONS REPORT
JUNE 2024

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

Rights activists have criticised Malaysia's improved ranking on the US State Department's Trafficking in Persons (TIP) report despite the exploitative conditions faced by hundreds of thousands of Bangladeshi migrant workers.

On Monday, the TIP report upgraded Malaysia, which was earlier relegated to the lowest level, Tier 3, in 2021 for widespread migrant labour abuses inside its factories and plantations, to the Tier 2 category. Last year, Malaysia was in the Tier 2 watchlist grouping.

The annual report ranks governments based on their efforts to acknowledge and combat human trafficking and remains one of the few global indices with teeth as it can trigger US sanctions for the worst offending nations.

"Based on years of unsuccessfully engaging the Malaysian government on cases of alleged human trafficking and forced labour, I strongly disagree with today's tier 2 upgrade for the country," said migrant rights activist Andy Hall in a statement.

A failed migrant work management and recruitment system -- that promotes impunity, is devoid of the rule of law and is systemically corrupt -- continues to exist in Malaysia, said the Nepal-based British activist who researches migration in Southeast Asia.

"There is little to no accountability for this

No classes were held for at least five hours at 35 public universities yesterday as teachers began their three-day-long half-day work abstention, demanding the reinstatement of the previous pension facilities instead of the newly introduced Universal Pension Scheme (UPS).

The Federation of Bangladesh University Teachers' Association (FBUTA) organised the protests at the universities yesterday, just as they reopened after the Eid-ul-Azha holidays.

Its General Secretary Nizamul Hoque Bhuiyan, during a sit-in in front of Dhaka University's arts faculty, threatened all-out strikes at the campuses for an indefinite period from July 1 if the demands were not met.

ISRAELI STRIKES ON GAZA CITY

Hamas chief's relatives among 24 killed

Israeli forces killed at least 24 Palestinians in three separate airstrikes on Gaza City early yesterday, and the dead included a sister of Ismail Haniyeh, the chief of the Hamas group, Gaza health officials and medics said.

- Israel bombs two schools, a house in Gaza City
- US urges Israel to avoid Lebanon escalation
- Gaza death toll rises to 37,658

Israeli tanks also pressed deeper into western areas of Rafah in the south of the enclave overnight, blowing up homes, residents said.

Two of the Israeli airstrikes hit two schools in Gaza City, killing at least 14 people, medics said. Another strike on a house in the Shati (Beach) camp, one of the Gaza Strip's eight historic refugee camps, killed 10 others.

The house in Shati belonged to the extended family of Hamas political chief Haniyeh, who is based in Qatar, killing one of his sisters along with other relatives too, family members and medics said.

Haniyeh, who leads Hamas' diplomacy and is the public face of the group that has been running Gaza, has lost many relatives in Israeli air strikes since October 7, including three sons.

Israel's military said its forces had targeted Hamas fighters overnight in Gaza City who had been involved in the planning of attacks on Israel. The fighters included some involved in holding hostages captive and some who had taken part in Hamas' cross-border attack on October 7.

The Israeli Air Force struck two structures "used by Hamas members in Shati and Daraj Tuffah in the northern Gaza Strip. The terrorists operated inside school compounds that were used by Hamas as a shield for its terrorist activities", the military statement said.

Hamas denies using civilian facilities such as schools and hospitals for military purposes. The group described the attacks on the two schools and the house in Shati camp as "massacres".

China probe returns with samples from far side of Moon

AFP, Beijing

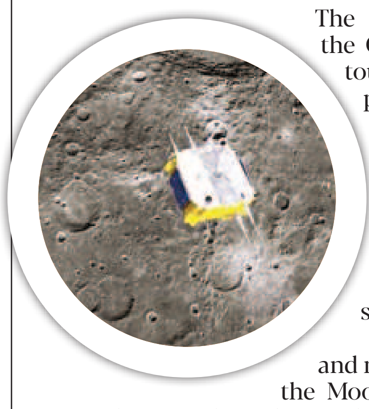
A Chinese probe carrying samples from the far side of the Moon returned to Earth yesterday, capping a technically complex 53-day mission heralded as a world first.



The landing module of the Chang'e-6 spacecraft touched down at a predetermined site in Inner Mongolia at 2:07 pm (0607 GMT), the China National Space Administration said, hailing the mission a "complete success".

It comes bearing soil and rocks from the side of the Moon facing away from Earth, a poorly understood region that scientists say holds great research promise because its rugged features are less smoothed over by ancient lava flows than the near side.

That means the materials harvested there may help us to better understand how the Moon formed and how it has evolved over time.

China's space agency said the probe was "functioning normally, signalling that the Chang'e-6 lunar exploration mission was a complete success".

Brazil challenged with getting best out of Vinicius

Brazil's poor performance in their goalless draw against Costa Rica in their Copa America opener on Monday has dampened the enthusiasm surrounding their new manager and a revamped squad headlined by Vinicius Jr.

After a gritty 1-0 win over England at Wembley and a hard-fought draw 3-3 with Spain at the Bernabeu earlier this year, fans were optimistic that Brazil had turned a corner under Dorival Jr but his side had no answers to Costa Rica's five-man defence in California.

As the clock ticked down and the five-time world champions' frustrations grew, Dorival decided to make his first two substitutions in the 70th minute.

His decision to take Vinicius out of the game came as a huge surprise.

Foreign debt costs to spiral

Interest payments to surge 65pc to $2.21b by 2027

REJAUL KARIM BYRON and MAHMUDUL HASAN

Bangladesh's interest payments on external borrowing are projected to soar by 65 percent within three years due to rising global interest rates and an expanded foreign loan portfolio, which will put further pressure on the dwindling foreign currency reserves.

According to a finance ministry report, the interest payments will rise to $2.21 billion or around Tk 26,000 crore by 2027 with the taka losing 35 percent of its value against the greenback over the last two years.

The principal amount is also forecast to jump by 28 percent to $3.17 billion in fiscal 2026-2027, compared to the current fiscal year.

Foreign loan repayments, including interest and principal amount, are projected to reach $3.82 billion in the current fiscal year. Foreign debt servicing already stood at $2.81 billion in the first 10 months of the fiscal year. The amount will rise to $5.38 billion by 2027.

"The impact of currency depreciation on external debt levels underscores the need for careful monitoring and management of external debt risks to maintain economic stability and resilience," said the report titled Medium-Term Macroeconomic Policy Statement (MTMPS).

The proportion of external interest payments in the budget is also expected

A moronic end to a daring jailbreak

4 death row convicts dig a hole for 20 days to escape Bogura jail, get caught after an hour and half

MOSTAFA SHABUJ, Bogura

Sentenced to death in separate cases, four convicts were housed together in a condemned cell in Bogura District Jail on June 1.

Over the next 25 days, the four -- Nazrul Islam, 60, of Kurigram; Amir Hamza, 38, of Narsingdi; Md Zakaria, 31, and Farid Sheikh, 28, of Bogura -- hatched an escape plan and worked accordingly.

After managing a screwdriver and an iron-sheet scrap from outside sources, they used those to make a hole in the ceiling. They also tied several bedsheets together to use as a rope.

Then early yesterday, they climbed out of the cell one by one and scaled down the building.

However, their taste of freedom lasted just an hour and half, as police rounded them up from Chashi Bazar, a few blocks from the jail.

Bogura Superintendent of Police Sudip Kumar Chakraborty described the incident at a press briefing at his office yesterday.

The jail has three condemned cells, housing 13 death row inmates. The four escapees were shifted to one of the cells on June 1, according to jail sources.

They said the building was built in the British era, and no iron rods were used in the construction of the roof.

Bangladeshi women being sold in China

Gangs use elaborate ruse of marriage to traffic them

SHARIFUL ISLAM

Fooled by a gang, a widow in Chuadanga got her daughter married to a Chinese national named Cui Po Wei on July 1 last year, hoping that she would rise out of poverty.

The family was led to believe that the Chinese man had converted to Islam, worked at a factory in Gazipur, and would settle in Bangladesh permanently.

But six months later, Lovely, not her real name, was taken to China by the man and forced into prostitution, according to a case filed by the mother with a Dhaka tribunal on March 31 this year.

On March 11, Lovely managed to call her mother using an app and told she was seriously ill because of the torture she was facing. She added that Bangladeshi traffickers had sold her to Cui Po Wei for Tk 10 lakh.

Lovely's mother told The Daily Star that she personally knew four other poor women who were duped into marrying Chinese nationals. The same group of local people who had duped her were involved in arranging those marriages.

Requesting anonymity, a resident of the capital's Uttara, who works for a Chinese firm, said he personally knew two groups of locals who actively

Legal issues delaying Tarique's repatriation

Hasina tells parliament

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Some legal issues were delaying the process of bringing home BNP acting chairman Tarique Rahman from the UK, Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina told parliament yesterday.

Tarique has been convicted in multiple cases, including the August 21 grenade attack case.

The government is determined to bring the BNP leader back home after resolving all pending legal issues to make him face the punishment, Hasina said in response to a query from Farida Yasmin, an Awami League lawmaker from a reserved seat for women.

The questions to the PM and her answers were tabled in the House, with Speaker Shirin Sharmin Chaudhury in the chair.

The premier said strong diplomatic and legal initiatives have been taken to bring Tarique back home.

A total of 15 convicts in the August 21 grenade attack case, including Tarique, are absconding.

Hasina, also the Leader of the House, said an Interpol red notice was issued against the absconding convicts, including Maulana Tajuddin, Md Harish Chaudhary and Ratul Ahmed Babu.

She informed parliament that she sent several letters to the heads of state and governments of the countries concerned at different times seeking cooperation from them in bringing the murderers back home.

The PM said she raised the issue with some government leaders at international forums.

Hasina, however, said the progress in bringing the convicts back home has not been satisfactory.

AHMED HUMAYUN KABIR TOPU, Pabna

Commercial operation of another solar power plant may start on June 30 on the bank of Jamuna in Sirajganj.

The "Sirajganj 68MW Solar Park," which was financed by Bangladesh and China companies, will be the 12th operational commercial solar plants in the country.

Eleven such plants now generate 536 megawatts of electricity, according to the national database of renewable energy.

When the Sirajganj plant supplies power to the national grid, the total production will be over 600 megawatts from renewable energy, said sources.

The solar park has been constructed in Soydabad area near Bangabandhu Bridge at a cost of Tk 880 crore. Bangladesh and China Renewable Energy Company Ltd (BCRECL) and North-West Power Generation Company Ltd (NWPGCL) funded the project, whose construction work began on January 9, 2023.

Following power purchase and implementation agreements, NWPGCL and China National Machinery Import and Export Corporation (CMC) started implementing the project, Tanvir Rahman, project director of Sirajganj solar park, told The Daily Star.

A total of 1.56 lakh solar panels have been set up to produce 68MW of power.

"We have already completed construction work of the plant. Now we are working for commissioning the plant," Tanvir said.

Line commissioning and other work for the commercial operation have successfully been completed, the PD said, adding that they are hopeful of starting the commercial operation on June 30.

"We will supply power to the national grid at a cost of Tk 11.20per unit," said Tanvir.

Talking to this correspondent, Khandakar Mokammel Hossain, a member of Bangladesh Power Development Board, said the government is determined to increase solar power generation.

"We are getting only 536 megawatts of power from renewable energy sources, but we want to get a significant amount of power from this sector. So, the government is patronising solar plants," he said.

Principal secy's tenure extended

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government yesterday extended the contract of Tofazzel Hossain Miah, the principal secretary to the prime minister, by another year.

The contractual appointment will be effective from July 5, according to a gazette notification from the ministry of public administration.

The government appointed Miah on a year's contract when his regular service age expired on July 4 last year. The contract expires on July 4 this year.

Meanwhile, the government also extended the tenure of service of ABM Amin Ullah Nuri, secretary of road transport and highways division, for another year.

Nuri has been reappointed on a contractual basis in continuation of his previous contract with the government and under the same conditions from July 1 or the day of his joining the office, according to a public administration order yesterday.

In another notification, additional secretary Gautam Chandra Pal was appointed the chairman of the Bangladesh Road Transport Authority. Pal is currently serving as the personal secretary to Obaidul Quader, the minister of road transport and bridges.

Postal officials embezzled Tk 55cr: Palak

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Postal officials have embezzled Tk 55 crore from people and the department, Zunaid Ahmed Palak, state minister for posts, telecommunications, and information technology, said yesterday.

"We have found that Tk 55 crore was misappropriated by postal officials nationwide, and I have already written to the ACC chairman, urging him to take action," he said.

Most of the fraudulent activities involve postal officials embezzling people's deposits without issuing official documentation for the purchase of government savings certificates.

The state minister made the remarks while speaking to reporters after a workshop jointly organised by a2i (Aspire to Innovate) platform of Information and Communication Technology Division, and the International Telecommunication Union at a city hotel.

Palak said they recently noticed the financial irregularities at post offices when a woman of Rajshahi's Tanore attempted to commit suicide after failing to recover Tk 2 lakh from the local postmaster.

The official did not provide her with any official documents even though she bought savings certificates, he added.

Nasim said that politicians do not take sides when allegations of corruption or misdeeds are raised against a fellow politician.

"Rather, they raise their voice for taking political and legal actions. That's the greatness of honest politicians. But whenever allegations of corruption are raised against a particular person of a government, private, or semi-government organisation or a law enforcement agency, a statement is issued in favour of that corrupt person," he said.

He said the associations concerned will have to get out of this practice.

The lawmaker from Dhaka-8 said initiatives should be taken to implement Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's zero-tolerance policy against corruption by taking strict actions against corrupt persons and institutions.

Talking about defaulted loans, Nasim said such loans should be reduced by taking strict measures against the defaulters.

He called for identifying the loan defaulters, money launderers, bank robbers, and those who hike prices of essentials.

"I think that preparing a list of those people and presenting the list before the nation are necessary."

The AL leader said the people should be protected from the corrupt persons by forming a special task force.

On June 21, Bangladesh Police Service Association (BPSA) issued a statement condemning what it termed a "smear campaign orchestrated by certain media outlets" against current and former members of police.

BPSA termed some recent media reports on retired and serving police officials "ill motivated, sweeping, and exaggerated". It also requested the media to be more cautious while publishing reports on the force.

The statement came at a time when the Anti-Corruption Commission is conducting an investigation into the allegations of accumulating huge illegal wealth by former inspector general of police Benazir Ahmed and his family members.

Former Dhaka Metropolitan Police commissioner Asaduzzaman Mia also hogged the headlines recently over allegations of amassing illegal wealth.

Matiur Rahman, president of the National Board of Revenue's (NBR) Customs, Excise and VAT Appellate Tribunal, has been transferred to the Internal Resources Division of the finance ministry following a controversy over his wealth.

The ACC is investigating accusations of accumulating assets by Motiur at home and abroad through illegal means.

Foreign debt costs to spiral

to rise to 2.6 percent in FY27 from 0.9 percent in FY22, reflecting a growing impact of external debt on the budget, the report mentioned.

It further said two major factors are contributing to the increase in interest payments for foreign loans.

One factor is that the reference rates in advanced countries are expected to stay high, and the other is that Bangladesh's graduation from the category of LDCs will gradually narrow the window for getting concessional loans from external sources.

A reference rate is an interest rate benchmark that is used to set other interest rates. The Fed Funds Rate, the Secured Overnight Financing Rate (SOFR), and the prime rate are among the most common reference rates.

The report said the implicit interest rate on external borrowing exhibits a gradual increase over the period -- from 1 percent in FY21 to 2.6 percent in FY27.

"This increase is attributed to a higher proportion of borrowing through floating and semi-concessional rates, which are more sensitive to market fluctuations compared to fixed-rate financing."

It also mentioned that the depreciation of the taka has elevated the value of external debt when measured in local currency terms.

This highlights the influence of currency fluctuations on the debt portfolio and the importance of managing external debt exposure in the face of exchange rate volatility.

Referring to the gradual increase in foreign loan repayments, the report said that managing these debt service obligations is essential for ensuring financial stability and preventing liquidity crises.

"Despite the increasing amounts of external debt repayment, they are expected to remain within tolerable limits, supported by the government's efforts to diversify funding sources and build up foreign exchange reserves," it added.

Talking to this newspaper, Ahsan H Mansur, executive director at the Policy Research Institute of Bangladesh, said that given the ongoing forex crisis, Bangladesh has to be judicious about taking loans and choose projects that are of high social and economic importance.

"Many of the investments were good, but many were not, which is why our debt burden is rising. The government's capacity to borrow is decreasing due to the inability to expand revenue growth in line with economic growth."

He said projects such as the Dhaka Metro Rail and even an underground rail line in Dhaka will be beneficial.

However, the huge spending on the train line to Cox's Bazar, the Padma Rail Line, and the nuclear power plant in Rooppur will not yield expected outcome. They will add to the burden of foreign debt repayment, he said.

According to the report, Bangladesh's foreign loans are mostly made up of five currencies. The US dollar remains predominant, constituting 53 percent of the total, followed by the Japanese yen at 20 percent, the euro at 15 percent, the Chinese renminbi at 8 percent, the British pound at 3 percent, and other currencies making up 1 percent of the debt.

Bangladeshi women being sold in China look for gullible Bangladeshi women, especially the ones from indigenous communities of the hill tracts, and get them to marry Chinese citizens.

"I often see parties at restaurants in Uttara where Chinese men meet women from the hill districts. Sometimes, I see them preparing marriage registration documents. Some locals are members of the gangs."

He had heard that the local arrangers get from Tk 10-Tk 20 lakh for each woman who agreed to fly to China.

The people accused in the case filed by Lovely's mother are Cui Po Wei; Ji Yixian, a woman who introduced herself to the family as Wei's sister; Abdullah Al Mamun of Bogura, Faruq and Abdul Mannan of Chuadanga; Solaiman of Kashimpur; and Hafizur Rahman Mollah, a marriage registrar from Jatrabari in the capital.

"The accused are organised human traffickers who took advantage of our helplessness... and trafficked my daughter to China for sexual exploitation and forced prostitution," reads the complaint.

The Criminal Investigation Department is investigating the case.

On May 1 in Rangamati, a Chakma woman filed a case with Naniarchar Police Station, stating that a gang of traffickers held her sister captive at an unspecified place in the capital and may soon take her to China.

The complaint said the gang promised to admit the 21-year-old woman to a nursing institute and took her to Dhaka in a microbus. The gang later took indecent photos of her and forced her to marry a Chinese man.

A woman named Rika Chakma was accused in the case as the leader of the gang. Rika, who is from Khagrachhari's Dighinala upazila, lives in the capital's Uttara Sector-14. Seven named and four to five unidentified others were accused in the case.

On April 26, a 21-year-old Marma woman from Khagrachhari filed a case with Laxmichhari Police Station accusing five named and two or three unknown others of attempting to traffic her to China.

She was taken to a house in Uttara Sector-11 and was compelled to marry a Chinese man. Luckily, locals rescued her and caught three of the gang members on April 25 when the men were taking her to a government office in Khagrachhari to get a document for her passport.

The CID is investigating both cases.

In 2018, three women of indigenous communities were brought back from China through diplomatic efforts.

Chandra Dewan, head teacher of Ghagra High School in Kawkhali, Rangamati, said that in the last few months at least three young women from the area were taken to China, and two schoolgirls were recently rescued from traffickers.

Gautam Dewan, president of CHT Citizens Committee, urged the government to ensure that there is monitoring so that underprivileged women are saved from falling victim to human traffickers.

Noor E Alam Mina, deputy inspector general of Chattogram range police, said police were looking into the matter.

The Chinese embassy in Bangladesh in an email said the Chinese government protects the rights and interests of women and children and cracks down on human trafficking. Besides, the embassy is committed to safeguard the rights and interests of the Chinese citizens in Bangladesh.

Regarding Lovely's case, it said the embassy has not received any notification from the Bangladesh government.

The advice comes hard on the heels of revelations of financial felonies of unprecedented scale involving a number of former and incumbent senior government officials.

The amassing of huge wealth by former inspector general of police Benazir Ahmed has particularly taken the nation by surprise.

"To combat high-level corruption effectively, it is essential to reinforce the asset declaration process for public officials by enforcing sanctions for non-compliance and adopting a standardised approach for the usage and regular updating of the declarations," said the IMF.

According to the document, the government told the IMF that it remained committed to strengthening governance and combatting corruption.

Will die if I am isolated from people

PM urges SSF not to alienate her from countrymen

UNB, Dhaka

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday asked the members of Special Security Force not to alienate her from the people as they are her strength.

"If I become isolated from the people, I would die," she said.

The premier made this remark while addressing a special darbar (gathering) arranged at her office, marking the 38th founding anniversary of the SSF.

She said she does politics for the people and work with them. "I've no other strength except the people. I move forward with the power of people," she added.

"So, you will have to pay attention so that I won't be isolated," she said, adding that SSF needs to deal with these matters sensibly.

DU allocates only 2.12pc for research

DU CORRESPONDENT

Dhaka University authorities yesterday approved a Tk 945.15 crore budget for the 2024-25 fiscal year, while setting aside only Tk 20.05 crore as research grants.

The research budget was approved against 2,000 teachers of the university, meaning only Tk 1 lakh has been allocated per teacher. The allocation for research grants is only 2.12 percent of the total outlay.

More than half of the budget will be spent on the salaries and pensions of teachers and staffers.

There are 60 research centres at the university. If the amount of grants is divided among them, each would get Tk 33.41 lakh for research work for a year.

Of the total outlay, around Tk 299.19 crore (31.65 percent) was allocated for salaries, Tk 218.43 crore (23.12 percent) for gratuity, and Tk 112.95 crore (11.95 percent) for pensions and retirement, according to the DU budget book.

Educationists have expressed dissatisfaction over such a paltry allocation for research grants.

Dhaka University Professor Emeritus Serajul Islam Choudhury said, "Teachers are losing interest in research. Society and the state's disinterest in creating new knowledge is responsible for this, as the allocation is very low. It is not only at Dhaka University. It is the same in all universities."

"Research requires concerted initiative. We lack that too. This is an ominous sign for society and the state. The interest in creating new knowledge should be increased among teachers, and the state should take initiatives for this," he added.

Put an end to custodial torture and mistreatment

Amnesty urges govt

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Amnesty International yesterday called upon the Bangladesh government to end impunity for torture and other ill-treatment by police and security forces, urging authorities to hold perpetrators accountable and ensure reparations for victims.

In a statement marking International Day in Support of Victims of Torture, the global rights group said impunity continues to prevail for police and security forces in Bangladesh, despite the country ratifying the UN Convention Against Torture in 1998 and enacting the Torture and Custodial Death (Prevention) Act 2013.

There has only been one conviction under the torture law in more than a decade. In September 2023, the Bangladesh government reported to the UN Human Rights Council that 24 cases had been filed under the 2013 torture law so far, reads the statement.

Between January 2013 and May 2024, Bangladesh rights group Ain O Salish Kendra documented 138 deaths that were allegedly caused by physical torture by law enforcement agencies.

It also documented 923 deaths in jail custody that were reported in the media during the same period, reads the statement.

Shahriar Kabir tells event marking 30th death anniv of Jahanara Imam

The role of the Anti-Corruption Commission in taking action against individuals being investigated for graft allegations is questionable, said war crimes researcher Shahriar Kabir yesterday.

He demanded that the ACC be held accountable.

"Why do the ACC's directions come after a person under their investigation flees the country? Why does the announcement of freezing bank accounts come after a person leaves the country?" questioned Shahriar, referring to former IGP Benazir Ahmed and former NBR member Matiur Rahman.

He was addressing a discussion commemorating the 30th death anniversary of Shaheed Janani Jahanara Imam.

BNP to hold rally in Dhaka on Saturday

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

BNP will hold a rally on Saturday in front of the party's Nayapaltan headquarters demanding the release of its Chairperson Khaleda Zia.

It will also hold rallies in cities and districts across the country on July 1 and 3 respectively to press home the same demand.

Party's Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir announced the programme after holding the party's joint meeting with the front and associate bodies at the party's central office yesterday.

"Khaleda Zia is seriously ill and her life is at risk. But she was denied better treatment showing legal excuses. That's why we announced protest programmes," the BNP secretary general said.

Khaleda Zia is undergoing treatment at the capital's Evercare Hospital since Friday. A pacemaker was implanted in her chest.

Earlier, when Khaleda went to Evercare Hospital on May 1 for a regular health check-up, doctors treated her at the CCU for two days.

The former prime minister, 79, has long battled various ailments, including liver cirrhosis, arthritis, diabetes, and issues related to the kidney, lung, heart, and eyes.

Since her conditional release from prison in 2020, the BNP chairperson has been receiving medical care repeatedly at the hospital under the supervision of a medical board headed by cardiologist Prof Shahabuddin Talukder.

'Forced into sex work'

Eight members of online racket held

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Criminal Investigation Department busted an online sex trade ring led by two medical students who forced women into prostitution under the guise of offering them lucrative jobs, modelling opportunities, and talent-hunting.

The victims, including underage girls, were tricked and coerced into taking inappropriate pictures and videos, which were then shared on social media.

As such, the gang was blackmailing hundreds of young women to participate in explicit activities, CID Chief Mohammad Ali Mia said during a press briefing at the CID Headquarters yesterday.

CID arrested eight individuals in this connection, including the two medical students, from Jashore, Satkhira, Chandpur, and the capital on Tuesday.

The arrestees are -- Mehdi Hasan, 25, a student of International Medical College; his cousin and main cohort, Sheikh Zahid bin Sujan, 26, a student of Ibn Sina Medical College; Zahid Hasan Kankan, 28; Tanveer Ahmed Deepto, 26; Syed Hasibur Rahman, 27; Sadat Al Muiz, 29; Sushmita Akhter Poppy, 27; and Naina Islam, 24.

They have earned crores of taka in the last seven years by creating adult content and providing related services on Telegram, WhatsApp, and Messenger, said the CID chief.

Initially, the racket advertised jobs through Facebook and other social media, posing as modelling agents or organising "talent hunt" competitions.

Those who responded were added to different Telegram groups. The gang then developed relationships with these women and coerced them into taking inappropriate photos, claiming that these were needed for foreign buyers.

Under the threat of these images being leaked, the women were forced to participate in explicit video calls and eventually coerced into sexual services, the CID said.

The gang members used their illegal earnings to purchase significant amounts of land and build luxurious houses in Jashore, Satkhira, Khulna, and Dhaka.

Additionally, substantial amounts of money were found in the bank accounts of their relatives, the CID chief said.

They used hundreds of mobile SIM cards, none of which were registered under their real national IDs. The gang used Telegram premium accounts and various paid cloud services for content sharing and subscriptions.

The CID seized 12 mobile phones, 20 SIM cards, one laptop, ATM cards, and chequebooks from various banks.

Around one lakh pictures and 20,000 videos were found on mobile phones and laptops of the accused.

A case was filed against the arrestees with Paltan Police Station.

CONFLICT IN MYANMAR

Blasts heard across Teknaf border

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Cox's Bazar

The sound of sporadic mortar shell explosions across the border in Rakhine State of Myanmar has been heard in Teknaf and neighbouring areas in Cox's Bazar since Tuesday afternoon.

Due to this, locals have become wary in the upazila, including the areas along the Naf river.

The fighting between the Myanmar Junta and rebel Arakan Army has intensified in recent times, prompting many Rohingyas in Rakhine State to leave their homes behind to look for safety in and around Maungdaw township, said Rohingya leaders living in Cox's Bazar camps.

Many Rohingyas have gathered along the Naf river, trying to flee into Bangladesh, said border sources.

However, Border Guard Bangladesh personnel are on high alert to prevent any intrusion.

BGB men are patrolling different areas, including Chowdhurypara Transit Ghat in Teknaf town, Nightong Para, Keruntali, and Baraitili, said locals.

No one is being allowed near the border areas, they added.

Around five lakh Rohingyas live in Maungdaw township in Myanmar, in close vicinity of the warzone.

Increase agriculture budget, subsidies

Economists urge govt

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Economists have called on the government to increase subsidies and budget allocations to improve farmers' livelihoods in the proposed budget for the 2024-25 fiscal year.

The new budget has reduced subsidies by Tk 272 crore compared to the current fiscal year, they said during an event.

"Around 40 percent of the workers are engaged in the agriculture sector, yet the new budget gives it little attention. The prices of agricultural products and machinery have also risen due to the higher dollar rate," said Narayan Chandra Sinha, associate professor at Dhaka School of Economics.

"In this situation, without increased budget and subsidies, how can farmers boost their production?" he asked

A group of teachers and economists discussed these issues at the event organised by the Dhaka School of Economics in the capital yesterday.

Sinha also said, "In the current global situation, every country should prioritise increasing internal production."

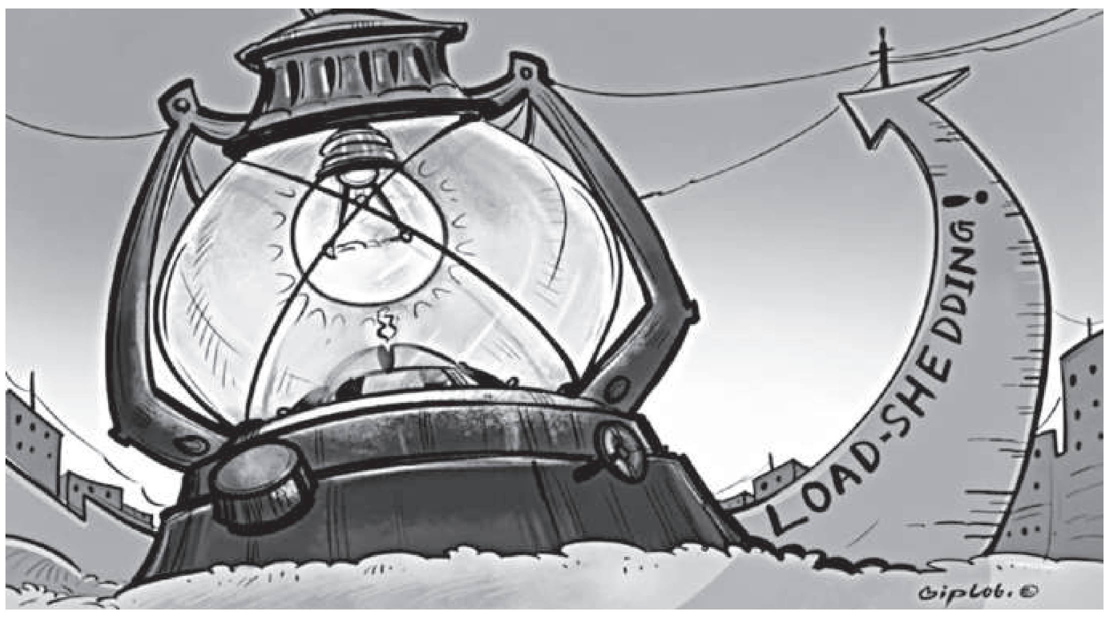
Port city grapples with frequent power cuts



ARUN BIKASH DEY

Shuvechha Ghosh, a resident of Askar Dighir Par area in Chattogram city, was finding it hard to put her toddler to sleep on Tuesday night, amid severe heat alongside frequent power cuts.

"Power cuts occurred a total of eight times today, including four times since the evening. This situation has been going on over the last one week. It has become very difficult for us to stay inside in this heat with power outages occurring so many times daily. My father-in-law and my son couldn't sleep the whole night due to discomfort," she said.

Like her, many residents in the port city, including in Askar Dighir Par, Panchlaish, Bakalia, Chawk Bazar, Halishahar, Bahaddarhat, Chandgaon, Agrabad, Pahartoli, Muradpur, Katalganj, Sholoshahar, Mehedibagh, Bibir Hat and Dampara areas, have been suffering due to frequent load shedding, occurring as many as 12 times a day in some areas.

The highest and lowest temperatures recorded in the port city were 33.1 degrees Celsius and 26.4 degrees Celsius on Tuesday, said Mahmudul Alam, officer of Chattogram Met Office.

Abdul Aziz of Panchlaish area said, "Such frequent power cuts are somehow tolerable during daytime, but at night it is unbearable. We could not sleep last night due to this amid the heat."

The officials of Power Development Board, Chattogram said they were compelled to go for load shedding due to a big discrepancy between the local demand for power and its supply.

> Chattogram city has a daily demand for around 1,200 MW in peak hours and around 1,100 MW in off-peak hours during summer. It gets only 900-1,000 MW power from the national grid on average.

"Chattogram city has a daily demand for around 1,200 MW in peak hours and around 1,100 MW in off-peak hours during summer. It gets only 900-1,000 MW power from the national grid on average. As such, there is no alternative to load shedding in the present scenario," said Akbar Hossain, assistant director of PDB, Chattogram.

According to PDB sources, the power stations in the greater Chattogram region generate more power compared to the demand.

On Tuesday, the 29 units of 22 power stations in the region produced 2,202 MW power, against a demand for 1,175 MW at 11:00am and 1,217 MW at 7:00pm in the port city.

However, the supply to the port city was 900 MW at 11:00am and 1,084 MW at 7:00pm.

As such, frequent load shedding happened every now and then across the city, causing sufferings to the city dwellers.

Asked, Humayun Kabir, chief engineer of PDB, Chattogram, said the power supply is controlled centrally through the national grid and they had nothing to do with it.

"We have to manage the distribution of power with what we get from the national grid. Due to the discrepancy between demand and supply, load shedding becomes unavoidable," he added.

Contacted, SM Nazer Hossain, central vice president of Consumers' Association of Bangladesh, said the government should set a criterion for distribution of power according to priority.

ATTACK ON MINORITIES

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

At least 10 people from the Hindu community died and 862 were injured in 3,710 incidents of violence against the country's Hindu community between January 2013 and September 2021, said a recent report of Bangladesh Peace Observatory.

The religious minorities have been facing physical, non-physical and gender-based violence, it said, adding that around 2 percent of the incidents are of gender-based violence.

Land grabbing continued to be a threat to religious minority groups during this time, irrespective of the political party in power, the report said.

Citing rights body Ain o Salish Kendra, the report mentioned that at least 26 incidents of land grabbing took place between 2013 and 2021.

As per the report, almost 70 percent of incidents of violence ensued in connection with

AUSTRALIA
A desired destination for higher education

NAFISA KHAN

Australia has become a popular destination for international students aiming to pursue higher education abroad. It is home to some of the most student-friendly cities in the world. According to the Australian Government's Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade, over 14,000 Bangladeshi students enrolled to study in Australia in 2023 alone - a 70 percent increase from the previous year and the highest number on record, taking 13th place in student numbers.

More than half a million international students from 192 countries choose to study in Australia for its quality education. Australian universities offer numerous scholarships to support these students. For example, Charles Sturt University offers attractive scholarship opportunities for international students. Each applicant is granted with 10 percent international student support scholarship and there is also a 25 percent international student merit scholarship available.

The Australian Government has a large scholarship programme for international students and invests some AUD 200 million per year in programmes at universities and other tertiary institutions around the country. Among Australia Awards Scholarships alumni surveyed in Bangladesh, 97 percent reported that the skills and knowledge developed through their scholarship would enable them to contribute to the development of Bangladesh. During 2023, a total of 72 Australia Awards Scholarship recipients from Bangladesh (36 women, 36 men) studied at master's degree level at Australia's world-class universities, including three people with disability. One of the most popular scholarships is the Australia Awards Scholarship, which is funded by the Australian government and provides full tuition fees, living expenses, and other allowances to recipients from eligible countries in Asia, the Pacific, the Middle East, and Africa.

Another notable scholarship is the Destination Australia Scholarship, which provides financial support to both domestic and international students studying in regional Australia. Other scholarships available to international students in Australia include the Endeavour Scholarships and Fellowships, which provide funding for research or professional development in a range of fields, with business management and information technology being the most preferred subjects.

The country offers three intakes per year: February, July, and November, each with unique benefits and limitations. The major intakes in Australia are in February, followed by July, and finally, November.

The initial step to applying would be shortlisting universities based on the subjects one might want to pursue. Business and Information Technology are currently among the most preferred subjects for international students. Sydney and Melbourne are the popular destinations for Bangladeshi students to pursue their higher studies.

While selecting universities, it is crucial to consider their employment prospects. Among the leading Australian universities Charles Sturt University is considered one of the best for graduate employment. Around 90 percent of its undergraduates secure full-time jobs within four months of graduating. Moreover, the average earning of Charles Sturt University graduates is AUD 64,100 per year.

An aspiring admission seeker should prepare a statement of purpose, letters of recommendation, and academic transcripts as per the requirement of the specific university, standardised test scores (GRE, GMAT, SAT if necessary) and proof of English proficiency.

The new migration policy of Australia has renewed visa policies to increase the minimum score requirements and the score requirement for a student visa from 5.5 to 6.0. Highlighting the interests and relevant experiences in the required essays can complement previous academic performance and increase one's chances of getting into their desired programmes.

Once accepted, students should start preparing the necessary documents for their visa application. To start the application, one needs to provide the letter of offer and confirmation of enrolment they received from the university upon acceptance. Genuine Student requirement consists of an array of information, including the details of a student's current circumstances, ties to family, community, employment and economic circumstances, reasons behind applying to Australian universities, history of study in Australia (if any) and other relevant information for screening.

To meet the requirements for a student visa, one must provide proof of financial savings required to cover the costs and expenses associated. International student visa applicants must provide proof of at least AUD 29,710. International students also need to have Overseas Student Health Cover (OSHC) for the duration of their stay. They may also need to undergo a health examination to meet the student visa health requirement. There are also certain character requirements that an international student must meet before coming to study in Australia. In some cases, a student may also need to provide a police background check.

After preparing these documents, a student needs to open an ImmiAccount. The best part of this seemingly complicated process is that a student can also take a professional guidance and advice from any registered expert under any particular university.

The two things international students need the most are information and research. If you are armed with these two, you are ready to dive into this new exciting chapter of studying in Australia.

Russia starts trial for WSJ reporter

REUTERS, Yekaterinburg

A shaven-headed Evan Gershkovich went on trial behind closed doors yesterday in a Russian court where the US journalist is facing accusations of espionage.

Prosecutors say the Wall Street Journal (WSJ) reporter gathered secret information on the orders of the US Central Intelligence Agency about a company that manufactures tanks for Russia's war in Ukraine. If convicted, he faces a sentence of up to 20 years.

Gershkovich, his newspaper and the US government all reject the allegations and say that he was just doing his job as a reporter accredited by Russia's Foreign Ministry to work there.

"His case is not about evidence, procedural norms, or the rule of law. It is about the Kremlin using American citizens to achieve its political objectives," the US embassy in Moscow said in a statement, calling for Gershkovich's immediate release.

US seeks deeper ties with Maldives

Blinken tells his Maldivian counterpart

REUTERS, Washington

US Secretary of State Antony Blinken met with his counterpart from the Maldives on Tuesday and said Washington sought a deeper partnership with the Indian Ocean island state and stood with it in ensuring a free-and-open Indo-Pacific region and in dealing with climate change.

Maldives Foreign Minister Moosa Zameer's Washington visit comes two months after the party of President Mohamed Muizzu won a landslide in elections. Muizzu has pivoted ties towards China and away from India, a key US regional partner in standing up to China in the Indo-Pacific.

The US opened an embassy in Male in 2023 to boost engagement with the low-lying archipelago of about half a million people in the face of China's efforts to spread its regional influence.

After the April election, Washington said ties were being strengthened in areas including economic development, education, security cooperation, and climate-crisis response.

"For us, the Maldives is an important partner, and we want to make sure that we're a good partner to the Maldives," Blinken told Zameer. "We stand together in working to make sure that we have a free and open Indo-Pacific region," he said.

PROTESTS IN KENYA

President backs down on tax rises

REUTERS, Nairobi

Kenya's president yesterday withdrew planned tax rises, bowing to pressure from protesters who had stormed parliament, launched demonstrations across the country and threatened more action this week.

William Ruto said he would not sign a finance bill including the hikes a day after violent clashes between police and protesters at the assembly and nationwide left at least 23 people dead and scores wounded, according to medics.

"Listening keenly to the people of Kenya who have said loudly that they want nothing to do with this finance bill 2024, I concede. And therefore, I will not sign the 2024 finance bill, and it shall subsequently be withdrawn," he said in a televised address.

'There are no safe centimetres left in Gaza'

UN aid worker narrates trauma of desperate civilians

AFP, Geneva

A UN humanitarian worker described the suffering she witnessed first-hand in Gaza, where she saw children mutilated and families bombed out of their homes, in an emotional testimony Tuesday.

Speaking to journalists in Geneva following a three-month stint in the territory, Yasmina Guerda of the UN humanitarian agency OCHA described the desperation from the viewpoint of civilians under the Israeli military's assault.

"You have 10-15 minutes to evacuate your building because it's going to be bombed. Your little kids are sleeping... You wake them up," she said. "You take one last look at your room and say a permanent goodbye, because you know it will be dust."

As horrifying as that sounds, she stressed that this is the "best-case scenario", since many others are not warned before an attack.

Guerda met people whose homes were destroyed by Israel's operation in the Nuseirat refugee camp to secure the release of four hostages earlier this month. Gaza's health ministry said at least 274 Palestinians were killed during the operation.

The next day at a hospital, Guerda met children who lost limbs in the attack. "Many of whom reminded me of my own two little toddlers. They were staring into the void, too shell-shocked to produce a sound or a tear," she said.

For Guerda, there are no "living conditions" there. "What they have... are survival conditions, and barely. They are holding on by a thread."

She said aid workers were trying to "quantify the suffering with figures", looking at the total number of displaced people, the litres of water they get per day, or the truckloads of aid that make it across the border.

"But it doesn't matter," she said. "Those numbers, they're never near enough ... (for) a population that has lost nearly everything."
The fighting has displaced much of Gaza's 2.4 million population. "There are no safe centimetres left in Gaza," Guerda added.

Heavy rains in Nepal kill 20 amid landslides

REUTERS, Kathmandu

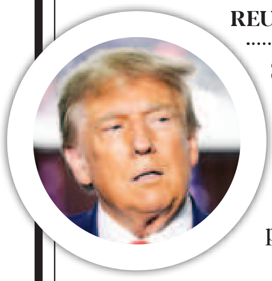
Heavy rainfall triggered landslides and flash floods in Nepal, killing at least 11 people, with another nine killed by lightning strikes over the past two days, officials said yesterday.

Landslides swept away three houses overnight in Lamjung district, about 125 km (80 miles) west of Kathmandu, killing four people including two children, district administrator Buddha Bahadur Gurung said.

In Morang district about 500 km southeast of the Nepali capital, flooding has taken the lives of four people since Tuesday, district official Tek Kumar Regmi said.

Trump policies will fuel inflation

Say 16 Nobel Prize-winning economists



REUTERS

Sixteen Nobel prize-winning economists signed a letter on Tuesday warning that the US and world economy will suffer if Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump wins the US presidential election in November.

The jointly signed letter says the economic agenda of US President Joe Biden, a Democrat, is "vastly superior" to Trump's, the former Republican president seeking a second term. The economists say Trump's economic plans would reignite inflation, in part because of his pledge to impose stiffer tariffs on Chinese imports, which they say will hike prices on many goods bought by US consumers.

"While each of us has different views on the particulars of various economic policies, we all agree that Joe Biden's economic agenda is vastly superior to Donald Trump," the economists state in their letter.

maiden wins in T20Is against both sides -- from the competition this time to reach their first-ever semifinal in an ICC event. The Afghans thrashed the Black Caps by 84 runs in the group-stage and then blew the Super Eight Group 2 wide open with a stunning win over Australia.

An inspired all-round display from Rashid sealed a thrilling win over Bangladesh in Antigua on Tuesday and cemented Afghanistan's spot in the semifinals.

"I think the semifinal is going to be a massive, massive inspiration for the youngsters back home in Afghanistan," said skipper Rashid. "It's an unbelievable feeling. We are capable -- but as long we keep the things very simple."

In the second semifinal, India, who have also won all their matches barring a washout against Ireland, look the part to lift the trophy owing to a formidable run much like their lead-up to the 2023 ODI World Cup final but will take on defending champions England who knocked the Men in Blue out of the semis in the 2022 edition of the tournament.

The two teams have had contrasting pathways to the final four as while India cruised, England laboured through the group stage battling fears of early elimination and finally hit top gear in the Super Eight when they thrashed West Indies. But they were dealt a blow in a narrow defeat at the hands of South Africa.

With Australia out of the picture, if India had to choose between South Africa or England, they probably would've wanted to face Jos Buttler's side who have so far blown hot and cold.

husband would one day be pardoned.

Australia Prime Minister Anthony Albanese, who has lobbied for years to free Assange, said he had spoken to him by phone after his plane landed.

Assange's arrival ends a saga in which he spent more than five years in a British high-security jail and seven years in asylum at the Ecuadorean embassy in London battling extradition to Sweden on sexual assault allegations and to the US, where he faced 18 criminal charges.

Those charges stemmed from WikiLeaks' release in 2010 of hundreds of thousands of classified US military documents on Washington's wars in Afghanistan and Iraq - one of the largest breaches of secret information in US history.

During a three-hour hearing held earlier in the US territory of Saipan, Assange pleaded guilty to one criminal count of conspiring to obtain and disclose classified national defence documents but said he had believed the US Constitution's First Amendment, which protects free speech, shielded his activities.

"Working as a journalist I encouraged my source to provide information that was said to be classified in order to publish that information," he told the court.

"I believed the First Amendment protected that activity but I accept that it was...a violation of the espionage statute."

Chief US District Judge Ramona V Manglona accepted his guilty plea, noting that the US government indicated there was no personal victim from Assange's actions.

She wished Assange, who turns 53 on July 3, an early happy birthday as she released him due to time already served in a British jail.

While the US government viewed Assange as reckless for putting its agents at risk of harm by publishing their names, his supporters hailed him as a hero for promoting free speech and exposing war crimes.

Assange's British and Australian lawyer Jennifer Robinson thanked the Australian government for securing Assange's release. His father, John Shipton, told Reuters he was relieved.

Assange had agreed to plead guilty to a single criminal count, according to filings in the US District Court for the Northern Mariana Islands.

The US territory in the western Pacific was chosen due to his opposition to travelling to the mainland US and for its proximity to Australia, prosecutors said.

Politicians in Australia who had campaigned for his release raised concern about the guilty plea on US soil, saying he was a journalist who had been convicted for doing his job.

"We would like the house to function often and well. It is very important that the voice of the opposition is allowed to be represented in this house," Rahul told veteran BJP lawmaker Om Birla, the Speaker in the previous parliament, who was reelected yesterday to the post.

Modi and Rahul exchanged a polite handshake following the election of Birla as the Lok Sabha Speaker.

The two leaders, along with Union minister Kiren Rijiju, accompanied Birla to the Speaker's chair after a motion moved by Prime Minister was adopted through voice votes, reports TNN.

Responding to a question from independent MP Md Abdullah, the premier said the government has primarily decided to adopt a policy to recycle e-waste.

"The data collection process [in this regard] is going on and [the policy] will be finalised after taking opinions from the stakeholders."

Plants will be built for recycling e-waste, she added.

Replying to a question from AL MP Ali Azam from Bhola-2, Hasina said that 33,50,274 specially abled people have been identified and given registration and identity cards (Golden Citizen Card). Among them, 13,12,594 are women.

Responding to another query from Farida Yasmin, the PM said that Tk 45.23 crore from the Journalist Welfare Trust has been distributed among 13,582 journalists and journalist families as welfare grants and financial assistance during the Covid-19 pandemic.

A moronic end to a daring jailbreak

Speaking to The Daily Star, an officer involved in the search and arrest, said the four managed to make a hole in the ceiling using only a small screwdriver and an iron-sheet scrap for 20 days.

During this time, they did not allow any cleaners into their cell, he said, adding that police found the screwdriver and the iron scrap hidden about their person.

About how they may have gotten the tools, Additional Inspector General (Prisons) Col Sheikh Sujaur Rahman, who visited Bogura Jail yesterday, said, "We're currently investigating all the jail personnel and officers here to know if they had any role to play. Once the probe is complete, appropriate actions will be taken."

Bogura SP Sudip Kumar Chakraborty yesterday told reporters that the four inmates managed to escape at 3:05am. "The jail authorities informed us at 3:56am.

"After getting the information, all police outposts and patrol teams were put on high alert, and police managed to find and arrest them from the Chashi Bazar area around 4:30am."

Sub-inspector Khorshed Alam, who led the search, said, "They were planning to cross the Korotoa river through Chelopara bridge."

However, before police could reach the spot, the four convicts were initially apprehended by a group of young men.

Describing the incident, Parimal Chandra Das, councillor of Bogura Municipality Ward-6, told The Daily Star, "Around 3:50am, a group of boys were sitting on the rail tracks near Chashi Bazar, as there was no electricity in their homes and it was very hot last night. Suddenly, they noticed a pack of dogs surrounding four individuals. The boys – Saeed, Rabbi, Kabya, Dukhu, Nayan, Tinku and Bappi – suspected that the four men were criminals and apprehended them then and there. They then called SI Khorshed Alam and informed him."

Police sources said Nazrul Islam and Amir Hamza were sentenced to death on February 16, 2021. Farid Sheikh received the death penalty on July 10, 2023, and Zakaria, son of Kahaloo upazila mayor and upazila BNP's acting president Abdul Mannan, was sentenced to death on January 15, 2017.

Combined, the four had five murder cases and seven other cases on various charges against them, filed at different times in separate districts. They were also brought to Bogura jail at different times, but sent to the condemned cell together on June 1.

Bogura Deputy Commissioner Saiful Islam told The Daily Star that a six-member probe committee, led by the additional district magistrate, has been formed. He also requested the jail authorities to place six more security posts in front of and behind the jail building.

About the jail's vulnerable security system, Additional IG Col Sujaur told this correspondent, "The jail was built in 1833. The security came into question only today [yesterday] after the incident. We will check the system."

Speaking to The Daily Star, Inspector (Investigation) Shahinuzzaman Shaheen, of Bogura Sadar Police Station, said a case was filed yesterday afternoon against the four for escaping.

Bogura Sadar Outpost Inspector Sujan Mia, the investigating officer of the case, told this correspondent that the four were produced before a court and then sent back to jail. "We're thinking about whether they can legally be remanded as they are already death row convicts."

Meanwhile, Bogura jail authorities last night took action against eight prison guards who were on duty during the incident.

Speaking to The Daily Star, Jail Super Anwar Hossain said, "Three prison guards were dismissed while a departmental case was recommended against three others and a show-cause notice was issued to the other two. Further measures will be taken according to the recommendations from higher authorities."

He, however, did not name the guards.

The price we pay for processed rice

Govt must formulate clear guidelines on rice processing

It is a truth universally acknowledged by now that laws and directives in Bangladesh are meant to be broken. It is no surprise, then, that millers across the country have been defying a 2023 ban on polishing rice and selling it under fake names, such as the popular variety "miniket." This processed rice comes at a steep cost: compromised nutrition, wasted resources, and potentially inflated prices.

The allure of miniket lies in its polished appearance, a characteristic achieved by removing layers of the rice bran, which is rich in essential nutrients: iron, calcium, and B vitamins. Studies reveal that excessive polishing strips rice of up to 70 percent of its zinc content, a crucial mineral for immune function and growth. Furthermore, this excessive polishing leads to significant rice wastage. Experts estimate that 16 lakh tonnes of rice are lost annually due to over-polishing. This not only impacts national food security, but also contributes to potentially higher rice prices for consumers. Alarmingly, as per a recent study by the International Food Policy Research Institute (IFPRI), over 30 percent of the rice sold in city markets in Bangladesh is refined into a different shape, size, and colour and branded as miniket.

While we laud the government for recognising the harmful impact of over-processing rice, we are at a loss to understand why the ban is yet to be implemented. There are as many as 4,000 automatic rice mills across the country, according to Bangladesh Auto Major and Husking Mills Owners Association (BAMHMOA). Millers say there are no clear guidelines on what an acceptable limit of processing rice is, while food controllers, who should be implementing the ban, say they have received no instructions from the government or high officials on what steps to take. This inaction, which not only undermines the law but also jeopardises the health of Bangladeshi citizens, is simply unacceptable.

The solution lies in swift and decisive action. The government must expedite the issuing of clear rice polishing guidelines, establishing acceptable limits, and outlining enforcement mechanisms. Rice millers also have a role to play here. They must embrace responsible practices and prioritise the well-being of the nation over short-term profit gains. Additionally, public awareness campaigns are crucial to educate consumers about the misleading nature of the miniket label. It is truly mind-boggling that we are allowing our staple to be stripped of its nutrients under the ignorant belief that white, processed rice is better than nutrient-filled coarse rice, and even paying a steeper price for it!

Don't ignore startups in the budget

They need govt support now more than ever

When the country is struggling with a number of economic challenges, it is not unexpected that the government would propose conservative measures in the new budget to stem the outflow of money. However, it does not explain why such measures would be proposed for startups—a key sector that can give our economy the push it so desperately needs right now. According to a report in this daily, the government not only has no plan to offer relief to the startups in these trying times, but it actually plans to discontinue the existing benefits.

According to the report, startups in Bangladesh have already been feeling the bite of a declining fund flow. Investment plummeted 70 percent quarter-on-quarter in January-March this year due to the ongoing global funding downturn; compared to the same period last year, the decline is even steeper at 82 percent. Under the circumstances, the government is looking to suspend the existing benefits and impose more duties. The finance minister recently announced that investors and developers at the hi-tech parks would no longer be given the 10-year tax waiver on their earnings come the next fiscal year. Moreover, in government hi-tech parks, a one percent duty will be imposed on capital machinery imports. Meanwhile, the government has not addressed any of the concerns and demands raised by the startups. For example, the demand from e-commerce and logistic startups for the withdrawal of the 15 percent VAT on parcel delivery and five percent VAT on online product sales have not been met in the proposed budget.

These decisions are truly puzzling, especially when we consider the consequences. Industry insiders said withdrawal of the tax waiver would surely hinder the growth of the hi-tech parks as investors—particularly the foreign ones—may get discouraged when they are no longer allowed the benefits. And imposing additional duties will push the cost of doing business upward for the startups. We urge the government to see reason and facilitate the growth of startups, instead of stunting it by employing growth-averse policies. Given the current fund crunch, it could arrange for soft loans on easy terms for startups. It must also come up with incentives that would draw in more investors for the sector. In order to create a smart economy and realise the vision of a smart country, we must smoothen the way for the startups, not create obstacles for them.

TEESTA MANAGEMENT PROJECT

New challenges before Bangladesh

KALLOL MUSTAFA

Discussing the Teesta water-sharing agreement has become part of the routine in prime-minister-level meetings between Bangladesh and India. In each meeting, the prime minister of Bangladesh would request the Indian prime minister for the conclusion of the interim agreement on sharing the water of Teesta, as agreed upon by both governments in January 2011. And then the Indian PM would reiterate that his government was working with all the stakeholders in India for an early conclusion of the agreement. This kind of request and assurance can be found in all the recent joint statements, like the joint statements issued during the Bangladesh PM's visit to India in October 2019, and the Indian PM's visit to Bangladesh in March 2021.

However, an exception can be seen in the statement of September 2022, during the Bangladesh PM's visit to India, where she raised the issue of signing the draft Teesta agreement prepared in 2011. That time, there was no assurance from the Indian PM in the statement. Subsequently, neither of the prime ministers mentioned the Teesta water-sharing agreement in the joint statement titled "India-Bangladesh Shared Vision for Future," issued after the latest visit of Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina to India on June 21-22 this year.

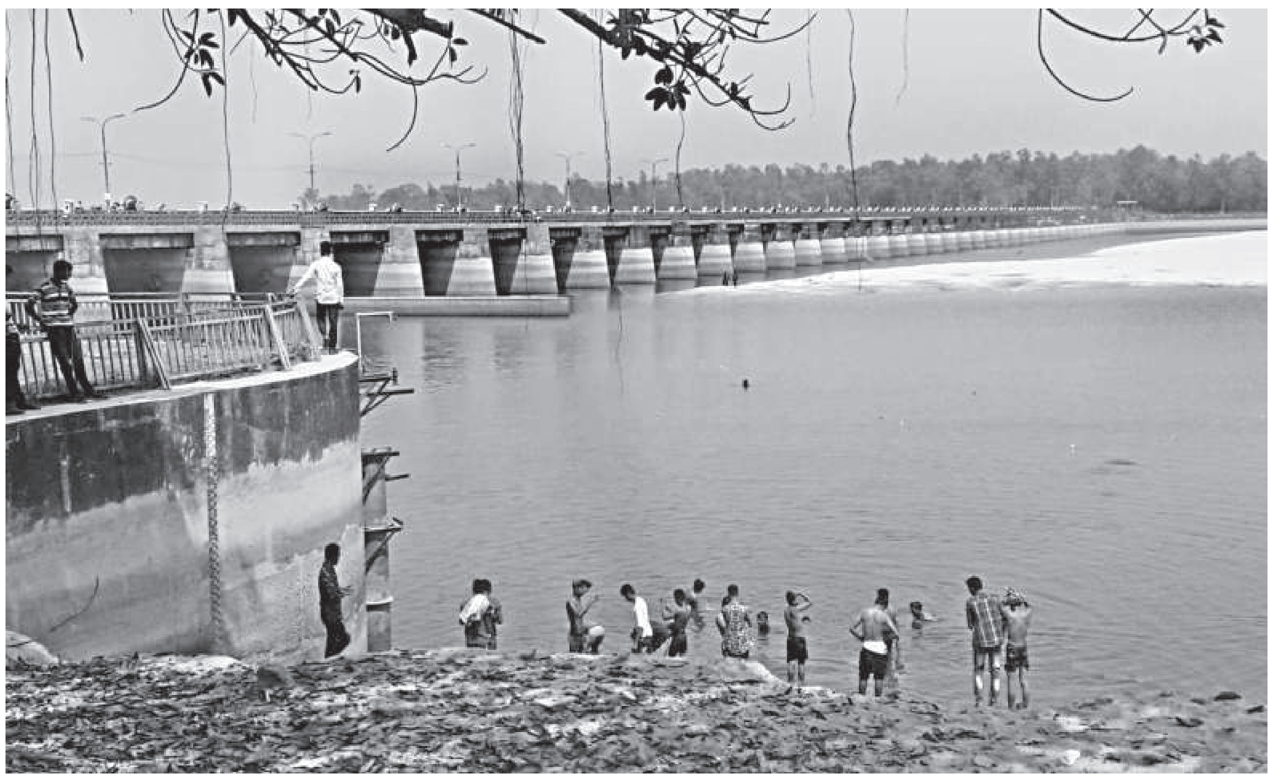
Instead, it was announced that an Indian technical team would soon visit Bangladesh to discuss "conservation and management of the Teesta River inside Bangladesh." What India meant by "conservation and management" was elaborated on by Indian Foreign Secretary Vinay Mohan Kwatra.

"It is less about the water-sharing part, but more about management of water flow within the Teesta River," explained Secretary Kwatra, in a special media briefing.

This omission of the Teesta water-sharing agreement from the joint statement is a significant change. Does this mean that the Teesta water-sharing agenda has been abandoned?

The discussion on the Teesta River Comprehensive Management and Restoration Project (TRCMRP) has been going on in Bangladesh for quite a few years. This megaproject to restore the Teesta is supposed to be implemented with financial and technical assistance from China. Since 2019, China and Bangladesh have been discussing this matter. Now it appears that India has also become seriously interested in the project.

This is because the region where the TRCMRP is to be implemented is deemed strategically important by India. According to a report in the Hindustan Times on June 22, besides worries about water flow data and other information on the cross-border river being scooped up by China, India has concerns about Chinese personnel establishing a presence at the project site located near the "chicken's neck"—the narrow strip of land connecting the northeast of India to the rest of the country.



Any discussion on the Teesta management should involve a water-sharing agreement with India. FILE PHOTO: STAR

But will the Teesta crisis be solved by conserving and managing the water of the Teesta inside Bangladesh? The main problem of the Teesta River is India's unilateral withdrawal of water from the river by building barrages upstream and the creation of obstacles in river flow by constructing infrastructure projects, including hydroelectric power plants. So, what will be the procedure of involving India, the country which is responsible for drying up the Teesta River and depriving Bangladesh of the fair share of the river's water, in the management of the river inside Bangladesh? Accepting India's technical assistance in an attempt to revitalise the Teesta in its current state, without entering a water-sharing agreement, could mean accepting unilateral withdrawal of water from the Teesta by India.

Another question is, no matter which country implements the TRCMRP project, is it really possible to solve the Teesta water crisis by implementing it inside Bangladesh, without removing all the obstacles to the water flow upstream in India? According to a demonstration by Power China, the project involves reducing the width and increasing the depth of the river by dredging and building embankment on both sides, recovering 170 square kilometres of land on both sides of the river by filling with dredging soil and constructing housing and industrial parks, among other things, on that land. At present, the maximum width of the Teesta River is 5.1 kilometres and the average width is 3.1 kilometres. Under the TRCMRP project, this width will be reduced to 0.7 kilometre to one kilometre, which will cause a serious adverse effect on the velocity and water carrying capacity of the river.

According to a study by Dr Md Khalequzzaman, professor of geology and environmental sciences at the Commonwealth University of Pennsylvania in the US, due to the reduced cross-section of the river, the velocity of the river will increase. As a result, when the flow of water increases greatly during the rainy season, the erosion tendency of the two banks will increase. Due to the embankments on both sides of the river, most of the tributaries and distributaries of the Teesta will likely be cut off from the main river. For this reason, during flooding, the flow in the river will not spread to its tributaries and distributaries, causing the floods to intensify. Even the reclaimed land will be in the active flood-flow zone of the Teesta and will likely be exposed to flood damage.

But after all these, the proposed TRCMRP will not be able to solve the water scarcity issue because without increased water flow from upstream, no additional water can be generated by dredging the river to greater depths. The water that might become available in the river after deepening the riverbed would be shallow groundwater. Using this water for irrigation will lower the groundwater table in the catchment area, reducing the availability of potable water and irrigation water drawn through shallow tube wells.

So, no matter what activities are done under the Teesta megaproject, if Bangladesh cannot get an equitable share of the water from upstream, the Teesta crisis will not be resolved. Even if the Teesta water-sharing agreement is signed between Bangladesh and India over sharing water only at Gajoldoba point, without taking into account the impact of upstream projects in Sikkim, the crisis will not be solved.

Any discussion on the Teesta management should involve a water-sharing agreement with India which will ensure equitable water flow, enforce restrictions on unilateral changes in upstream river flow, keep provisions for mandatory exchange of data regarding any upstream project, and have the option for third-party dispute settlement. Otherwise, Bangladesh will continue to suffer for the Teesta for decades to come.

MICRO-, SMALL AND MEDIUM-SIZED ENTERPRISES DAY

For shared prosperity, formalisation of work is vital

Gunjan Dallakoti
is small and medium enterprise development specialist at the International Labour Organization (ILO).

GUNJAN DALLAKOTI

Md Bilal Hussain, 73, learnt weaving from his father. Born in a family of weavers, he believes weaving is in his blood, inherited from his ancestors. His last employer confirms that Bilal is the best weaver he ever had. He is excellent at weaving silk sarees and salwar kameez.

Bilal worked for 57 years—42 with his last employer and 15 years with another. At retirement, he earned Tk 6,200 a month on average, being paid Tk 1,400 for each piece of clothing he made. Bilal retired in November 2023. His failing eyesight and aching body compelled him to stop although he did not want to. His low earnings never permitted him to save anything. He is not getting any retirement benefits as his employment was informal. Devoid of benefits, he is now at the mercy of his sons for the rest of his life and believes the Almighty will provide for him.

Ferdous Munsi, the owner (malik) of the small saree-making cottage enterprise where Bilal worked, explained the business. He spends Tk 2,000 on raw materials, mostly imported, for each saree and pays workers like Bilal Tk 1,400 to make the saree. This then retails at Tk 4,000. His gross profit does not even cover the rent of the space and the holding cost of inventory for the off season. He is critically aware of the low wages his workers are getting, but can do nothing about it.

This is the reality in the informal sector. The Bangladesh Labour Force Survey 2022 shows that close to six crore (60 million) people, 84.9 percent of total working population in Bangladesh, are in informal employment. It is noteworthy that out of the total employed women in Bangladesh, 96.6 percent are in informal employment. Similarly, 92.7 percent of youth aged 15-27 years are employed informally. Informal employment can be both in formally registered businesses and in the unregistered ones.

Economists opine that some level of informality is expected in a growing economy like Bangladesh, where an effective business governance system and procedures are yet to be established. There are several reasons for the widespread informality in the country. Studies have suggested that the ineffectiveness of public services like registration, licensing and tax processing of businesses are among the main reasons. On the other hand, lack of clear incentives to formalise, limited understanding of the process of formalisation, and limited employment opportunities are other impediments.

The consequences of the high informality are severe: low tax to GDP ratio, widening inequality, stagnant industrial competitiveness in sectors other than ready-made garment (RMG) and low labour productivity, and low product and service quality. Informality also hinders the potential of the industrial sector to participate and benefit from growing international value chains and export market opportunities. These are extremely critical as Bangladesh prepares to graduate from LDC status and enters the global market on the basis of competitiveness and productivity.

While the prioritisation of formalisation in the Industrial Policy 2023 is a welcome step, there is a dearth of studies on the potential positive impact of formalisation and Bangladesh's capacity to formalise to inform policymaking. Furthering the formalisation agenda is imperative for the country if it is to achieve the ambition of economic diversification and modernisation of the private sector to become competitive globally. The implementation of the policy requires an integrated effort from the whole of the government, the private sector, and workers' organisations. The success of ongoing labour sector and social protection reforms are also key to addressing informality.

The informal sector, which comprises cottage, micro-, small and medium enterprises, not only operates closest to local communities, but plays a crucial role in creating local jobs, especially for women and youth in Bangladesh. As we commemorate the Micro-, Small and Medium-sized Enterprises Day today, we recognise that it is a vital sector at the heart of our societies with tremendous potential to accelerate decent job creation and achievement of the SDG goals.

To fully harness its potential, a transition to formalisation is necessary to ensure that the millions of workers in the sector do not end up like Bilal—destitute after a fully productive working life.

FY2025 budget: Strategic insights on trade policy directions is chairman of the Policy Research Institute of Bangladesh (PRI).

Dr Zaidi Sattar

ZAIDI SATTAR

VISUAL: SHAIKH SULTANA JAHAN BADHON

While fiscal and monetary policy implications of the FY2024-25 budget are easy to untangle, one needs to drill down deeper to decipher the true stance and direction of trade policy, as immersed in the budget.

As a trade economist, a focus on the government's articulation of trade policy under the rubric of annual budgets has been my raison d'etre for a post-budget column for the past several years. This time is no exception. But it took on greater importance this time in light of the fact that the economy is faced with a number of critical challenges that deserve immediate attention. Regrettably, trade policy has often not been on the radar.

It is fair to say that the domestic side of the equation has been adroitly addressed through a combination of fiscal restraint and a constricted fiscal deficit to complement the inflation-reduction stance of the monetary policy already under way. On the external side, restoring stability in the balance of payments was partly addressed in the weeks preceding the budget presentation by moving to a flexible exchange rate regime—the crawling peg—along with a modest depreciation of the taka on top of the massive depreciation already enacted over the previous 18 months. All eyes have been glued to the one salient macroeconomic indicator of external stability: official foreign exchange reserves.

A pivotal step towards stabilising forex reserves was the move by the central bank to launch a regime of exchange rate flexibility (a component of trade policy) shortly before the budget announcement. Technically, Bangladesh has been on a floating exchange rate regime since 2004, when this sort of exchange rate system was officially launched.

A freely floating exchange rate system is the epitome of exchange rate flexibility. If allowed to function, the exchange rate will depreciate when there is an excess demand (via imports) for foreign exchange and will appreciate when there is an excess supply (via exports) of foreign exchange. Thus, this system contains a built-in adjustment process (not instantaneous but over a period) for restoring balance in trade or current account deficits or even the entire balance of payments. Usually, most economies subscribing to the floating exchange rate system adhere to what is called a "managed float." The devil lies in the degree of management of the float. In our case, the managed float became so entrenched over time that the system failed to respond to changes in demand and supply, approaching a fixed exchange rate system around 2020-2022. The exchange rate became significantly overvalued making exports uncompetitive. One indication of this overvaluation was the appreciation of the Real Effective Exchange Rate (REER), a measure of export competitiveness, by over 50 percent compared to 2011.

In FY2022, the dam broke, as it were, and Bangladesh Bank could not avoid letting the exchange rate depreciate a massive 30 percent during 2023, and another six percent in a pre-budget adjustment in May 2024. Such a significant one-time depreciation—rather than gradual depreciation over several years—is disruptive and causes a shock to various parts of the economy. The shock—inflation, depleting forex reserves, import curbs, balance of payments volatility—had to be mollified with bold measures to restore macroeconomic stability. Unfortunately, for the economy, those measures came late in the day, only in the last three to six months, with the finishing touches to be expected from the FY2025 budget. So, it would be fair to commend the budget policymakers, headed by the finance minister, for deftly putting the finishing touches on restoration of macroeconomic stability, both internal and external, in order to move forward on a path of stable and rising growth that was the stock of Bangladesh's economy for three decades.

Yet, in my view, some more proactivity would have been desirable on the trade policy front given that forex reserves had barely stabilised at about three and a half months of import cover whereas the dire need is to restore a comfortable zone for forex reserves at around five or more months of import cover. Aggressive measures are needed to boost reserves by providing impetus for export growth and remittance inflows. This is where trade policy direction becomes vital for providing the right stimulus to exports.

Some more proactivity in the budget would have been desirable on the trade policy front given that forex reserves had barely stabilised at about three and a half months of import cover. Aggressive measures are needed to boost reserves by providing impetus for export growth and remittance inflows. This is where trade policy direction becomes vital for providing the right stimulus to exports.

Already, the first step towards stimulating exports has been taken, with the substantial depreciation of the exchange rate that has pretty much eliminated the past appreciation of REER. But one fundamental policy that favours domestic sales over exports—anti-export bias of tariffs—remained unaddressed, though a rare opportunity was presented by the depreciation-induced tariff spike across the board (36 percent depreciation raised all tariffs by 36 percent). It presented the scope for drastic rationalisation of tariffs without the revenue loss implications that continue to haunt the revenue authority.

The persistence of anti-export bias emerges from the high tariff protection regime intended to prop up domestic import substitution industries (ISIs), which then serves to discourage export activity because they become less profitable relative to domestic sales. There was high expectation that, following so much discussion on the subject over the past year, the budget, which usually lays down the magnitude and direction of tariff adjustments (indicating trade policy direction), would be aggressively moving to purge anti-export bias of tariff protection in a substantial degree. Indeed, there is a hint that this might be in the offing as the finance minister's budget speech highlights the formulation of National Tariff Policy 2023, which, if implemented in whole or in part, could open the doors for export diversification, enhance product competitiveness, and rationalise tariffs for reducing anti-export bias and ensuring balanced development of import substituting industries. As no implementation programme for NTP 2023 was noticeable in the budget speech, perhaps the programme will be undertaken subsequently, as media reports suggest.

If anything, tariff rationalisation was modest as Regulatory Duty (RD) and Supplementary Duty (SD) were withdrawn from 110 tariff lines. The surprising element was the reduction of SD on 172 RMG tariff lines, from 45 percent to 30 percent. Why not completely eliminate SD on RMG imports? Do we really need protective tariff for RMG when we are the second largest apparel exporters in the world? The budget also lays down some feeble tariff rationalisation measures in light of the impending LDC graduation when what was needed was aggressive action. For instance, as 90 percent of SD are applied for protection purposes (higher rates on imports, lower or nil SD on domestic production), this could run afoul of WTO compliance. Though we can hope for some "due restraint" on the part of WTO members following graduation, the prospect of anti-dumping or countervailing duties cannot be ruled out. An opportunity was thus missed to move aggressively on the tariff rationalisation path.

A notable innovation was the promotion of brand Bangladesh through the emphasis on "Made in Bangladesh" strategy for giving stimulus to "domestic industries." What is not clear from the budget is what strand of this strategy the policymakers espouse. There are two strands to this trade policy strategy: (a) MADE IN BANGLADESH, SELL IN BANGLADESH; and (b) MADE IN BANGLADESH, SELL IN THE WORLD MARKET.

My reading of the support measures seems to suggest that the preferred policy is geared to the former dispensation. Although export-oriented sectors are also on the radar, the budget seems to focus on promoting several import substituting industries with protection support—raising output tariffs and lowering input tariffs—in a classic demonstration of raising effective protection and, thereby, discouraging exports of the same products via anti-export incentive bias.

This is where history of trade and development diverges. The first strand of trade policy, by focusing on the domestic market, has never given growth rates of seven to eight percent on a sustained basis anywhere in the world. There is no historical or cross-country evidence of this happening. No matter how large the domestic market is, it is no match to the size and scale of the world market. It is the second strand of trade policy that has the potential to generate seven, eight, nine percent or even higher growth rates by harnessing the demand of the massive global market. China, Vietnam and several other East Asian countries are classic examples of turning around poor economies into high-growth, high-income economies within a few decades. Should Bangladesh not opt for the second orientation of trade policy? Moreover, there is clear evidence that export-oriented industrialisation creates much greater employment than import substituting, domestic market driven industrialisation. In our country, RMG is a case in point.

The budget may not be the place to articulate the entire strategy for trade policy directions as the country moves into the LDC graduation phase of development. This post-budget note is meant to underscore the urgency of the task ahead, lest we reach a cliffhanger on November 24, 2026—the date for graduation out of the LDC status. A crisis always presents opportunities to be seized. In 1990, when the economy faced a macroeconomic and balance-of-payment crisis, the country's policymakers chose to go for radical trade policy reforms, investment liberalisation, and market-oriented reforms. These reforms, though ostensibly incomplete, still gave the impetus for two decades of rapid growth and poverty reduction. Given that the economy is once again faced with heightened degree of macroeconomic and balance-of-payment challenges, and LDC graduation is imminent, one would be looking for another round of structural reforms at least in the long overdue trade and tax policy arenas in order to restore macroeconomic and balance-of-payment stability and resume its long-run rapid growth path.

With regard to a medium-term development strategy, the budget may not be the end game. There are signs of change in trade policy directions, but our hope was for more clarity and aggression in moving forward with change. Maybe that part of the agenda for action has been left for post-budget activities.

It is important to recognise that trade has been the handmaiden of Bangladesh's development. It will remain so for the next decade and beyond. So, adopting the most dynamic trade policy for future progress is a national imperative now.

Assange is free, but justice has not been done

Julian Assange is free. As of this writing, he is en route to Australia from the Northern Mariana Islands, a remote US territory in the western Pacific, after finalising a plea deal with the US government which will see him sentenced to time served in Belmarsh Prison. Importantly, according to experts I've seen commenting on this astonishing new development, it doesn't appear that his plea deal will set any new legal precedents that will be harmful to journalists going forward. Joe Lauria reports the following for Consortium News:

"Bruce Afran, a US constitutional lawyer, told Consortium News that a plea deal does not create a legal precedent. Therefore Assange's deal would not jeopardise journalists in the future of being prosecuted for accepting and publishing classified information from a source because of Assange's agreeing to such a charge."

I've obviously got a lot of big feels about all this, having followed this important case so closely for so long and having put so much work into writing about it. There's so very, very much work to be done in our collective struggle to liberate the world from the talons of the imperial murder machine, but I am overjoyed for Assange and his family, and it feels good to mark a solid win in this fight.

None of this undoes the unforgivable evils the empire inflicted in its persecution of Julian Assange, however, or reverses the worldwide damage that has been done by making a public example of him to show what happens to a journalist who tells inconvenient truths about the world's most powerful government.

So while Assange may be free, we cannot rightly say that justice has been done.

Justice would look like Assange being granted a full and unconditional pardon and receiving millions of dollars in compensation from the US government for the torment they put him through by his imprisonment in Belmarsh beginning in 2019, his de facto imprisonment in the Ecuadorian embassy beginning in 2012, and his jailing and house arrest beginning in 2010.

Justice would look like the US making concrete legal and policy changes guaranteeing that Washington could never again use its globe-spanning power and influence to destroy the life of a foreign journalist for reporting inconvenient facts about it, and issuing a formal apology to Julian Assange and his family.

Justice would look like the arrest and prosecution of the people whose war crimes Assange exposed, and the arrest and prosecution of everyone who helped ruin his life for exposing those crimes. This would include a whole host of government operatives and officials across numerous countries, and multiple US presidents.

Justice would look like a hero's welcome and a hero's honours from Australia upon his arrival, and a serious revision of Canberra's obsequious relationship with Washington.

Justice would look like formal apologies to Assange and his family from the editorial boards of all the mainstream press outlets that manufactured consent for his vicious persecution—including and especially The Guardian—and the complete destruction of the reputations of every unscrupulous "presstitute" who helped smear him over the years.

If these things happened, then we could perhaps argue that justice has been served to some extent. As it stands, all we have is the cessation of one single act of depravity by an empire. We all still live under a globe-spanning power structure which has shown the entire world that it will destroy your life if you expose its criminality, and then stand back and proudly call this justice.

So, I personally think I'm just going to take this one small victory in stride. There is still so much to do, and vanishingly little time to do it.

The fight goes on.

'BEGUM'S BLUNDER' shines in Wilde splendour

The director, however, took some poetic licence to appropriate some of the contextual references. She transforms Lady Windermere's titular fan into a shawl for Begum Mumtaz, a gift from her husband. The change is not superficial; it remains pivotal to the plot of societal intrigue.

SHAMSAD MORTUZA

Begum's Blunder is a clever adaptation of Oscar Wilde's Lady Windermere's Fan. The play transports the Victorian setting to the imaginary Behrampur, the heyday of the Nawabs in India. With Naila Azad Nupur's direction, and Sadaf Saaz working her behind-the-scenes magic as the producer, the production by Kaleidoscope projects lights on the prism of Wilde's 1892 play to find their contemporary refractions and reflections in colonial India.

The play reminds the Dhaka audience that the gossip-mongering Victorian upper class, with their deceitful moral stance, is no different from their own. Human behaviours are uncannily the same across time and space, making Wilde our contemporary. The proximity is further heightened by the choice of location and the ambience created for the staging. The immersive theatrical experience, which was performed at Aloki in the upscale part of town before a select upper-class audience, has a fourth wall effect. The cabaret-style seating at the venue became an extension of the stage where the main action takes place.

The characters join the birthday party of the protagonist, Begum Mumtaz Nizamuddin (i.e., Lady Windermere), through the aisle that divides the audience. The herald announces their names, and the characters enter the stage, interacting with the audience, who, in turn, have become extensions of the attendees. The set design and choreography provide a backdrop against which the drama unfolds. The immediate intimacy between the audience and the characters highlights the central theme of the play: the manipulation of appearances to navigate societal expectations. The plot pivots around a disgraced character, Amirun Nahar Khatun (i.e., Mrs. Erlynne), who is trying to buy her way into her former society through deceptions. Almost all of the characters in the play are unaware of her motives. This irony serves as a piston that propels the narrative story forward.

PHOTOS: SHADAB SHAHROKH HAI

The play more of less retains the original dialogue, with changes primarily in the names of characters and places. It would be almost sacrilegious for any script writer to try to tweak Wilde's texts. Wilde's crunchy dialogues often feel like nuts in a nutrient bar that mixes love with betrayal and righteousness with common sense under the masks we wear in society. Naila Azad was smart to leave Wilde's words alone, as they have the reputation of being an omnibus of quotable quotes. However, the script does use vernacular languages to authenticate its adapted location. The play's seamless transition between Hindi, Bangla, and English serves as a reminder of its adopted location. The inclusion of western songs and classical dance, as well as the use of a digital backdrop, creates a party mood that is in contrast to the storm that the central character is facing, thinking that her husband, Nawab Nizamuddin, is having an affair with an older woman, Amirun.

The director, however, took some poetic licence to appropriate some of the contextual references. She transforms Lady Windermere's titular fan into a shawl for Begum Mumtaz, a gift from her husband. The change is not superficial; it remains pivotal to the plot of societal intrigue. Visually, as a stage prop, the shawl is much more effective for the characters dressed in traditional Indian dresses. It is a deft nod to local customs and aesthetics.

The satirical comedy has many private jokes. One such joke involves the characterisation of Nawab Mahiuddin Zafar, who comes from Dhaka. His counterpart in the main text is Mr. Hopper, who comes from Australia. For the snooty society of Grosvenor Square in London, colonised Australia is still a place infested with "flying kangaroos." One only hopes that Dhaka's slighting in this analogy was not deliberate.

The most notable aspect of the play is the professionalism displayed by a group of brilliant amateur performers. Their superb acting and almost flawless enunciation have given the play its elan. The cast delivers their lines with a finesse that captures the cultural and contextual nuances of Wilde's play. The transition between scenes is seamless, a testament to the hard work that has gone into its making.

The producer Sadaf Saaz mentions that Kaleidoscope, a BHN Experiences venture created with Jatrik and with support from Asiatic EXP, is a multidimensional platform that wants to elevate the experience of theatre, the arts, and more. Jatrik, responsible for organising massive events such as Dhaka Lit Fest, has always strived to create a creative space that nurtures local talents. Begum's Blunder's actors come from a diverse range of backgrounds, and it was the director's brilliance that brought out the best in the characters by highlighting their uniqueness and peculiarities as part of the drama's overall effect. Jatrik will stage the play for seven more shows at the Mohila Samity in the coming weeks. The grandiose immersive effect that Aloki offered in its premier show is likely to be missed at the other venue. Nevertheless, kudos to Kaleidoscope for bringing Oscar Wilde's wit and wisdom to the Dhaka stage, as well as for offering a delightful evening of theatre that is both thought-provoking and entertaining.

INTERVIEW

Outliers take centre-stage in Shah Tazrian Ashrafi's debut collection

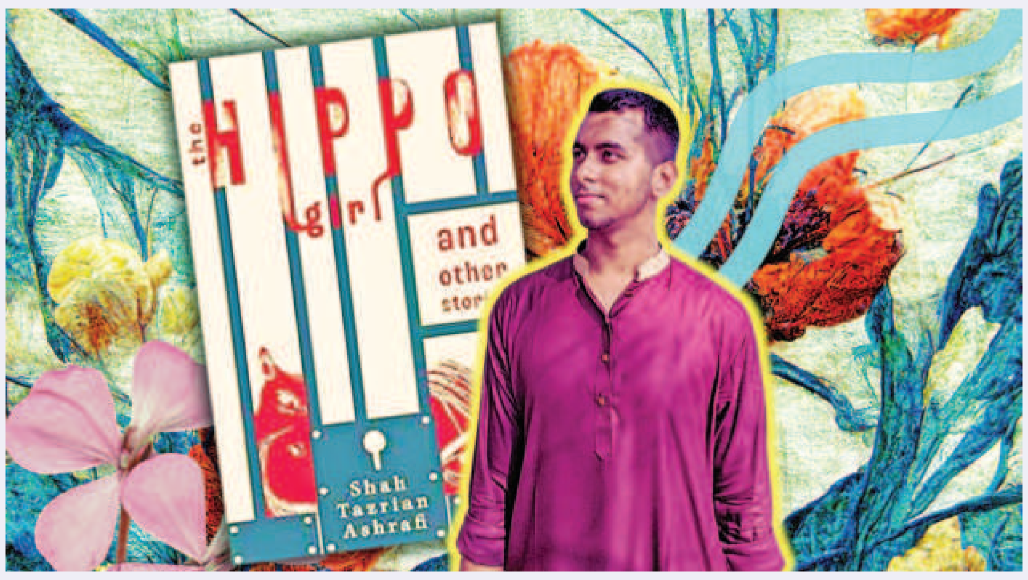
My intention was to explore how certain factors intimidate and ridicule them and further consolidate their marginalised positions, as if to say they (the outliers) do not deserve a shot at life and redemption.

SARAH ANJUM BARI

It's hard not to recall our many conversations about literature as I try to summarise Shah Tazrian Ashrafi's debut collection of short stories. They were always short discussions, opening and closing off in spurts, as happens over text. Exclamations over a new essay collection by Zadie Smith, or a new novel by Isabel Allende.

As an undergraduate student, he majored in International Relations at BUP, but it's his growth as an artist that's been so fulfilling to witness. In 2021, he worked on his short stories under Karan Mahajan in the Write Beyond Borders mentorship programme; in 2023, he was mentored by Sonia Faleiro in the South Asia Speaks fellowship programme. Between working on his debut book and publishing fiction and nonfiction in Himal South Asian, The Diplomat, Caravan, TRT World, The Aleph Review, Six Seasons Review, Dhaka Tribune, and The Daily Star, Tazrian also got accepted into the MFA in Creative Writing Program at UW Madison, due to start in Fall 2024.

The Hippo Girl and Other Stories (Hachette, 2024) plays with all those themes that have percolated in his essays and reviews over the years. The book stays often in the shadows of war, but illustrates moments of humour, friendship, and bravery between characters who are seldom on the upper end of a hierarchy. We hear from a dog who watches his human suffer through the Liberation War, a housemaid who must abandon her mentally ill sister in the calm streets of a fictionalised Baridhara. The textures of life in Bangladesh appear as they are in this collection, sans nostalgia or elitist gloss. It's a rare joy to recognise our familiar streets, customs, histories, and relationships depicted with such loving attention to detail in a book that will reach readers across South Asia.



the HIPPO girl and other stories

DESIGN: MAISHA SYEDA

What inspired these stories? Were you drawing ideas or information from any particular sources?

There was no particular inspiration, but before writing these stories, I was fascinated by Petina Gappah and Jamil Jan Kochai's short stories. Their fictions were etched in my mind because of how they managed to write about hopeless scenarios (often involving wars) in a palatable and light-hearted manner. As such, I actively looked back on their work to learn how they did and did not do certain things, especially in terms of subverting readers' expectations and upending assumptions. This is why I mention them in my synopsis. Besides, I was also inspired by Samanta Schweblin, Mariana Enriquez, and multiple stories from Commonwealth Short Story Prize and Caine Prize shortlists. The one thing they all share in common is their penchant for narrating stories of violence that leave the reader pondering about the characters for a long time. For instance, I got the idea for "Lucky" after reading this brilliant Caine Prize-shortlisted story called "Memories We Lost", which, like "Lucky", is about a pair of siblings in dire straits, ostracised by the society due to the stigma around mental health. Similarly, I was inspired to write "Indira Road" after reading a Commonwealth Short Story Prize-shortlisted story called "Something Happened Here"; in both the stories, the narrators return to their previous homes and revisit the unwanted forces that pushed them away in the first place.

We move through different classes in your book, from slums and working class families to diplomatic residential areas. But in all cases, we're focusing on the outliers in each of these spaces—the bullied, the marginalised. What are your stories trying to accomplish through these gazes?

By giving the outliers the centre stage, I wanted to establish that some people are outliers in a society because of their helpless circumstances. My intention was to explore how certain factors intimidate and ridicule them and further consolidate their marginalised positions, as if to say they (the outliers) do not deserve a shot at life and redemption.

One way in which you do this—and this was my favourite thing about the book—is your choice of narrators. Nearly every narrator in the book comes with a distinct personality, they have their biases, their joys and resentments, even when you're writing a third person omniscient narrator. Some of the more fascinating narrators appear when you write in the first person collective. Tell me about your choice of narrators (the adults, the children, the animals). How did you want them to shape the stories you were telling? And how did you develop their voices?

I had a lot of fun writing in the first-person collective voice. I have always wanted to do that ever since I read NoViolet Bulawayo's story, "Hitting Budapest". I enjoy the limitless fluidity that this mode of narration gives me.

Writing in this as well as other modes of narration, one thing I hoped to accomplish was to give my narration a blend of humour, cynicism, and unreliability with generous doses of unforgiving observations. For example, my narrator in "Brother" was not only someone who constantly groaned about the Pakistani military's occupation, but he was also someone who derived small joys from playing hide and seek with his friends and seeing the physical altercation between two women. I wanted him to be a character who, despite living in gloomy conditions, is in touch with his typical teenage characteristics from before the war. Like him, I wanted my other characters throughout the book to be defined by a myriad of other things besides their cruel fates. Some of them love reading, some love writing, some are academic high achievers, some refuse to let go of their intrinsic generosity even in the face of harshest conditions, and so on.

This is an excerpt. Read the full interview on DS Books and The Daily Star's websites.

South Africa face test of nerves and Afghanistan

REUTERS

South Africa's bid to lift a first major cricket trophy could come down to whether they can finally shed the unwanted tag of "chokers" and the latest test of their nerves will be against Afghanistan in Wednesday's Twenty20 World Cup semifinal.

The Proteas have competed in seven semifinals over both short format World Cups but have never reached a title match, although they will be happy to avoid Australia this time around having lost to them three times in the last four.

The perennial under-achievers of international cricket are on a hot streak, with solid bowling displays helping them power through the group and Super Eight stages.

South Africa will be encouraged by how several players have stepped up in tense situations to keep their 100% record intact after seven matches so far.

"We haven't played our best game of cricket yet," Markram said after his team ended the campaign of co-hosts West Indies in a shootout for a semifinal spot on Sunday. "So we'll try and put our best game of cricket together for that semi-final."

After stunning Australia in their penultimate Super Eight match, the plucky Afghans ensured the 2021 champions were sent packing from the tournament with a dramatic eight-run win over Bangladesh on Monday.

Afghanistan's maiden World Cup semifinal appearance is a sign of how much the sport has grown in the war-torn country and skipper Rashid Khan's side, who also upset New Zealand earlier in the tournament, will target another statement victory.

They failed to register a single win in the last edition of the tournament but were still tipped to make the last four this time around by West Indies great Brian Lara, after whom the Tarouba venue for the semi-final is named.

Rahmanullah Gurbaz has been a key player for Afghanistan, leading the scoring table with 281 runs, while Fazalhaq Farooqi leads the bowling charts with 16 wickets. "Being in the semi is big for us," Rashid added. "But we have to go with a very clear mind and know what we have done so far. Keep things simple for ourselves and make sure we enjoy that big occasion."

- The Afghanistan-South Africa semifinal in Tarouba has a reserve day, on June 28. However, an extra 60-minute will be allocated on the first day and another 190 minutes on the reserve day for an outcome.
- South Africa and India are the only two ICC full-member sides Afghanistan have not beaten in international cricket so far.
- The Proteas have won a total of seven matches so far – most by any team in one edition of the tournament.
- In this T20 World Cup, Afghanistan openers Rahmanullah Gurbaz and Ibrahim Zadran have starred in four fifty-plus stands -- most for any team in one edition of the tournament -- including three hundred-plus stands -- most by any opening pair in the history of the competition.
- Afghanistan bowlers have dominated the powerplay in this T20 World Cup, taking 20 wickets at an economy rate of 7.19 during this phase.

India's knockout hurdle against holders England

REUTERS

India can take a huge step towards winning their first major title in over a decade and bury any doubts about their backbone in the knockout rounds when they face defending champions England in the Twenty20 World Cup semifinals on Thursday.

Despite being backed by the world's richest cricket board, success on the biggest stage has largely proved elusive for India and their 2013 Champions Trophy triumph is the most recent of their five global titles.

Rohit Sharma's team, however, head into the clash with England in Guyana on a six-match unbeaten streak in the tournament and determined to emulate the title success of the 2007 side in the inaugural edition.

Rohit, who along with fellow stalwart Virat Kohli could be playing at a last World Cup, returned to form with a 41-ball 92 in a thumping win over Australia in the Super Eight stage and said his side would continue being aggressive.

Indian fans will still be anxious given their team's shaky displays in the latter stages of big tournaments.

However, this time India look in fine fettle with both bat and ball. Rohit has scored 191 runs in six matches, while pace bowler Jasprit Bumrah has 11 wickets and spinner Kuldeep Yadav has claimed seven in three games.

England's campaign has stuttered with losses to Australia and South Africa in the group stages and they only made the Super Eights by virtue of having a better net run rate than Scotland.

Now, however, they stand only two victories away from becoming the first team to retain the T20 World Cup trophy.

England's failure to defend the ODI World Cup last year heaped pressure on skipper Jos Buttler and coach Matthew Mott and they will hope West Indies-born pacers Jofra Archer and Chris Jordan can continue their good form in the knockout rounds.

Buttler is England's top scorer with 191 runs while opener Phil Salt has 183 and the pair's form could prove crucial if they are to advance.

Awaiting India or England in the title clash will be the winner of the first semifinal between South Africa and dark horses Afghanistan.

- India are unbeaten in this T20 World Cup, winning six matches with the group-stage game against Canada getting washed out.
- India hold a slender advantage in head-to-head T20I meetings with England, winning 12 of their 23 encounters. England have won 11.
- In T20 World Cups, however, it is all square at 2-2 between the two sides, with England winning by 10 wickets in their recent-most meeting in the 2022 T20 World Cup semifinal.
- No reserve day has been set aside for this semifinal, meaning, if the game in Guyana gets washed out then India would go through to the final -- courtesy of Rohit Sharma's men winning more Super Eight matches than defending champions England.
- However, an extra 250 minutes have been allotted for this game in order to aid an outcome.

Women booters to play Bhutan in July

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh women's football team are set to play two more FIFA international friendly matches against Bhutan to utilise the July window and prepare for the upcoming SAFF Women's Championship.

The women in red and green will fly out to Thimphu on July 8 and be in action on July 11 and 14, before returning home on July 15. The decision was made at the meeting of Bangladesh Football Federation's (BFF) women's committee yesterday.

"We were supposed to play a four-nation tournament involving hosts Lebanon, Jordan, Nepal and Bangladesh, but the situation in Lebanon did not permit it. So, we wanted to utilise the July window and arranged Bhutan matches following no response from other countries," BFF executive member Mahfuza Akhter Kiron, who presided the meeting, told The Daily Star, adding that they had also proposed Nepal, who, however, expressed their inability to make necessary arrangement within a short time.

"Playing Bhutan will also be a part of preparation ahead of the SAFF Women's Championship [running from October 17-30], but we are also trying to arrange more friendly matches in the September window," she further informed.

Earlier this year, Bangladesh women's team played two home matches against Chinese Taipei in the May-June window, where they suffered 4-0 and 1-0 defeats.

Messi may skip Peru clash

REUTERS

Lionel Messi may sit out Argentina's next Copa America game against Peru to rest a sore thigh with his team already qualified for the next round after two wins.

Messi, who turned 37 this week and has been suffering muscle niggles, required brief medical treatment on his thigh during Argentina's 1-0 victory over Chile at the U.S.-hosted tournament.

But he completed the 90 minutes, shaving the post with one long-range shot and was at the heart of Argentina's attacks.

"It bothers me a bit, but I was able to stay on until the end. I hope it's nothing serious," he said, acknowledging it might be wiser to sit out the Peru game on Saturday.

"Let's see how the next few days go, how I recover. We've taken an important step to qualify and be relaxed," added Messi, saying he had also suffered from a sore throat and fever before the Chile game.

With a 2-0 win over Canada also under their belt, world champions and tournament favourites Argentina are looking comfortable in the early stages of the Copa America. They top Group A with six points, ahead of Canada on three.

Coach Lionel Scaloni would not say whether he would rest Messi against Peru, to keep him fit for the quarterfinals, but Argentine football commentators assumed he would do just that.

Sabitzer puts left foot forward for Austria

REUTERS, Berlin

Austria's historic 3-2 win over Netherlands to top Group D at Euro 2024 on Tuesday will go down as one of the greatest moments in the country's sporting history, especially considering the unlikely source of their triumph - Marcel Sabitzer's left foot.

The 30-year-old is well known for his thunderous strikes from distance with his right boot, but Tuesday's winner -- rattled into the roof of the net from a tight angle -- came from his less-heralded left to secure a famous victory.

"I got the ball deep, I looked up to see if someone was free in the middle, but I got the impression that they (the Dutch) had more men there. In the past, the left foot has often helped me, so I thought that was the moment I could give it a try," Sabitzer told reporters.

"As soon as the ball left my foot, I knew it could be good."

The midfielder, who received the man of the match award for his performance, shared the credit with his team mates after a game in which the Dutch pegged them back to 1-1 and 2-2 before he got the winner.

"We are all footballers who want to win games, and that is our objective in every game. And if you have moments where things are a bit more difficult and it goes back and forth, then the question is how does the team react to that," he said.

"You can be proud of the unity we have, the mentality we have on the pitch ... we used our strengths, the goal was very nicely worked. So many Austrians who watch us in the stadium trust us, and we want to give them something back."

Austria will find out their last-16 opponent when the final round of group games is completed.

Slovenia's Jaka Bijol and Vanja Drkusic celebrate with goalkeeper Jan Oblak after qualifying for the Round of 16 of Euro 2024 following a goalless draw against England in their last Group C match at Cologne Stadium on Tuesday. The Central European nation drew all three of their matches and qualified for the knockout rounds for the first time in their history in only their second appearance in the continental competition.

Assange back home as a free man

REUTERS, Canberra

WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange landed to an ecstatic welcome in Australia yesterday after pleading guilty to violating US espionage law in a deal that sets him free from a 14-year legal battle.

Assange disembarked from a private jet at Canberra airport just after 7:30 pm (0930 GMT), waving to waiting media and cheering supporters before passionately kissing his wife, Stella, and lifting her off the ground.

He embraced his father before entering the terminal building with his legal team.

Assange has not spoken publicly since being released and did not appear at a Wikileaks press conference at a hotel in Canberra, where Stella Assange said it was too soon to say what her husband would do next.

"Julian needs time to recover, to get used to freedom," she said. "I want Julian to have that space to rediscover that freedom."

New finalists on the cards

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The ongoing T20 World Cup of many firsts will get to see another unprecedented case as a new finalist will feature in the grand finale of the showpiece event as South Africa and Afghanistan will face off in the first semifinal in Trinidad and Tobago today.

In the second semifinal later tonight, 2007 champions India will take on two-time winners England in Guyana for a spot in the final.

South Africa, who are often considered favourites going into ICC events, are not strangers to heartbreaks as they don't farewell in such phases of a major tournament, losing in seven consecutive World Cup (T20I/ODI) semis, but will look to finally break their semifinal curse and progress to their first-ever final in a World Cup.

The Proteas, like they most often do prior to the knockout phases, have won all of their matches in the lead-up to the semis and set a record for most consecutive wins (seven) in a T20 World Cup. But teams like Nepal and Bangladesh have pushed the Proteas to the limit and despite the results going their way, Aiden Markram and Co will be wary of not letting the Afghans have a sniff in the game.

Meanwhile, Rashid Khan's Afghanistan are making a habit of creating history in this tournament and wouldn't be much daunted by the task as they have had a direct hand in eliminating Australia and New Zealand -- with

2 more suspects held in the hills

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A team of detectives from Dhaka yesterday arrested two men suspected of being involved in the murder of Jhenaidah-4 lawmaker Anwarul Azim Anar.

Faisal and Mustafiz were arrested in Khagrachhari where they had been masquerading as devotees at a remote Kali Temple for 23 days, said Harun Or Rashid, additional commissioner (Detective Branch) of Dhaka Metropolitan Police.

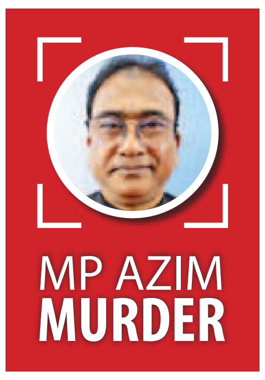
They introduced themselves in Khagrachhari as Palash Roy and Shimul Roy, he added.

They were among the seven people present in the Kolkata flat where Azim was killed in May, he said.

Officers learned their whereabouts on Tuesday, and then caught them in a special drive yesterday.

Harun later flew back to the capital with the suspects in a helicopter and landed in Purbachal.

Officers have information that Faisal used chloroform to make Azim's lose consciousness and Mustafiz later stripped him and tied him to a chair, he told reporters.



On May 19, they came back to Bangladesh from Kolkata after the murder and contacted Aktaruzzaman who planned the murder.

"Aktaruzzaman then gave them Tk 30,000. With the money, they went to the remote hilly area," he said.

A total of nine people have been arrested in Bangladesh, India and Nepal in connection with the killings, he said.

Aktaruzzaman is currently in the US, and the authorities are trying to get him extradited.

Harun reiterated that there was "no pressure" on officers regarding the investigation.

Probe on to unearth wealth of cops: IGP

UNB, Khulna

Probe into the wealth of police officials is underway, with authentic information expected to emerge, said Inspector General of Police (IGP) Chowdhury Abdullah Al Mamun.

He made the statement while addressing reporters at the Khulna Metropolitan Police (KMP) Lines yesterday afternoon.

The IGP mentioned that a meeting was held between the Police Services Association and journalists to discuss recent media reports on the wealth of police officials and the police headquarters' response.

"The issue will be resolved through discussion," he assured.

Regarding actress Pori Moni issue, IGP Mamun said that Golam Saklain, former Additional Deputy Commissioner of the Detective Branch (DB) of Dhaka Metropolitan Police (DMP), was sent on compulsory retirement after allegations against him were confirmed. Bangladesh Police adheres to a zero-tolerance policy towards any immoral activity, he said.

60 Palestinians killed as Israeli forces pound Gaza

AGENCIES

Israeli forces pounded several areas in north and south Gaza yesterday, and residents reported fierce fighting between Israeli troops and Hamas fighters in Rafah in the south of the Palestinian enclave.

Residents said fighting intensified in the Tel Al-Sultan neighbourhood in western Rafah, where tanks were also trying to force their way north amid heavy clashes. The armed wings of Hamas and the Islamic Jihad said fighters attacked Israeli forces with anti-tank rockets and mortar bombs.

Since early May, ground fighting has focused on Rafah, abutting Egypt on Gaza's southern edge, where around half of the enclave's 2.3 million people had been sheltering after fleeing other areas. Most have since had to flee again.

Medics said two Palestinians were killed in one Israeli missile strike in Rafah earlier yesterday.

The Israeli military said in a statement its forces killed a Hamas member who had been involved in the smuggling of weapons through the border between Rafah and Egypt. It said jets struck dozens of Hamas targets in Rafah overnight, including fighters, military structures and tunnel shafts, reports Reuters.

In the northern Gaza town of Beit Lahiya, an Israeli air strike destroyed a house, killing four Palestinians and wounding several others, medics said.

The health ministry in Hamas-run Gaza said yesterday that at least 37,718 people have been killed during more than eight months of offensive. The toll includes at least 60deaths over the past 24 hours, a ministry statement said.

More than eight months into the offensive, international mediation backed by the US has failed to yield a ceasefire agreement. Hamas says any deal must bring an end to the offensive and full Israeli withdrawal from Gaza, while Israel says it will accept only temporary pauses in fighting until Hamas is eradicated.

In the northern Gaza Strip, Palestinians complained of a severe lack of food and soaring prices, and health officials said thousands of children were suffering from malnutrition that has already killed at least 30 since October 7.

"There is only flour and canned food, there is nothing else to eat, no vegetables, no meat, and no milk. I have lost over 25 kilos of my weight," said Abu Mustafa, who lives in Gaza City, with his family.

Meanwhile, President Tayyip Erdogan said yestersday that Turkey stood in solidarity with Lebanon in light of growing tensions with Israel and called on regional countries to also support Beirut.

Speaking in parliament, Erdogan said Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu planned to spread the Gaza offensive to the region and that this would lead to a "catastrophe", adding the Western support for Israel was "pitiful".

BSF shoots Bangladeshi dead near border

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Lalmonirhat

A Bangladeshi man was shot dead by the Indian Border Security Force (BSF) near the Lohakuchi border in Kaliganj upazila of Lalmonirhat early yesterday.

According to BGB and locals, the incident occurred early yesterday when a group of eight or nine locals, including the deceased Nurul Islam, 63, tried to enter Indian territory to fetch cattle.

At that time, the BSF, patrolling the West Chamta camp on the Indian side, opened fire on the group injuring Nurul Islam.

Nurul was brought back to Bangladesh by his associates. He later succumbed to his injuries, reports our local correspondent quoting Imtiaz Kabir, officer-in-charge of Kaliganj Police Station.

Police has taken Nurul's body to the police station, said Imtiaz Kabir.

A protest letter has been sent to BSF, said Subedar Manjurul Islam, commander of the Lohakuchi camp of Bangladesh Border Guard (BGB) Lalmonirhat-15 Battalion.

Delhi for early democratic transition in Myanmar

Says Jaishankar

REUTERS, New Delhi

India's foreign minister said he voiced concern about the impact of continuing violence in Myanmar in a meeting with his counterpart from the Southeast Asian nation yesterday.

Myanmar plunged into turmoil after a 2021 military coup seized power from an elected government, sparking a protest movement that has evolved into a full-blown civil war, in which the military has lost control of large swathes of territory.

India has maintained its relationship with the ruling junta, even as armed resistance to the military has expanded, and it has an infrastructure project in Myanmar's western Rakhine state where heavy fighting has raged in recent months.

Indian Foreign Minister Subrahmanyam Jaishankar said he sought a commitment to protecting India's ongoing projects in Myanmar in the meeting with counterpart Than Swe.

India's new leader of the opposition Rahul Gandhi said yesterday that his lawmakers would not be silenced, in his first speech since formally taking up a post vacant for a decade.

Rahul, Prime Minister Narendra Modi's chief rival, was appointed by fellow opposition lawmakers to the post in a signal of a reinvigorated challenge to the government.

"The government has political power, but the opposition also represents the voice of India's people," Rahul said in a speech in the lower house of parliament, accompanied by supportive thumps by his party's lawmakers on their desks.

"This time, the opposition represents significantly more voice of the Indian people."

In the past two parliaments, Rahul's once-mighty Congress party did not have enough seats in the legislature to qualify him for the post, reports AFP.

IMF charts path out of farm subsidy

REJAUL KARIM BYRON and AM JAHID

The International Monetary Fund has suggested an alternative to reducing agricultural subsidies -- raising fertiliser prices and providing cash or vouchers for certain farm inputs to support poor farmers.

The global lender also recommended removing incentives for remittance and gradually reducing subsidy on electricity.

The IMF made the suggestions in its programme document as the lender approved $1.15 billion in the third tranche of the $4.7 billion loan to Bangladesh on Monday.

The government has assured the IMF of progressively reducing the subsidy on power by hiking the prices four times a year, but it did not say anything about cutting or withdrawing the subsidies on remittance and agriculture.

"Increases in fertiliser prices could be coupled with cash transfers or vouchers for a range of agricultural inputs (including fertiliser) targeted at small or poor farmers," the IMF said.

It said several options can be considered to lessen the fertiliser subsidy bill.

Raising domestic production of fertiliser by increasing the natural gas supply to existing fertiliser factories could also help cut the reliance on expensive imports. The impact of a reduction in gas supply to other sectors would need to be carefully considered, the IMF said.

In April 2023, the World Bank provided Bangladesh $500 million for agricultural and rural transformation. With the funding, the government will build a comprehensive database of farmers and experiment with e-vouchers for fertilisers and other agricultural inputs.

The IMF said the new database and the findings are expected to yield valuable information that the authorities can use for a rethink of the agricultural subsidy system and put current budget allocations for fertiliser subsidies to more productive uses.

It said the current fixed price system -- under which farmers purchase fertiliser at a set price irrespective of quantity procured or farmer characteristics -- provides a universal and untargeted subsidy that favours the use of fertiliser over other agricultural inputs.

"As a result, farmers may overuse fertilisers while underinvesting in other inputs such as high-yielding seed varieties and precision irrigation systems."

Better agricultural extension services could help lower dependence on fertilisers and achieve the same agricultural output with a smaller amount of fertiliser inputs, the global lender said.

A sharp rise in global prices of these commodities since 2021 has led to a significant increase in subsidy claims in recent years. This is

A Dhaka court yesterday ordered the authorities concerned to confiscate all moveable and immoveable properties of Quazi Abu Mahmud Faisal, first secretary (taxes and legal enforcement) of the National Board of Revenue, his wife Afsana Jasmin, and some of his close relatives over graft allegations.

Judge Mohammad Ash-Shams Joglul Hossain of Dhaka Metropolitan Senior Special Judge's Court passed the order after Md Mostafiz, assistant director of the Anti-Corruption Commission, also the inquiry team head, appealed for this.

He directed the authorities concerned to take initiatives so that Faisal and others could not hand over the properties or launder the money.

The judge ordered them to freeze 87 bank accounts of Faisal, his wife, and relatives.

The court also asked the anti-graft body to publish this order in a Bangla national daily and an English one.

ACC Public Prosecutor Mosharraf Hossain Kajol confirmed it to The Daily Star.

The properties are: a five-katha plot bought for Tk 75 lakh from East-West Development (Pvt) Ltd by Afsana, a flat bought for Tk 1 crore from Rupayan Housing Estate Ltd in the city's Ramna area by her father Ahmed Ali, a five-katha plot purchased from Jolshiri Housing Project in Khilgaon by Faisal and Afsana, saving certificates worth Tk 2.55 crore, Tk 6.96 crore deposited in bank and non-banking financial institutions, and other moveable properties worth Tk 6.89 crore. For nearly five years, the BIWTA has been dredging the Old Brahmaputra in Mymensingh to improve its navigability under a Tk 2,763 crore project, but only 26 percent of the project has been completed as of early May this year.

Green activists and civil society members say there has been no visible improvement in navigability since the dredging began.

"Navigability has worsened in some areas where dredging is taking place. The river has become narrower in some places," said Nazrul Islam Chunnu, convener of Janaudyog Mymensingh, a civil society platform.

The river is dying, he said.

BR investigating rape incident on moving train

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

A probe committee formed by Bangladesh Railway (BR) over the alleged rape of a woman on the Chattogram-bound Udayan Express train on Wednesday started its investigation into the incident yesterday.

On the day, the four-member committee headed by Anisur Rahman, divisional traffic officer of BR's Chattogram Division, interrogated some staffers of BR and SA Corporation--the catering company that supplies food to trains.

After the interrogation, Anisur told reporters that would submit a report by next week.

He, however, declined to disclose any information obtained during the interrogation.

Police have so far arrested four men, all staffers of SA Corporation, in connection to a rape case filed by the victim, said Chattogram Railway Police Station Officer-in-Charge (OC) SM Shahidul Islam

According to the case statement, the 20-year-old victim was raped inside the train's food carriage around 4:30am on Wednesday.

5 children drown in Rangpur

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Rangpur

Five children, including three in Mithapukur and two in Sadar, died by drowning in Rangpur on Wednesday, said fire service and police officials.

The deceased are Arshi Begum, 12, daughter of Ratan Mia, and her cousin Morshalin Ahmed Zim, 10, son of Anisul Islam, both from the city's Ghagatpara area; Aysha Siddiqa, 9, daughter of Ismail Hossain, and Ayat Khatun, 8, daughter of Mukul Mia, both from Atharokata village in Mthapukur upazila; and Meftahul Jannat Mysha, 2, daughter of Ershadul Haque from Borobala village in Mthapukur upazila.

Rabiul Islam, officer-in-charge of Tazhat Police Station under Rangpur Metropolitan Police, said Arshi and Morshalin drowned when they went to the Ghagat river in the city to bathe with friends.

Fire Service and Civil Defence officials recovered their bodies and rescued another child.

Meanwhile, Aysha and Ayat also drowned while bathing in the Ghagat river in Mithapukur upazila. Police later recovered their bodies.

Earlier in the day, Mysha drowned in a pond near her house. Villagers rescued her and took her to Mithapukur Upazila Health Complex, where doctors declared her dead.

Mithapukur Police Station Officer-in-Charge Ferdous Wahid confirmed both incidents.

Then on Wednesday, a prison break by four death row convicts laid bare the building's infrastructural weakness and poor internal security.

After the incident, the prisons directorate constituted a three-member probe committee, led by Additional Inspector General (Prisons) Col Sheikh Sujaur Rahman.

The other members are Deputy Inspector General of Prisons Monir Ahmed and Senior Jail Superintendent of Rangpur Central Jail Prashant Kumar Banik.

The committee has been asked to submit an inquiry report within the next five working days.

Meanwhile, the district administration has also formed a six-member committee in this regard.

The committees are tasked with probing lax security, infrastructural weaknesses and the possible involvement of anyone from the prison administration.

They were also asked to make recommendations on how to deter future jailbreaks.

According to the Bogura jail website, the jail building was built in 1883. The main prison is situated on seven acres of land on the banks of the Korotoa river, which is 10 meters east of the prison. There is a perimeter wall, which has public roads on three of its sides.

There is no outer wall surrounding the entire jail premises.

Sources said the jail has the capacity to house 700 prisoners, but as of yesterday, there were 1,700.

This correspondent spoke to five guards and five former inmates now out on bail.

They said the condemned cell that the four death row convicts had escaped from is called the "Jaflong" cell and it has five rooms. Right next to it is the "Padma" ward, which has the perimeter wall attached to it.

The prison guards alleged they have difficulty maintaining security as common people move through the prison area throughout the day due to the public roads being adjacent to it.

They claimed there is no other prison in the country that has roads so close to it and that their living quarters, or barracks, are located along one of the roads.

They further alleged that as there is no outer boundary wall to protect their barracks, thieves would often easily break in and steal their valuables.

About the jail's infrastructural weakness, Imrul Kayes, additional district magistrate and head of the district administration's probe committee, told The Daily Star, "The jail is a KPI [key point installation] area. There should be no high rises or public roads within the premises. But in Bogura jail, we found them [public roads and high rises].

"We have included PWD [public works department] and fire service officials in our probe committee to find out all the weaknesses in the infrastructure."

Col Sujaur Rahman, in this regard, said, "It's a very old prison... The Jaflong cell is attached to the Padma ward, which is attached to the perimeter wall. However, perimeter walls, according to rules, are supposed to be at least 16-18 feet away from any prison building.

"On the other hand, there is supposed to be an outer boundary wall as well. But this jail has none ... We will ask for solutions to these matters in our recommendations."

One former Bogura jail inmate, on the condition of anonymity, said there are two prison guards stationed in front of each cell every night.

"The Jaflong cell is right next to the main gate, which is manned by two armed guards, while there is another guard posted outside the cell at night... This incident [the jail break] would not have been possible unless a prison official is involved," he alleged, adding, "It is also impossible to get the tools they used to break out [a screwdriver and an iron-sheet scrap] inside the condemned cell without help from an insider."

He said, "How is it possible that they made a hole on the ceiling without none of the inmates in the adjacent cell [Padma] knowing it? Surely, one or more prison workers are involved."

Eid. There are allegations that it sells goats and cattle at unusually high prices.

Ifat made a Facebook post about buying the goat, causing public discussions about Matiur's wealth. The Anti-Corruption Commission then launched an inquiry into allegations that Matiur amassed wealth illegally and laundered money.

Yesterday, a DNCC team, led by Executive Magistrate Mutakabbir Ahmed, conducted a near five-hour drive. The team first demolished a part of a two-storey building which housed Sadeeq Agro's office, a living quarter for the workers, and a cattle shed.

The farm animals were moved to an open place nearby before an excavator knocked down the structure.

Sadeeq Agro rented the land from its owner Abdul Rashid Talukder. The executive magistrate told reporters that the farm rented 0.15 bigha of land, but built the farm on 0.60 bigha.

The DNCC team later went to Sadeeq Agro's dairy farm at Nabinagor Housing and knocked down a tin-shed structure used as the office of BDFA and a cattle shed.

"The eviction drive is not against Sadeeq Agro or any particular organisation. It's against the occupiers of the canal," Magistrate Mutakabbir told reporters at the scene.

According to a DNCC press release, 60 illegal structures, including shops, restaurants, a saw mill, and a political party office were demolished, and 10 bighas of land was reclaimed on the first day of the three-day drive.

The farm's owner Imran said a vested quarter was after him because he took a stance against the import of frozen buffalo meat from India.

"These things [the drive] are being done against me to punish me for my stance. They are trying to ruin my reputation. They have asked me to step down from the association," he told The Daily Star.

Imran has been the president of BDFA since it was formed in 2019.

He added that the farm was within the demarcation pillars placed by the Dhaka deputy commissioner.

On Wednesday, the DNCC Estate Department requested Dhaka Metropolitan Police's assistance during the raid.

The letter said illegal structures of Sadeeq Agro and others along Mohammadpur Beribadh area would be evicted.

PREVIOUS CONTROVERSIES

There are allegations that Sadeeq Agro purchases cows and goats from villages at reasonable prices and sells them in Dhaka at exorbitant rates, telling people that the animals have pedigrees.

In 2021, Sadeeq Agro hogged the headlines by importing 18 Brahman cattle, defying restrictions.

The government in 2016 banned import of the particular breed of cattle, meant for the meat industry, after Bangladesh attained self-sufficiency in meat production.

Sadeeq Agro's cattle were flown in from the US amid coronavirus restrictions. But nobody showed up at Dhaka airport to receive them.

The farm used forged ministry documents for the import, and it already had other Brahman cows, possibly from previous such imports, on sale at its farm, an investigation by The Daily Star found.

Forged documents, copies of which were obtained by this newspaper, were used to dodge the authorities.

been extended by another year. However, Bangladesh Inland Water Transport Authority (BIWTA), the implementing agency of the project, will seek even more time.

The project titled "Navigability Improvement and Excavation of Old Brahmaputra" was aimed at dredging 227-kilometre river channel from Jamalpur's Dewanganj to Mymensingh's Gafargaon.

"The project deadline has already been extended by one year, but we need at least three more years to complete the work," Mohammad Mohsin Miah, executive engineer of BIWTA, told The Daily Star recently.

He blamed non-cooperation by a section of locals, erosion of the river and low water level for the slow progress.

There are some 47 small and large rivers in Mymensingh region. Of them, the Sutia, Shila, Banar, Khiru, Laithi, Norosunda, Kanchamatia, Aymon, Jhenai, Rangsa, and Arial Kha depend on the natural flow of the Old Brahmaputra.

But all these rivers are at risk of running dry as the Old Brahmaputra itself is on the brink of death, said Akhlak Ul Jamil, executive engineer of Water Development Board in Mymensingh.

Shibbir Ahmed Liton, general secretary of Poribesh Rokhha O Unnayan Andolon, said the 283km-long Old Brahmaputra is dying due to widespread encroachment and build-up of silt.

According to locals, the Old Brahmaputra had been a great source of fish and water for agriculture. Different local varieties of fish were available in the river, leading to hundreds of people relying on fishing as means of income.

The natural flow of the Old Brahmaputra must be ensured to maintain ecological balance and prevent environmental degradation, they said.

Nazrul, convener of Janaudyog Mymensingh, said dredging should ensure that the river can maintain a depth of at least 10 feet and a width of around 300 feet within the dredged channel during the dry season.

"During a meeting in 2022, project officials assured us that launches would be able to operate once the dredging is completed. However, we don't see how they will keep this promise. We are frustrated."

He said the Mymensingh deputy commissioner should hold a meeting with the officials of the local administration and the project, journalists and civil society representatives so people can know about the real progress of the project.

"We used to make our living from fishing in the Old Brahmaputra. But fishing has become difficult now as the river has become narrow," said Jamir Ali, a 70-year-old fisherman from Char Gobindapur village in Mymensingh Sadar upazila.

Large boats used to transport agricultural products along the river in the past, but nowadays only small boats are able to navigate, said Md Nowab Ali, a senior journalist from Char Haripur village in the same upazila.

Prof Anwarul Islam, an adviser to Janaudyog Mymensingh and also a former vice-chancellor of Bangladesh Agricultural University, said the project authorities should conduct dredging following the cadastral survey (CS) and mutation records to ensure permanent protection of the river area.

"We visited the upstream of the Old Brahmaputra in Jamalpur's Dewanganj upazila in 2009 and found a large shoal [char] covering around a 6km area," said Nurul Amin Kalam, general secretary of Mymensingh Zila Nagorik Andolon, a citizens' platform.

"We think the shoal gradually changed the natural flow of the river over the last three decades," he said.

Kalam said they recommended the authorities start dredging from Dewanganj, but the authorities turned a deaf ear to the advice.

"We think the project was not properly planned and has not achieved anything so far," he told The Daily Star recently.

Denying the allegation, BIWTA Executive Engineer Mohsin said the dredging is being carried out in a planned way according to the joint survey report of the Institute of Water Modelling and a Dutch firm.

He said many people, who have built houses on several shoals of the river, obstruct dredging, causing delay in the project work.

Mohsin said some project officials have recently visited the estuary of the Old Brahmaputra and talked to the locals and public representatives to speed up the dredging.

He expressed optimism that the river's water level will meet their expectations next year.

IMF charts path concentrated in the electricity and agricultural sectors, where domestic price adjustments have failed to keep pace with the rise in costs, according to the IMF.

Whereas natural gas and fuel prices were raised broadly in line with international prices, concerns about food security and affordability amid an already inflationary environment led the government to limit price increases on fertilisers and power, it said.

"As a result, subsidy claims by electricity and fertiliser producers and importers have risen substantially and were met in part through arrears and the issuance of special, low-interest bonds to commercial banks to offset outstanding loans to electricity and fertiliser companies."

The government allocated more than Tk 1 lakh crore for subsidies and incentives in the current fiscal year. The same amount has been allocated in the proposed budget for the next fiscal year.

As per the IMF report, the government has recognised the unsustainable nature of the current subsidy bill and signalled its intention to raise power prices in 2024 and beyond.

It said the government intends to avoid incurring new arrears and enable the gradual clearing of arrears and eventual phasing out of power subsidies over five years.

To this end, the authorities implemented a first round of increase in the retail electricity price by 4 percent in February 2024 and are expected to continue raising prices gradually with around four price adjustments per year.

"Electricity subsidies are thus expected to start declining from FY25."

The IMF said avoiding new domestic arrears and clearing arrears is crucial to safeguarding fiscal prudence.

Increased subsidy demands from independent power producers and fertiliser suppliers since FY22 have resulted in domestic arrears of Tk 52,000 crore, which is about 1 percent of the GDP.

"The issuance of special bonds to commercial banks at below-market interest rates to pay off outstanding debts of electricity and fertiliser companies in lieu of subsidy payments should be discontinued," the IMF said.

Since January, the government has issued special bonds worth Tk 26,200 crore, which is 0.5 percent of the GDP.

The bonds carry interest rates equal to the repo rate, below prevailing market rates for treasury bonds of comparable maturity (8-10 years) and can be used as collateral against liquidity facilities from the Bangladesh Bank, it said.

The repo rate is the rate at which the central bank lends money to commercial banks.

The government now provides 2.5 percent incentives for remittance.

The IMF said the recent exchange rate reforms make such an incentive for attracting inflows unnecessary.

"Consequently, the government is encouraged to reduce this subsidy below 2 percent and eliminate it eventually."

handkerchief soaked with chloroform.

The other accused, including Amanullah alias Shimul Bhuiyan, then executed the killing.

This was revealed in the investigation progress report submitted to a Dhaka court yesterday in the abduction case filed with Sher-e-Bangla Nagar Police Station by the daughter of the MP.

Mafuzur Rahman, senior assistant commissioner of the Detective Branch of Dhaka Metropolitan Police (DMP), filed the report to the court and sought 10-day remand for Foysal and another accused Mostafizur Rahman Fakir. However, the court granted six-day remand.

The two were arrested from Sri Sri Ma Patal Kali Temple in Chattogram's Sitakunda on Wednesday evening.

According to the report, Foysal received Azim after he was lured out of the Kolkata house of his friend Gopal Biswas. The two boarded a car and went to another place. Amanullah joined them there and they got into another car.

The three then went to the New Town flat where another accused Celesty Rahman welcomed Azim by opening the door from inside.

As Celesty went to the top floor of the triplex apartment, Shimul and the other accused took Azim to a room, said investigators.

The lawmaker had a scuffle with the accused before he fell unconscious from the impact of chloroform exposure. The accused then killed the MP, stripped the body, and tied it to a chair. Subsequently, the body was dismembered.

The investigation progress report said Amanullah and Aktaruzzaman, one of the masterminds of the killing, promised to pay Foysal and Mostafizur a handsome amount for the killing.

The two went to Kolkata from Bangladesh on May 2 and checked into a hotel. Mostafizur went to the New Town flat on May 10 and Foysal reached there two days later. They stayed there to execute the killing, reads the report.

Law enforcers in India and Bangladesh have so far arrested nine suspects, including seven who directly took part in the killing. However, the weapons used in the murder are yet to be recovered.

Meanwhile, DB chief Harun Or Rashid, also an additional commissioner of DMP, yesterday said the killers bought a chair for Tk 17,000 from a market in Kolkata and brought chloroform with them.

"Azim's body was tied to that chair ... Siam brought the weapons and gave those to Foysal," he told reporters at his office in the capital.

Investigators said they were probing to determine who benefited financially and politically from the murder. They also said that a few other suspects were under surveillance.

Harun said, "Azim was a popular MP. Aktaruzzaman took him to Kolkata saying they would discuss financial transactions."

"We are yet to ascertain a particular motive. We are examining all possible causes, including political and financial factors," said the DB chief.

He said they will interrogate Foysal and Mostafizur on remand to know about the motive of the murder.

"We are not calling in anyone without any reason. We are not harassing innocent people."

Azim went to Kolkata on May 12 and stayed at a friend's house overnight. He left the house the following day saying he would visit a doctor.

On May 22, India and Bangladesh police said the lawmaker was murdered.

DHAKA NOT FOR BEGINNERS!

Capital now 6th least liveable city on Liveability Index

HELEMUL ALAM

Dhaka is not for beginners. This is a popular saying among Dhakaites, particularly the younger ones, who often make memes and write satires on this topic.

The megacity has a multitude of challenges that can overwhelm the unprepared.

Here, the air is so polluted that it can be life-threatening.

Even an hour-long rain can bring the capital to a standstill, with city roads remaining waterlogged for hours.

Besides, traffic congestion is a regular phenomenon in this city, adding to the chaotic public transport system.

Not to mention, the overburdened and expensive healthcare system and dengue woes leave many vulnerable.

On top of that, infrastructure, often built hastily and skirting regulations, raises safety concerns with missing fire exits and questionable construction practices.

However, the metro rail service has been a breath of fresh air lately.

A recent study has confirmed what Dhaka residents have known all along -- the capital of Bangladesh is one of the worst cities to live in.

Dhaka has slipped two notches to 168th in the Economist Group's Global Liveability Index 2024 report. This decline from last year's 166th rank has placed Dhaka just above Karachi, while Kyiv, the war-torn capital of Ukraine, ranks three places higher.

The annual global survey, published yesterday, assessed the liveability of 173 cities based on stability, healthcare, culture and environment, education, and infrastructure.

Vienna, Copenhagen, Zurich, Melbourne, and Calgary top the list, while Damascus, Tripoli, Algiers, Lagos and Karachi occupy the bottom ranks.

EXPERTS BLAME GOVT

Adil Mohammed Khan, president of Bangladesh Institute of Planners, attributes Dhaka's poor ranking to a lack of significant improvements across key sectors.

"This index is prepared on different issues like education, infrastructure, communications, and health. But we do not have any such sectors where we have improved a lot," he said.

Adil acknowledged some progress in mass transit, particularly with the metro rail, but deemed it insufficient for a megacity like Dhaka.

"We have failed to prepare a good public transport system, we have failed to curb pollution, and there is a lack of playgrounds for our kids," he said.

"There is no significant sign of improvement in planning and management of Dhaka city. Many new buildings are being developed, destroying green spaces," he added.

He suggested setting five or ten-year goals to ensure systematic development.

Adil also highlighted the necessity of gradually shifting industries out of Dhaka to reduce pressure on the city.

Iqbal Habib, vice president of Bangladesh Paribesh Andolon, also criticised the government for neglecting to improve the living conditions in Dhaka in a planned way.

Modernised curriculum will help students flourish: PM

UNB, Dhaka

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday said the curriculum has been modernised to enable the hidden talents of students to flourish.

"Just reading books is not enough. We'll have to bring out the talents of small children. It needs to create scopes for them so that their hidden talents can be flourished. With that view, we've included modern technology-based knowledge in the curriculum," she said.

The premier said this while inaugurating the National Primary Education Week-2024 and conferring the Primary Education Medal-2023 in the city's Osmani Memorial Auditorium.

The prime minister said the government wants to develop a balanced, public welfare-oriented, universal and standard education system.

"We initially started

No accidents occurred due to signal error

Rail minister tells JS

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Railways Minister Zillul Hakim yesterday in parliament claimed that no accident has occurred so far due to an error in the signal system by Bangladesh Railways.

The minister said this while replying to a tabled question of Awami League MP M Abdul Latif.

He said projects are underway to establish railway connections in all districts and continuously modernise the signalling system of the entire railway, alongside procuring high-quality engines and coaches.

Meanwhile, Textile and Jute Minister Jahangir Kabir Nanak informed the House that the government has earned about Tk 10,454 crore by exporting jute from 2012-13 to 2022-23.

He came up with the disclosure while responding to a question from AL MP Morshed Alam.

Need more women in community policing

Speakers tell discussion

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Women's participation in Community Policing Forums across Bangladesh has increased over the years, but it still remains below expectations, speakers said at a discussion yesterday.

The discussion titled "Towards Gender Equality: Gender-Responsive Community Policing in Bangladesh" was organised jointly by UN Women and The Daily Star at The Daily Star Centre.

Academicians, top female police officers, legal specialists, and gender activists participated in the event.

Amena Begum, deputy inspector general (Special Branch) of police, praised community policing for preventing crimes by engaging local people, including women.

"Females are still underrepresented in the police force, which was further impacted after the abolition of the female quota in government jobs. Recently, 100 officers joined the police force through BCS, and only four of them are female," she said.

Amena emphasised the need for more female representation in the police force.

"Only one-third of female police personnel can be engaged in operational activities due to various issues, including leave and maternity leave," she added.

Tania Haque, a professor of Women and Gender Studies at Dhaka University, highlighted persistent negative perceptions toward female police members, though attitudes are gradually shifting.

Female police personnel can contribute significantly, especially at the grassroots, if provided with a proper environment and infrastructural facilities, she said.

Rekha Saha, legal aid secretary of Bangladesh Mahila Parishad, pointed to societal attitudes and beliefs that foster gender-based discrimination and violence against women.

"Community policing has a big role here. If police can reach the community with confidence and trust, a significant change may occur," she said.

Afrida Rubai, assistant inspector general (Community and Beat Policing) at Police Headquarters, said more than 49,000 CPF committees exist nationwide, with around 45,000 female members.

Afrida acknowledged that while continuous training sessions are being conducted to

Why are they fleeing abroad?

AL MP Qamrul Islam on Benazir, Matiur

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Awami League MP Qamrul Islam yesterday raised concerns in parliament about Benazir Ahmed, Matiur Rahman, and others evading the law by fleeing abroad.

"Why are those accused afraid of facing the law? Why do they flee abroad? "he asked.

He argued that these individuals' fear of the law implies their guilt.

"We who do politics are ashamed to see the pictures of all these corrupt people, bank robbers," he added.

Why are those accused afraid of facing the law? These individuals' fear of the law implies their guilt.

Ruling party MP Aroma Dutta said some opportunistic individuals are tarnishing the country's image and they should be given exemplary punishment.

Independent MP Mohammad Huchamuddin Chowdhury from Sylhet echoed the call for justice against those involved in corruption.

Another Independent MP Akhtaruzzaman said inflation should be reduced.

"The finance minister has unveiled a plan for this. But it is the same model which failed in the United States five years ago," he claimed.

'From protector to rights violator'

Speakers on the role of state

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The country's human rights situation, including freedom of expression and people's right to vote, is in crisis since the ruling class has "turned into violator from protector," said speakers at a discussion yesterday.

Many people are now apprehensive about speaking freely, said the speakers, who included university teachers, journalists, and rights activists.

Human Rights Support Society (HRSS) organised the discussion as part of its "10th Human Rights Conference-2024" at the capital's Bishwo Shahitto Kendro.

Amid such a situation, ensuring people's right to vote could be a way to express their silent opinions. However, their voting rights have been snatched away and public representatives were either elected by a small number of voters or won elections uncontested, said speakers.

Abu Sayeed Khan, advisory editor of Bangla daily Samakal, said human rights cannot be upheld without democracy since they are correlated.

However, Bangladesh as a nation had never experienced a full-fledged democracy; instead, what it has seen is "electocracy," as people could have their say during the regimes, he added.

"Yet, such rights have been snatched away and the state has become more reckless," he said, adding that a culture of fear persists in society and people cannot speak out against the powerful.

'Chai' traps in high demand

Fishing activities increase across Bagerhat amid monsoon

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Bagerhat

With its arrival, the monsoon has ushered in traditional fishing activities among locals across Bagerhat.

People, both young and old, are being seen in the numerous ponds, beels (swamps) and canals across the district catching fish.

With this, the traditional fishing traps, locally known as "chai", have peaked in demand.

Crafted with locally sourced bamboo, this trap is an ingenious and sustainable tool used in traditional fishing practice.

Unlike fishing nets which catch fish indiscriminately, the "chai" allows small and juvenile fish to escape its perforations, while leaving only larger, matured fish to be caught inside the trap. As such, it does not adversely affect fish populations in the waterbodies.

"With monsoon here, the waterbodies are teeming with fish. The 'chai' is a perfect tool for catching fish just enough for our families' consumption, while making sure the spawns and juvenile fish live to grow bigger for harvest in the next season," said Rezaul Sheikh, a seasoned fisherman from Afra village in Kachua upazila.

The demand for these bamboo traps usually peaks during monsoon, leaving local markets like Badhal Haat bustling with activity.

Craftsmen like Basu Das and Krishna Das of Sangdia village in Kachua are now making the best out of this increased demand for the traps, selling each for Tk 250-300.

"Making 'chai' is a profession passed down to us through generations. It's not only about earning money from it, but also preserving a way of life that respects the natural balance. The income from selling these traps during monsoon helps me support my family throughout the year," said Basu Das.

Md Dalwar Hossen, a trader from Badhal union who sells these traps, said people from Badhal, Morrelganj, Chitalmari, and other places in Bagerhat and Pirojpur districts come to buy the traps.

Contacted, ASM Russel, district fisheries officer in Bagerhat, said, "We have seen a dramatic decline in fish populations due to use of illegal nets. The chai traps, however, are a traditional and sustainable tool that help conserve fish stocks while supporting the local fishing community."

Flood damages new embankment

Locals question quality of work

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Lalmonirhat

A flash flood on June 20 in the Teesta shoal of Gobordhan area under Mahishkhocha union, Lalmonirhat, reportedly caused significant damage to a newly constructed embankment. This raised concerns among locals about the quality of the work.

Bangladesh Water Development Board implemented the around Tk 49.35 crore project to construct the 2,450-metre Teesta river protection embankment between January 2022 and June this year.

A total 4,55,284 concrete blocks were used to construct the embankment in eight packages, said BWDB officials in Lalmonirhat.

However, locals alleged that the project, supervised by an influential Awami League leader, was not properly executed.

They claimed contractors sold extracted sand and used inferior materials.

Ershad Hossain, representative of contractor firm Rupantar Traders, denied major damage, stating, "Only six or seven concrete blocks became loose. Those are being repaired."

Riyadul Islam, sub-divisional engineer of BWDB in Lalmonirhat, echoed him.

"The contractor is working on the repairs as well as constructing a u-drain so that water from inside can flow into the river easily. The project is being implemented as per design," he said.

The mayor said, "When I took over the post of mayor, the CCC had debt of Tk 1,075 crore. In three years, CCC's debt has now come down to Tk 440 crore."

He said a total of Tk 113.46 crore income tax and Tk 134 crore Value Added Tax (VAT) has been deposited to the government treasury.

The mayor also called upon the holding owners and government institutions to pay taxes regularly to keep civic services and development work in motion to build a clean, green and liveable city.

Trader sues SI over custodial torture

COURT CORRESPONDENT

A sub-inspector of Gulshan Police Station has been sued under the Torture and Custodial Death (Prohibition) Act for allegedly torturing a trader while in custody.

The SI is Hafizur Rahman.

Morshed Monjur, the victim, filed the case with the Metropolitan Sessions Judges' Court of Dhaka recently, additional public prosecutor Tapash Kumar Pal told The Daily Star yesterday.

Judge Mohammed Ash-Shams Joglul Hossain recorded statements of the victim and directed the Police Bureau of Investigation to submit a probe report before the court by August 19, said the state lawyer.

According to the case documents, SI Hafizur tortured the victim several times while he [victim] was in custody of Gulshan police between April 20 and 21 this year.

and growing insecurity, rights activist and HRSS chief advisor Nur Khan said anyone can become a victim at any time.

Incidents of extra-judicial killing and enforced disappearance continued to take place while people were threatened with being put in "crossfires" during different tenures of the government, he said.

Although rights groups voiced the need to form an independent commission to probe the incidents, those only started to decline when a foreign nation imposed a sanction, he added.

At present, there is a growing trend in "illegal detentions," as people get picked up and interrogated at anonymous places for two to 10 days, said Nur Khan.

He also said recent graft allegations against a former police chief and a former army chief came to light only due to media reports and not because of government steps.

He called upon the government to run a "purification campaign".

Nakib Muhammad Nasrullah, professor at Dhaka University's law department, said a major crisis in the country is that the state has turned out to be the violator of people's rights when it was supposed to promote them.

He said a government only overlooks people's concerns when it assumes power without their support.

Writer and journalist Mahbub Morshed said in present-day Bangladesh, wealthy people are becoming public representatives, while those who don't have enough money are finding it difficult to stay in the election race.

"This has created an inequity in society. As a result, society cannot function in the way it should," he added.

At the discussion, Maidul Islam, former director general of Anti-Corruption Commission, called upon rights activists to raise their voices against graft.

sensitise police personnel, these efforts are not sufficient.

She also mentioned that in Dhaka, upper-class women are joining the forums, but at the district level, that is not the case.

During Open House Day programmes, women's participation increased from 26 percent in 2022 to 33 percent in mid-2023, she added.

Gender expert Fawzia Khondker shared her experience, highlighting the lack of engagement of poor and marginalised women in community policing programmes.

"There is a token participation of females. When I was invited, I was made female affairs secretary but I wanted to be the voice of the forum," she said.

Gitanjali Singh, representative, UN Women, said, "The number of women leadership in the forces is not where we wanted it to be. We need to enable a policy framework that really allow women's entry, retention and advancement."

This requires addressing many social norms, discriminatory attitude, and perception about women in the forces, she said.

Sadia Tasneem, national consultant at the EVAW Response Programme of UN Women, presented the keynote at the event, which was moderated by Tanjim Ferdous, in-charge of NGOs and Foreign Missions at The Daily Star.

Locals suffer as boat service disrupted

SOHRAB HOSSAIN, Patuakhali

Residents in Barguna's Taltali upazila are struggling to commute as boat services on Kachupatra Canal have remained halted since May 26, due to water hyacinth.

The 300-foot-wide, 50-kilometre-long canal used to connect Payra and Andharmanik rivers, while flowing through Amtali and Taltali, until it became a closed waterbody, with embankments built on both ends around 20 years back, said locals.

Due to lack of water flow, there is often an overgrowth of water hyacinths in the canal. During the dry season, locals remove hyacinths to allow movement of boats at Betmore Kheya-ghat in Badurgachha area of Sharikkhali union.

Locals said people from around 10 villages in the area, including more than 200 students, use the boat service to commute to neighbouring Chakamaia union.

"With boat service halted, locals now have to travel an extra 20-25km and spend Tk 100-150 more to reach Kalapara town," said Abdul Barek, a local.

"A permanent bridge would reduce our suffering," he added.

Mansura Akhtar, a fifth grader, said, "We have no school in our village, so we cross the canal using boats to attend Chakamaia Government Primary School. Now, we are struggling to attend classes on time."

Farooq Khan, chairman of Sharikkhali Union Parishad, said, "The canal is too wide for a bamboo bridge. So, boats were the only means to cross the canal."

Contacted, Sifat Anayar Tumpa, UNO of Taltali upazila, said the local UP chairman has been asked to take steps to remove water hyacinths from the canal to resume boat services. "Arrangements will be made regarding construction of a bridge after discussion with authorities later," she added.

AL's deposits with banks increase to Tk 100cr

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Awami League has reported a substantial rise in its funds, now Tk 100 crore in the banks, according to the financial report for 2023.

An AL delegation, led by its treasurer AHN Ashiqur Rahman, yesterday submitted the report to Election Commission Secretary Shaiful Azim.

The ruling party's deposit was Tk 73.27 crore till January 1 last year and it stood at Tk 90.55 crore at the end of the year.

The treasurer said the party's income has increased over the last six months (from January to June 2024).

"Now our party funds have crossed Tk 100 crore. If the expenditure of other parties is Tk 10, our expenditure is Tk 2 because our activists pay out of their pockets," he told journalists after submitting the report at the EC office in the capital's Agargaon.

However, income and expenditure of the ruling party have increased over the last year compared to the previous year.

Last year, the AL's income surged to Tk 27.14 crore, a significant rise from the Tk 10.71 crore reported in 2022.

The main sources of the party's income, according to the report, were proceeds from nomination and primary membership forms. The other sources include membership subscription fees and income from assets.

Meanwhile, the party's expenditure in 2023 was Tk 9.87 crore. It was Tk 7.86 crore in 2022.

Century-old school at landslide risk

MINTU DESHWARA, Moulvibazar

The KB Ehia Government Primary School in Juri upazila of Moulvibazar is at risk of a landslide happening at any moment from a neighbouring hillock amid monsoon.

Mud and water are already sliding down the hillock, falling and accumulating on the roof of the school building.

Amid risk of further damage, academic activities at the school are in jeopardy.

According to school authorities, a hillock of around 30-40 feet tall is located just beside the one-storey school building on the east side. A lot of mud and soil has already collapsed on and around the building since heavy rains began earlier this month.

The school, established in 1921, was closed during that time due to Eid-ul-Azha and summer holidays. However, once the school reopens after July 2, its 306 students and eight teachers will be subject to the risk of a landslide happening at any time while attending classes.

Locals have expressed concern over the safety of the students.

"We were gripped by fear while attending classes before the vacation, when soil and mud started falling down the hillock beside the school. Many of my classmates stopped coming to school over fear of a landslide," said Raihan Ahmed, a fourth-grader.

Contacted, Ambia Begum, headteacher of the school, said the building on the east side is at most risk. It is already in a dilapidated state, as plasters are often falling while rainwater accumulates on the roof and leaks inside. Classes are held in one of its rooms, while the other is used as a teachers' room. In case of a landslide, the entire building is likely to collapse.

"Eid-ul-Azha and summer vacation started from June 13 and will end on July 2. We are worried because after school reopens, we would have to conduct academic activities amid the risk of landslides if there is heavy rainfall again. We informed the upazila primary education officer in this regard," she added.

Khandkar Abul Bashar, president of the school's managing committee, demanded construction of a strong wall behind the school building to prevent landslides from damaging it.

Contacted, Dilipmoy Dash Chowdhury, primary education officer in Juri upazila, said he is aware about the matter and has informed higher authorities.

Exciting lineup of Bengali films on the horizon

ZAHID AKBAR

Directed by Raihan Rafi, Noor features Jannatul Ferdous Oishee opposite Arifin Shuvoo.

In marking the occasion of the recently celebrated Eid-ul-Azha, Shakib Khan's latest film Toofan has not only broken records but also redefined the look of success in the Bangladeshi film industry. Over the past few years, films starring Shakib Khan have consistently dominated the box office post-release. All things considered, local audiences have undoubtedly and eagerly been embracing this leading star's films.

Shakib's previous film Priyotoma set the precedent, delighting audiences with the top star of Dhallywood. Following suit, Toofan has shattered records, setting a new benchmark for post-release box office performances.

Over the past few years, the love for Bengali cinema among audiences has surged dramatically, with fans flocking to cinemas in groups. So much so that tickets for Bengali films are now a hot commodity in the festive grounds that are the cinemas. Then again, this celebration of cinema isn't just confined to Eid festivities but continues to build anticipation for upcoming Bengali film releases.

For instance, the upcoming Shakib Khan starrer film Dorod, directed by Anonno Mamun, has accumulated significant audience approval with its teaser. In the film, the famed star plays a mentally unstable character blending romance and action. The teaser has captivated viewers with its diverse characters and dialogues.

In a significant departure, Bollywood actress Sonal Chauhan plays opposite Shakib Khan in the film, adding international flair to the action-packed film that has audiences thrilled.

Anticipation is also mounting for "Neel Chokro" starring Arifin Shuvoo, fresh from his acclaimed role in the Shyam Benegal directorial biopic Mujib: The Making of a Nation. Despite production delays, the film's first-look poster has already piqued audience interest.

Directed by Mithu Khan, Neel Chokro features Arifin Shuvoo alongside Mondera Chakroborty, promising a compelling narrative with a stellar ensemble cast, including Fazlur Rahman Babu, Deepanwita Martin, Shahed Ali, Tiger Robi, Monir Ahmed Shakeel, Priyontee Urbee, Masum Rezwan, and numerous others.

India march into final

Australia, and Kohli struggled initially to time the ball on a Providence Stadium pitch much slower and lower than the one in St Lucia, where Rohit flayed Australia's attack.

Kohli's miserable tournament with the bat continued on Thursday when, two balls after pulling Reece Topley for six, he was bowled by the left-arm quick.

England had another success when Pant was also out in single figures after chipping Sam Curran to midwicket.

India were 65-2 off eight overs when rain stopped play, with Rohit 37 not out and Suryakumar unbeaten on 13.

When play resumed, Rohit smashed spinner Liam Livingstone for a six and swept Curran for another remarkable six to complete a 36-ball fifty.

But with Rohit threatening to cut loose, Rashid bowled him with a googly that kept low.

Suryakumar then holed out off a slower ball from Jofra Archer into the safe hands of Jordan at long-on.

Jordan removed Pandya and Shivam Dube with successive deliveries but Patel denied him a second hat-trick in consecutive games.

England's chase never got going, with Axar striking thrice in the Powerplay.

England's plight then worsened as Kuldeep then claimed three more wickets in the middle-overs, sealing the match's fate. Pacer Jasprit Bumrah ended the proceedings by trapping Jofra Archer lbw as India reached the final of a T20 World Cup for the first time since 2016.

N Korea claims successful test to develop multiple warhead missile

AFP, Seoul

North Korea successfully tested its multiple-warhead missile capability, state media said yesterday, as dozens more trash-laden balloons sent by Pyongyang landed in the South.

Relations between the two Koreas are at one of their lowest points in years, with Pyongyang ramping up weapons testing while bombarding the South with balloons full of trash it says are in retaliation to similar missives sent northwards by activists in the South.

The balloons briefly forced Incheon Airport, Seoul's major hub, to close on Wednesday and, in response to the successive launches, South Korea has fully suspended a tension-reducing military treaty and re-started propaganda loudspeaker broadcasts and live-fire drills near the border.

North Korea claimed it had "successfully conducted the separation and guidance control test of individual mobile warheads", the state-run Korean Central News Agency (KCNA) said yesterday.

The "separated mobile warheads were guided correctly to the three coordinate targets" during the test carried out on Wednesday, it said.

"incomprehensible turn" the world is taking.

"I am delighted to accept the PEN Pinter prize. I wish Harold Pinter were with us today to write about the almost incomprehensible turn the world is taking. Since he isn't, some of us must do our utmost to try to fill his shoes," said the 62-year-old Roy.

The renowned author, who won the Booker Prize for her debut novel 'The God of Small Things', was chosen by this year's judges Chair of English PEN Ruth Borthwick; actor and activist Khalid Abdalla; and writer and musician Roger Robinson.

She will receive the award at a ceremony co-hosted by the British Library on October 10, where she will also deliver an address.

"Roy tells urgent stories of injustice with wit and beauty. While India remains an important focus, she is truly an internationalist thinker, and her powerful voice is not to be silenced," said Borthwick.

"Arundhati Roy is a luminous voice of freedom and justice whose words have come with fierce clarity and determination for almost 30 years now," said Abdalla.

zone," Israeli army spokesperson Avichay Adraee posted on X.

Residents and Hamas media said the tanks had rolled in before the post and that people from the eastern suburb were running westward under fire as Israel had blocked the road south. There was no other immediate comment from the Israeli military.

More than eight months into Israel's offensive in Gaza, aid officials say the enclave remains at high risk of famine, with almost half a million people facing "catastrophic" food insecurity.

"We are being starved in Gaza City, and are being hunted by tanks and planes with no hope that this offensive is ever ending," Jamal said.

The death of another girl in Kamal Adwan Hospital late on Wednesday raised the number of children who have died of malnutrition and dehydration to at least 31, a Gaza health official said, adding that the offensive made recording such cases difficult.

The health ministry in Hamas-run Gaza said yesterday that at least 37,765 people have been killed during more than eight months of offensive. The toll includes at least 47 deaths over the past 24 hours, a ministry statement said.

In southern Gaza, drone footage on social media showed dozens of houses destroyed in parts of Rafah, with the Swedeya village on the western side of the city completely wiped out.

Bolivia coup attempt fails

Armed forces pulled back from presidential palace; general arrested

REUTERS, La Paz

Bolivian armed forces pulled back from the presidential palace in La Paz on Wednesday evening and a general was arrested after President Luis Arce slammed a "coup" attempt against the government and called for international support.

Earlier in the day, military units led by General Juan Jose Zuniga, recently stripped of his military command, had gathered in the central Plaza Murillo square, home to the presidential palace and Congress. A Reuters witness saw an armored vehicle ram a door of the presidential palace and soldiers rush in.

"Today the country is facing an attempted coup d'état," Arce said in comments from the presidential palace, with armed soldiers outside.

A few hours later, a Reuters witness saw soldiers withdraw from the square and police take control of the plaza.

IRAN ELECTION

Two candidates drop out of race

REUTERS, Dubai

Two hardline candidates dropped out of Iran's presidential election yesterday, a day ahead of the landmark vote, and called for unity among forces supporting the country's Islamic revolution, state media reported.

Iranian's tightly controlled election today follows Ebrahim Raisi's death in a helicopter crash last month, with the outcome expected to influence the succession to Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, the top decision-maker in the clerically-ruled state.

Tehran's mayor Alireza Zakani and head of the Martyrs' Foundation Amirhossein Ghazizadeh-Hashemi exited the race, state media said. They were expected to win just 1.7 percent and 2 percent of votes respectively according to a 22-23 June poll carried out by the Iran Students Polling Centre.

Their departure leaves four presidential candidates and Zakani urged the two most prominent hardline ones to join forces to prevent moderate Masoud Pezeshkian from winning.

US health workers sound alarm on Gaza medical crisis

AFP, Washington

Patients in Gaza's few standing hospitals are dying in droves from infections resulting from a lack of protective gear and soap, even when they survive their horrific blast injuries.

And health workers are facing agonising decisions, like giving up on a seven-year-old boy with extensive burns because bandages are in short supply and he'd have probably died anyway.

These are just some of the horrors witnessed by American doctors and nurses returning from the besieged Palestinian territory, who are now on a mission to spread the word about what they saw and apply pressure on Israel to allow in more life-saving supplies.

"Whether or not a ceasefire happens, we have to get humanitarian aid. And we have to get it in sufficient volumes to meet the demands," Adam Hamawy, a former US army combat surgeon, tells AFP in an interview after a medical mission to Gaza's European Hospital last month.

"You could give all you want, you can donate," says the reconstructive plastic surgeon from New Jersey. "But if these borders don't open up to allow that aid to get in, then it's just useless."

Hamawy has volunteered in war-torn and natural disaster-hit countries for the past 30 years, from the siege of Sarajevo to the Haiti earthquake.

"But the level of civilian casualties that I experienced was beyond anything I'd seen before," says the 54-year-old, who helped save the life of Senator Tammy Duckworth when she lost both of her legs to a rocket-propelled grenade (RPG) attack on the helicopter she was flying in Iraq.

"Most of our patients were children under the age of 14," he stressed. "This has nothing to do with your political views."

Hamawy and other medics told AFP they are convinced that for now their energy is better spent lobbying the halls of power to stop the offensive and require Israel to comply with international law by letting in more aid.

Israel denies allegations of international law violations during its invasion.

On a hot June afternoon in the capital Washington, Monica Johnston, a 44-year-old ICU nurse from Portland, Oregon said she conveyed specific lists of what was needed in meetings she had held with White House officials and lawmakers on Capitol Hill.

JULY 4 ELECTION IN UK

Sunak, Starmer clash in final TV debate

REUTERS, London

British Prime Minister Rishi Sunak and Labour leader Keir Starmer went head-to-head on Wednesday night in their last debate before an election next week, with both launching highly personal attacks over their parties' credibility.

With Sunak's Conservatives trailing Labour by around 20 points in the polls, the prime minister went on the attack, accusing Starmer of not being straight with the country on migration, tax and women's rights, and urging voters not to "surrender" to the Labour Party.

Starmer responded that Sunak was too rich to understand the concerns of most ordinary Britons. A snap YouGov poll said the debate had been a tie, with both on 50 percent.

On immigration, one of the top concerns for British voters, Sunak rejected Starmer's argument that he would seek to return migrants to their home countries, saying many had arrived in Britain from Iran, Syria and Afghanistan.

Polls indicate that Starmer is on course to win the election with a large majority.

Biden, Trump to lock horns in first presidential debate

AFP, Atlanta

Joe Biden and Donald Trump were due to meet for a historic US presidential debate last night, with the stage set for what could be an inflection point in the 2024 race as millions of voters tune in to the clash of rivals.

The showdown -- between the oldest-ever incumbent and a convicted felon -- fires the starting gun on what promises to be a bruising summer of campaigning in a deeply polarized and tense United States still convulsed over the chaos and violence that accompanied the 2020 election.

With only two debates this election cycle, yesterday's high-stakes event takes on heightened significance, and both candidates have stepped up their personal attacks, with national polls showing the pair neck and neck.

"I think I have been preparing for it for my whole life... We'll do very well," Trump told right-wing network Newsmax in an interview on his debate preparation.

The president will be desperate to avoid any major gaffes.

Sudan faces famine risk in 14 areas

Says monitor

REUTERS, Cairo

There is a realistic chance of famine in 14 areas across Sudan if the conflict that began in April last year between military factions escalates further, a global hunger monitor said yesterday.

The areas include parts of the capital Khartoum, the regions of Darfur and Kordofan and El Gezira state, according to an update from the Integrated Food Security Phase Classification (IPC).

As previously reported by Reuters, some 755,000 people in Sudan face "catastrophe", the most severe level of extreme hunger. In total, 8.5 million people - or 18 percent of the population - face food shortages that could result in acute malnutrition and death, according to the update.

EU leaders sign security deal with Ukraine

REUTERS, Brussels

European Union leaders signed a security agreement with Ukraine yesterday, kicking off a two-day summit at which they will also set a strategic course for the EU for the next five years and appoint the people who will run the EU's key institutions.

Leaders of the 27 EU countries, meeting formally for the first time since European elections on June 6-9, gave a warm welcome to Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky, who made a rare personal appearance in Brussels for the signing ceremony.

Draft conclusions of the summit showed the leaders will reiterate their pledge to support Ukraine as long as it takes, stressing that "Russia must not prevail" and that Ukraine must get back the land annexed by Moscow.

They will also ask EU institutions to work out the details of a G7 deal to provide 50 billion euros in loans for Ukraine.

Takeaways from PM's India visit

Lack of progress on Teesta water-sharing issue is frustrating

It is little wonder that any positive outcome from the PM's recent visit to India has been overshadowed by a palpable frustration over the lack of progress on the longstanding Teesta water-sharing issue. Overall, as a former ambassador has put it, the two-day visit was "long on visions but short on details." And one glaring shortage or rather omission in the joint statement issued afterwards was that of the Teesta water-sharing agreement, which has remained pending for 13 years despite assurances from India's highest level. The issue didn't even appear to feature in talks. Instead, we have learnt of India's interest in a megaproject to manage and restore Teesta River inside Bangladesh, where China's competing interest would more likely complicate and delay things.

But before it becomes another geostrategic battleground for the regional superpowers, we must ask ourselves: what does the project mean for the future of the Teesta water-sharing agenda? Reportedly, it will involve dredging the river, building embankments, setting up townships and industries, irrigation, etc. Clearly, it has its benefits, if planned and executed properly, but can focusing on only one part of a transboundary river resolve the water crisis facing downstream Bangladesh, with India unilaterally controlling its flow? Will India's potential involvement in the project overshadow the water-sharing agenda? Although the PM has said there is no link between the two, concerns remain. It is, therefore, vital that while the government scrutinises all aspects related to the project, including the viability of massive investments, it also keeps demanding results from India on the water-sharing issue.

Bilateral talks during the visit also involved various other issues, with the two countries signing and renewing some agreements. One of the issues that drew significant speculations is rail connectivity, which the PM too addressed in her media briefing. The question that's being raised is, how much of it will really benefit Bangladesh? While greater regional connectivity via rail and road is important and should ideally benefit both Bangladesh and India in terms of trade and commerce, experts say the rail transit as it is being conceptualised will mostly benefit India. There seems to be a perception that whatever connectivity projects have been implemented over the last few years have benefitted India more than they did Bangladesh, allowing the former greater and more strategic passage. Examples of Europe's rail connectivity clearly do not apply if the interests of all parties are not considered equally. The government, therefore, should approach the issue with greater caution with a realistic assessment of the costs and benefits of such projects.

Another issue that caught our attention is the agreement to initiate discussions on the renewal of the Ganges Water Agreement, which will expire in 2026. This is a positive development, and it is vital that the experience of the past years is reflected in the renewal process. The Joint Rivers Commission should continue to work on the unresolved issues surrounding our common rivers, and Bangladesh must be able to protect its best interests in this and any future water-sharing treaty. We value our friendship with India, and we believe our mutual respect should result in mutual benefits in any bilateral issue. This is how the foundation of longstanding relations is nurtured.

We must be judicious about foreign debts

External debt servicing cost is becoming a growing concern

It is concerning that Bangladesh's interest payments on external borrowing are projected to increase by 65 percent within three years. This is due to rising global interest rates and an expanded foreign loan portfolio. It goes without saying that the rise in foreign debt costs will put further pressure on our dwindling foreign currency reserves. As such, it is crucial for the government to carefully analyse our debt situation before taking on any future foreign loans.

According to a finance ministry report, Bangladesh's debt interest payments alone will rise to $2.21 billion by 2027 with the taka losing 35 percent of its value against the dollar over the last two years. The principal amount is also estimated to rise by 28 percent to $3.17 billion in fiscal 2026-27, compared to the current fiscal year. Foreign loan repayments—including interest and principal amount—are projected to reach $3.82 billion in the current fiscal year. By 2027, the amount owed is expected to rise to $5.38 billion. And the proportion of external interest payments in the budget is also expected to rise from 0.9 percent in FY22 to 2.6 percent in FY27.

Two major factors are also contributing to the increase in interest payments for foreign loans. The first is that the reference rates—an interest rate benchmark used to set other interest rates—in advanced countries are expected to stay high, and the second is that Bangladesh's graduation from the category of LDCs will gradually narrow the window for getting concessional loans from external sources. The latter is something we have known for a while; therefore, the government should be in the process of preparing plans to be able to manoeuvre without hiccups in light of that fact—and if it hasn't started already, it should definitely do so now.

As the finance ministry report itself has admitted, managing these debt service obligations is essential for ensuring financial stability and preventing liquidity crisis. Since Bangladesh is not out of its forex crisis yet, this becomes even more important. Hence, not only should the government be judicious when it comes to taking loans, it should also be prudent in its use of foreign funds. Which means the government has to do a better job of choosing projects that are of high social and economic importance, and must refrain from taking on unnecessary projects that will put further strain on our external debt situation, without giving any major benefits in return.

Awami League's 75-year journey

THE THIRD VIEW

Mahfuz Anam

MAHFUZ ANAM

The history of Awami League (AL)—which started off as the Awami Muslim League (AML)—at 75 can be encapsulated under three headings: AL at birth; AL under Bangabandhu's leadership; and AL with Sheikh Hasina at the helm. From the time of its birth in 1949 to our liberation in 1971, AL can be credited with being either the author of or the main mover and participant in all democratic and cultural movements working tirelessly to strengthen the demand for the rights of the Bangalees in East Pakistan. No other party can claim to have singularly represented all our democratic aspirations as the Awami League during our days under Pakistan.

In the first phase, the two most important events that brought the AML to the forefront was first, the Language Movement, which united the people of East Pakistan and crystallised the efforts of AML to become the true voice of the people, and second, the 1954 provincial election under the banner of United Front (Jukta Front), in which AML was by far the biggest and most active partner, getting 143 seats as the party and 228 seats as part of the Jukta Front out of a total of 309 seats. These events marked AML's coming of age.

> The 1954 election proved that there was a far deeper significance of AML's birth than many people realised then and even now. It has not been studied in depth, and its significance has not been fully evaluated in subsequent research and books that have been published since.

The 1954 election proved that there was a far deeper significance of AML's birth than many people realised then and even now. It has not been studied in depth, and its significance has not been fully evaluated in subsequent research and books that have been published since. It was the beginning of the disillusionment with the ideology of Pakistan; it was the start of questioning as to whether religion could be the only foundation of a newly formed state; it presented evidence that people lost confidence in the founding party of Pakistan, the Muslim League, which never recovered later, except under the military tutelage.

Almost all the leaders who formed the new party were integral parts of the Pakistan movement, and some of them, like Shaheed Suhrawardy and Maulana Bhashani, were its front-ranking leaders. So, why after succeeding to carve out Pakistan, would these leaders and thousands of their followers move away from the party—the Muslim League—that founded the new country?

The answer is very simple. With Pakistan's birth, Muslim League suddenly revealed itself to be devoted to serve the interest of the feudal landed gentry from West Pakistan, especially that of Punjab. The so-called Pakistani leadership was not concerned with its multiple and varied linguistic and cultural heritage. Bangalees, who constituted the majority of the new country's population, found their economic rights and cultural heritage ignored and their language, Bangla, denied the status of being a state language. In fact, the death of the new country was signalled by the very man who founded it, Quaid-e-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah, when he declared in Dhaka, "Let there be no doubt that Urdu and Urdu shall be the only national language of Pakistan." That was the beginning of the end of Pakistan founded in 1947.

It was under Bangabandhu's stewardship that Awami League truly expanded its appeal to the masses and captured the imagination of the Bangalees. His was a dazzling phase—truly energising, deeply penetrating and fully capturing the attention, support and devotion of millions of ordinary people. His Six-Point Programme galvanised the people as never before and hardened their resolve to fight for their economic, cultural and political rights. Those of us, as student activists, who were witness to his meteoric rise, who had the privilege to hear his mesmerising speeches and marvelled at his courage in facing both the Pakistani elite and its formidable armed forces, and saw firsthand how he unified the Bangalees with his unmatched charisma, felt in our hearts that finally we had a leader who could realise the dream of our freedom and independence.

The victory in the 1970 general election, under Bangabandhu's leadership, was Awami League's biggest, most sweeping and politically critical achievement in that period. In many ways, it was the precursor to our Liberation War. That electoral victory gave AL the legal, moral and political right to speak on behalf of the people of East Pakistan, and declare independence and start the armed struggle when genocide was imposed on our unarmed people. AL's leadership, the role of the Mujibnagar government and especially that of war-time PM Tajuddin Ahmad were remarkable in every way. Though physically absent, Bangabandhu was present in every mukti joddha camp, and in the hearts and minds of everyone who fought for our independence.

Bangabandhu's brutal killing, along with all members of his immediate family, save the two daughters—our current PM and her sister—was the most tragic event that could have befallen us, and from which we are yet to fully recover.

Of Awami League's 75 years of existence, the last 43 have been under Sheikh Hasina's leadership. Since her return from exile in India in 1981 till date, she rebuilt AL after it suffered from deep existential crises following the brutal murder of Bangabandhu. She has not only successfully re-organised and re-energised the party, but also brought it to power in 1996, after 21 years of being in the opposition. She returned to power in 2008 and has continued till date, well on her way to completing an unbroken spell of 20 years of heading our government.

During her last 15 years of unbroken rule, she brought about remarkable advancement in the country's economic field. Her spectacular success in infrastructure development and power generation, with the capacity cost aspect being seriously questioned, is highly laudable. Bangladesh's praiseworthy rise up the development ladder can definitely be attributed to Sheikh Hasina's able and determined running of the state's affairs.

However, her grand success came with some very damaging costs. As is evidenced in history, a party in opposition and the same party in power, especially when the stay is long, presents two radically different pictures. The Awami League that began as the voice of the people has now ended up being that of an individual. The more the party stayed in power, the more its operations became centralised. From the smallest to the most significant policy decisions, they are no longer the result of debates within its ranks, but personnel choices of the leadership. From local leaders to the central, from nominations to every single post in all the levels of the elected office, the leader's wish is everybody's command.

Today, it is one of the most centralised parties anywhere in the world with the inevitable consequence of rising authoritarian tendencies in all levels of the leadership structure. The micromanagement of the party has had the same consequences as it always does: of there being no delegation of authority, no accountability at any level, and no sense of ownership of what the party does, except to carry out orders from the top.

Elections, a crucial measure of judging how a political party is faring in the public eye, is no longer valid in Bangladesh. It has lost its fundamental ability to elect genuine representatives of the people, due to both the ruling party's grip on all state institutions that guarantee free polls and the opposition's unthinking boycott of elections. Making voters insignificant has been a hallmark of the last three general elections.

As AL celebrates 75 years of its existence, there are many reasons for it to be proud of. It has many achievements that others can be envious about. Compared to many political parties in different parts of the world, AL's record can be considered exceptional.

But there are an equal number of reasons for it to be deeply concerned. Money and muscle power have replaced people's power in the day-to-day operation of this party that people once unquestioningly obeyed and unreservedly loved. Except for a few at the top, party positions today are up for grabs by the rich and the corrupt. The victory of a large number of AL's own "disobeying" candidates in the last election stands as proof as to how corrupt the original selection process was.

The party today is its own judge and jury. It only speaks to the mirror because it cannot tolerate the retort that would come if it spoke to the people. It listens only to its own music as other tunes are unpalatable. It is intoxicated by its own rhetoric and mesmerised by only those things that it wishes to see. It is a typical example of a political party living in its own bubble. And since it has monopoly control on all the levers of power, the bubble, as fragile as it is, can also be dangerous. This is so because the reality presented by the bubble can form the basis of decisions that can fatally harm us all. The handling of the issue of corruption, money laundering, misuse of power, and especially that of defaulted loans and the treatment meted out to wilful defaulters cannot be but the results of living in a bubble.

We hope we have given enough food for thought to the Awami League on its 75th anniversary.

When Dhaka lacks adequate open space to begin with, encroachment of the existing parks, like Shaheed Tajuddin Ahmad Park in Gulshan 2—that, too, with the city corporation's permission—proves that people's well-being isn't a priority for the city authorities.

Our lack of open spaces reinforces class disparity

ABIR HOSSAIN

Recently, I came across a news report announcing that one of the country's biggest real estate companies had undertaken a project to build a 500-foot megastructure in Dhaka, aiming to make it a landmark in the capital. I winced at first glance. The prospect of the project itself felt morally depraved. It seemed disconnected and dystopian, and it is. Not only does Dhaka not need a 500-foot skyscraper, but even in the context of its urban fabric, it doesn't fit in. But progress as a concept appears to be measured exclusively by murky indicators such as advances in commerce and the reaping of wealth. Moreover, the skyscraper holds the potential to attract more businesses, introduce more opportunities to invest in even bigger profit-maximising projects, and create spaces for the country's most elite to leisure in. Is that what we really need, though? And more importantly, how can such a project, which in all likelihood does not embody any aspect of our culture, become a potential landmark in the capital?

While the developers of the project have already begun selling commercial space within the vicinity, it's not like the skyscraper will mark the beginning of the end for commercial projects. Other high-rises will continue to be propped up, which will further limit the opportunity to build open spaces in the city. It is quite clear which group of people these projects will benefit, but what will be disregarded are its effects and the people who will bear the brunt of said effects. It will only aggravate the claustrophobic chaos of the capital that we live in—quite literally leaving us with no place to go.

With movement restrained, people, especially the younger demographic, are forced to resort to online spaces in search of a community. There is nothing inherently wrong with online communities, but it is a problem if that is the only means they have to meet new people. After all, online forums are unified by a common interest, which entails that their appeal tends to be reserved for certain demographics. Demographics tend to share similar and overlapping opinions and when the same views are regurgitated, it creates an echo chamber, affirming their biases. People are deprived of the opportunity to expose themselves to outlooks and ideas different from their own. The exchange of thoughts is leashed, if not completely contained, and groups of people continue to live in their own bubbles.

Without open space, these barriers cannot even be realised, let alone diminished. And the public spaces that we do have are either neglected or exclusive to upper-class neighbourhoods. Dhanmondi Lake, for instance, while housing visitors from adjacent residential areas, is grossly neglected. The smell in and around the area is unsavoury, to say the least. Additionally, it is situated in one of the most expensive neighbourhoods in the capital. While it is open to everyone, those who live around it are able to enjoy its benefits to a greater degree. The same may be claimed for Justice Shahabuddin Ahmed Park located in Gulshan—yet another area for the upper class.

The public spaces that we do have are either neglected or exclusive to upper-class neighbourhoods. Dhanmondi Lake, for instance, while housing visitors from adjacent residential areas, is grossly neglected. The smell in and around the area is unsavoury, to say the least. Additionally, it is situated in one of the most expensive neighbourhoods in the capital. While it is open to everyone, those who live around it are able to enjoy its benefits to a greater degree.

The silver lining is that these places exist, but it does beg the question of whether open spaces are a luxury reserved only for the wealthy. If that is the case, which it might as well be, we should be asking whether these spaces are open to begin with. Is it any different to the cafes and restaurants that are open only to paying customers? Spaces which can only be accessed if one has the means to consume the commodities they have to offer? The distinction between a cafe and a park is that you need social capital to access all the benefits of the latter. And being open to only a select few is something that should frighten us all. In an essay titled "The Political Economy of Public Space," David Harvey talks about how urban renewal projects are developed with the aim of separating people who are in different socioeconomic brackets. These projects enforce a sense of order where the city is geared towards serving the upper class.

If people, regardless of their socioeconomic backgrounds, are not able to congregate in a space without being forced to spend money, it truly is dystopian. Open spaces aren't just essential for one's physical and mental well-being; it quite literally is a place for people to socialise. Without open spaces, we risk being more isolated, stifling the flow of ideas, and maintaining the very same order that has put us in this position.

DSCC Mayor Sheikh Fazle Noor Taposh once said they had taken initiatives to build playgrounds in every ward. He also acknowledged that doing so is a challenge due to a lack of space. It is admirable that change is happening, but it is a shame that the authorities themselves are having trouble with building open spaces for the reason that they attributed it to. Commercial projects never seem to face similar issues. As it stands, Dhaka already has an abundance of them—a lot more than it needs—most of which are poorly built to cut costs and have endangered lives.

Open space is antithetical to these projects. It allows us to slow down, unwind, and gather. Most importantly, it reinforces the spirit of community, and being a part of a group means caring for the needs and wants of each other. Something that appears to be in short supply from our elected representatives. In the pursuit of placing cosmetic global appeal within Dhaka, the authorities and corporations have forgone what we need locally. That needs to change. I don't know if it will. I am not particularly hopeful, but the welfare of the people needs to be prioritised over the greed of corporations and industries. If there is any tangible embodiment that can enable such a change to be realised, public spaces are it.

PROJECT SYNDICATE

Assange is free, but are we?

Slavoj Žižek,
professor of philosophy at the European Graduate School, is international director of the Birkbeck Institute for the Humanities at the University of London.

SLAVOJ ŽIŽEK

I fought for years with and for Julian Assange. But upon hearing that he has regained his freedom, my first thought was that he is returning to a world that looks—and is—much worse than the one he left behind. Pandemics, wars, and widespread ecological breakdown force us to ask the big question: in what sense are we who breathe the fresh air outside prisons still free?

Even our fictional accounts are getting worse. The new children's movie Inside Out 2 follows a 13-year-old Riley at the start of puberty. Her personified emotions—Joy, Sadness, Fear, Anger, Disgust—have created a new section in her mind called the "Sense of Self." Then, four new emotions—Anxiety, Envy, Embarrassment, Ennui—arrive, and conflict ensues. Joy thinks Riley should focus on having fun at camp, while Anxiety wants Riley to win a spot on the team and make new friends. In the end, the first and second generations of emotions learn to work together to protect Riley's ever-changing Sense of Self, leaving viewers with an utterly fraudulent depiction of the human psyche.

In the real world, these internal psychic tensions often escalate to the point of madness. A much better movie would have portrayed the emotions of a Palestinian boy in the ruins of Gaza, not a girl from a wealthy Los Angeles suburb. Rather than working together to form a stable self, his conflicting emotions would push him towards psychic breakdown and suicidal acts of violence. Recall GK Chesterton's wonderful description:

"A soldier surrounded by enemies, if he is to cut his way out, needs to combine a strong desire for living with a strange carelessness about dying. He must not merely cling to life, for then he will be a coward, and will escape. He must not merely wait for death, for then he will be a suicide, and will not escape. He must seek his life in a spirit of furious indifference to it; he must desire life like water and yet drink death like wine."

Oleh Sentsov's recent film, Real, renders this combination of opposites perfectly. After spending several years as a political prisoner in Russia, Sentsov went to fight for the Ukrainian army. The film consists of 90 minutes of GoPro footage taken when he didn't realise his camera was on. Presented unedited, it depicts the strange mix of terror and boredom that defines life on the front line.

Such dualities run through the entire film. The banal brutality of the real is punctuated by magical moments of what might best be described as meaningless meaning. Sentsov recalls a moment from just before the footage in Real begins, "There was a soldier with the call sign Johnny, a veteran of the Afghan war. He was going there to evacuate the wounded, but he was hit, and he managed to make one last radio transmission, in which he said, 'This is Johnny. I'm dead.'" It is a moment of authentic metaphysical absurdity.

Many reviewers believe Real shows war as it truly is. If that was Sentsov's message, his film would be yet another pacifist paean to the meaningless absurdity of war. But though Sentsov recognises the brutal meaninglessness of the situation, he ultimately believes that the fight for a just cause must go on. Having stripped away all the romanticism of battlefield heroism, Real shows what true courage means: to accept the misery of a military struggle, and not obfuscate it with pathetic fantasies.

This is the message we need right now. In the case of Ukraine, pacifism has been used to excuse Russia's military aggression. The message from those who oppose Western support for Ukraine is, "You must not resist the occupier, because then you will become the same as him." In the Holy Land, the message is similar, but the mainstream media's reporting of events is very different. There is a consistent effort to shape and manipulate our perception of what is going on, so as to limit the emotional impact. While Israelis are killed in a "massacre," Palestinians are merely "found dead." These forms of "soft" censorship pervade public discourse.

WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange gestures at supporters after arriving at Canberra airport in Canberra, Australia on June 26, 2024.

Did you know that a large group of Israeli Jewish intellectuals recently called on all EU member states, the United Kingdom, and others to recognise the state of Palestine? This courageous act generated scarcely any coverage in Western media. Major events that might disturb the Western public's sensibilities either go unmentioned or are reported only with a small note at the bottom of the page.

How many people noticed that, on June 20, 2024, Israel enacted what amounts to an annexation of the West Bank, with the Israeli Defense Force (IDF) transferring powers there to "pro-settler civil servants"? The irony of this move will not be lost on Palestinians. While a military occupation implies some distance from Israel, this new dispensation means that they are being integrated into the Israeli civil order—albeit one dominated by chauvinists bent on excluding them.

These examples show why we need heroes like Assange. He did what needed to be done, and he paid a high price. The time has come for others to continue the work he started. By "work," I mean not just a job but a vocation: something that you are called to do. Assange did not choose to launch WikiLeaks and expose state secrets so that he could spice up his life. He did it because he could not have done otherwise. For that reason, I suspect he is a happy man, despite all the suffering he has endured.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

Our "immutable" Constitution and the paradoxes of Article 7B

Article 7B presents a complex challenge for Bangladesh's democracy. Bangladesh's aspiration for a democratic future necessitates a Constitution that can adapt to the needs of its evolving citizenry. While Article 7B's intent to safeguard our core constitutional principles is commendable, its rigid formulation undermines popular sovereignty and democratic evolution.

MD. IMAMUNUR RAHMAN and
DR. M. JASHIM ALI CHOWDHURY

Bangladesh's Constitution has seen its "basic structures" altered by several amendments. Several of those amendments altered the Constitution so drastically that we tend to call them "constitutional dismemberments"– a term borrowed from Professor Richard Albert of the University of Texas at Austin. The Supreme Court of Bangladesh declared some, such as the Fifth and Seventh, constitutional amendments, unconstitutional. Some, such as the Fifteenth, were never formally challenged.

The Fifteenth Amendment of 2011 arguably tried to protect the Constitution's basic structures from amendment, destruction, or dismemberment. It introduced Article 7B, granting an "unamendable" status to some unspecified "basic structures" and a large number of specific constitutional provisions. These include the Preamble, Parts I, II, III, and Article 150 accommodating the Fourth to Seventh Schedules of the Constitution. While proponents see Article 7B as a shield against democratic erosion, critics view it as a paradoxical grip that freezes the Constitution in time, hindering future generations' capacity to bring changes.

Some argue that Article 7B contradicts the core value of popular sovereignty (Article 7) by rendering certain provisions unalterable. It effectively militates against the people's right to self-determination, creating a constitution whose parts are considered unchallengeable. With the past dictating the present and future, some may call it a "Dead Men's Constitution." The architects of the Fifteenth Amendment, though alive now, are not eternal. Their vision, enshrined as unalterable law, raises a crucial question: Should the unalterable will of a bygone era dictate the aspirations of a living and evolving population?

Further, Article 7B undermines the core principle of a "living constitution" that should adapt alongside a nation's circumstances. Drafted in a specific historical context, a Constitution may no longer perfectly reflect the needs of a nation that has evolved over decades. However, Article 7B shackles future generations to a rulebook they may disagree with and lack legitimate means to change. This rigidity creates a breeding ground for frustration and potential unrest.

The "basic structure doctrine", championed by the Supreme Court, also aims to protect core democratic principles from erosion. This is, however, limited and the Supreme Court has the option to revise its definition from time to time. Article 7B recognises the doctrine but ironically exaggerates it by making even peripheral provisions, such as the status of Dhaka as our capital, unamendable. We already know that the judicially enumerated basic structure doctrine itself lacks a clear definition, potentially allowing the judges to interpret it subjectively. Therefore, elevating this judicial doctrine to the status of an unalterable constitutional principle through Article 7B risks perpetuating the very flaws of the doctrine itself.

Article 7B has a self-preservation paradox too. It declares certain provisions, including itself, unalterable. It raises serious questions about its validity. Was Article 7B or the Fifteenth Amendment as a whole, made by a Constitutional Assembly in the exercise of its original constituent power? Clearly not. Was it an act of a parliament exercising its derivative power of amendment? Perhaps yes. Since Article 7B was not part or basic structure of the original 1972 Constitution, Parliament should be able to use its amendment power to amend it.

Article 7B's self-entrenchment has a logic paradox as well. The "immutable Constitution" it seeks to establish is achieved through the very amendment process it restricts. Imagine a locked box with a note inside saying, "This box can never be opened." However, the note was placed by opening the box, and the instruction is to be seen upon opening the box. Similarly, Article 7B relied on the amendment process to become unamendable.

The self-preservation may set a dangerous precedent. Future regimes could exploit this logic to shield their amendments from scrutiny and hinder the Constitution's ability to adapt to unforeseen challenges. In this regard, it is worth recalling Justice A. B. M. Khairul Hoque's opinion regarding the referendum clause of the Fifth Amendment. Justice Hoque called it "a sheer hierocracy" that Ziaur Rahman amended the four pillars of the Constitution as per his sweet will and eventually made it impossible for Parliament to amend the new principles without seeking a referendum. Justice Hoque declared the referendum clause unconstitutional on the grounds of this hierocracy. Could the same logic apply to Article 7B? Article 7B seems to have a similar legitimacy crisis as did Zia's referendum clause.

"We, the people"
"We, the people"
"We, the people"

In conclusion, Article 7B presents a complex challenge for Bangladesh's democracy. Bangladesh's aspiration for a democratic future necessitates a Constitution that can adapt to the needs of its evolving citizenry. While Article 7B's intent to safeguard our core constitutional principles is commendable, its rigid formulation undermines popular sovereignty and democratic evolution. While courts typically avoid questioning internal parliamentary proceedings, Bangladesh's Supreme Court would perhaps need a more nuanced approach, if the Article 7B is ever questioned there. We must balance legal principles with democratic ideals, potentially exploring the role of judicial review in ensuring a fair and inclusive amendment process.

INTERNATIONAL LAW

Legal Stance of Bangladesh on the Palestine question

MD. SHAWKAT ALAM FAISAL

Since its independence, Bangladesh has been a staunch supporter of the Palestinian cause. In fact, Bangladesh is one of 28 United Nations (UN) member states that neither recognise Israel nor maintain diplomatic relations therewith.

Bangladesh's stance on the Palestine issue is grounded in its historical struggle for self-determination, a unique instance of remedial secession outside the colonial context. Indeed, Article 25 of the Bangladesh Constitution pledges support for oppressed peoples fighting against imperialism, colonialism, or racialism, which Bangladesh referenced in the Oral Statement on 20 February 2024, to justify its participation in the current Advisory Opinion proceedings at the International Court of Justice (ICJ) on the question of Israel's occupation of Palestine.

Previously, Bangladesh also participated in the oral proceedings of the ICJ's Advisory Opinion proceedings on the question of construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and expressed its intent to intervene in the proceedings of South Africa v Israel. Alongside South Africa, Bolivia, Comoros, and Djibouti, Bangladesh referred the Palestinian situation to the International Criminal Court under Article 14 of the Rome Statute. Consequently, its participation in the current Advisory Opinion proceedings was anticipated, with expectations regarding how it would contribute to the legal questions posed by the UN General Assembly to the ICJ on the Legal Consequences arising from Israel's Policies and Practices in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem.

In the 1st written submission, Bangladesh addressed issues on the ICJ's competence, the nature of the questions posed, the adequacy of evidence, and the potential impact of the Advisory Opinion on political peace negotiations. Bangladesh asserted that there are no compelling reasons for the Court to decline rendering the opinion, as historically, the Court has never refused to render advisory opinions.

Regarding the nature of the question and the Court's propriety, Bangladesh indicated that the Court could refer to the Wall Opinion to address jurisdictional and judicial propriety concerns. In the 2nd Written Submission, Bangladesh argued that legal and political questions are often intertwined, and that the presence of political questions does not negate or dwindle the legal nature of the issues. It affirmed that the Court had sufficient evidence from various UN sources to render the Advisory Opinion in question. Bangladesh contended that future solutions for the Palestinian people should be grounded in international law, without them having to negotiate their freedom under unlawful conditions.

Bangladesh's participation in the current Advisory Opinion proceedings is symbolically and legally significant, reaffirming its historical stance on the Palestine question and contributing to the deliberation of the Court.

Bangladesh highlighted that the legality of occupation is still debated and countered the argument that occupation can never be illegal. It proposed two frameworks, based on reports by Special Rapporteurs Michael Lynk and Francesca. Bangladesh contended that Israel's occupation policies violate both frameworks and outlined the legal consequences, stating that Israel must end its occupation, provide assurances against repetition, and make reparations.

Bangladesh's submission also underscored the Palestinian right to self-determination, supported by various international recognitions and previous ICJ opinions. Although it did not fully analyse this right, it highlighted Israel's violation of this right and the obligations of Israel, other states, and the UN to ensure its realisation.

Bangladesh's participation in the current Advisory Opinion proceedings is symbolically and legally significant, reaffirming its historical stance on the Palestine question and contributing to the deliberation of the Court.

Navigating Non-Performing Loans (NPLs) and loan defaults in Bangladesh

IFAT TASNIM

The issue of defaulting on loans continues to be the biggest trouble for the banking industry. At the end of March 2024, total disbursed loans stood at BDT 16,40,000 crore, of which BDT 1,82,000 crore were in default, the highest in the history of Bangladesh. Currently, 11.11 percent of disbursed loans have turned into NPLs.

In the banking and finance sector, NPLs and loan defaults are related terms that belong to slightly distinct circumstances. While both NPLs and loan defaults involve borrowers not meeting their repayment commitments, the remedies that banks have at their disposal for handling these situations can differ based on the particulars and the overarching regulatory environment. Loans that are seriously past due—typically 90 days or more—are referred to as NPLs. Whereas, when debtors fail to make the agreed-upon payments under the contractual obligation of principal and interest on time, it is considered that they have defaulted on their loans.

Several things can lead to defaults, such as unexpected events that affect borrowers' capacity to repay debt, company failures, financial difficulty, or even sheer negligence and unwillingness to repay on part of the borrowers. Certain industries— such as manufacturing, agriculture, and textiles— are more vulnerable to loan defaults. Another reason behind the increase of NPLs in Bangladesh's banking industry is inadequate or poor governance.

Banks may also use techniques such as pledge enforcement, hypothecation enforcement, or mortgage foreclosure to uphold security interests. Alternatively, to expedite repayment, they might choose to use negotiation techniques, such as settlement agreements or loan restructuring.

To overcome these obstacles and restore the health of the banking industry, rule of law, accountability, and transparency must be reinforced. When dealing with loan defaulters in Bangladesh, banks have a variety of options at their hands, e.g., civil litigation and looking to specialist tribunals like the Artha Rin Adalat. Banks may also use techniques such as pledge enforcement, hypothecation enforcement, or mortgage foreclosure to uphold security interests. Alternatively, to expedite repayment, they might choose to use negotiation techniques, such as settlement agreements or loan restructuring. Cross-default clauses may increase the pressure on defaulters and cause defaults on other loans. Banks may also report defaulters to credit bureaus, which might have an impact on the defaulters' credit scores and future credit availability.

To properly negotiate the complexity of loan defaults, both banks and borrowers must have extensive knowledge on these remedies. Artha Rin Adalat Ain section 22 permits the Artha Rin Adalat to appoint mediators to help parties settle their differences through mediation. These neutral third parties promote the value of a compromise in the settlement of disputes by facilitating negotiation and working to encourage consensual resolution outside of formal judicial proceedings. Finally, to effectively tackle the problems caused by NFLs and loan defaults in Bangladesh, a comprehensive strategy encompassing governance improvements and efficient application of legal and alternative dispute resolution procedures is needed.

Mother's love fuels archer Sagor's Olympic dream

ANISUR RAHMAN

This celebration followed his outstanding achievement of qualifying directly for the upcoming Paris Olympics as the second archer and overall third athlete from Bangladesh.

Sagor, the younger child of 47-year-old Selina, lost his father at the tender age of three. However, he did not face the magnitude of hardship as anticipated, thanks to the tireless efforts of his widowed mother, Selina.

Since the demise of her husband from a brain stroke, Selina has been running a tea stall in Rajshahi for the last 15 years to support her four children, including the younger Sagor. Her dedication has now paid off in abundance, with Sagor making history in Bangladesh sports and feeling like "the number one son in the world".

Selina has come to Dhaka for the third time, each visit related to Sagor, to witness the warm reception for her son. She recounted their journey and the challenges faced after losing her husband 15 years ago.

"Without my husband, I worked hard for the last 15 years by selling tea, but I never forced my children to work. I wanted to raise them as good human beings by providing them with education and other facilities I could afford. My elder son completed his honours degree, while my two daughters got married.

"I never allowed Sagor to work at the tea stall. Though he was a bit fickle-minded, he loved sports. So, I kept him close by getting him admitted to the nearby SB Archery Academy in Rajshahi," said a teary-eyed Selina, who was brought to the stage along with Sagor after he was garlanded with flowers, adding that she now feels no pain from the struggles of raising Sagor as he has made the country proud with his performance.

Meanwhile, sponsor City Group handed over a reward of Tk 5 lakh for Sagor.

A triumph soaked in tears

ASHFAQ-UL-ALAM

Since the 90s, cricket fans have come to expect three things whenever a World Cup takes place -- India beating arch-rivals Pakistan, Australia running roughshod over the competition and South Africa somehow finding a way to lose in the semifinal.

Over the years, the fans have seen the once invincible Australia become more fallible, even though their trophy case remains unmatched in international cricket.

And Pakistan too got the monkey off their backs in the 2021 ICC T20 World Cup, finally defeating India by 10 wickets.

This left South Africa's inability to get over the line in semifinals as the only constant.

Before yesterday, the Proteas had suffered heartbreak in seven semifinals, the latest of which came in last year's ODI World Cup in India, when they lost to eventual champions Australia by three wickets.

This procession of misery began in 1992, during their first participation in a World Cup after a 21-year exile from international cricket, falling victim to the later abolished rain rule, losing to England by 19 runs.

They tied against Australia in the famous 1999 semifinal but couldn't progress owing to finishing behind the Aussies in the Super Six round. More heartbreak followed in the 2007, 2015 and 2023 editions of the ODI World Cup.

South Africa's semifinal woes carried over into the T20 World Cups as well, as they lost to Pakistan and India in the 2009 and 2014 editions respectively.

The sight of South African cricketers lying on the ground, distraught, with their eyelids struggling to hold back tears after they failed to cross the final hurdle before the final once again, had become an enduring image of Protea cricket.

The fact that South Africa have managed to reach the final four in seven World Cups till 2023 is proof enough of the team's callibre. But for whatever reason, lady luck never favoured them in the semis.

With the baggage of seven failed attempts weighing on them, Aiden Markram's men entered into South Africa's eighth World Cup semifinal yesterday in Trinidad.

For their opponents, Afghanistan, this was unheralded territory, as the war-torn nation had never before made it this far in a major ICC event.

Afghanistan's inexperience at this stage was a clear advantage for the Proteas, however, keeping the ghosts of the previous failures at bay and concentrating at the task at hand, could not have been an easy task for Markram's side.

But once the action started, the mismatch in strength between the teams became apparent. The Proteas' pace attack ran through Afghanistan's defences, bowling them out for a mere 56 and the batters then completed a commanding nine-wicket win.

After fighting their way out of tricky situations right from the first round, South Africa have now made it to the final with perhaps the most dominant win in a semifinal ever. Now, the Proteas need just one more win to replace the 'choker' tag with 'champions'.

Reflection and action needed to chase int'l level

ABDULLAH AL MEHDI

Bangladesh's team are set to return to country after their participation on a global event that laid bare the deficiencies in the nation's cricket cognition, team building, planning, and mental resilience.

The Tigers returned without a win in the Super Eights of the T20 World Cup, but more disastrous was their baffling approach in those three matches. The pertinent question is: where does Bangladesh cricket go from here?

The event's ninth instalment revealed the deficiencies of the players. However, in a bigger way, it exposed the flaws in how Bangladesh perceives cricket.

First, the quality of the wickets and the competitiveness of domestic competitions must be addressed. A lack of good wickets and a competitive structure makes it difficult for selectors to gauge which players have the required quality and mentality.

Surfaces here produce 140-150 scores, and in the Dhaka Premier League, teams have not been competitive. On the other hand, the franchise Bangladesh Premier League does not always allow local players to shine in pressure situations.

"No, local players are not being tested. When [Najmul Hossain] Shanto or [Towhid] Hridoy played in the top order not long ago, they were performing [for the Sylhet franchise]. Given the opportunity, our players can perform, but that opportunity is scarce," veteran coach Nazmul Abedeen Fahim, who also coached Fortune Barishal in BPL's 2022 season, told The Daily Star.

Secondly, the national coaching panel had little influence on improving the batting unit, which proved disastrous. The team appeared rudderless, not only in terms of application but also in their battle plans. Without clarity and ownership, the players failed to follow one man's idea of how the game should be played.

"I haven't seen a team that is playing as a team. Regarding team selection, or even unity within the team, it was not seen in the last two World Cups. Hathurusingha's treatment of players, especially those that don't make the side, I felt, was not very balanced," added Fahim, who has been the mentor to many national players.

Third, the biggest factor in poor performances is bad decision-making, coupled with a significant deficiency in cricketing IQ. "Where are our players learning the game and from whom?" asks Fahim.

Coaching education is still far behind in the country, and Fahim feels that this is where reflection is needed to help players learn the nuances of the game. However, for the immediate needs of the national team players, they need to be allowed to play in foreign leagues.

"Ask Shakib where he was influenced the most as a cricketer. He will say it's county cricket where his biggest change came. It's unbelievable what playing for Sussex means. Look at Afghanistan. They are building their players by playing them outside.

"What's our goal? We have to do a lot of things so that in two years we are prepared for the 2026 T20 World Cup. So if Taskin [Ahmed] goes here and there, playing franchise cricket or county cricket, it has to be availed. It has to happen irrespective of what's happening to the national team," he said.

The need for another T20 tournament has come on the radar, and Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) is set to introduce a new T20 tournament. Fahim, however, believes more lower-tier tournaments need to be introduced.

"For instance, the Chattogram division can hold a tournament, and there, players who are still in the lower tiers in the nook and corner of the country can participate. You will see that many players with a T20 mindset will come through. There used to be the Star Summer tournament, and districts will get sponsors. It doesn't have to be like the BPL. It would be a platform for player development," he said.

As it stands, Bangladesh have a long way to go to catch up to the international level, and BCB must take bold and blunt decisions following extensive soul-searching, for a change.

However, if making the Super Eights is something BCB uses to beat their own drums, leading to not holding the coaching staff accountable for sub-par preparations, things are certain to remain the same, if not regress beyond repair.

Brazil seek improvement against Paraguay

REUTERS

Brazil face Paraguay in their Copa America Group D match in Las Vegas on Saturday (7:00 am Bangladesh Time) after a disappointing goalless draw against lowly Costa Rica in their opener left the five-time World Cup winners questioning how to sharpen their cutting edge.

A wasteful Brazil side dominated possession but were clueless on how to beat an ultra-defensive Costa Rica playing with a back five.

Paraguay, who lost 2-1 to Colombia in their first game, are expected to use a similar defensive game plan to Costa Rica.

That will pose another challenge for Brazil's 62-year-old manager Dorival Jr who will have to find answers on how his side can break deadlocks.

Attacking midfielder Lucas Paqueta, one of Brazil's most active players against Costa Rica with five shots that missed the target and one that hit the post, believes Brazil can bounce back.

"It's clear that finishing from outside the area against teams who close down and defend deep is something that we can improve, but we are still very confident that we will," Paqueta said on Wednesday.

There is no indication Dorival will make any changes against Paraguay despite the growing pressure from fans and media who are eager to see teenage sensation Endrick starting alongside his future Real Madrid team mates Vinicius Jr and Rodrygo up front.

The 17-year-old striker Endrick was Brazil's hero in Dorival's first two games in charge earlier this year.

Dorival does not want to rush the teenager into a starting role but after a run of five straight games without a win in competitive matches, Brazil's worst record in 23 years, the manager could soon be forced to listen to the crowd.

EURO LAST 16

Faltering stars and unbowed underdogs

AFP, Gelsenkirchen

Euro 2024's last 16 match-ups were confirmed on Wednesday night after Georgia snatched a spot in the knockout stage for the first time in their history with a stunning 2-0 win over Portugal.

As it turns out, the round of 16 will see some of the tournament heavyweights line up alongside ambitious underdogs, promising something special. Here, we look at each match-up along with their schedule in Bangladesh time.

Switzerland v Italy (June 29, 10:00 pm)

Italy head into Saturday's clash with Switzerland in Berlin still a work in progress after scraping into second place seconds before the end of their final Group B game with Croatia.

The defending champions will be wary of the Swiss, who will likely have four Serie A players in their starting line-up and showed in their 1-1 draw with Germany that they are perfectly capable of giving the big boys a bloody nose.

Germany v Denmark (June 30, 1:00 am)

Revitalised under Julian Nagelsmann, Germany have been alongside Spain as the best team in the group stages and will rightly be considered favourites against Denmark, who laboured to second place in the dismal Group C behind England.

Denmark coach Kasper Hjulmand said that his team always "step up" when facing the big nations but Germany will also have the backing of Dortmund's famous Westfalenstadion on Saturday night as they seek a record-breaking fourth Euros title.

England v Slovakia (June 30, 10:00 pm)

England have had a soft landing against Slovakia on Sunday after topping Group C despite putting in three hugely disappointing displays against middling opposition.

Coach Gareth Southgate was pelted with plastic cups by frustrated fans after Tuesday's goalless draw with Slovenia and performances will have to pick up if his team are to live up to their billing as one of the pre-tournament favourites.

Spain v Georgia (July 1, 1:00 am)

Luis de la Fuente's side have been the most impressive team of the tournament so far after breezing through the supposedly tough Group B with a perfect nine points and a statement win over the Italians.

Georgia's Khvicha Kvaratskhelia celebrates scoring their first goal in their stunning 2-0 victory over Portugal in a Euro 2024 group game on Wednesday. PHOTO: AFP

With almost their entire first XI, including star wingers Lamine Yamal and Nico Williams, rested in Monday's 1-0 win over Albania, anything other than straightforward passage into the quarters for Spain would be a massive shock in Cologne on Sunday.

However, Georgia are this tournament's fairytale and showed by beating Portugal on Wednesday they can spring an upset.

France v Belgium (July 1, 10:00 pm)

Possibly the most intriguing tie of the round sees two big teams yet to hit form face off in Duesseldorf on Monday.

France were unimpressive in qualifying in second place from Group D. Kylian Mbappe is the only player in Didier Deschamps' side to score a goal and that strike came from the penalty spot in a 1-1 draw with already-eliminated Poland.

Belgium meanwhile have played well in bursts but were barracked by fans in Stuttgart on Wednesday after a safety-first approach against Ukraine saw them edge into the last 16 from Group E.

Portugal v Slovenia (July 2, 1:00 am)

Portugal will be heavy favourites to get past Slovenia in Frankfurt on Monday night and coach Roberto Martinez will have a mostly rested first XI to call upon after making a raft of changes for Wednesday's defeat to Georgia which made no difference to the Group F winners.

Slovenia didn't impress in Group C, finishing third and scoring twice in three matches, but Matjaz Kek's team are unbeaten in nine games and beat Portugal 2-0 in a pre-tournament friendly.

Romania v Netherlands (July 2, 10:00 pm)

The Dutch were hugely disappointing in Group D, finishing third behind Austria and France, and should be wary on Tuesday of Romania who are in the last 16 for the first time in 24 years after topping a tight Group E.

However, Ronald Koeman, who called his team "appalling" after losing 3-2 to Austria, has been rewarded for their underwhelming displays by being placed on the easier side of the knockout bracket where off-colour England and an unsure Italy are the only heavyweights.

Austria v Turkey (July 3, 1:00 am)

Ralf Rangnick's Austria have been given the dangerous tag of tournament dark horse after topping Group D ahead of France and the Dutch, playing some exciting football in the process. Tuesday night's match with Turkey in Leipzig promises to be an entertaining affair with Vincenzo Montella's talented side being backed by huge support at every match.

India march into final

AFP, Providence

India hammered defending champions England by 68 runs in Guyana on Thursday to set up an ICC T20 World Cup final showdown against South Africa.

England, chasing 172 for victory, collapsed to 103 all out with spinners Axar Patel, who was later named player of the match, and Kuldeep Yadav taking three wickets apiece.

India will now face South Africa, who overwhelmed Afghanistan by nine wickets in the first semifinal on Wednesday to book their place in Saturday's final in Barbados.

Earlier, Rohit Sharma hit his third fifty of the tournament as India posted a challenging total of 171-7.

India, sent into bat by England captain Jos Buttler, were 40-2 in the powerplay after Virat Kohli (nine) and Rishabh Pant (four) both fell cheaply.

But a third-wicket partnership of 73 between Rohit (57) and Suryakumar Yadav (47), spanning a rain delay of over an hour, took India to 113-3 in the 14th over of a stop-start innings.

England, however, removed both the well-set batsmen before Hardik Pandya (23) and Ravindra Jadeja (17 not out) added useful runs late.

Axar then took India past 170 with a one-handed six off Chris Jordan in the last over.

Jordan took 3-37, including two wickets in two balls, while leg-spinner Adil Rashid had fine figures of 1-25 in his maximum four overs.

Israel storms Gaza City neighbourhood

Orders Palestinians to go south; 47 more Palestinians killed

REUTERS, Cairo

Israel stormed a neighbourhood in Gaza City yesterday, telling Palestinians as the tanks moved in that they must move south, and bombed the southern city of Rafah in what it says are the final stages of an operation against Hamas fighters there.

Residents of the Shejaia neighbourhood in Gaza City said they were taken by surprise by tanks rolling in and firing in the early afternoon, with drones also attacking after overnight bombing.

"It sounded as if the offensive is restarting, a series of bombings that destroyed several houses in our area and shook the buildings," Mohammad Jamal, 25, a resident of Gaza City, told Reuters via a chat app.

The Palestinian Civil Emergency Service said there were reports of people killed and wounded in Shejaia but their teams were unable to reach them because of the ongoing offensive. Three people were reported killed there in the earlier bombing, with five killed in the Sabra neighbourhood.

The armed wing of Hamas said it had detonated a pre-planted explosive device against an Israeli tank east of Shejaia.

NATURE QUEST

OH, MY DEER!

A red muntjak or barking deer, locally known as "maya horin", drinking from a watering hole at the Satchari National Park in Habiganj. Despite being native to south-central and southeast Asia, the red muntjak remains one of the least known mammals in the region. Until recently it was believed that all red muntjaks across Asia belonged to the same species. However, taxonomists now believe there may be several distinct species within the group. These nocturnal herbivores are known to be shy and solitary in nature and upon being approached or startled will make a "barking" noise, hence the name "barking deer". Along with the sound they make, their size is also roughly that of an adult dog. Though it is listed as "Least Concern" by the IUCN due to its large distribution and presence in protected areas, such as the Satchari park, degradation of habitat and hunting for body parts and meat remain a threat to their population.

PUBLIC SERVANTS

Anti-graft laws, rules relaxed over the years

BAHARAM KHAN

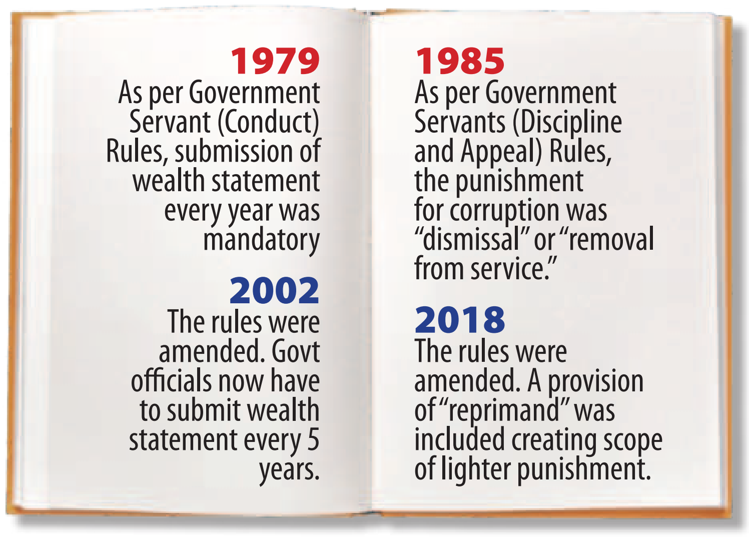
For over two decades, laws and regulations meant for curbing corruption by government employees have been relaxed, creating scope for officials to indulge in irregularities with relative impunity.

Both the BNP and Awami League-led governments made amendments to the rules, lightening penalties for corruption.

Through an amendment to the Government Servants (Discipline and Appeal) Rules (1985), the authorities in 2018 included "reprimand" as a penalty for corruption that has been proven through investigations.

Before this amendment, the punishment was either "compulsory retirement", "removal from service" or "dismissal from service".

Civil service expert Firoz Mia said relaxation of the rules and regulations would have a harmful impact in the long run.



1979
As per Government Servant (Conduct) Rules, submission of wealth statement every year was mandatory

2002
The rules were amended. Govt officials now have to submit wealth statement every 5 years.

1985
As per Government Servants (Discipline and Appeal) Rules, the punishment for corruption was "dismissal" or "removal from service."

2018
The rules were amended. A provision of "reprimand" was included creating scope of lighter punishment.

"If an investigation finds that a government employee was involved in corruption, why would the person be in service? Why should other officials work alongside the corrupt individual? What message would the colleagues get?" he asked.

Instead of creating scopes for corrupt officials to evade accountability, the government should make strict corruption-busting rules that uphold transparency, he added.

In April, an investigation found that Promatha Ranjan Ghatak, now an assistant secretary, had embezzled Tk 7.35 crore while he was the land acquisition officer in Madaripur from June 2020 to June 2021 .

On papers, he provided the money to five locals who owned plots of land that were acquired by the state for the Padma Bridge. But in reality, as public administration ministry investigations found, the plots were owned by the government, and there was no need to compensate anyone.

The punishment Promatha received was a demotion from the rank of senior assistant secretary to assistant secretary.

Feroz Mia said the penalty was not commensurate with Promatha's offence.

A joint secretary of the cabinet division, requesting anonymity, said, "Had the 1985 rules not been relaxed, the official would surely be dismissed. As long as he is there, his honest colleagues will feel uncomfortable."

In April, the government reduced the salary of Bir Amir Hamza, an assistant commissioner (land) of Bogura Sadar Upazila, for 12 months after he was found guilty of forgery for financial gains.

The punishment raised eyebrows as many of his superiors thought he would be sacked.

Many believe that the government provided impunity to the public servants by enacting the Government Services Act, 2018, which replaced Public Servants (Dismissal on Conviction) Ordinance, 1985.

According to the 1985 ordinance, a government employee punished for any criminal offence should be dismissed.

Rice prices up by Tk 2-3 a kg

Sellers attribute it to paddy price hike, mills closure during Eid

SHAHEEN MOLLAH and MUNTAKIM SAAD

Prices of almost all varieties of rice have gone up in the capital's kitchen markets over the last one week.

Traders said rice prices have increased by Tk 50 to Tk 100 per 50 kg sack because of the price hike of paddy and the closure of rice mills for the Eid-ul-Azha.

The prices of the staple have soared at a time when the county has sufficient stock.

Visiting several markets in the capital yesterday, The Daily Star found that retailers were selling, depending on quality, Miniket rice for Tk 62 to Tk 68 a kg, Nazirshail for Tk 65 to Tk 78, BR-28 and BR-29 for Tk 54 to Tk 56, coarse grain rice for Tk 54, and coarse hybrid rice for Tk 48.

Before the Eid on June 17, the retail prices of these varieties were lower by Tk 2-3 per kg.

Nayeem Hossain, a private service holder, said he had bought Miniket rice from a store in East Shewrapara at Tk 72 a kg before the Eid. For the same variety of rice, he had to pay Tk 75 yesterday.

Abul Hashem, owner of Hashem General Store at Ibrahimpur Bazar in Kafrul, said he sold Miniket rice for Tk 68 a kg a week ago, but the staple sold for Tk 70 yesterday. Similarly, the price of BR-28 rice has gone up to Tk 55 per kg from Tk 53 a week ago.

"The price hike in the wholesale markets is having an impact on the retail prices," he said.

Alamgir Hossain, manager of Suchana Rice at Mohammadpur Krishi Market, attributed the rice price hike to the increase in paddy prices.

He said the prices of Miniket and Nazirshail rice have gone up by Tk 100 per 50 kg, while the price of BR-28 rice has increased by Tk 50 per 50 kg.

Maiden triumph or return to glory?

The ninth edition of the ICC T20 World Cup will draw to a close today with a never-seen-before matchup in the final, as inaugural champions India take on first-time finalists South Africa for the right to call themselves the best in the world in the shortest format of the game.

The match, set to take place at the Kensington Oval in Barbados starting from 8:30 pm Bangladesh time, will draw the curtains on perhaps the most unique edition of the T20 World Cup so far.

The tournament was set to be different from the onset, with 20 teams competing, the most in any cricket World Cup, and the USA co-hosting the event for the first time alongside the West Indies.

More surprises got unravelled as the tournament kicked into gear, with the drop-in pitches in the USA and the sluggish wickets in the Caribbean making way for some low-scoring yet exciting encounters throughout the competition.

A number of shocking results also took place, with the USA's stunning win over Pakistan and qualification to the Super Eight and Afghanistan triumphing over Australia and making it to the semifinals for the first time topping the list.

After four weeks of action across North America, India and South Africa, the two undefeated sides in the tournament, are the final two standing.

US PRESIDENTIAL DEBATE

Flop show rocks Biden campaign

AFP, Atlanta

A badly wounded Joe Biden looked to get his re-election campaign back on track yesterday after a debate performance that unnerved supporters and left allies of Donald Trump unable to conceal their glee.

Democrats had hoped to see the president defiantly answering critics who say he is too old for a second term while hammering Trump on his criminal record and the threat they say he poses to democracy.

Instead, many acknowledged, they got a faltering display from a candidate who sounded hoarse for much of the showdown, stumbled over words, pulled punches, often stared open-mouthed and looked confused.

"There are no two ways about it -- that was not a good debate for Joe Biden," Democratic former White House communications chief Kate Bedingfield told host network CNN as the curtain came down on the match-up.

David Axelrod, a senior advisor in Barack Obama's administration, said Biden's performance had "confirmed people's fears" about an 81-year-old being too old for the Oval Office.

The president, who had spent days in mock debates at his Camp David retreat, was scheduled to begin the clean-up yesterday with his largest event of the campaign, in the battleground state of North Carolina.

Ten extremist books, 29 leaflets, 1 diary, 2 madrasa identity cards, 2 NIDs, 2 mobile phones and Tk 4,590 were seized from their possession.

Teams from the intelligence wing of Rab headquarters, Rab-15 and Rab-7 conducted the operation Thursday night, Commander Arafat Islam, director of the legal and media wing of Rab, told journalists yesterday.

After the Eid holidays, the arrestees left home and gathered in Cox's Bazar to conduct secret meetings, Arafat said.

They joined Ansar al-Islam after being inspired by the rise of the Taliban in Afghanistan, he added.

"The activities of Ansar Al Islam almost came to a standstill in the face of regular operations by Rab and other law enforcement forces. Due to disruption of activities in the name of this organisation [Ansar Al Islam], they formed a new militant group named 'As-Shahadat' with the ideology of Ansar al-Islam and are carrying out recruitment activities."

The unknown tomb in Mohammadpur

SK MEHEDI HASSAN

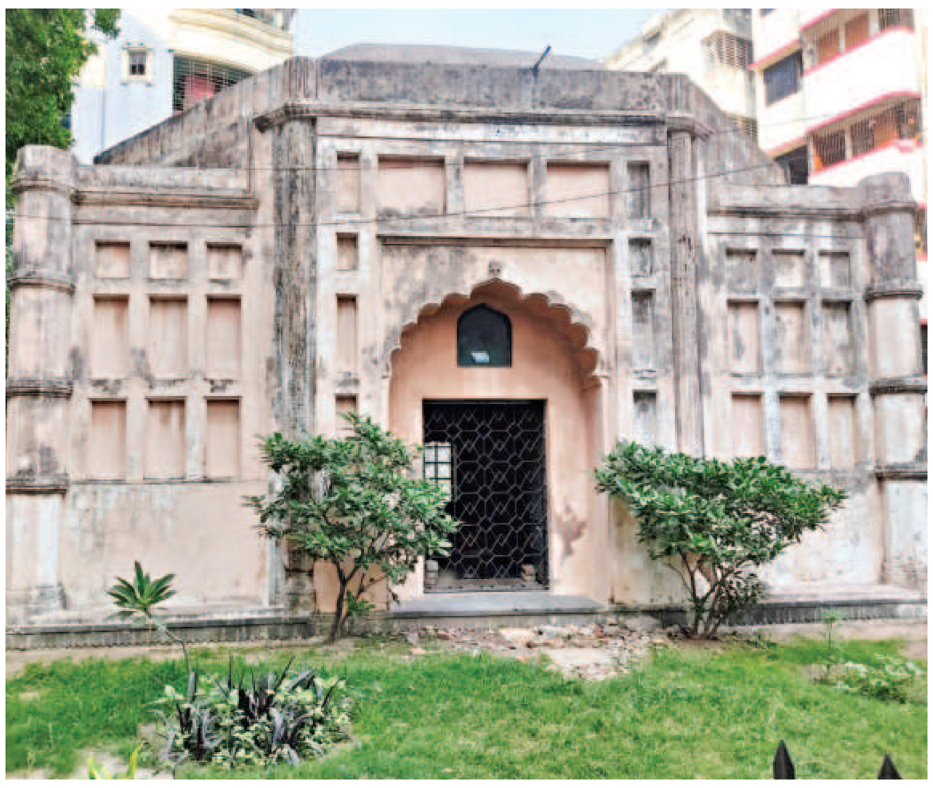

PHOTO: STAR

Between Shia Mosque and Mohammadpur Bus Stand, a mausoleum stands at Banshbari, easily visible on the left. On the other side of the road is the historic Sat Gambuj Mosque and today, surrounded by numerous modern buildings, the sepulchre stands out because of its unique design and structure.

"Whose grave is this?" -- I often wonder. With utmost curiosity, I asked several locals this very same question, but no one could provide a clear answer.

From the outside, the structure looks like a Nawab's house. The old building evokes a forgotten past with its style, shape, and use of materials, intriguing people about the story behind it.

Archaeologists and historians suggest that the building belongs to the Mughal era. Buildings of that era have a uniform pattern of structure and character, including large bulbous domes, slender minarets at the corners, massive halls, large vaulted gateways, and delicate ornamentation.

Unknown Tomb

Regarding the mausoleum, Nuruzzaman Sheikh, a resident of Mohammadpur, said, "I see the structure regularly but never thought about whose grave it might be. When the government itself doesn't know, how would I?"

The Department of Archaeology has a signboard that reads: "Unknown Tomb: The tomb appears to be an inseparable part of Sat Gambuj Masjid. According to the legend... one of the daughters of Nawab Shaista Khan was buried in it."

Shaista Khan governed Bengal for 24 years (1664-1688), with a break for a little over one year in 1678-79. His tenure as subahdar was the longest. Of Iranian origin, his family was connected with the Mughal royal family.

As even the Department of Archaeology cannot determine who is buried there, a mystery always shrouds the structure.

Besides, there are two more graves on the tomb premises, but no statement clarifies who they belong to. It is assumed that the graves are of those who took care of the tomb.

On a sunny afternoon, I visited the spot. The gate was open, and the premises were fenced with iron bars, with no one around the structure.

There are four doors on four sides. I got close to one of the doors. Amid the chaotic life outside, an eerie silence existed inside the building. A large grave with a green cloth covering the surface was visible.

In a dimly lit, ancient tomb, several candles flickered, casting eerie shadows on the walls. Amidst the glow, a man seemed to pray.

The air was thick with mystery as if the secrets of the past were silently watching over the scene.

While I was getting out, I looked back. The mysterious tomb of Mohammadpur stood as an enigmatic relic of history -- its silent walls echoing with unanswered questions and forgotten tales from centuries past.

A deputy jailer and the chief prison guard of Bogura District Jail have been suspended from their posts over negligence in duty following the jailbreak of four death row convicts early Wednesday.

Md Hosenuzzaman, deputy jailer, and Farid Uddin, chief prison guard, were suspended on Thursday, jail authorities told The Daily Star.

Earlier on June 26, prison authorities also suspended three other prison guards, Bogura District Jail Superintendent Anwar Hossain said.

Three held with foreign liquor worth Tk 2 crore

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Patuakhali

The Narcotics Control Department arrested three people along with large quantities of illegal foreign liquor worth about Tk 2 crore in Patuakhali early yesterday.

A lorry along with 26,880 cans of Chinese beer were seized in a raid at the toll plaza area of Patuakhali Bridge on the Patuakhali-Barishal highway, said Patuakhali Narcotics Control Department Assistant Director Enayet Hossain.

The arrestees are Mehedi Hasan Rabbi, 23, of Nachnapara Chowrasta area of Patuakhali's Kalapara upazila, lorry driver Rubel Munshi, 27, of Barishal's Kaunia area, and Basirul Islam, 28, of Dinajpur's Fulbaria Municipality area.

Of them, Basirul and Mehedi are working for Patuakhali's Payra Power Plant's contractor Chinese company, Oriental Pearl.

Enayet said the consignment was seized based on a tip-off. It is believed that these beers came from China to Kalapara via Payra Port. This is the biggest consignment of illegal beer seized in Barisal division.

A case has been filed with Patuakhali Sadar Police Station over the incident.

Quoting the lorry driver, the DNC official said each can contain 330ml of beer and the market value of the seized beer is around Tk 2.15 crore.

Narendra Modi on June 24 opposing any water-sharing talks with Bangladesh without the state's involvement, reports our New Delhi correspondent.

Jaiswal said India's internal committee on the renewal of the Ganges water-sharing treaty has submitted its final report. He, however, did not disclose its content.

India and Bangladesh signed the Ganga water-sharing accord in 1996. The 30-year treaty is due to expire in 2026 but may be extended by mutual agreement.

Last Saturday, Prime Minister Narendra Modi after meeting his Bangladeshi counterpart Sheikh Hasina in New Delhi announced that the two countries will begin technical-level discussions on the renewal of the treaty.

In the letter to Modi, Mamata had claimed that the decision to start talks for the renewal of the Ganges water-sharing treaty with Bangladesh was "unilateral" and urged him not to hold any discussion with Bangladesh without involving the West Bengal government.

Asked if any payment of fees and deployment of security personnel were discussed while signing the MoU allowing Indian railways to access Bangladesh territory, Jaiswal said those can only be answered by technical experts.

"These are technical questions and these will be addressed by technical experts at the right time."

The MEA spokesman said India and Bangladesh are working to enhance connectivity to promote bilateral trade and in other areas to take the relationship to a higher level.

AL to hold

The AL announced its programme yesterday saying that it will hold a discussion at 3:00pm today in front of its central office on Bangabandhu Avenue, around 1.6km away from the BNP headquarters.

This is the third time since the January 7 parliamentary polls the ruling party is organising a programme to counter BNP's.

On January 30, the BNP took out black flag processions in the capital calling for dissolution of the 12th parliament. On the same day, the AL organised nationwide rallies protesting "undemocratic activities" of the BNP and Jamaat-e-Islami.

The ruling party held "peace rallies" since December last year apparently to counter the BNP's demonstrations demanding general election under a non-party neutral administration.

Anti-graft laws, rules relaxed over the years

As per the 2018 act, an employee can be in service even after being sentenced to up to 12 months in prison for a criminal offence.

The 2002 amendment to the Government Servant (Conduct) Rules-1979 is yet another example.

According to Section-13 of the rules, civil servants had to submit their wealth statement to their departments every year.

But now the employees have to do it every five years, thanks to an amendment to the rules during the tenure of the BNP-led alliance government in 2002.

Many officials do not bother with submitting their wealth statements it at all, sources said.

Besides, the public administration ministry has taken an initiative to further relax this provision. The ministry proposes that the government collect the employees' wealth statements from annual tax returns if necessary.

Former secretary Badiur Rahman said that weakening the law means encouraging corruption.

The lenient rules and laws send a message to the government employees that they can get away with corruption, he said. "These amendments are a step in the wrong direction."

Only stringent laws can deter corruption, he added.

Supreme Court lawyer Arif Khan said, "Enacting laws or regulations that encourage corruption is tantamount to ignoring the Constitution."

The Constitution states that the government will enact laws so that no citizen can possess illegal wealth. According to Article 20(2) of the Constitution, "The State shall endeavour to create conditions in which, as a general principle, persons shall not be able to enjoy unearned incomes..."

Over the last few weeks, corruption by several government officials hogged the headlines.

Awami League leader and lawmaker Mahbubul Alam Hanif on June 25 told parliament that corruption had eclipsed the government's achievements.

"The government has repeatedly announced its zero-tolerance policy against corruption... The rules and regulations have been relaxed and made more lenient. There is scope for errant officers to be on job with the bare minimum penalties."

He said the Government Services Act, 2018, could be "considered a law to protect criminals".

On June 26, lawmaker Kabirul Haque said corruption had become institutionalised.

filed with Sher-e-Bangla Nagar Police Station by his daughter.

According to investigators, all the suspects of MP Azim's murder went into hiding after detectives arrested Amanullah alias Shimul Bhuiyan, the coordinator of the killing mission, on May 19.

"Foysal and Mostafiz are the followers of Amanullah, a leader of outlawed Purbo Banglar Communist Party. They worked as two main associates for Amanullah in the murder of the MP," said DB chief Harun Or Rashid, also an additional commissioner of the DMP, yesterday.

He said the duo were involved in different criminal activities on Amanullah's instructions.

Regarding the hideout in the temple, the detectives said Foysal and Mostafiz returned to Bangladesh on May 19 from Kolkata after the killing of the MP on May 13. They then called Aktaruzzaman, one of the masterminds of the murder, over the phone to pay the blood money.

Aktaruzzaman, now believed to be hiding in the US, then gave them Tk 30,000.

With the money, the duo first went to Chandranath Temple on the Chandranath Hill of Chattogram and tried to stay there.

Investigators said there is a police outpost on the hill. The area is also under the coverage of CCTV cameras, they said.

When the two approached the on-duty police personnel, they were told that they could not stay at the temple.

But at their request, the police personnel asked the duo to go to Patal Temple at the foot of the hill saying that they could stay there at night, said investigators.

The two then went to the temple. Posing as cousins, they identified themselves as Shimul Roy and Polash Roy.

Quoting devotees at the temple, the detectives said no one could doubt their activities.

The duo used to perform all rituals, said investigators, adding that they went on two-day leave during the Eid-ul-Azha.

Requesting anonymity, a police official said Foysal and Mostafiz left the temple on June 15 and went to Ramgarh area of Khagrachhari.

The two celebrated Eid at the home of Foysal's friend in Khagrachhari, said the official, adding that the two returned to the temple after Eid.

A top police official questioned how those working at the police outpost failed to identify the two suspects as their photos were supposed to be available at all police stations.

Police were also looking into this, the official said, adding that detectives did not get any tip-off from the police outpost.

Azim went to Kolkata on May 12 and stayed at a friend's house overnight. He left the house the next day saying he would visit a doctor.

On May 22, India and Bangladesh police said the lawmaker was murdered.

market, said millers have hiked the rice prices gradually since the reopening of the mills after the Eid.

"Prices of paddy have been increasing for the last two-three days, but the millers started hiking the rice prices after the Eid," he added.

Chitta Majumder, owner of Majumdar Traders, a leading rice importer of the country, yesterday said that there was enough stock of rice and paddy in the country.

He said many farmers are not selling their crop now in anticipation of further increase in prices.

"The paddy we bought for Tk 1,300 per maund a week ago now costs Tk 1,380," he told The Daily Star.

He said even though rice is cheaper in India compared to Bangladesh, they cannot import the staple.

"This is because the selling price of the imported rice would be higher by Tk8-10 per kg than the price of a similar variety of local rice as we have to pay import taxes and VAT," he added.

Flop show rocks Biden campaign immediate future, he told reporters he had done "well" as he stopped off at an Atlanta Waffle House with First Lady Jill Biden after coming off stage.

He added that he was croaking because of a "sore throat" and that, in any case, it is "hard to debate a liar."

Although Biden managed to pin down Trump on abortion rights and his role in the violence that marred the 2021 handover, he waited bafflingly long -- almost 45 minutes -- to bring up Trump's felony convictions and other legal woes in any detail.

He spoke under his breath and appeared at times to lose focus, pausing for several seconds after stumbling in the opening stages.

Trump's performance was far from accomplished -- his verbal fusillades were littered with falsehoods and he dodged several times when asked what he would do about the opioid crisis ravaging middle-class families.

He also refused to clearly commit to accepting the results of November's election, playing into the narrative that he has little respect for democracy or the rule of law.

CNN reported that while Biden made nine false or misleading statements, Trump made a staggering 30, including "egregious" falsehoods on abortion, the US Capitol insurrection, health care and NATO.

But the Republican -- who is countering Biden's rally with an appearance of his own in Virginia on Friday -- largely avoided the rhetorical landmines that exploded under Biden.

At one point, the president bizarrely declared that "we finally beat Medicare," as the discussion turned to funding the health insurance program for seniors.

A Biden replacement?

As the disappointment of Biden's showing registered with Democrats, there was even talk of finding a new candidate before the party's convention in August.

Democrats -- "including members of his own administration -- traded frenzied phone calls and text messages within minutes of the start of the debate as it became clear that Mr. Biden was not at his sharpest," the New York Times reported.

Some also "privately discussed among themselves whether it was too late to persuade the president to step aside in favor of a younger candidate," the paper added.

Even a German official coordinating cooperation with the United States told a German newspaper that Democrats should consider replacing Biden as their candidate.

"There's been a lot of chatter in our circles about Newsom," one party strategist told political outlet The Hill -- although California governor Gavin Newsom quickly shut down suggestions that he could take Biden's place.

In the Trump corner, pundits reveled at how the night turned out.

Keith Nahigian, a Republican veteran of six campaigns who helped prepare multiple election candidates including John McCain for debates, told AFP that Biden's performance was "the worst I've ever seen."

"Biden called for this debate a few months ago. He pushed for this debate. I think he just sunk his presidency," he added.

Ralph Reed, chairman of the conservative Faith and Freedom Coalition, compared the debate to a prize fight "that should have been stopped in the early rounds."

Maiden triumph or return to glory?

India's journey to the final has been smooth, as barring the first round match against Pakistan, which they won by six runs, they have hardly been tested, overpowering every opponent en route to their third T20 World Cup final.

By comparison, South Africa's road to the final has been bumpy and full of obstacles.

The Proteas edged Nepal and Bangladesh by one and three runs respectively in the first round in low-scoring thrillers, held their nerves against West Indies in their final Super Eight game which had turned into a virtual quarterfinal and then thrashed Afghanistan in the semifinals -- their first win in a World Cup semifinal after seven unsuccessful attempts.

The win over Afghanistan lifted a weight which had been weighing down the South African team since the 1992 ODI World Cup, when their dreaded streak of semifinal defeats began.

Now, Aiden Markram's side will be stepping into uncharted waters in the final, while Rohit Sharma's team will come face to face with a hurdle they have come to dread in recent years.

India have enjoyed a dominant phase in the last decade across three formats, reaching the knockout stage in nine ICC tournaments and making the final five times – T20 World Cup in 2014, ODI World Cup in 2023, ICC Champions Trophy in 2017 and the ICC Test Championship in 2021 and 2023.

However, in all five finals, the Men in Blue got bested. The defeat to Australia in last year's ODI World Cup final in front of over 130,000 home fans in Ahmedabad was particularly scarring for Rohit's team, a side that had come into that final undefeated, much like they have done in the current event.

Today's final in Barbados is an opportunity for Rohit and his team to exorcise the past demons and take India back to the top of the mountain in T20Is for the first time since 2007. Meanwhile, for South Africa, the match is the chance to pass over the 'chokers' moniker to India and replace it with champions.

‘Take action to prevent child marriage’

UN under-secy-general urges to invest in girls’ education

PORIMOL PALMA

Child marriage in Bangladesh is deeply troubling, and effective and immediate action is required to put an end to it, said UN Under-Secretary-General Dr Natalia Kanem.

“We have seen girls aged just 12 who are pregnant. This is deeply worrying, and society needs to realise it and take action in this regard,” said Dr Kanem, who is also executive director of the UN Population Fund (UNFPA).

She was in Dhaka recently for a two-day global dialogue on demographic diversity and sustainable development, marking the 30th anniversary of 1994’s landmark International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) in Cairo.

In an interview with The Daily Star, spoke on the progress made since the ICPD in Cairo and the challenges and ways out in the days to come.

She said ICPD put women and girls at the centre of development, and there has been remarkable progress in women’s development, alongside their sexual and reproductive health.

“For example, maternal mortality fell by one-third. In Bangladesh, it fell by 38 percent. There were many policies and laws enacted, like the Prevention of Oppression Against Women and Children Act 2000 in Bangladesh,” Kanem said.

The dividend comes when you invest in girls’ education. This will ultimately lead to multiple benefits in health, productivity, and income.

NATALIA KANEM

However, the ICPD agenda remains largely unfinished, with child marriage being one of them, she added.

According to UN data, 51 percent of girls in Bangladesh are married before their 18th birthday and of them, 15 percent are married before the age of 15. Additionally, at least four percent of boys are married before the age of 18.

“It is very risky to have a pregnancy at such a young age. Teaching them safe sexuality and delaying pregnancy are of critical importance,” Dr Kanem said.

When such young women give birth to children, they face health risks, alongside higher risks of gender-based violence, she said.

If the mother is educated, a family enjoys better health and economic conditions, eventually leading to a better-off future generation, while the opposite happens otherwise, she added.

“The dividend comes when you invest in girls’ education. This will ultimately lead to multiple benefits in health, productivity, and income,” she also said.

Another objective of ICPD was to end maternal and child deaths, but that goal is far from being achieved despite notable progress.

Sharing her experience of visiting facilities at the Santal community in Gaibandha, where UNFPA-trained midwives deliver babies, Dr Kanem said before only three percent of women used to go to the facility but now it has gone up to 20 percent.

“Three midwives delivered 494 children there. The people were so happy,” she said, noting that pregnant women visiting such facilities for deliveries and pregnancy-related advice help in a great way.

In general, 33 percent of deliveries take place at homes, which is dangerous. The challenge now is how to decrease it, she said, adding, “Bangladesh has leadership, but massive social awareness is required and media can play a role here.”

Uphold ideals of Liberation War

Chief justice urges journos; 3 get Bazlur Rahman Smrity Padak

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Chief Justice Obaidul Hassan yesterday called upon journalists to adhere to the principles of those who sacrificed their lives during the 1971 Liberation War in their professional work.

Speaking as the chief guest at an award ceremony, he commemorated journalists such as Shahidullah Kayser, Shaheed Saber, Sirajuddin Hossain, and Selina Parvin, who laid down their lives for the country’s independence.

Highlighting the contribution of the Liberation War Museum, Hassan praised the institution’s efforts to educate future generations.

He said without such institutions, many aspects of the Liberation War would have been lost.

He urged the audience, especially the public representatives present, to establish research centres at the grassroots to spread the spirit of the Liberation War.

The Liberation War Museum organised the event to present the Bazlur Rahman Smrity Padak-2023 awards for journalism.

Ahmad Istiak, a reporter from The Daily Star, and Jharna Moni, deputy chief reporter of the Bhorer Kagoj, jointly received the award in the print media category.

AUG 21 GRENADE ATTACK

Road to justice still not over

HC yet to conclude hearings on death references, appeals

ASHUTOSH SARKAR

It is still uncertain when the August 21 grenade attack cases will reach the eventuality although the High Court has so far held hearings on death references and appeals for 91 working days since December 5, 2022.

The cases were filed after the gruesome attacks on an Awami League rally at Bangabandhu Avenue in Dhaka on August 21, 2004, leaving at least 24 people dead and 300 injured.

The then opposition leader Sheikh Hasina, now the prime minister, narrowly escaped death in the incident.

Then the defence counsels have placed arguments for 30 days till June 12 before the bench on behalf of 24 convicted accused out of total 49.

The HC bench will resume the hearing on June 30, court sources said.

Once the defence lawyers finish placing arguments, the state counsels will make arguments against the convicted accused and then the defence will give reply to their (state) arguments, Deputy Attorney General Bashir Ahmed told The Daily Star on June 20.

After concluding the hearings, the HC bench will deliver a verdict on the death references, and the appeals, filed by the convicted accused challenging the trial court judgement.

Govt ‘sheltering the corrupt’

Alleges BNP leader Farroque

UNB, Dhaka

The Awami League government is providing shelter to numerous corrupt individuals like Aziz Ahmed and Benazir Ahmed, alleged BNP chairperson’s advisory council member Zainul Abedin Farroque yesterday.

“Where is Benazir [former police chief Benazir Ahmed], Aziz [former army chief Aziz Ahmed], Matiur [revenue officer Matiur Rahman] today?” he questioned.

Speaking at a demonstration, the BNP leader said new corrupt individuals like National Board of Revenue first secretary [Taxes Legal and Enforcement] Quazi Abu Mahmud Faisal have emerged.

“In Bangladesh, there are numerous individuals thriving under the shelter of the government, who have amassed crores of taka by plundering. These people must be exposed, or the people of Bangladesh will never forgive you [government],” the BNP leader said.

Farroque, a former opposition chief whip in parliament, criticised the AL general secretary for his political rhetoric supporting the government amid increasing allegations of corruption against government officials. “The people are very conscious. You’re in power with the support of a few bureaucrats. You have not been able to win over the people,” he claimed.

Projonmo Bangladesh, a pro-opposition platform, organised the programme in front of Jatiya Press Club, protesting the government’s agreement with India.

The BNP leader strongly opposed the Indian government’s plan to develop a network of railway tracks through Bangladesh to connect the northeast region with the rest of India.

‘Introduce ration for RMG workers’

DU CORRESPONDENT

A rationing system must be introduced for readymade garment (RMG) workers and low-income people, demanded participants at rallies in Dhaka yesterday.

Bangladesh Garment Sramik Sanghati and the National Garment Workers Federation organised the separate programmes in front of Jatiya Press Club.

The speakers also sought the cancellation of tax exemptions for illegal “wealth earners and money launderers”.

They said although the lion’s share of remittance comes from the RMG sector, no budget allocation is kept for them, they said.

Low-income people are intimidated when the new budget comes, as taxes on goods increase every year, said the participants.

Taslima Akhter, president of Bangladesh Garment Sramik Sanghati, and Babul Hossain, its general secretary, were among those present.

SHARIFA'S TALE

Removing it from textbook was a submissive decision

Says Nirmul Committee

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Ekattorer Ghatak Dalal Nirmul Committee yesterday condemned the education ministry's decision to remove the story titled "Sharifa's Tale" from the seventh-grade textbook under the new curriculum, terming the decision "submissive".

In a statement, the pro-Liberation War platform demanded that the ministry immediately withdraw the decision, calling upon the government to make the curriculum inclusive.

Nirmul Committee said the new curriculum has been formulated based on pluralism but is facing a setback because of such recommendations.

The education ministry recently decided to remove "Sharifa's Tale" from the seventh-grade textbook following recommendations of a probe committee and instructed the National Curriculum and Textbook Board to take necessary steps regarding the decision.

Nirmul Committee said the new curriculum has been formulated based on pluralism but is facing a setback because of such recommendations. It said communal forces have been creating obstacles to implement the curriculum, demanding legal action against those who were running campaigns both online and offline against it.

"Sharifa's Tale" was included in the history and social science book for seventh grade in a section on "human similarities and differences". This chapter was designed under the new curriculum to raise public awareness about transgender people.

Prof Md Moshiuzzaman, acting NCTB chairman, recently told The Daily Star the story would be replaced in the next academic year. The textbook would still have a topic for the same learning outcome, but with a different narrative.

The story drew significant attention after an adjunct faculty member of BRAC University tore out the pages containing it during an event. A video of this incident went viral on social media.

On January 24, the education ministry formed a five-member committee to review "Sharifa's Tale". The committee recommended dropping the story in May.

12-year-old boy drowns in river

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Mymensingh

A boy drowned while he was swimming in the Old Brahmaputra river in Mymensingh's Gafargaon upazila yesterday morning.

The victim is Masum Billah, 12, son of Saidul Islam. Quoting locals, Md Abu Bakar Siddique, officer-in-charge of Gafargaon Police Station, said Masum Billah, a student at a local madrasa, along with five other boys went to swim in the river in Char Bhatipara.

Masum suddenly drowned in the river. His body was recovered around noon.

'We demanded concrete bridges, got wooden ones'

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Lalmonirhat

The local authorities have constructed a total of 12 wooden bridges to replace makeshift bamboo ones over canals and streams across Roumari and Char Rajibpur upazilas in Kurigram.

Of those, nine bridges were constructed in Roumari and three in Char Rajibpur with funds from the Rural Infrastructure Maintenance (Test Relief) Programme under the Ministry of Disaster Management and Relief.

Separated by the Brahmaputra river, the two upazilas are dotted with canals and small rivers and are largely affected by river erosion and flooding. The residents of the villages face immense difficulties in commuting to the upazila headquarters due to poor communication.

For years, the residents have been using makeshift bamboo bridges to cross the waterbodies crisscrossing through the two upazilas. They have long been demanding the construction of permanent concrete bridges to ease their suffering.

"We had demanded construction of concrete bridges, but the authorities built these wooden ones. These will not last long. At least these are less risky than bamboo bridges. However, we urge the authorities concerned to construct concrete bridges to enhance communication in these areas," said Atiar Rahman, a school teacher in Kalapani area under Char Rajibpur upazila.

"Earlier, local farmers had to carry their produce to markets on foot using the bamboo bridge on the Jalchhera river. Now the newly constructed wooden bridge will allow battery-run easy-bikes to ply, making things a bit easier. We are happy, but would have been happier if our demand for a permanent concrete bridge was met," said Nur Mandal, a farmer from the upazila's Khajarghat area.

Akkel Ali, a farmer from Char Lalkura village under Roumari upazila, echoed him.

According to Mohammad Shamsuddin and Lutfar Rahman, project implementation officers of Roumari and Char Rajibpur upazilas respectively, each wooden bridge is 50-100 feet long and was built at a cost of Tk 2-4 lakh.

Contacted, Biplab Hasan, lawmaker from Kurigram-4 constituency, said letters have already been sent to the authorities of the relief department and Local Government Engineering Department to construct concrete bridges on several small rivers and canals in phases.

and defence will have scope to move appeals before the Supreme Court.

Then few years' time may be needed by the Appellate Division for disposing of the appeals, and later on, the parties will have an option to move review petitions challenging the apex court judgement.

That is why, it cannot be said at this stage how much time will be needed for reaching the finality of the cases, he added.

A Dhaka court on October 10, 2018 sentenced 19 people, including former state minister for home Lutfozzaman Babar to death in the two cases filed in connection with the grenade attacks.

Nineteen others including BNP acting chairman Tarique Rahman were given life imprisonment and 11 people were handed different terms in prison.

Eighteen of the convicted accused, including Tarique, who is in London, are absconding and 31 are in jail.

The death references of the cases reached the HC on November 27, 2018, for examination of the trial court's verdict.

On January 13, 2019, the HC accepted the appeals filed by the convicts for hearing. The same day, the HC bench of Justice M Enayetur Rahim (now a judge of the Appellate Division) and Justice Md Mostafizur Rahman also stayed parts of the trial court verdict that fined the convicts.

Officials of the BWDB admitted that the waterbody has been filled up by silt from upstream again after excavation.

Visiting the areas along the canal recently, this correspondent observed that the canal has turned into a drain in many places, while agricultural lands on its banks lie barren due to a lack of water for irrigation.

"Siltation has hindered the canal's flow, leading to a shortage of water for irrigation, so we are unable to cultivate crops on our lands," said Ramjan Ali Sayem, a farmer from Uttara Housing area.

Abul Kalam, a resident of Dewannagar area, said, "Even a little rain triggers waterlogging as the canal cannot drain away rainwater."

Monjurul Alam Chowdhury, administrator of Hathazari municipality, said he has urged a high official of BWDB to re-excavate the canal and free it from occupiers.

Some structures including a culvert built by grabbers over the canal were demolished in 2023, he added.

Contacted, Mohammed Sohag Talukder, sub-divisional engineer of BWDB (Hathazari sub-division), said the canal was filled up by siltation due to natural causes.

"At present, there is no fund for re-excavating the canal. However, we are trying to get allocation for it as the canal is important for local agriculture and drainage in the area," he said.

SHEIKH RUSSEL PARK IN N'GANJ

Once abandoned, now a green haven

SAURAV HOSSAIN SIAM, N'ganj

Sheikh Russel Park stands as a lush green oasis, providing much-needed respite to residents of the densely populated Narayanganj city.

Once an abandoned 18-acre plot beside a waterbody in Deobhog area, the park is now a vital recreation space under the supervision of the Narayanganj City Corporation.

Originally owned by Bangladesh Railway, the land was left unused for years before plans emerged to sell it as residential plots.

Protests by city dwellers led to a change in plans, and Rajuk identified it as a recreation space in its 2010 Detailed Area Plan.

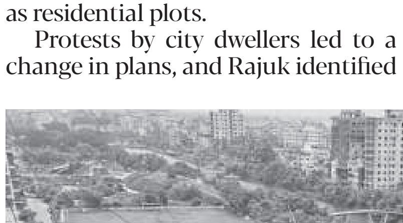
In 2011, Mayor Selina Hayat Ivy initiated the excavation of the waterbody and the establishment of the park at a cost of Tk 57.67 crore. The park was named after Sheikh Russel, the youngest son of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman. Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina inaugurated it in November last year.

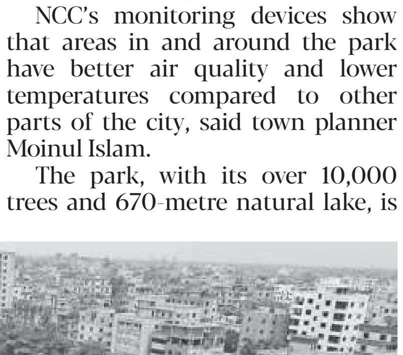
The park features a lake with clear water and blooming lilies, surrounded by a walkway. It boasts a playground, ample open space, a swimming pool with nominal fees, and a free swimming facility in Gymkhana Lake, an extension of the park.

"Earlier, there were hardly any open spaces to sit in peace in this city. This park has become a blessing in the middle of this concrete jungle," said Bithi Poddar, a visitor.

NCC's monitoring devices show that areas in and around the park have better air quality and lower temperatures compared to other parts of the city, said town planner Moinul Islam.

The park, with its over 10,000 trees and 670-metre natural lake, is also set to include bamboo bushes and fruit trees to create a sanctuary for birds and other species.





Jahirul Islam, joint secretary of Narayanganj Nagorik Committee, said, "For making a positive impact on the overall environment, it would be apt to call the park the lungs of city."

Locals urged the authorities to keep the park accessible by avoiding commercialisation.

Contacted, Mayor Ivy said, "This park is a major step towards making the city more child and eco-friendly."

Workers load bags of fly ash, imported from India, onto trucks. For each truck they load, the group is paid Tk 1,200. Fifteen workers load around eight trucks per day, meaning the group earns Tk 9,600, leaving each worker with Tk 640 to their name. This labour intensive task often leads to these workers suffering from respiratory problems and other diseases. The photo was taken at Chai Point in Khulna recently.

Heavy vehicles putting Teesta bridge in danger

S DILIP ROY, Lalmonirhat

Due to excessive plying of stone-laden trucks, the Sheikh Hasina Teesta Bridge over the Teesta river and its connecting roads are getting dilapidated and risky.

Even two months ago, the 15-kilometre connecting roads on both sides of the bridge had three barrier posts to prevent heavy vehicles from plying it. The authorities of Local Government Engineering Department removed those and opened the bridge to all types of vehicles.

Since then, around 300 trucks, loaded with 30-50 tonnes of stones each from Burimari Land Port, started using the bridge daily. Due to this, the bitumen cover of the bridge's road, as well as of the connecting roads, is getting removed, leaving the road surface dilapidated and prone to accidents, said locals.

Kakina-Mahipur road is a very important route for residents and traders of four upazilas in Lalmonirhat to connect to the land port and other areas including Rangpur city.

More than 10,000 light vehicles ply the bridge daily.

Since the past two months, the bridge and connecting roads have become risky for lighter vehicles due to the damage to the roads caused by the stone-laden trucks.

The 850-metre bridge was constructed over the Teesta River at a cost of about Tk 131 crore at Mahipur in Rangpur' s Gangachhara upazila.

The prime minister inaugurated it on September 16, 2018. Its connecting roads were widened and renovated spending over Tk 22 crore this year.

"Businesspersons with political backing pressed the LGED authorities to remove the barrier posts and allow heavy vehicles to ply the bridge and use the connecting roads. The move has led to the roads getting damaged and making it risky for lighter vehicles," said Shamsul Alam, a trader in Mahipur area.

Nazrul Islam, a truck driver, said, "We use this route as it reduces our distance by around 50km, saving us time and money, instead of going to Rangpur through Lalmonirhat town. There is also no toll on the bridge, which benefits us."

Contacted, Mohammad Shahjahan Ali, executive engineer of LGED in Rangpur, said, "We are taking preparations to repair the bridge's bitumen cover. Also, heavy vehicles will be barred from using the bridge. A meeting was held at Rangpur divisional commissioner's office in this regard recently."

Foreign minister calls for strong Muslim Ummah

UNB, Gazipur

Criticising the Israeli occupation in Gaza, Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud yesterday said what's going on in Gaza is unbearable and such incidents occur because of lack of unity among Muslim Ummah.

He made the remarks at the 36th convocation of the Islamic University of Technology in Gazipur yesterday morning.

Addressing students, the minister said, "Currently, people have become self-centered. As a result, humanity is nonexistent now. I urge you not to become like machines."

The convocation ceremony, held at the university's auditorium, was presided over by Vice-Chancellor Prof Mohammad Rafiqul Islam.

Organisers said 543 students from 14 countries graduated in the convocation. Of them, 480 were from Bangladesh and 63 international students.

WATERLOGGED KULAURA HEALTH COMPLEX

Walkway brings relief to patients, visitors

MINTU DESHWARA

Persistent rain in Kulaura of Moulvibazar district has left the upazila health complex severely flooded over the past 15 days.

The entire area is now waterlogged, causing immense hardship for patients and their families.

In response to this crisis, a group of volunteers took swift action and constructed a temporary 250-foot walkway in front of the hospital. This initiative has greatly alleviated the suffering of those affected, earning widespread praise from locals.

Three traders of Kulaura took the initiative to construct the makeshift platform on the upazila health complex premises.

They are Atiqur Rahman Akhoi, Iqbal Hossain Sumon and Abdul Qayyum.

Seeing their initiative, members of some social organisations also came forward with support. The long walkway was built with everyone's efforts, said locals.

Dipak Biswas, a relative of a patient, said he was regularly getting sick after having to cross knee-deep dirty water in the hospital yard. If he crossed using a rickshaw, then he had to pay triple the regular fare. However, this platform has alleviated the issue.

Mifta Mia, a resident of East Karergram area, said her grandson was admitted to the hospital due to pneumonia. It was difficult for her to travel to the hospital amidst flooding for over five days.

Now, she is able to visit her grandson without any challenges.

Another patient's relative, Husna Begum said her daughter was under treatment in the hospital for four days. She had already spent excessive rickshaw fare a few times to visit her daughter. However, construction of the platform spared her further unncessary expenses.

Atiqur Rahman Akhoi said the walkway was built voluntarily.

By doing this, people's suffering was reduced to some extent.

Even during the flood of 2022, the traders association took the same initiative in this hospital, he added.

Dr Ferdous Akhtar, upazila health and family planning officer in Kulaura, said as the hospital premises is about one and a half feet lower than the main road, waterlogging occurs even if it rains a little.

In the last financial year, a proposal was sent to the ministry through the health engineering department to raise the drain and road in front of the hospital, but it was not addressed, she said.

The matter has been informed to the local lawmaker, she added.

Excavated 4 years back, siltation and encroachment fill up canal again

SIFAYET ULLAH, Ctg

The Bangladesh Water Development Board excavated a six-kilometre stretch of Mithachhara canal in Chattogram's Hathazari upazila in 2019 at a cost of Tk 49.96 lakh.

However, within just four years, the canal has been filled up with silt, hindering its flow of water and triggering waterlogging in adjacent areas.

The seven-kilometre-long canal, which flows through the upazila and Chittagong University's hilly areas to join Boalia canal to fall into the Halda river, was vibrant around 30 years back, with local farmers largely dependent on it for irrigation.

Rampant encroachment, including by two brick kilns in Dewannagar area, alongside siltation, left it shrunk and gradually dying between 1995 and 2010.

After the excavation, the canal briefly returned to its former glory around 2020, before siltation began filling it up once again, said farmers.

Resist all evil forces: Quader

BSS, Dhaka

The country's young generation should come forward to resist all evil forces, said Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader yesterday.

He made the call while inaugurating a cycle rally, marking the 75th founding anniversary of the AL.

The AL second-in-command also kicked off the "Cycling for Health" campaign during this time.

Dhaka North City Corporation Mayor Md Atiqul Islam organised the campaign at Manik Mia Avenue in the capital.

Speaking on the occasion, Quader said India is a tested friend of Bangladesh.

He also called upon the youth to join AL, saying AL led the country's independence struggle.

"We will honor our commitment to creating job opportunities for the youth. The Awami League is dedicated to guiding the nation's youth towards a brighter future," he said.

China planning 'major' reforms

Says Xi Jinping

AFP, Beijing

Chinese President Xi Jinping yesterday said the ruling Communist Party was planning and implementing "major" reforms, ahead of a closely watched political conclave that is expected to put economic recovery high on the agenda.

The world's second-largest economy is beset by a debt crisis in the property sector, low consumption and high youth unemployment.

Xi said in a speech policymakers "are planning and implementing major measures to further deepen reform in a comprehensive manner".

It was announced on Thursday that the Third Plenum -- a meeting historically watched for signals on economic policy direction -- will take place in Beijing in mid-July.

Roof collapse at Delhi airport kills one, injures 8

Heavy rain disrupts Indian capital

REUTERS, New Delhi

Heavy rainfall and winds brought down a roof at the main airport in New Delhi yesterday, killing one person and disrupting flights from a domestic terminal, while flooded streets and traffic snarls threw daily life out of gear in India's capital.

The airport area received about 148.5 millimetres of rain over three hours in the early morning, more than the average for all of June, according to India's weather office. Experts blame climate change for extreme heat followed by heavy rain.

The city of 20 million people, who faced searing heatwaves earlier this month, received 228.1 mm (9 inches) of rainfall at its main Safdarjung weather station in the 24 hours ending 8:30am (0300 GMT) on Friday, a 266 percent departure from normal.

A portion of the canopy and supporting beam at the departure area of Terminal 1 collapsed and flight operations were shut down until 2:00pm (0830 GMT), India's aviation minister told reporters.

The entire terminal, one of three at the country's biggest and busiest airport, was evacuated and an inquiry ordered into the collapse, said the minister, Kinjarapu Rammohan Naidu.

Rescue work had been completed and eight injured people were taken to hospital, Atul Garg, the director of Delhi Fire Service, said.

At least eight flights were cancelled and 47 were delayed while departures from Delhi airport were running late by an average of 40 minutes, according to data from flight tracking platform Flightradar24.

3 die in Ctg market fire

Razzaq, deputy assistant director of the Fire Service and Civil Defence in Chattogram.

"Eight fire engines rushed to the spot and doused the blaze around 5:30am."

Razzaq also said the fire gutted five shops and caused a loss worth Tk 30 lakh.

Since the market remained closed on Fridays, most employees and owners closed up shops on Thursday night and headed back to their village homes, with some staying back.

Minhazur Rahman, a resident on the fourth floor, first smelled smoke and alerted others of the fire around 1:40am. Thick smoke blocked the stairs, so around 20 residents went to the roof and escaped to an adjacent building.

Sajjad Miah, owner of Ajwad Telecom of the market, also a resident on the fourth floor, said he had gone to his village home at Satkania on Thursday night.

The deceased Shahed was a staffer of his shop and also his roommate.

"Shahid's friend Ismail was staying the night with him as I was not there."

Sajjad said Shahed had called him after the fire broke out.

"Shahed told me a fire caught on the ground floor of the market. I told him to go to the roof, but he said he could not see anything due to thick smoke.

"I was on the phone with him for around 20 minutes before the call got disconnected."

Children dying of starvation city of Rafah as Israel ramped up its attacks there. These days, they struggle to survive, living along the polluted coastline of Asda'a — near the Al-Mawasi tent camp — where they cannot find enough food, water, or even shade from the Gaza heat.

"We have to keep moving from one area to the other because of the war and the invasion... Life is difficult," his mother said. "We don't even have a tent over our heads."

Israel's war in Gaza has depleted the territory's health system, leaving staff unable to treat malnourished children. Doctors told CNN they are being forced to turn away parents begging for baby milk, unable to even triage young patients with chronic illnesses compounded by severe hunger.

And as Israel continues its siege on Gaza, preventing aid groups from getting enough food into the enclave, parents say they have no choice but to watch their children starve to death. More than eight months of bombardment has shredded infrastructure, wiped out communities and laid waste to entire neighbourhoods. Sanitation systems — already stressed by water shortages from extreme heat — have been heavily destroyed, according to the UN, diminishing access to clean water.

A report published Tuesday by the Integrated Food Security Phase Classification (IPC), which assesses global food insecurity and malnutrition, warned that almost all of Gaza will face famine within the next three months.

Almost all of Gaza will experience crisis or worse levels of food insecurity in the next three months, according to a projection by the Integrated Food Security Phase Classification. And nearly half a million people are at risk of starvation amid Israel's siege of Gaza.

The UN's food agency earlier warned that southern Gaza could soon see the same "catastrophic levels of hunger" recorded previously in the north, where Israel concentrated its military offensive in the early days of the war.

At least 34 children have already died of malnutrition in Gaza, the government media office reported on June 22. The true number could be higher, as limited access to Gaza has impeded aid agencies' efforts to fully assess the crisis there. More than 50,000 children require treatment for acute malnutrition, the UN's agency for Palestine refugees (UNRWA) said earlier this month.

Since October 7, Israeli offensive in Gaza killed 37,658 Palestinians and injured another 86,237 people, according to Gaza health officials.

As Younis suffers in his mother's arms in Gaza's south, children in the north have been dealing with food shortages even longer. In the Jabalya refugee camp, they queue at a water truck, beads of sweat rolling down their faces, as they weave through the rubble-filled streets.

Dozens of other Gazans crowd together to access water as aid workers nearby distribute thick, steaming red soup from large saucepans.

It's rare access to food and clean water. Those in the north told CNN they have resorted lately to drinking polluted water, which does little to help dehydration and spreads infectious diseases.

Earlier this year, the UN warned that Israel is creating an "entirely man-made disaster" in Gaza. Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu has denied allegations by the International Criminal Court's chief prosecutor that he has used "starvation of civilians as a method of warfare."

The impact on the ground is visceral.

Newborn babies and pregnant women are among the most at risk of malnutrition and dehydration in Gaza, according to aid agencies and health workers. Undernourished mothers are more likely to give birth prematurely, with newborns dying because they weigh too little.

At the Kamal Adwan Hospital in northern Gaza, doctors were unable to keep baby Amal alive just four days after her birth.

CNN filmed the moments before her death, showing Amal drawing heavy breaths in an incubator, after her mother, Samaher, gave birth two months prematurely. Her tiny pink toes are covered in plastic tubes.

"These babies are dying. It is God's decision, but it is caused by people," her father, Ahmed Maqat, told CNN, after she died on Saturday. Samaher had endured months of her pregnancy without sleeping, eating or drinking, Maqat said.

"Everyone in these beds today is at risk of dying. We are waiting for them to die one by one," he added, his voice quivering with grief. "We have no life."

strikes that killed "dozens" of militants in the north.

Hamas's armed wing, the Al-Quds Brigades, yesterday said it was fighting in the northern Gaza neighbourhood of Shujaiya and had targeted Israeli troops with mortar shells.

Meanwhile, Gaza's civil defence agency said Israeli forces had targeted the agency's headquarters while advancing in western Rafah.

Multiple agency staff were wounded, while two fire engines, an ambulance and an excavator used for rescuing people from under rubble were damaged, one of the agency's officials Mohammad al-Mughair told AFP.

On Thursday, a military spokesman told residents and displaced Gazans in a social media message to leave "for your safety".

Climate change

did not explain the extent of this month's heatwave and that climate change had made it more intense.

The assessment also found that similar past events in Saudi Arabia occurred in May and July, but now June experiences more severe heatwaves.

"The deadly heat during this year's hajj is directly linked to fossil fuel burning and has affected the most vulnerable pilgrims," said Davide Faranda, a scientist at France's National Centre for Scientific Research who worked on the ClimaMeter analysis.

Climate change has made heatwaves hotter, more frequent and longer lasting. Previous findings by scientists with the World Weather Attribution group suggest that, on average globally, a heatwave is 1.2 C (2.2 F) hotter than in preindustrial times.

centre of the Low and thence northeastwards to Assam across southern part of Bangladesh. Monsoon is active over Bangladesh and strong elsewhere over north Bay.

Panchagarh logged the country's highest rainfall of 51mm in 24 hours till 6:00am yesterday.

The country's highest temperature was recorded in Chuadanga at 37.5 degrees Celsius over 24 hours till 6:00am yesterday while the lowest temperature was in Madaripur at 23 degrees Celsius.

Day and night temperatures may fall slightly over the country in the next 48 hours beginning at 9:00am today.

Bielsa wants more

but Bielsa feels they still have much to prove.

"Without underestimating the strengths of the two teams we faced, those teams are not among the main competitors for the title," the former Leeds United boss said.

"Respectfully, I think that there are some very significant steps to be taken. Drawing conclusions today would be incorrect.

"Winning two games without facing the best teams in the competition does not allow us to define ourselves as one of the most important teams, that is a long way from being confirmed."

Uruguay now have a three-point cushion at the top of their group after the United States lost 2-1 to Panama, meaning a draw against the hosts in their final match will secure top spot.

Asked how well the players were adapting to his style, Bielsa added: "As for the identification with our way of playing, that is being verified game by game.

"In the previous match we had 15 minutes of the second half with a different performance than the rest of the match, today there was also a similar period where the production was different, for a certain time we stopped creating danger for the opponents."

his injuries around 9:30am.

Sub-Inspector (SI) Tajul Islam of Cantonment Police Station said the truck driver fled the scene after the accident and efforts were underway to identify the vehicle.

The bodies were handed over to the family without autopsy, as per the family's request, he said.

The other victim, Alfaz, lived in Mirpur-12 area with his family. He was travelling on a pickup truck when the driver of the vehicle lost control, causing it to overturn in Khilkhet area around midnight.

With severe injuries, he was rushed to a local hospital from where he was shifted to DMCH, where he was declared dead around 1:00am, his brother Mahfuz Hossain said.

TRUMP-BIDEN DEBATE
FACT CHECK

AFP, Washington DC

US President Joe Biden and Republican challenger Donald Trump traded barbs Thursday in the first debate of the 2024 election campaign.

AFP fact-checked what the candidates said on key issues.

'MIGRANT CRIME'

Trump falsely claimed that under Biden, "we don't have borders anymore."

"Because of his ridiculous, insane and very stupid policies, people are coming in and they're killing our citizens at a level that we've never seen. We call it 'migrant crime.' I call it 'Biden migrant crime.'"

Following criticism over record border crossings and a bipartisan immigration bill that faltered in Congress, Biden signed an executive order early this month to temporarily shut down the border to asylum seekers after certain daily limits are hit.

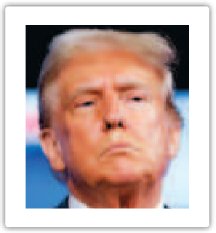
Violent and property crimes are near the lowest levels in decades, according to FBI data from 2022, the most recent year for which figures are available.

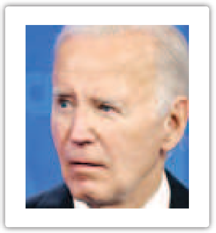
Other research has also found migrants commit fewer violent crimes than US citizens, including a Cato Institute report published this week that found migrants are less likely to be convicted of murder in the state of Texas.

INFLATION BLAME

Both Trump and Biden sought to defer blame for rising prices by criticizing each other's economic policies.

"He causes inflation. I gave him a country with essentially no inflation," Trump said after reciting his favorite, but false, line about ushering in the greatest economy in US history.





Biden countered by saying Trump "decimated the economy" and there were "no jobs" when he took office.

When Trump left office, inflation was around 1.4 percent.

Unemployment was about 6.4 percent, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, down from its peak of 14.8 percent in April 2020.

Inflation started to climb in April 2021. It continued to balloon under Biden's presidency, hitting a peak of around nine percent in June 2022 before falling to its current level of about three percent.

REWRITING JANUARY 6

Trump attempted to deflect blame for the January 6, 2021 attack on the US Capitol, over which he was impeached, by pointing to former House speaker Nancy Pelosi.

"I offered her 10,000 soldiers, or National Guard, and she turned them down," he falsely claimed.

The House committee that investigated the January 6 attack wrote in its final report that Trump "never gave any order to deploy the National Guard."

Trump also insisted again that "the fraud and everything else was ridiculous" in the 2020 election he lost to Biden, claims officials from both parties have refuted.

Dozens of lawsuits aimed at overturning the election failed, while audits and recounts in battleground states reaffirmed Biden's win.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION
Limited choices as Iranians vote
Vote unlikely to alter policies, may shape Khamenei succession

REUTERS, Dubai

Iranians yesterday voted for a new president following the death of Ebrahim Raisi in a helicopter crash, choosing from a tightly controlled group of four candidates loyal to the supreme leader at a time of growing public frustration and Western pressure.

The election coincides with escalating regional tension due to war between Israel and Iran's allies Hamas in Gaza and Hezbollah in Lebanon, as well as increased Western pressure on Iran over its fast-advancing nuclear programme.

While the election is unlikely to bring a major shift in the Islamic Republic's policies, its outcome could influence the succession to Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, Iran's 85-year-old supreme leader, in power since 1989.

Khamenei called for a high turnout to offset a legitimacy crisis fuelled by public discontent over economic hardship and curbs on political and social freedom.

"The durability, strength, dignity and reputation of the Islamic Republic depend on people's presence," Khamenei told state television after casting his vote. "High turnout is a definite necessity."

The next president is not expected to usher in any major policy shift on Iran's nuclear programme or support for militia groups across the Middle East, since Khamenei calls all the shots on top state matters.

However, the president runs the government day-to-day and can influence the tone of Iran's foreign and domestic policy.

A hardline watchdog body made up of six clerics and six jurists aligned with Khamenei vets candidates and approved only six from an initial pool of 80. Two hardline candidates subsequently dropped out.

Three candidates are hardliners and one is a low-profile comparative moderate, backed by the reformist faction that has largely been sidelined in Iran in recent years.

Critics of Iran's clerical rule say that low and declining turnouts in recent years show the system's legitimacy has eroded. Just 48% of voters participated in the 2021 presidential election and turnout plumbed a record low of 41% in a parliamentary election in March.

State television showed queues inside polling stations in several cities. Polls were due to close at 6:00pm. (1430 GMT), but are usually extended as late as midnight. Authorities said the result would be announced today.

If no candidate wins at least 50% plus one vote from all ballots cast, including blank votes, a run-off between the top two candidates is held on the first Friday after the result is declared.

Prominent among the remaining hardliners are Mohammad Baqer Qalibaf, parliament speaker and former commander of the powerful Revolutionary Guards, and Saeed Jalili, a former nuclear negotiator who served for four years in Khamenei's office.

All four candidates have vowed to revive the flagging economy, beset by mismanagement, state corruption and sanctions re-imposed since 2018, after the United States ditched Tehran's 2015 nuclear pact with six world powers.

ELECTION IN FRANCE
Far-right extends lead ahead of polls

REUTERS, Paris

France's far-right National Rally (RN) extended its lead in a poll published on the last day of campaigning before tomorrow's (Sunday) first round of parliamentary elections, with another survey showing it in sight of a slim majority.

Marine Le Pen's anti-immigrant, eurosceptic party has led polling since President Emmanuel Macron called a surprise snap election this month that has plunged France into uncertainty and unnerved European neighbours and financial markets.

A new OpinionWay poll published by Les Echos newspaper on Friday showed the RN could reach as much as 37 percent of the popular vote, up two percentage points on its score a week ago.

Macron's centrist bloc Together party was seen reaching 20 percent, down by two points from the last publication. The New Popular Front leftwing alliance stood at an unchanged 28 percent of the vote.

BFM TV, in a different poll compiled by Elabe, calculated that the RN and allies could end up with 260-295 seats in the new parliament - potentially crossing the 289-seat bar for an absolute majority giving them a clear mandate to govern.

Accurate seat projections are tricky because the outcome depends on results in 577 constituencies across France. Moreover, after Sunday's first round, rivals to the RN may team up and withdraw candidates in tactical moves to defeat far-right candidates in the July 7 second round.

TOP EU COMMISSION POST
EU leaders back Von der Leyen for 2nd term

AFP, Brussels

EU leaders struck a summit deal Thursday to return Ursula von der Leyen as head of the powerful European Commission, while tapping Estonia's prime minister Kaja Kallas as the bloc's top diplomat.

The late-night accord carves up the EU's top institutional jobs for the five years to come, with former Portuguese prime minister Antonio Costa to head the European Council bringing together member states.

All three nominees hail from the centrist alliance that dominates the EU parliament following elections this month, despite gains by the far right including Italy's Giorgia Meloni, who put up public resistance to the top jobs deal.

While Costa, 62, will automatically succeed Council president Charles Michel this year, both von der Leyen, 65, and Kallas, 47, need to lock in majority support in the European Parliament, starting with a July vote on the commission chief that is predicted to be tight.

Von der Leyen expressed her "gratitude" to the leaders gathered in Brussels for backing her for a second term -- telling reporters she would soon outline her political priorities with a view to winning the confidence of parliament.

POST-COUP MYANMAR CRISIS
Rebels battle junta in ruby mining hub
MSF to halt work in northern Rakhine

AFP, Yangon

A Myanmar ethnic minority armed group was battling junta troops in a ruby and gem-mining hub yesterday, the group and residents told AFP, with reports of civilian casualties in shelling and air strikes.

The Ta'ang National Liberation Army (TNLA) launched attacks on junta troops earlier this week in Mandalay region and neighbouring Shan state, shattering a ceasefire brokered by China in January.

Its fighters were inside Mogok, a town surrounded by hills rich with rubies, sapphires, spinel, aquamarine and other semi-precious stones, General Tar Bhone Kyaw told AFP, without giving details.

Mogok residents told AFP the town had been hit by artillery shelling and air strikes by military planes since fighting in the area started on Tuesday. Fighting was ongoing in Kyaukme town in neighbouring Shan state, a local rescue worker told AFP yesterday.

At least 10 civilians had been killed and more than 20 wounded there since clashes broke out on Tuesday, he said.

Meanwhile, the charity Doctors Without Borders will halt medical activities in Myanmar's northern Rakhine state due to an "extreme escalation of conflict" between an ethnic armed group and the military, it said.

Clashes have rocked Rakhine state since the Arakan Army (AA) attacked security forces in November, ending a ceasefire that had largely held since a military coup in 2021. AA fighters have seized swathes of territory, piling further pressure on the junta as it battles opponents elsewhere in the country.

MSF was suspending "medical humanitarian activities" in northern Rakhine due to the "extreme escalation of conflict, indiscriminate violence, and severe restrictions on humanitarian access," it said on Thursday.

S OUTH AFRICA
Tensions delay unveiling of new gov't

AFP, Johannesburg

South Africa's weakened African National Congress (ANC) and its biggest coalition partner are squabbling over key jobs in the new cabinet, media reports say, nearly a month after elections.

President Cyril Ramaphosa has called for the opening of the new parliament on July 18 to address MPs, the government said yesterday.

But no indication was given on when the announcement of a new cabinet would be made.

The ANC has accused coalition partner Democratic Alliance (DA) of making "outrageous demands" for cabinet positions in documents leaked to the press.

Several other documents detailing disagreements on positions between Ramaphosa and DA leader John Steenhuisen have circulated on social media.

Has Dhaka's fate become sealed?

Govt cannot keep ignoring the city's woes

Every year, we are reminded that Dhaka is one of the worst cities to live in, and this year is just slightly different, as the metropolis has reportedly gotten worse. In the Economist Group's Global Liveability Index 2024, Dhaka has slipped two notches, from last year's 166th to 168th. To illustrate just how abysmal that is, Kyiv, the war-torn capital of Ukraine, ranks three places higher. Like before, experts and citizens have expressed their grievances, but successive rankings show that these concerns have fallen on deaf ears. This means the government has not done what it can to build a liveable Dhaka, and for the umpteenth time, we ask: why?

The annual global survey assessed the liveability of 173 cities based on stability, healthcare, culture and environment, education, and infrastructure. A cursory glance at newspapers will reveal how we are failing at these sectors. Take the environment, for instance: Dhaka continuously ranks among the cities with the worst air quality. The situation is so terrible that air pollution has become the leading cause of death in the country, even surpassing high blood pressure, poor diet, and tobacco use. Meanwhile, heatwaves have taken the city hostage, in absence of any semblance of greenery. And yet, government agencies cut down over seven lakh trees across the country last year in the name of development work, Dhaka being among the victims. All this has happened amid dwindling playgrounds, from 150 to only 24 over the last 22 years.

In fact, Dhaka has garnered many other "unliveable" attributes. Indexes report that the city is extremely expensive, for both locals and foreigners. But we don't need to look at rankings for that; the sky-high inflation, 9.89 percent as of May 2024, is evidence enough. It's also the slowest in the world in terms of vehicular movement, while still somehow achieving high numbers of road fatalities. And let's not forget that Dhaka is one of the biggest hotspots for Aedes mosquitoes, which took 1,705 lives in the country last year, breaking all records and crippling our healthcare system.

In many instances, the government has either ignored or even aggravated all these perennial issues, while many ill-thought initiatives have failed. While the metro rail is certainly a step towards creating a liveable city, the authorities have forgotten the basics: bringing discipline to the roads and improving public transport. Instead of addressing these structural issues, they opted for shortcuts, like banning battery-run rickshaws. Regarding air pollution, it achieved very little to tackle the sources: construction dust, traffic fumes, factory emissions, and illegal brick kilns. Meanwhile, the new budget reportedly lacks concrete measures to address economic concerns, which means Dhaka will continue to be just as expensive or even more. Therefore, it's time for the government to admit its failures and prepare plans that can truly resolve this city's woes to make it liveable.

Alarming trade of Indigenous women

We need to address the root cause of trafficking

It is concerning that Indigenous women are falling victim to trafficking gangs who smuggle them to China under the pretext of marriage, lucrative jobs or education opportunities. A report published in this daily mentioned several cases filed with police about gangs who forced women to marry Chinese nationals and then trafficked them to China. According to the report, these local gangs, some of which are operative in the capital's Uttara area, sell the women for Tk 10-20 lakh.

While Bangladeshi women and children are trafficked mostly to India and the Middle East, human trafficking to China came to focus six years ago when three women were rescued and brought back home. China's decades-long one child policy has created an imbalance in the country's sex ratio, which has driven the illicit trade of foreign women, mostly from Southeast Asia. In recent times, it appears that traffickers are also targeting Indigenous Bangladeshi women.

In an email responding to the most recent trafficking cases, the Chinese government reiterated its stance against human trafficking to protect the rights of women and children, which is undoubtedly a positive sign. However, law enforcement agencies in Bangladesh, too, should increase their vigilance against local trafficking gangs that are arranging these fake, coerced or exploitative marriages. We need to address the low rate of conviction and inadequate sentencing of perpetrators of human trafficking. In addition to revamping the legal process, the government as well as organisations working to curb human trafficking must run awareness campaigns on social media and in targeted areas where Indigenous women from marginalised communities might fall into traffickers' traps.

Finally, the government must address the root causes of trafficking in person: poverty, inequality, and education. Given the historical and political reality of our country's Indigenous communities, young women especially from the Chittagong Hill Tracts are vulnerable to exploitative practices. Historically, sexual violence and abuse have been used against CHT women to dispossess the community of their resources. It is not surprising that in the absence of justice for those crimes, the false promise of a better life elsewhere would interest CHT women and thus increase their vulnerability to human trafficking. To establish a sense of security among Indigenous women, the government needs to truly empower the communities and fulfil the promises of the CHT Peace Accord.

COSTS OF HIGH-LEVEL CORRUPTION

Further down the kleptocratic route

Dr Iftekharuzzaman is executive director at Transparency International Bangladesh (TIB).

IFTEKHARUZZAMAN

Mahatma Gandhi's quote that there is enough in this world to meet everyone's need but not for anyone's greed is aptly illustrated by the ongoing media and other credible exposures of evidence of corruption in Bangladesh. Confirming that sky is the limit, these revelations of high-level abuse of power, known as grand corruption, though nothing new except the procession of disclosures, have shocked and awed the nation.

Several key institutions, apparently sanctuaries of high-level corruption and related criminalities, have been exposed to risks of kleptocratic capture. These include the army, police, Rab, National Board of Revenue (NBR) and, not the least, the country's major political parties. A former army chief and his immediate family have been slapped with sanctions for "significant corruption," including assistance in evasion of accountability for criminal activity, facilitating improper awarding of military contracts, and acceptance of bribes. His actions have been assessed to have "contributed to undermining Bangladesh's democratic institutions and the public faith in public institutions and processes."

Having retired after gaining the dubious distinction of topping the list of kingpins behind sanctions against Rab for gross human rights violations, the former police chief has managed to flee the country with questionable ease, arguably as part of a suspected sinister deal. This at a time when he has been publicised to be under the Anti-Corruption Commission's (ACC) radar for amassing unbelievable amounts of income and wealth acquired across the country by ruthlessly violating entrusted institutional power coupled with political blessing, fraud and criminal extortion. In so doing, he applied the skills acquired over the years as a crime control professional and transformed himself from his mandated position of protector of law to a role model of lawbreaking. As widely expected, he was not the only instance of such brazenly normalised corruption in the police force as many other similar exposures followed, including that of the former Dhaka Metropolitan Police commissioner.

A member of NBR and president of its Customs, Excise and VAT Appellate Tribunal came to the spotlight, catalysed by his son's goat scandal and subsequent exposure of grotesque details of his and his family's accumulation of income and properties. He did so abusing his oversight role of revenue generation for the state, which he converted into that of the tax evasion guru as an illegitimate source of income. It is again obvious that he is not the sole X person in the NBR, nor is it possible that he operated in isolation without collusion and protection of many others.

No less troubling is the case of the brutal killing of an MP allegedly as an example of infighting of political power abusers over the share of booties of gold smuggling and the related illicit business facilitated and protected over the years by those mandated to control such criminalisation of politics. Again, this is no isolated case of political corruption, as symbolised by the case of an MP serving prison term in Kuwait for transnational crimes, including money laundering and human trafficking. Nor is criminalisation of politics a monopoly of the current ruling party, as its arch-rival left behind a legacy of no less grand corruption, arms smuggling and ruthless political criminalisation, including several attempts at the life of the top leader of their rival political party, causing multiple deaths.

As scandalous as these examples are, it is no surprise at all because successive regimes have driven the state to this level through their desperate bids to ensure partisan capture of the institutions to facilitate, promote and protect power abuse and thereby grant impunity to high-level perpetrators.

Implications of such grand corruption are destabilising for the state. Their money value can be concretely measured only by the government and relevant agencies, only if done with integrity, free from conflict of interest. For some general idea, one may consider the value of compromise of the least cost, best quality principle in procurements and other public expenditures in which the officials were involved and received kickbacks or shares; value of concealed and laundered income and wealth; undervalued price of acquired properties and taxes evaded, etc.

CORRUPTION

VISUAL: SHAIKH SULTANA JAHAN BADHON

On the other hand, a close look at the files of clients of NBR officials will take independent investigators to a gold mine of data to explain why Bangladesh's tax-GDP ratio is one of the lowest in the world; why the target of increased pressures for higher revenue collection are the common people through indirect taxes; and why honest taxpayers are most often treated as enemies of unscrupulous NBR officials while tax evaders as close allies. Tax officials' bribery and kickback are more directly damaging for the state than any other sector. Irrespective of the amount a tax official collects to facilitate illicit tax evasion, the evaded tax amount is a direct loss of revenue. Add to this, the unabated problem of money laundering, the lion's share of which takes place through trade-based illicit transfers allegedly with the knowledge, facilitation and collusion of the revenue authority.

Collusive abuse of power in all these cases is also among the reasons why nothing has happened to the perpetrators. The former NBR member, for instance, conveniently outsmarted several initiatives for departmental procedure in response to allegations over the years, nor could the ACC proceed with concrete action. It's also no secret that he has been enjoying the patronage and protection of the business-politics-bureaucracy power structure, which also helped invincibility of the overall illegal tax evasion system.

Non-monetary costs of corruption are no less ominous for the state, the worst victim of which are the institutions in general and particularly those at the centre of recent focus. None of them has yet shown the courage to come up with any action or concrete pledge against those within their own ranks, who have pushed the respective institutions to severe reputational damage. None of them seem to care that it is time to face the mirror and undertake strategies to ensure accountability and justice in the short term, and overhaul themselves in the medium and long terms, which is indispensable to restore their credibility and uphold the spirit and values of Bangladesh's independence.

What has happened instead has only added to the already existing atmosphere of intimidation to the media, as demonstrated by the infamous statement by the BPSA, which has been viewed as nothing but an effort to grossly curtail media freedom guaranteed by the constitution. Aggrieved by the disclosures and with an apparent sense of insecurity as birds of the same feather, the association adopted the "shoot the messenger" tactic and blamed media reports as motivated, while in fact the statement itself was a motivated act to suppress disclosure of corruption information. It is also no coincidence that the home ministry reached out quickly to the information ministry with a note that practically endorsed the BPSA position.

Coming as all these do simultaneously with the creation (once again) of the provision in the national budget for an unconstitutional, discriminatory and corruption-friendly reward system for black money, the key message given to the people is that corruption enjoys systemic guarantee of impunity. Little do the power holders seem to care that by converting the commitment of zero tolerance against corruption in election manifestos and other public pronouncements into useless rhetoric, floodgates are being opened to further kleptocratic disorder of the state.

Why we need a landscape design ministry

Asif Khan
is a Bangladeshi landscape architect based in Florida, US.

ASIF KHAN

A little over a week ago, more than 16 lakh people in Bangladesh's Sylhet and Sunamganj districts found themselves marooned by escalating floodwaters. Despite the strikingly similar climates of Bangladesh and Miami in Florida, US, where I work as a landscape architect, the outcomes of heavy rainfall in these two regions are starkly different. Miami's approach harnesses nature's inherent mechanisms through creative and proactive solutions, turning challenges into opportunities. Meanwhile, the Sylhet region endured devastation due to flash floods, prompting the urgent question: why does Bangladesh still face such situations in 2024?

Bangladesh is a treasure trove of untapped landscape potential. It can transform its current challenges into opportunities by leveraging its natural assets. This requires a shift from reactive disaster management to proactive landscape design and management. Flood prevention is only one aspect; optimising the terrain and balancing human settlement with nature are equally crucial.

For Bangladesh, establishing a dedicated ministry for landscape design and management is not just visionary, but necessary. This ministry would oversee the comprehensive planning, development, and maintenance of the country's diverse landscapes, addressing long-standing challenges. For one, the country's extensive network of rivers could be harnessed for transportation, irrigation, and flood management. Currently neglected and polluted, these rivers need strategic rejuvenation. Drawing inspiration from the Netherlands, where river systems are integral to national infrastructure, the Bangladesh government could revitalise the Ganges-Brahmaputra-Meghna delta.

Properly managed natural resources could drive tourism, agriculture, and cultural activities, fuelling economic growth. The Sundarbans, the world's largest mangrove forest, exemplifies this potential. As a biodiversity hotspot and potential ecotourism destination, its proper management and promotion could attract global tourists, generate revenue, and create jobs. Costa Rica's ecotourism success through sustainable practices serves as a model for Bangladesh.

Urbanisation and climate change threaten Bangladesh's rich biodiversity and natural habitats. Sustainable practices are essential to conserving and protecting these areas. For example, conserving the Chittagong Hill Tracts, known for their unique flora and fauna, could preserve biodiversity while supporting local communities through eco-friendly tourism and sustainable agriculture.

Effective water resource management is critical in a flood-prone country like Bangladesh. Designing and maintaining infrastructure for efficient water management could also promote water-based tourism and recreational activities. Italy's Venice showcases how waterways can become major tourist attractions while managing complex water infrastructure.

Promoting landscape innovation and modern agricultural practices can boost productivity and sustainability. Integrating vertical farming and aquaponics into urban areas can combat food insecurity and reduce pressure on rural lands. Singapore's advancements in urban farming illustrate how Bangladesh could innovate in agriculture.

> Landscape architects can guide the nation's landscape policies and projects with their expertise. Singapore's green, sustainable urban environments highlight the benefits of skilled landscape architects. They can design resilient cities that harmonise with natural systems, ensuring urban development does not come at the expense of environmental degradation.

Raising awareness about landscape management's importance and engaging citizens in conservation efforts is vital. Educational initiatives can foster a culture of stewardship, where every citizen feels responsible for the environment. Programmes modelled after Japan's Satoyama Initiative, which promotes sustainable rural-urban linkages through community participation, could be effective.

To realise this vision, Bangladesh must recognise the critical role of landscape architecture. Landscape architects can guide the nation's landscape policies and projects with their expertise. Singapore's green, sustainable urban environments highlight the benefits of skilled landscape architects. They can design resilient cities that harmonise with natural systems, ensuring urban development does not come at the expense of environmental degradation. They can lead projects that integrate green infrastructure, enhance biodiversity, and create public spaces that improve quality of life.

Establishing a ministry for landscape design and management symbolises a collective commitment to transforming Bangladesh's landscape. It heralds a new era where design and nature work in harmony, elevating the quality of life and dignity of every citizen. This vision transcends flood prevention and resource management—it's about creating a nation where every individual feels a sense of pride and responsibility towards their environment. A specialised ministry would help realise this vision, emphasising the optimal use and preservation of the country's natural resources. By adopting this perspective, design can significantly enhance the quality of life and sense of dignity for the people. It's time for Bangladesh to build a future where development and conservation of nature take place simultaneously.

AZMIN AZRAN

Before this year's T20 World Cup, if the Bangladesh men's cricket team and its fans were offered a situation where they found themselves in the last game of the Super Eight with the opportunity to go to the semifinals, having full control of their own destiny, they would bite the hands off the person offering it. The truth is, the Tigers have exceeded pre-tournament expectations. Yet, at the same time, they have left fans bitterly disappointed.

Normally, it would be difficult for a team to do these two things at once, but this strange mess of feelings fans have been left with is possibly indicative of what the men's cricket team really is right now: a big mess.

They got the obvious things right. The squad picked was close to the best we had to offer. The captain was given a series or two before the world cup to get his team combinations right. The team even featured a couple of young, exciting talents like Towhid Hridoy, Tanzim Hasan Sakib, and Rishad Hossain.

A lacklustre series win against Zimbabwe and a shock series defeat against the USA tempered expectations too. Everyone knew that nothing should be expected of this team, and anything positive that comes out of this world cup would be a bonus. By the time the team was lining up to play Sri Lanka in Dallas, everyone was prepared for the worst.

But the thing with the Bangladesh men's cricket team these days is that it's very difficult to understand what's actually going on with them. The brilliance of young Rishad and the new-found grit of an out-of-sorts Litton Das won the game against Sri Lanka, and when Bangladesh pushed South Africa to the last ball for a narrow defeat, suddenly, they were playing well.

The Netherlands and Nepal were promptly defeated in efficient displays, and fans who expected nothing were rewarded with a surprise Super Eight appearance. The coach even came out in the press and said that the goal for this team was to get to the second round, whatever came after would be a bonus.

Fans understood that the team had exceeded expectations. The good feelings from the three victories in the group stage duped everyone into thinking that this team could be expected to do the bare minimum that one might expect from a national sports team. Yes, they were not in form before the tournament. It's true that the senior players in the team were becoming burdens. The cricket board, at this point an entity that is as dysfunctional as it's immovable, couldn't provide the team with the perfect platform. Despite all this, the national cricket team at the world stage was expected to do only one thing—try. And they failed us at that too.

There have always been fans and haters of the men's cricket team in Bangladesh. Fans keep hoping that they will come up with the goods, while haters remain sceptical about whether they have the ability to do so. Some of us believe that one day, they will do something truly remarkable, while others believe that such a day will never come. The one thing, however, that everyone for the longest time assumed to be true is that these professional athletes will keep trying until loss is inevitable, and do their best to postpone that inevitability. If they're not good enough (or strong enough, as we keep hearing), it's natural that they will lose. But the mentality to give something an honest go is not dependent on muscles or talent.

Against India and Australia, who are clearly superior opponents, the losses felt digestible. The lack of an impetus to post a big score against Australia, or to chase one down against India was a sore sight. But most fans were still thinking that this is all extra, this team was never supposed to be here. When the difficult equations for semifinal qualification in the game against Afghanistan were revealed, then too fans might not have felt malice towards the team. The Afghans make an excellent T20 team; beating them by such margins was not likely.

But once again, this mess of a Bangladesh team surprised with a good bowling display, giving the batters a chance to chase 115 runs in 12 overs, a perfectly doable task in today's cricket. How the team reacted to this golden opportunity, however, has opened, deepened, and festered the wounds of trust between the cricket team and its fans.

Everyone knows what followed. According to the captain in a press conference following the match, the team apparently tried for six overs out of the 12. Once they lost three wickets and figured that the task at hand was too difficult, they decided that giving up semifinal aspirations and going for a comfortable consolation win was the better course of action, something they failed to do anyway by losing the game.

Herein lies the problem. The team admittedly stopped trying at a point where it was realistically possible to reach the semifinals. Whether they did it out of fear of failure or embarrassment or lack of belief can be discussed later, but what's certain is, once again, this team breached whatever trust it had left with its fans—the people of Bangladesh.

Supporting a sports team is a fundamentally illogical act. These gifted athletes who live in a bubble of mainstream popularity don't care about you or me. Their lives and realities are disconnected and different from everyone else. Yet, what makes the illogical act of supporting a sports team worth it is the fact that we assume these people who represent our colours want the same things we do—to win, and if they lose, to do so with heads held high. This is the trust between fans and players that is the basis of the sports industry worldwide.

This trust between fans and cricket players in Bangladesh has not deteriorated in one innings against Afghanistan. While the batters' inexplicable surrender in the face of possible victory was a truly humbling blow to loyal followers, the team has chipped away at the fans' perseverance constantly since the 2019 ICC World Cup. When our best player, Shakib Al Hasan, was banned for failing to disclose an approach from a betting syndicate, this trust took a blow. When the much loved captain of the team, Mashrafe Mortaza, chose not to see his own failings and retire with grace, the trust was pegged down a notch. When Tamim Iqbal chose himself over the team by creating pathetic off-field drama, and Shakib Al Hasan participated in it and took it further, the trust was shattered. The 2023 ICC World Cup performance was so bad that as fans, supporting this team felt criminal. This year's T20 World Cup has obliterated any goodwill left among fans.

> Supporting a sports team is a fundamentally illogical act. These gifted athletes who live in a bubble of mainstream popularity don't care about you or me. Their lives and realities are disconnected and different from everyone else. Yet, what makes the illogical act of supporting a sports team worth it is the fact that we assume these people who represent our colours want the same things we do—to win, and if they lose, to do so with heads held high.

Still, cricket in Bangladesh won't die. People may not love the team as much, but the love of the sport prevails. Whether it is this team under this inept board, or some future team under the stewardship of a more capable administration, fan trust will need to be earned back. This is not unprecedented in cricket. India went through this after Mohammad Azharuddin's match-fixing scandal in the early 2000s. Australia did it recently following a ball-tampering incident. Their players did it by playing good cricket, and by presenting a version of themselves to the public that resembled genuine human beings who understood what their efforts meant to the people of their countries. The future of cricket in Bangladesh possibly hinges on the ability of our players to do the same.

Breaking chains through whistleblowing

BLOWIN' IN THE WIND

"Julian is free." The headline of Democracy Now! sent shivers up my spine. The news broke, unleashing a wave of chemical messengers in my brain. The system kept the WikiLeaks founder incarcerated for more than a decade. A woman in Sweden accused him in a sexual assault case in 2010, soon after his whistleblowing platform published a report on US military actions in Iraq and Afghanistan. Julian Assange jumped bail and took refuge in London's Ecuador embassy in 2012, seeking political asylum. He lived in a tiny cell in that embassy compound for seven years, during which period the rape charges were found meritless. However, the British government arrested Assange and placed him in the high-security Belmarsh Prison, forcing Ecuador to revoke its asylum decision. The US wanted him extradited on charges of espionage and leaking sensitive documents. The Australian government finally intervened, saying the case had dragged on for too long. Julian Assange is finally free after pleading guilty to one count of espionage. The court determined that he had already served his five-year sentence, given his prolonged imprisonment. Justice is restored.

FILE PHOTO: REUTERS

Why does it matter for us when a foreign individual is free after such a long time? The short answer is: Julian Assange is a symbol of hope, just like Nelson Mandela and Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman were during their imprisonments. What good is symbolism when realpolitik demands much more direct action or intervention when millions are dying? When is "one" more than one? When does a man become many?

It takes real courageous individuals to blow the whistle and alert the community. WikiLeaks, responsible for what has come to be known as Cablegate, released confidential files on human rights abuse, political machinations, and corruption, leading to a diplomatic fallout and a stringent reassessment of the information gateway. The repercussions faced by Assange are not unique. Character assassination, social ostracisation, and legal battles are some of the known weapons used to castigate whistleblowers. They provoke the system's anger by raising concerns about institutional corruption or moral injustices. Still, they dare to share information to ensure transparency and accountability and become the catalysts for change.

WikiLeaks has brought to light numerous cases of bribery, extortion, corruption, murder, and other crimes committed by Bangladeshis, enabling them to amass a staggering amount of money, which they then syphoned out of the country. And to think that some of our culprits have more money abroad than our foreign exchange reserves speaks volumes about our institutional weaknesses. The whistleblowers' bravado often forces the system to address its leaks. Their bullheadedness gives us hope—a hope that is contagious.

When Bangabandhu was in prison during the Ayub Khan regime, he realised that the whole of East Pakistan was in prison. His obstinacy gave us hope and prepared us for the freedom fight. When millions of refugees displaced by our Liberation War took shelter in India, our country began with the realisation that we could be a poor country, but we needed to be rich in soul. Years later, we witnessed our prime minister providing shelter to hundreds of thousands of Rohingya refugees, reflecting on our common experience of displacement during wartime. The same is true for Mandela, who believed that his struggle for freedom would be incomplete without the freedom of Palestine. Years later, South Africa, inspired by the words of their visionary champion against apartheid, has taken Israel to the International Court of Justice.

Analogously, Assange's freedom can have far-reaching impacts. That makes me hopeful. I listen to Yanis Varoufakis' passionate speech, detailing the background of resistance that conditioned his freedom. The former Greek minister recounts how their allies began abandoning them under the guise of opposing an alleged rapist, despite the later exoneration of the charges. Now that Assange is free, the system will need to undergo numerous adjustments and deal with the consequences. Similar systemic readjustments were required in the political arena after Edward Snowden exposed the National Security Agency's (NSA) mass surveillance programmes. Or when Frances Haugen, a former Facebook employee, exposed her company's harmful practices by leaking internal documents. There are many other instances.

Let me end on a lighter note, though. A hill of corruption collapsed when a goat turned out to be a whistleblower. An animal trader was running a notorious racket, adding pedigree to his stocks to inflate their prices. Like a true trickster, he would boost his clients' egos by creating a false consciousness about his cattle. He would charge a crore for a cow and about Tk 15 lakh for a goat. Somehow, the price of the goat was too much to stomach for the audience. People were curious about the individual who was willing to spend such a significant amount of money on a goat. The goat became the unlikely whistleblower to expose the buyer and his family, who were relishing a mountain of ill-gotten wealth. The drama did not end with an incomplete purchase. The trader who boasted about his animals' pedigree is now on the run, as the whole system has come after him, possibly for exposing one of their own kin. The ordinary public, which lacks decent earnings and livelihoods, enjoys the show as the goat becomes the unsung hero.

I hope there is no connection between the recent announcement of lower loan rate incentives given to goat farming and the practice of goatheadedness as a form of resistance to corruption. It will take more than a goat to break the chains through whistleblowing.

Are you thinking of getting into VOLUNTEERING?

ADRIN SARWAR

Many students have opted for volunteering as an activity to enhance their CVs and better equip themselves for securing future opportunities. Universities and employers value volunteer experience as it demonstrates commitment and a willingness to help others. However, many often jump at the first opportunity without considering whether it aligns with their goals and values. This is one of the reasons why many students are unable to make the most of their volunteer work. After all, it requires constant dedication and effort into a cause that a lot of people feel strongly about. So, finding a volunteering role that aligns with one's interest is important. Here's what you should know before diving in.

Find your passion

Volunteering entails that you aren't bound to carry out any specific tasks. This means that there is a chance you may lose interest in the work over time. To prevent this, search for organisations that work towards a cause that aligns with your passions. Whether it's helping children, supporting environmental causes, or aiding disadvantaged communities, choose work that resonates with you. This alignment will keep you motivated and engaged for a long time.

Be ready to adapt

Most volunteering positions don't have rigid work hours. However, in crucial times, immediate action is required. In such situations, showing responsibility and dedication can be an opportunity for growth. Be prepared for challenges and for taking on an increase in workload as you become a more active member of the organisation.

> Whether you want a small break or need to take on fewer responsibilities, communicate with the team and be sensitive about it. As a privileged member of society, you should acknowledge that you have the luxury of distancing yourself from these issues as opposed to entire communities who do not. And these very issues impact all facets of their lives.

Mind your mental health

A lot of volunteering work involves dealing with issues like humanitarian crises and social injustice. These are tough issues and have severe consequences on the people that it affects.

Even if it's an issue that you feel strongly about, you can feel emotionally drained from working around them. In such cases, consider what you need to do. Whether you want a small break or need to take on fewer responsibilities, communicate with the team and be sensitive about it. As a privileged member of society, you should acknowledge that you have the luxury of distancing yourself from these issues as opposed to entire communities who do not. And these very issues impact all facets of their lives.

Staying motivated

While public recognition of volunteers' efforts is a huge motivation boost, it may not be enough to keep everyone incentivised. Oftentimes, there isn't any tangible recognition, which can feel rather demotivating. This is precisely why you should work towards a cause that you care about and spurs you on. There is no greater reward than striving to make a positive difference, especially when it involves a noble cause.

Understanding these aspects of volunteering will prepare you for what to expect and how to navigate the challenges that may arise. While volunteering can be emotionally taxing, it's also gratifying. Your commitment and dedication can make a real difference in the lives of others.

ADOPT, DON'T SHOP

The case against buying pets

A love that transcends language and understanding – sounds imaginary, but is very easily obtained when you have a four-legged best friend. There are hundreds of Facebook groups and resources promoting adoption, and it takes only one to realise Dhaka's massive problem of overpopulation of animals.

TINATH ZAEBA

Stray cats and dogs live a life marred by abuse and normalised cruelty, often passing away from extreme starvation and malnutrition. One adoption is one more animal saved from a short life and a painful death. Adopting a pet is the obvious choice in a city overpopulated by stray animals constantly looking for food and safety. After all, it could save their lives, and you have a loyal buddy for life. Yet, there are still uncountable families purchasing animals while adopting none – developing a new problem and leaving an old one unsolved.

A common reason for purchasing a pet is for the "aesthetics" – the claim that a foreign breed will look nicer. But it's important to realise that a living creature is not an accessory. A pet is a living thing, not a showpiece, and most rescue animals flourish under a caring hand. Each animal has its own unique beauty and personality when loved and cared for.

When it comes to affordability, adoption is entirely free of charge. It requires no payment to welcome a pet into your home, and in the long term, they require less maintenance as there is generally little to no need for professional grooming or fur maintenance. On the other hand, purchasing a pet, such as a Persian cat, could cost up to BDT 30,000-40,000 and in the long run, grooming and maintenance become a regular financial investment, as they are more prone to risks of developing fungal infections if not taken care of properly.

Additionally, adoption is the more ethical choice as well. The business of breeders in Dhaka is revolting. Breeders purchase kittens and puppies, and as soon as they are of age, they are forced to be in proximity to the opposite gender to produce litter as quickly as possible. After the offspring are born, they only spend a few weeks with their mother before they are whisked away to be sold, and the cycle almost immediately repeats, disregarding any health concerns of the mother or their babies. Neglect of pets is ordinary and not even a secret in the breeding industry. When you adopt a pet, you are not condoning this practice and ensuring that you are not contributing to the endless cycle of abuse that could be easily prevented.

We share the city with these animals. They are voiceless, subject to abuse, and yet have so much love to give. Choosing to purchase rather than adopt is choosing to abandon them when all they want is to be our best friend forever. It's time for us to start a new generation of compassion and adopt our new furry family member.

More than a title at stake

REUTERS

India will be out to end their global title drought while South Africa will be seeking to bury their 'chokers' tag at Kensington Oval on Saturday when the tournament's two unbeaten sides clash in the Twenty20 World Cup final.

Their blemish-free campaigns and comprehensive victories in the semifinals leave no doubt that the 20-team tournament's best two sides have made the final in Bridgetown, but both sides will still have a point to prove as they look to get rid of their own ghosts in the final showdown.

A day after South Africa stopped Afghanistan's fairytale run in the first semi in Trinidad, India ended England's title defence in Guyana to make the third consecutive final of a global event across all formats.

Skipper Rohit Sharma will hope India, who lost in the finals of the World Test Championship and the 50-overs home World Cup last year, will make it third time lucky.

Both Rohit, 37, and stalwart Virat Kohli, 35, are playing what could be their last T20 World Cup, and winning the trophy would be a perfect farewell for them.

It will be a test of nerves for their opponents as well as South Africa look to shed their baggage from having reached their first World Cup final in any format after seven semifinal heartbreaks.

Their pace attack has been on the money, bailing them out whenever their batters failed.

Opener Quinton de Kock has used his Caribbean Premier League experience to good use, while there is significant firepower in their middle order.

In Aiden Markram, South Africa also have a composed leader who has gone 10 matches unbeaten as captain.

"We feel and we believe that we can compete with the best in the world and we can win trophies," said Markram.

- It is a historic occasion for South Africa as they will be playing in their first-ever final in ODI or T20 World Cups.
- India have not won a World Cup title since their triumph in the 2011 ODI World Cup at home.
- India are also without an ICC silverware since the 2013 Champions Trophy.
- This is the first time that both T20 World Cup finalists have made it through unbeaten -- South Africa have won all eight matches while India won seven and saw their group game against Canada washed out.
- South Africa skipper Aiden Markram is yet to lose a game while in charge in World Cups. He guided the Proteas to victories in all six matches in the Under-19 World Cup in 2014, won two as a stand-in captain in the 2023 ODI World Cup before marshalling his troops to this World Cup final unbeaten.
- The average first-innings total at Kensington Oval in Bridgetown for completed matches in this World Cup is 150.

Rain, not again!

According to AccuWeather, showers are expected and will likely delay the toss and interrupt play later. While there is a 50 percent chance of rain in the morning, it is expected to come down to 30 percent come toss time with the probability jumping back to 50 percent in the afternoon.

A total of 190 minutes (three hours and 10 minutes) of extra time has been allocated to try to complete the game if it faces rain delays.

Both sides will need to bat at least 10 overs for a champion to be decided.

A reserve day (on Sunday) has been allotted if the match cannot be finished on Saturday.

If the match starts and cannot continue due to inclement weather then it will pick up on the reserve from where it was left off on the previous day.

A 20 percent chance of rainfall was forecasted for the reserve day.

*If the match cannot be completed on the reserve day, then both sides will be announced as joint-winners.

Only courage can take Tigers forward

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh's performances in the Super Eights of the T20 World Cup showed that team is lacking in many crucial aspects. But lack of courage was again evident, especially in how Bangladesh threw in the towel thinking they would not be able to chase down Afghanistan's total in 12.1 overs in the third Super Eight fixtures, with semifinals at stake.

The team returned home yesterday following a disappointing campaign despite picking up three wins in the group stages. Vice-captain Taskin Ahmed, while talking to media, spoke highly of the youngsters. The youngsters in the bowling unit played to their potential and held their own in a campaign where a lot of the experienced names did not fire.

Rishad Hossain picked up 14 wickets in seven matches while Tanzim Sakib took 11 and both youngsters gave a positive image of themselves.

"Tanzim Sakib, Rishad [Hossain] were among the top wicket takers and in top five. Rishad is still there. Overall they did well and it's a positive for Bangladesh that youngsters for the future will come up. It will show the world that we have different kinds of abilities," Taskin said.

A bulk of the blame for the effort in the Afghanistan game would fall on the coaching staff and think tank, including head coach Chandika Hathurusingha. The batting unit looked like they were chasing a moving target, their plans changing from over to over. Taskin said they tried as a batting unit.

If the coaches did not however plan for it, individual batters' intent will not always pave the way. Bangladesh failed to use Towhid Hridoy or Rishad Hossain further up the order in the game. Many believe that Hridoy, who had performed sporadically but not without impact in this World Cup, could have been promoted up the order and not sent in at number six where the game had already become difficult.

If Bangladesh are to bring in youngsters, coaches too must have belief in fearless cricket. Thus while Hathurusingha should be credited for playing Rishad, he will have to bear responsibility for baffling planning during the Super Eights.

Following Australia's loss to India, some former and current players were talking about an overhaul. Taskin said that senior stars Shakib Al Hasan and Mahmudullah Riyad not performing had an impact. It remains to be seen if Bangladesh do move on from them.

"Both seniors not being in flow had an impact, although not outside the field since they are great teammates out of it. It's normal when key players do not perform," he said.

The batting unit altogether did not find form in the tournament. "I haven't seen such a long bad patch for the batters in my 10 years playing for Bangladesh. I hope it goes away quickly," Taskin added.

In T20s, however, one or two batters can often make the difference. Bangladesh need courage going forward, backed by actual skill. A lot of restructuring needed as well, and it has to begin with the think tank which failed to use resources tactically and plan a better World Cup.

Euro knockout kings Germany ready for another deep run

AGENCIES

Germany's remarkable record in the knockout stages of the European Championship enters a new chapter in Dortmund on Saturday, with Denmark standing in the way of more glory for "Die Mannschaft", as they are known at home, at the tournament.

Of the 10 times the Germans have made it out of the group stage at the Euros, they have gone on to reach the semifinals on nine occasions and the final six. They are level with Spain with three titles.

Germany also boast the only man to win the tournament as a player and a coach in Bertie Vogts, who was victorious in 1972 and as manager in 1996, beating the Czech Republic 2-1 after extra time at Wembley.

However, that victory, almost 28 years ago to the day, remains the last time the Germans lifted the Henri Delaunay trophy, but even if Germany coach Julian Nagelsmann does not bring the cup home, his job is likely secure.

Their only three group-stage exits came in 1984, 2000, and 2004, and a round-of-16 loss in 2020 coupled with another group-stage departure at the 2022 World Cup in Qatar had lowered expectations ahead of this tournament.

A 5-1 win over Scotland and a dramatic late equaliser against the Swiss sent them through as Group A winners, however, setting them up for their last-16 clash with Denmark and igniting fan hopes of another deep run in the competition.

"I think we've already shown what we are capable of in this tournament," striker Niclas Fuellkrug, who scored stoppage time header to snatch a draw against the Swiss, said after that match.

Germany won just three of 11 games in 2023 but are yet to lose in 2024, winning five times and drawing twice, thanks at least in part to Nagelsmann picking the same starting XI.

The coach only deviated from his starters when forced through injury or unavailability.

The policy may have given Germany stability, but it cost him centre-back Jonathan Tah for the Denmark clash, after the defender picked up a second yellow card against Switzerland.

In his place, Borussia Dortmund's talented yet unpredictable central defender Nico Schlotterbeck will line-up on Saturday.

What bodes well for the Germans is that defender Antonio Rudiger returned to training on Friday ahead of their clash with Denmark, having missed earlier sessions with a hamstring strain that he picked up towards the end of Germany's 1-1 draw with Switzerland but managed to complete the game.

Denmark however will be forced to sweat on the fitness of midfielder Christian Eriksen, who did not take the pitch in the Danes' pre-match training session.

Key Italy midfielder Nicolo Barella (L) and forward Federico Chiesa (R) were in jovial mood in training yesterday alongside centre-back Gianluca Mancini, who is likely to replace the suspended Riccardo Calafiori, ahead of tonight's Last 16 tie of Euro 2024 against Switzerland. The defending champions will need a much-improved performance from their group-stage showing against the Swiss, a side they beat 3-0 in group stages of the last edition before drawing twice on their way to be eliminated from the 2022 FIFA World Cup Qualifiers. Rain likely as low-pressure area forms in the Bay

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Bangladesh Meteorological Department predicts light to moderate rainfall in all divisions, including the capital, over the next 48 hours, beginning at 9:00am today.

"Light to moderate rain or thundershowers accompanied by temporary gusty wind is likely to occur at most places over Rangpur, Mymensingh, Chattogram, Barishal, and Sylhet divisions and at many places over Rajshahi, Dhaka and Khulna divisions with moderately heavy to heavy falls at places over the country," said a met office bulletin yesterday.

A low-pressure area has formed over the northwest Bay and adjoining areas. The axis of the monsoon trough runs through Bihar,

3 die in Ctg market fire

5 shops gutted; electrical short circuit caused the blaze

ARUN BIKASH DEY

Three people were killed in a fire that broke out at the six-storey Mohammadia Plaza in the port city's Riaz Uddin Bazar area early yesterday.

Mobile phone repair and accessory shops occupied the first three floors of the building, while its employees and other bachelors lived on the floors above.

The deceased were identified as Md Ridwan, 45, Md Shahed, 18, and Ismail Hossain, 19, of Satkania upazila, said police.

Kotwali Police Station Sub Inspector Toma Akter said Ridwan and Shahed worked at shops in the market and lived on the floors above; while Ismail was Shahed's friend, who was staying the night in his room.

The victims died due to asphyxiation, said a physician of Chattogram Medical College Hospital (CMCH).

A 35-year-old woman and a nine-year-old girl, who lived in the residential building next to the market, fell sick after inhaling smoke from the fire and were admitted to CMCH's burn and plastic surgery unit.

Later, the woman was shifted to the intensive care unit (ICU) as her health condition deteriorated, said Rafique Uddin Ahmed, head of the burn unit.

"The two injured suffered inhalation injuries."

The fire originated from a shop on the ground floor around 1:35am due to an electric short circuit, said Abdur

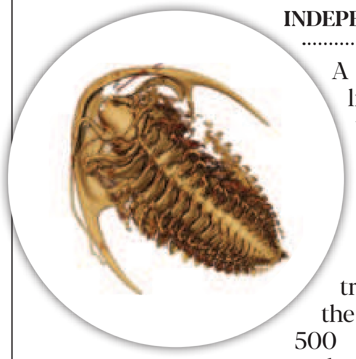
500-million-year-old sea creature discovered

INDEPENDENT.CO.UK



A sea creature that lived 500 million years ago has been discovered in a "remarkable state of preservation" by scientists.

Even though trilobites swam the oceans some 500 million years ago, researchers said the animals still look as though they "died yesterday".

The creatures met their end after becoming completely encased in ash after a volcanic explosion, preserving soft tissue and other parts of the body in pristine condition.

Dr Greg Edgecombe, a palaeontologist at the Natural History Museum, said: "I've been studying trilobites for nearly 40 years, but I never felt like I was looking at live animals as much as I have with these ones."

"I've seen a lot of soft anatomy of trilobites, but it's the 3D preservation here that is truly astounding," he added.

Trilobites are some of the most widely studied fossil marine animals, with more than 20,000 species identified over the past 200 years.

Dr Edgecombe said studying trilobites is important because they provide scientists with "one of the most comprehensive datasets" for analysing the evolutionary history of an extinct species.

The creatures were also geographically diverse, making them excellent index fossils for geologists calculating the age of the rocks in which they are found.

Two brothers among three killed in road crashes

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Two brothers were among three people who died early yesterday hours after being injured in accidents in Dhaka's Cantonment and Khilkhet areas.

The deceased were identified as Sifatur Rahman Safin alias Rahul, 21, a delivery man, his brother Md Rafi, 18, a transport worker, and Alfaz, 25, an employee of an event management organisation.

In Cantonment on Thursday night, the two brothers were heading towards Kalshi area from their house in Mirpur Bawniabandh area to refuel their motorcycle, their uncle Monir Hossain said.

On their way, a speeding truck hit their motorcycle near ECB Chattar area around 11:30pm, leaving them critically injured.

Passersby took them to Kurmitola General Hospital. From there doctors referred them to Dhaka Medical College Hospital (DMCH).

Rahul was pronounced dead shortly after midnight while Rafi succumbed to

Israeli warplanes strike north Gaza

Numerous casualties reported

AFP, Palestinian Territories

Israel's military on Friday said it was conducting raids backed by air strikes in northern Gaza, killing "dozens" of fighters in an area where it had declared the command structure of Hamas dismantled months ago.

The operation in Shujaiya, on the edge of Gaza City, caused numerous casualties, witnesses and medics said on Thursday when it began.

Renewed fighting in Gaza's north followed comments on Sunday by Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu in which he said the "intense phase" of the war was winding down after almost nine months.

Israeli forces targeted the headquarters of Gaza's civil defence agency while advancing in western Rafah.

Experts say they foresee a potentially prolonged next phase.

Omer Dostri, a military expert at the Jerusalem Institute for Strategy and Security, said he expects the army to reduce its ground presence and to increasingly use drones and fighter jets "to further dismantle Hamas".

Yesterday in the Shujaiya area, an AFP correspondent witnessed an air strike and saw smoke rising. Artillery fire boomed.

In a statement, Israel's military said that, overnight Thursday, troops "started to conduct targeted raids" in the Shujaiya area as part of an operation that began earlier in the day.

Intelligence had indicated "the presence of terrorists and terrorist infrastructure in the area of Shujaiya", the military said, in its first details of the operation.

As troops went in, warplanes struck dozens of Hamas targets, it said, following other "significant"

Bielsa wants more from 5-star Uruguay

Marcelo Bielsa believes Uruguay have more to do to mark themselves out as one of the favourites to win the Copa America, despite crushing Bolivia 5-0 to make it two wins from two games.

Facundo Pellistri, Darwin Nunez, Maximiliano Araujo, Federico Valverde and Rodrigo Bentancur all scored as Bielsa's team ran riot in their second Group C game on Thursday.

It was Uruguay's biggest win in the Copa America since 1959, when they beat Argentina by the same scoreline in the group stage.

Having opened their campaign with a 3-1 win over Panama, they have won their first two matches at a Copa America tournament for the first time since 1995, when they went on to lift the trophy.

A figure of 2.74 expected goals (xG) from 18 shots to Bolivia's 0.06 (four shots) spoke to Uruguay's dominance,

Climate change boosted deadly Saudi hajj heat by 2.5C

REUTERS, London

The heatwave in Saudi Arabia blamed for the deaths of 1,300 people on the hajj pilgrimage this month was made worse by climate change, a team of European scientists said yesterday.

Temperatures along the route from June 16 to 18 reached 47 degrees Celsius (117 degrees Fahrenheit) at times and exceeded 51.8 C at Makkah's Great Mosque.

The heat would have been approximately 2.5 C (4.5 F) cooler without the influence of human-caused climate change, according to a weather attribution analysis by ClimaMeter.

ClimaMeter conducts rapid assessments of the role of climate change in particular weather events.

The scientists used satellite observations from the last four decades to compare weather patterns from 1979 to 2001 and 2001 to 2023.

Although dangerous temperatures have long been recorded in the desert region, they said natural variability

Coastal women and their woeful walk for water

> I have to walk more than two kilometres to fetch water from a pond. Since I can't make the trip twice a day, I carry a bigger pitcher, which causes back pain and sometimes makes me sick.
> Sushama Sarkar

DIPANKAR ROY

At the break of dawn, women of all ages -- daughters, mothers, homemakers -- set out in search for safe drinking water.

They carry not one, but several large water pitchers, balanced on their heads and backs.

Their journey stretches for hours, and often ends in a different village far away from home, where they can finally find some water that is safe to drink.

For many years now, such has been the case for many women in Khulna, Satkhira and Bagerhat. In recent years, rising sea levels and erratic weather patterns have pushed saltwater further inland, contaminating more groundwater sources.

For these women in Southwestern Bangladesh, reaching a source of safe water, however, is only half the battle. There, they join a long line of equally affected women, all waiting their turn to fill their pitchers. The wait can be agonising, stretching into more hours stolen from their day. Finally, after securing their precious water, they begin the long trek back, with fully loaded pitchers on their backs and heads.

This daily struggle comes at a heavy cost. Backache and fatigue are their constant companions.

Walking under the harsh sun everyday takes its toll, leading to frequent bouts of illness.

Yet, they cannot afford to rest. Skipping this daily "pilgrimage" means their families go thirsty. And there is always the risk of waterborne diseases.

The freshwater crisis across the southern coast of Bangladesh affects over 40 lakh people. But it is the marginalised women who bear the brunt of the suffering.

Experts say climate change and shrimp enclosures have not only stolen their clean water, but also amplified the existing inequalities, leaving these women on the frontline of a battle for survival.

> Experts say climate change and shrimp enclosures have not only stolen safe water, but also amplified the existing inequalities, leaving these women on the frontline of a battle for survival.

Sushma Sarkar, 53, from Dacope upazila of Khulna, said, "I have to walk more than two kilometres to fetch water from a pond. Since I can't make the trip twice a day, I carry a bigger pitcher, which causes back pain and sometimes makes me sick."

"Can you imagine someone carrying a 25-litre pitcher along a four-kilometre road on a sunny day? It's really unbearable for us," she added.

The rich buy water. But this is not an option for people like Sushma. So, they keep their eyes on the sky for rain, which allows them to harvest rainwater.

But climate change has also led to less rainfall, pushing people like Shushma into further despair.

Rina Sarkar, who also struggles to find potable water, said they often drink saline water from the pond directly out of desperation.

"If the government could supply drinking water through pipelines, we would be saved from this curse. They supply electricity through poles and wires, so why not water through pipes?" she asked.

Panchanon Mondal, chairman of Sutorkhali Union Parishad in Dacope, Khulna, said, "Almost 70 percent people in my union lack access to safe drinking water and rely on pond water or other sources."

"Urgent action is needed to alleviate their sufferings, including increased investment in water infrastructure and sustainable solutions to combat salinity intrusion," he added.

According to Dr Md Mehedi Newaz, vice principal of Khulna Medical Hospital, illnesses linked to salinity, like hypertension and kidney ailments, are becoming more common, particularly among women."

Gouranga Nandy, researcher and chairman of the Center for Environment and Participatory Research, said climate change is gradually extending salinity into inland water and soil, threatening coastal biodiversity and human health, especially for women.

CURSE OF SHRIMP ENCLOSURES

The large-scale shrimp cultivation since the 80s has increased soil and water salinity in the coastal region, said Gournanga Nandy.

Shrimp enclosures need saline water to thrive and as a result, salinity intrusion increases with the expansion of shrimp culture. The extent of salinity in groundwater is also increasing because of continuous shrimp cultivation in the fresh agricultural land.

When Sonaban Bibi, 62, got married 46 years ago, there was a pond next to her house, from which she managed to fetch drinking water.

However, some 20 years ago the water of that pond in Betbunia village of Khulna's Paikgacha upazila became unsafe for consumption, due to salt intrusion caused by a nearby shrimp enclosure.

So, for the last 20 years, Sonaban has been fetching drinking water from a pond in nearby Golbunia village, 1.5km away from her house.

Fetching three to four pitchers of water daily for her family of nine is a strenuous task.

"It's a year-round routine, whether it's winter, summer, or rainy season, we need to fetch water from Golbunia," said Sonaban, when she was returning home after fetching water with a big pitcher last week.

Rafuza Begum, a resident of Betbunia, said, "Earlier there were five ponds around our village. Now you can't drink water from any of them. Saline water from shrimp enclosures has contaminated the ponds."

The story is the same for around 34,000 people living in 32 villages of Soladana union.

Abdul Mannan Ghazi, chairman of Soladana union, said, "All 32 villages are saltwater-prone areas. Saltwater shrimps are cultivated everywhere, which has caused the water in the ponds to become salty."

Saikat Mallick, fisheries officer of Paikgacha, said shrimp farming is being conducted on a large scale in 10 unions and one municipal area of the upazila.

"It is the largest saltwater shrimp farming zone in Khulna. This year, 3,940 saltwater shrimp gher [enclosure] is being cultivated on 17,075 hectares of land. Out of this only Soladana Union has 1,037 shrimp enclosures on a plot of 3,495 hecrates," he added.

According to the Khulna Divisional Office of the Water Development Board, local shrimp traders have constructed approximately 3,000 unauthorised sluice gates in the Khulna division, leading to the drilling of at least 10,000 holes in river protection dams. The embankments have significantly weakened, making them prone to breaches under increased water pressure, particularly during cyclones.

The area affected by salt intrusion has expanded dramatically from 833.45 hectares in 1973 to 1,056.26 hectares in 2009.

SALINE WATER AND GENDER INEQUALITY

Men, traditionally paddy field workers, have been forced to migrate to urban areas in search of better opportunities, leaving women to shoulder the increasing burden of household and farm responsibilities.

This out migration has left the women who stayed back alone under increasingly difficult circumstances.

Besides, those men who stay back mostly don't help out their other halves in collecting water, due to gender stereotypes.

Shamima Sultana Shilu, a woman leader and activist in Khulna, said, "Women have to do all the housework. Waterborne diseases are very common for rural women who are in contact with saline water for household chores and other work like netting, fishing, or agricultural tasks."

The migration of men has also left women vulnerable to gender-based violence.

Outsiders, who settled in villages for the shrimp business, have harassed and committed violence against women, especially when they are alone.

Besides, reproductive health problems due to prolonged exposure to saline water are common in coastal Bangladesh, she said.

To escape these health problems, many women undergo surgeries to remove their ovaries. Besides, child marriage is also increasing, Shilu said.

She emphasised the need for societal change. "Men should come forward to assist women and help with household chores."

During a recent visit, this correspondent also spoke to Sonaban Bibi's husband Abdul Majed Dafadar.

He said they got married when he was 22. Sonaban was much younger, although her parents did not mention her exact age at the time of their wedding.

"For 46 years, Sonaban has been fetching water for our family. She now suffers from headaches, hypertension, and breathing difficulties," he said.

"Our two daughters-in-law now help her. I have told my sons to help their daughters, which I regret not doing. I should have been more aware. I don't want the two young girls to end up like my Sonaban," he added.

Contacted, Md Akmol Hossain, executive engineer of Department of Public Health Engineering, told The Daily Star that deep tube wells are not functioning anywhere in 10 unions and one municipal area of the upazila.

There are 42,00 shallow tube wells in all the upazilas, one-third of which are functional, while others are lying idle, he added.

He said they are trying to come up with alternative solutions to potable water such as setting up water tanks for rainwater harvesting, pond sand filters and reverse osmosis.

Storm child

SARAZEEN SAIF AHANA

> Then you stirred. Your tiny forehead wrinkled, and you cried. That first, piercing cry that announces the arrival of a new soul in this world. And then your mother shivered at that sound, and she opened her eyes.

You must have heard the story of your birth a thousand times by now, sweetheart. Your mother and I—home alone. The others were out watching Ana's dance recital, but your mom had been feeling tired, so she stayed back, and I stayed with her. She was just seven months along, but she went into labour. The storm struck, and the rest of the family were forced to stay at the school. Your father ignored the weather warnings and drove home anyway, to find he now had a beautiful little girl to love. Your parents' joy was immense.

What we never told you was that you were stillborn.

Your mother went into labour, and it was the fastest delivery I've ever seen in my life. She bled like a river, and I thought I might lose my own daughter.

I lifted you from her and quickly wrapped you in towels and placed you on the bed. I was panicking, and your mom was bleeding and she had fainted. The storm was raging, and I was watching my own baby girl die in front of me.

DESIGN: MAISHA SYEDA

And then I realised you hadn't cried.

You were lying there, in those towels, ashen-faced and as silent as the grave. This tiny, beautiful little angel. And beside you was your mother, bleeding her life away.

I held you in one arm and her in the other, and I stared out of the window into that hurricane, and I begged for your lives. You know I was never very religious, but I guess there comes a point in every person's life where you give up trying to be strong and just want some higher power to help you. I cried like a madwoman and I begged for the lives of my daughter and granddaughter, whatever the cost.

I do not know how long I stayed that way. I do not remember what I offered for your lives. It did not matter. As long as my family was safe and happy, nothing else mattered.

"My life for theirs. My soul for theirs. Whatever it costs, I'll pay it a thousand times over. Just give them back to me. Let them live. Let them be healthy and happy and whole." I said it like a mantra, again and again until my voice gave out.

Then you stirred. Your tiny forehead wrinkled, and you cried. That first, piercing cry that announces the arrival of a new soul in this world. And then your mother shivered at that sound, and she opened her eyes.

"The baby?"

My joy was a thing so vast it drained me. I carefully, wearily, placed you on her chest. She held you, and she began to cry. Your father burst into the room and started laughing and crying at the same time. I left the three of you there, but just before I closed the door, I met your gaze. It was not the gaze of a newborn infant at all. It was the look of a soul a thousand years older than me.

I went to my own room and slept. Never before had I felt so tired, and never since. When I woke up, the storm had cleared and everyone was home. We took you and your mother to the hospital because you were premature, and I was still worried about the blood your mom had lost. You were both released from the hospital a few weeks later, safe and healthy.

Yet every time I looked at you, I knew. I knew I'd done something terrible. I knew I'd called on something I did not even understand in my desperation to protect you and your mother. And I knew, if I were to keep you safe, everyone had to be aware. I sat them around the dining table and told everyone clearly what had happened. We swore to keep this secret. We locked the door of the room you were born in, and we agreed never to let you in there. When your little brother was born a year later (normally, thank goodness, in a bright hospital full of doctors and nurses), we waited until he was old enough to understand, and then we told him about you.

And we kept a very careful eye on you as you grew.

You could feel things. Strange things. Your Grandda's friend was a madman who attacked and murdered a little boy, wrapped the body in curtains and threw him into a landfill. You sensed the evil in him and told us.

Your Uncle Sam began associating with a rough crowd, and he was slowly being drawn into their world. You heard their voices, and you asked about them. He stopped hanging out with them shortly afterwards. They were human traffickers.

The house next door caught fire a few days after you told Cam you'd seen smoke coming from under the door of the locked room.

Two bullies attacked a little boy in your school six months after you ran to your teacher, saying someone was hurt in the stairs. We convinced the principal to install a security camera there. Your teacher got to the child just before he fell down the steps.

A woman broke into the zoo when you were a child and attacked a lot of the animals there. You knew that, somehow, and you told your father to look for the tiger's tail. The police found the woman's tooth, and she confessed.

Your sister overheard you talking in your sleep one night, that your father and one of your uncles were going to have a terrible argument. A fight that would tear the family apart. Your parents moved out just days later.

And then, last week, sweetheart, you left a message on my phone. Here...

Gramma held out her phone, and I took it from her.

I was shaking. My thoughts were a mass of chaos, chasing each other, screaming wordlessly. My mouth was painfully dry, and I couldn't swallow past the lump in my throat. My heart was a drum in my ears. Very dimly, I could hear a high-pitched keening, like someone screaming. Maybe it was my mind, rebelling at what I'd just heard. Maybe it was nothing. Maybe it was everything. Because the keening burst from my throat in a roar of horror and disbelief when I looked at my Gramma's phone.

It was a selfie of me holding up one of my sketches. I remembered sending her that picture, very proud of the mountain scene I'd worked for days over. But it was not a peaceful river valley I'd drawn at all. It was Gramma's living room, done up in Christmas decorations with the tree in the background, and fairy-lights everywhere. In the foreground was my family. My parents, sister, brothers, uncles, aunts and Gramma–on the floor. Their throats slashed open. Their eyes staring sightlessly forward. And there stood I, in the middle of those bodies, smiling serenely, blood on the knife in my hand, blood dripping down to my white dress from my mouth.

I broke the phone.

What I wish I didn't know is that when your dear friends whisper the word "psycho" behind your back, you'll grow up accepting it. / I wish I didn't know that cats sometimes eat their newborns for nutrients and that human beings sometimes kill their daughters when they are born; that, I wish I knew why. / I wish I didn't have to know that parents grow old and at some point, we're meant to take care of the child version of them and not the other way around. / I wish it didn't know that would make me angry (don't ask me why). / I wish I didn't know that when you don't have a parent, everyone tries to be your missing parent; they would somehow know what's best for you even though they were never around and they hardly know you; and would point out all the ways your missing parent failed to "parent the right way" because they were away most of the time (figuratively or literally). But what they don't know is that your missing parent taught you everything you needed to know to survive before they went missing—either themselves or by being away. Regardless, you turned out great. / But, I really wish I didn't have to know what it's like to be in what is now half of what was once a beautiful and happy home.

I wish I didn't know that beautiful flowers wither sometimes even after a rainy day. / And that some of those magnificent looking flowers stink–because, well, what a waste. / And I wish I didn't know that when you give up yourself to make a home in the palm of someone's hands, your home is bound to wash away. Skin sticky with perspiration from a long month of June
I sit in the ruins of half of this year that has left
I am a ghost, fuzzy and melted down to a whirlpool
Passing through walls of people that walk, waltz, run, or crash into me as I drift Like a bus with its rotating wheels akin to Bambi's flailing legs
I know anger like they know grief
Watching kids grow into these fleshy bits, lanky limbs
They grieve the death of kids that they once loved
It's tragic/ but see, change is beautiful
As long as you grow as you change
Two sides of a same coin to represent it that would let you grow/or not Cause when a thing doesn't grow, it starts to rot
I know rotten people/I know lack of consideration
I know entitlement and lack of reciprocation
I know things you put up in a shelf for later/ just so that it doesn't seep into your skin, from some three to four millimeters under
I know that your words meant for me are sharp and that you don't mean for them to be but I know compassion
And I know what's it like to keep a secret because I know when the heart of a friend who lives thousands of miles away flutters
And I know when a friend who lives close presses across her bony wrist the sharp blade of a cutter
I know of women close to me staying in loveless contracts/ and that they didn't bump into a door when they talk about bumping into one as a response to the burning question/ they say it doesn't really matter
And I know of infidelity that sinks its claws into a ripe chest filled with love only to hollow it out into the gutter
I knowknowknowknow
All I do is know things
Things/secrets that float into my ears like razored confetti and make them bleed And I hear the honeyed words that do nothing to soothe the grating feeling of the omniscience that for the longest time I have fathered
You know how to handle things so well, very reliable
Lips splitting in two/in false gratitude/as something inside me screams I left people to bleed because it's simply not my battle to win
And then as it dies down, a small voice in the back of my mind mutters The less I know, oh, the less I know the better

All that I'd despicably known / Things I wish I didn't know

TABASSUM HASNAT

All that I'd despicably known / Things I wish I didn't know–
That my childhood would be a prelude to the calamitous chronicles of this adulthood.
That the then enticing eagerness to grow up would become today, one nonchalant noose around my adult self.
That the melodies my younger self mindlessly hummed and cavorted about, would become so hard to even call to mind as I manoeuvred through life.
That the embers of curiosity once coruscating through my mind would be extinguished by the everlasting bouts of over-scrutinising.
That the heart that used to pulsate
a few beats harder in wonderment of the world would become hardened to the ways of that very world.
That my favourite person who breathes at the core of all my tenderest tales of life, would become a stranger one day with the bitterest aftertaste in my mind.
That the opportunity I spend my whole life looking for,
would knock upon my threshold as if a trouvaille in the middle of some random day– only to slip off my fingers, emulating the classic trope of "almost"
from movies and novels.
That I'd inevitably become a daughter drinking from my mother's fountain of sorrow, onboarding the selfsame passengers of pain, putting upon pedestals the parasites that have only known to dine on the dainty life I hold.
That grief would always find its way to me,
even in moments of grave bliss, even midst bustling crowds, even in the arms– of my loved ones, even when the light at the end of the tunnel seemed unblemished and brilliant.
That to be able to crusade against the travails of the world outside, would require me to cease being at a war with my insides.
That the unloved, crestfallen whiff of the little girl from my childhood would still tantalisingly, wheeze out her dearth of tenderness in my instances of lovingness, leaving them marred.
That all the love every thread of my being retained,
after being poured into the heart of a wrong person, would render me incapacitated of loving–a terrible lover, is all I must have become now.
That all the wrong trains do not end up at right stations, for here I am–pursuing pursuits yet to make sense to myself, chasing chaos in the name of having purposes, checking myself in at starting points only with no finishing lines in sight.
That the fairytales I grew up reading before my stubborn eyne gave in to sweet slumber would grow edges like knives becoming anecdotes of detestable realities that keep rewinding behind the same eyes leaving me now sleepless.
That the girl who only walked holding her father's pinky, would become a woman dragging her way through her life with fists clenched.
That loving myself is something
I needed to learn everyday for the world makes me abominate my own skin every other day.
That my words would fail me, as mortals become unkind, and life–
a running radio of grating malice, and as I write this unending list of all that I'd despicably known.

AN UNLIKELY PARTNERSHIP

How internet humour is reshaping film marketing

Cultural sensitivities must be navigated carefully, as a meme that misses the mark can quickly backfire, generating negative publicity.

MAHIYA TABASSUM

In an era where attention spans are shrinking and social media dominates, film studios are turning to an unexpected ally in their promotional arsenals: memes. Once dismissed as mere online frivolity, memes have become a potent force in the marketing arsenals of production houses and streaming platforms worldwide. This shift is particularly evident in the burgeoning entertainment industry of Bangladesh, where meme marketing has propelled several productions to unexpected heights of popularity.

Meme marketing involves creating and sharing humorous, relatable content that can spread rapidly across social media platforms. For film projects, this often means crafting images or short videos that reference the movie in a way that resonates with online communities.

The appeal is clear: memes are shareable, adaptable, and can quickly go viral, potentially reaching millions of viewers at a fraction of the cost of traditional advertising. They also allow for a more organic, word-of-mouth style of promotion that can feel more authentic to younger audiences who are often sceptical of conventional marketing tactics.

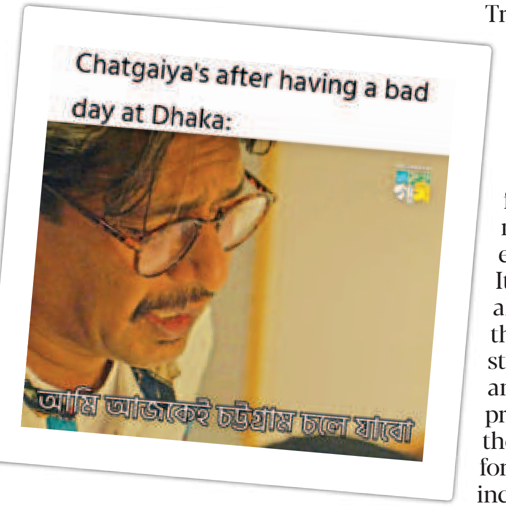
VISUAL: MAHIYA TABASSUM

In the global arena, there are numerous examples of TV and film projects that have seen tremendous success with meme marketing. For example, the simultaneous release of Barbie and Oppenheimer in 2023 sparked the "Barbenheimer" phenomenon, a meme-driven marketing bonanza that boosted both films' profiles.

Take, for instance, last Valentine's Day special release– Shihab Shaheen's directorial web-film Kacher Manush Dure Thuiya. What began as a modest release quickly snowballed into an online cultural phenomenon, driven largely by a flurry of memes that flooded social media platforms. These bite-sized pieces of humour, often featuring stills or short clips from the film overlaid with witty captions, did more than just amuse – they intrigued. Viewers, including this author, found themselves drawn to watch the film; if only to understand the context behind the memes that had become ubiquitous in their social media feeds. This curiosity-driven viewership represents a new paradigm in audience engagement, one where the line between marketing and entertainment is increasingly blurred.

Sheikh Korashanee from Chorki, one of the spearheads behind the OTT platform's strategists, provides insight into how this meme marketing approach evolved. "It all started with Syndicate," Korashanee explains. "We found the character Allen Swapan intriguing and made a few memes based on him and launched them from our house. It became a hit, leading to a significant increase in the series' engagement."

This initial success laid the groundwork for their future meme marketing strategies. The show's release was accompanied by a meme competition hosted in partnership with Rantages, a popular Bangladeshi meme-sharing platform. The result? An astounding two crore minutes of viewership in just eight days, setting a new record for the streaming platform.



Chatgaiya's after having a bad day at Dhaka:
আমি আজকেই চট্টগ্রাম চলে যাবো

Rumman Kalam, the founder of Rantages, sheds light on the mechanics behind this success. "The first step is for OTT platforms to reach out to us for their new releases, which Chorki did last year," Kalam explains. "And then we coordinate with them to make the content." This collaboration allows for the creation of timely, relevant memes that are ready to deploy as soon as the content is released. It's a strategy that extends the lifespan of promotional content far beyond traditional marketing methods.

Korashanee elaborates on their process, explaining, "Upon finalisation of a project, we provide the meme platform around 15-20 templates, and then memes are made adding a variety of contexts to those templates." This approach comes in response to the meme platform's active cooperation in ensuring the well-timed dispensation of readily formed memes across social media.

The genius of meme marketing lies in its ability to circumvent the limitations of traditional social media promotion for audio-visual content. While platforms typically restrict the sharing of clips from streaming services, memes offer a workaround. "Memes allow us to reuse the same clip multiple times and keep the content on the top of our minds," Kalam notes. This repetition, far from being monotonous, keeps the production firmly in the public consciousness, driving continued interest and viewership.

However, the path to meme marketing success is not without its pitfalls. The rapidly changing nature of internet culture means that what's viral today may be passé tomorrow. Cultural sensitivities must be navigated carefully, as a meme that misses the mark can quickly backfire, generating negative publicity. Moreover, as Kalam candidly admits, "Over the years, Rantages worked with many campaigns, but success wasn't always a guarantee."

Budget constraints also play a significant role in the adoption of meme marketing. Traditional production houses often lack the resources for extensive marketing campaigns. This financial limitation has, paradoxically, fueled the rise of meme marketing as a cost-effective alternative. It's a strategy that aligns perfectly with the needs of emerging streaming platforms and independent productions, allowing them to compete for attention in an increasingly crowded media landscape.

Looking to the future, the integration of meme marketing into film and series promotion strategies seems set to deepen. We may see the emergence of AI-generated memes, tailored to individual viewer preferences, or interactive meme experiences that blur the line between promotion and content. There's even speculation that the popularity of memes might influence content creation itself, with writers and directors crafting scenes with "meme-ability" in mind.

As the entertainment industry continues to grapple with changing viewer habits and the dominance of social media, meme marketing stands out as a uniquely 21st-century solution.

In Bangladesh and beyond, the success of productions like Kacher Manush Dure Thuiya and Myself Allen Swapan suggest that meme marketing is more than just a passing trend. It represents a fundamental shift in how audiences interact with and share content. As the digital landscape continues to evolve, those in the film and streaming industry who can master the art of the meme may find themselves with a significant advantage in capturing the ever-elusive attention of modern viewers.

Ultimately, the future of film promotion via meme marketing is bright, but it requires a delicate balance of creativity, cultural awareness, and technological savvy. When done right, meme marketing has the power to turn a modest production into a cultural phenomenon. In the coming years, we can expect to see this approach refined and expanded, potentially revolutionising the way films and series are promoted in the digital age. In this new landscape, the next viral sensation could be just one clever meme away.

PERFECT DAY

PERFECT DAY
THE BEST OF LOU REED

Lou Reed's Perfect Day is a deceptively simple ballad that has become one of his most iconic works. Released on his 1972 album Transformer, the song presents a stark contrast to Reed's typically edgy and experimental style. On the surface, it's a tender portrayal of a romantic day out, inspired by Reed's experiences with his then-fiancée in New York City.

However, the song's apparent simplicity belies deeper, more complex themes. Reed's somber delivery and the repeated line You're gonna reap just what you sow, referencing biblical text, adds a layer of foreboding to the otherwise idyllic scenario.

This multifaceted nature of Perfect Day has led to ongoing debates about its true meaning, while making it a timeless classic that continues to intrigue and resonate with listeners decades after its release.

ALIA BHATT AND RANBIR KAPOOR

Bollywood's cutest couple Ranbir Kapoor and Alia Bhatt brought their A-game at Anant Ambani and Radhika Merchant's masquerade party, on the basis of Bhatt's recent Instagram post.

Alia looked stunning in the long gown in a light teal dress regally displaying the greyish green hues, adorned with olive green and silver embroidery. The flowy chiffon gown features a draped dupatta in the same colour. She wrapped up the look with minimal jewellery, and a sleek bun, making for a classy appearance.

Ranbir Kapoor, on the other hand, was dressed in a flamboyant maroon velvet blazer paired with a white shirt, a bow tie, tuxedo pants, and a sleek black masquerade mask - opting for a classy look.

1-MINUTE REVIEW

Monkey Man's tale of retribution

Dev Patel brings a frenetic energy to his remarkable debut as writer and director in Monkey Man, with Jordan Peele serving as producer. The film is an outrageously over-the-top action thriller set on the bustling and refreshingly unconventional streets of Mumbai.

Patel plays "Bobby", named ominously after a bleach brand. Raised in a forest by his single mother, who fascinated him with tales of Lord Hanuman, their peaceful life is shattered when a greedy property developer, posing as a spiritual guru, conspires with a populist right-wing politician to seize the forest.

Corruption under the police chief played by Sikander Kher leads to tragedy. Seeking vengeance, Bobby eventually joins a criminal group through underground bare-knuckle boxing matches - wearing a monkey mask.

The fight choreography throughout remains phenomenal, enhanced by a sweaty, improvised dynamic energy. Moreover, the unpredictable narrative grips your attention, thanks to editors David Jancso and Tim Murrell, along with cinematographer Sharone Meir's fluid camera work.

LDC EXIT

A win for the nation, but a loss for trade

Experts suggest more homework to offset potential losses

REFAYET ULLAH MIRDHA

Bangladesh's graduation from the group of least-developed countries (LDCs) to a developing nation in 2026 has become a point of national pride, underlining the substantial economic strides that the country has made.

Not only does the accomplishment signify that the nation has improved income levels, reduced poverty, and raised living standards, but it also represents improvement in social conditions.

Bangladesh was included in the LDC group in 1975 by the United Nations, with the country languishing from the havoc wreaked by the Pakistani army during the Liberation War of 1971.

The UN Committee on Development Policy, the body which assesses the graduation process, has confirmed Bangladesh will graduate in November 2026. It examined the country's economic performance across three criteria: gross national income (GNI) per capita, human assets index (HAI), and economic and environmental vulnerability index (EVI).

Bangladesh has outperformed all previously graduated LDCs in the three criteria in all reviews.

Although the exit will brighten the image and prestige of the country, it will also bring serious challenges for exports, especially due to the erosion of trade benefits.

BENEFITS FOR LDCs

Since becoming an LDC, Bangladesh has enjoyed zero-duty benefits on exports to different countries, including developed and developing nations. It receives preferential treatment in 38 countries. Of the total merchandise shipped from Bangladesh annually, 73 percent is LDC-induced.

It also qualifies for trade preference on shipments to its largest destination, the European Union, under its generous "Everything but Arms (EBA)" scheme. It has helped Bangladesh turn into the second-largest garment supplier to the bloc after China.

Except for the US, all other developing and developed countries have granted Bangladesh zero-duty benefits under the declaration of the Hong Kong Ministerial of the World Trade Organisation (WTO), where global leaders agreed to implement the Doha Development Agenda by approving duty exemptions for all goods originating in LDCs.

The US government did not comply with the declaration and had instead allowed duty-free access for 97 percent of the products of the LDCs. Unfortunately, garment items, the mainstay of the export basket of Bangladesh, were included in the three percent that was subject to duties.

As a result, Bangladeshi garment exporters have always had to face a 15.62 percent duty on apparel exports to the markets in the world's largest economy.

Washington suspended Bangladesh from the generalised system of preference (GSP) in June 2013 for its failure to meet statutory eligibility requirements related to worker rights. The US GSP programme for all countries expired in December 2020 and the US Congress is yet to take up a new scheme. As a result, it has no duty benefit for LDCs currently.

Since gaining the LDC status, Bangladesh has been performing strongly in merchandise exports, especially in the shipment of apparel. Now, the country is the second-largest garment exporter worldwide, accounting for a 7.9 percent share of the global market.

Bangladesh is also the biggest beneficiary of the duty privileges afforded to LDCs, with the country alone availing more than 67 percent of the benefits extended to the group.

Furthermore, Bangladesh enjoys trade benefits on a broader scale. For instance, it gets a 12 percent preferential margin on its sales to European countries, which provide a substantial price advantage.

WHAT AFTER LDC GRADUATION

Since Bangladesh will lose preferential market access, the loss of exports may primarily be worth $7.77 billion annually if merchandise exports of the fiscal year 2022-23 are considered.

"LDC graduation will have the greatest impact on the exports of Bangladesh," said the WTO in a study report. Bangladesh is projected to lose 14.28 percent of its exports.

Once the country leaves the bloc, local exporters may face an 11.5 percent duty in major export destinations in the EU if the GSP Plus facility can't be secured.

This duty will not only be imposed on exports to the EU but also to some emerging markets. For example, duties will be levied at 20 percent in India and 18 percent in Japan.

Apart from the impact of direct tariffs, the industrial sector, especially the garments industry, will face consequences. This may be reflected in workers losing their jobs as exports fall and exporters lose their competitiveness in global trade.

IS THERE ANY SILVER LINING?

The graduation will act as a source of pride and serve as recognition for the nation as it becomes a member of the developing countries.

On the positive side, Bangladesh may witness a higher inflow of foreign direct investments after it becomes a developing nation because the change in the status will brighten the country's image. There will also be enhanced access to finance because of better credit ratings.

But the real question is whether the country will be eligible for the same trade facilities once it exits the group and whether there is any possibility of retaining the benefits in the years after 2026. The straightforward answer is no, but two important developments need to be considered.

First, the EU will grant a three-year grace period to graduating LDCs, meaning Bangladesh will be allowed duty-free access up to 2029.

Second, at the 13th WTO Ministerial Conference in Abu Dhabi this year, it was decided that graduating LDCs would be given the facilities for three more years. In this case, graduating countries will have to negotiate with trading partners and it will not be flat like it is today.

Mustafizur Rahman, a distinguished fellow of the Centre for Policy Dialogue (CPD), said the think-tank's study found that around 14 percent of Bangladesh's exports will be affected following graduation. "Moreover, Bangladesh will have to rationalise tariffs for other countries by withdrawing regulatory and customs duties."

In the absence of the duty-free export facility, Bangladesh will have to sign trade pacts with other countries in order to keep the preferential market access. However, such deals will come at a cost. For example, if free trade agreements (FTAs) are signed, the country may lose a major source of revenue in the form of import duties.

The country's income from import duties stood at Tk 96,259 crore in the last financial year, accounting for 29 percent of the total revenue collections.

Experts suggest the government make the most of the trade benefits of the LDCs and continue negotiations with major partners to sign FTAs, Comprehensive Economic Trade Agreements (CEPAs), Economic Partnership Agreements (EPAs), and Preferential Trade Agreements (PTAs).

If a graduating nation can negotiate efficiently, it may enjoy trade benefits for more than three years after the transition. For example, China has retained benefits for Samoa although the latter graduated in 2014. Therefore, the extent to which preferences can be availed will depend on the negotiation capacity of Bangladesh.

The EU and some countries such as Canada, Australia and the UK have already agreed to continue LDC-linked benefits for Bangladesh for three more years after 2026.

HOW TO REMAIN COMPETITIVE

According to experts, if Bangladesh can take proper steps, the country will be able to offset the financial losses from graduation. "The government has formed seven sub-committees on LDC graduation, and they should work efficiently so that the country can ensure a smooth transition," Prof Rahman added.

Once the country graduates, it will lose foreign assistance. So, the government has initiated measures and is bringing in changes to the budget and policies.

The principal secretary of the Prime Minister's Office has constituted a committee and seven sub-committees involving private sector stakeholders and researchers to identify potential challenges in the post-LDC era and carry out reforms in order to insulate the economy.

In order to tackle challenges stemming from the loss of preferential market access, Bangladesh is considering penning agreements with 13 major trading partners, including China, India, Japan, and the US. In December 2020, Bangladesh signed an PTA with Bhutan, its first bilateral trade deal.

The government has been active in formulating a nine-point action plan to be implemented by 2026 to continue trade benefits in the EU by availing GSP Plus facility.

Export-oriented industries are expected to take a beating owing to graduation since developing and developed nations are not allowed to provide direct cash subsidies on export receipts as per WTO rules.

Therefore, the government aims to provide subsidies in different forms to ensure competitiveness and revenue inflows from international markets.

The government plans to remove and reduce import and supplementary duties on 282 products in 2024-25 in order to prepare the nation for graduation. However, experts have termed the measures inadequate.

COSTS OF LDC GRADUATION

- Bangladesh will lose access to LDC-specific duty-free and quota-free schemes
- LDC-specific preferential rules of origin will go
- Significant impacts are expected in the EU, Japan and other markets, affecting especially garments
- No significant impacts are expected in the US considering current rules
- Bangladesh will no longer benefit from extension given to LDCs on Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS)
- The TRIPS-related development may lead to higher medicine prices in Bangladesh and other countries

- LDC graduation may leave limited impact on development cooperation in Bangladesh
- Bangladesh may lose international support measures in trade, official development assistance and others
- There will be no travel support to UN meetings and no benefit from LDC-specific support measures

BENEFITS OF LDC GRADUATION

- Achieving the status will be an important development milestone though the gain is sometimes unquantifiable
- More FDI is expected due to better image of the country
- Bangladesh may obtain easy loans because of better credit ratings

No one will be spared in drive against graft

PM tells parliament

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday said no one indulging in corruption will be spared, irrespective of their identity, and vowed to continue the ongoing drive against graft.

"We will catch the corrupt," she said during the discussion on the proposed 2024-25 budget in parliament.

The comments came at a time when former and current government officials facing allegations of corruption are making headlines.

Responding to criticisms of the scope to legalise black money, she said, "Everything is pricier now. Someone owning one katha of land in Dhaka has a few crores of taka... They can neither show the money nor pay income tax. Sometimes these opportunities are given in order for them to pay income taxes and join the mainstream... and not do such things anymore."

The PM said, "The country will not go backwards. No matter how many efforts they make, no one will be able to destroy the country."

Stating that the power and energy sector was highly subsidised, she said, "Why do we subsidise this sector? I will do everything necessary to change the fate of the people of the country. Those who consume more must pay the cost of production. But we are not doing that overnight. It is being done slowly and patiently. We are providing uninterrupted electricity and energy."

Electricity supply from the Adani power plant in Jharkhand has stopped, exacerbating the ongoing power crisis in Bangladesh.

Power generation in the 1,496-megawatt coal-fired power plant is on halt now.

The Adani power plant authorities said they found a leak in a valve of the circulating water pump of the plant, said Khandaker Mokammel Hossain, member (generation) of Bangladesh Power Development Board.

"They forcibly shut down the unit of the plant. It will take at least two to three days to start the maintenance

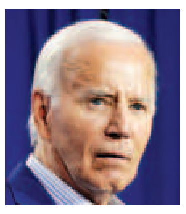
Calls for Biden to step aside grow louder

Some Democrats, NYT urge him to drop out of race; Biden admits bad debate performance

AGENCIES



US President Joe Biden is facing a brutal reckoning after he repeatedly stumbled during Thursday night's debate, with some Democrats calling for him to step aside ahead of the November election.

Biden was incapable of swatting down a stream of falsehoods from Donald Trump, who appeared calm and energised in contrast to a bewildered looking President who struggled to maintain thoughts.

"This was like a champion boxer who gets in the ring past his prime and needs his corner to throw in the towel," said a Democratic lawmaker, adding that he meant Biden should exit the race.

It's "time to talk about an open convention and a new Democratic nominee," said a second Democratic lawmaker who has been a solid Biden supporter.

Kohli, Rohit lead India's redemption

AFP, Bridgetown

India won the T20 World Cup title with Virat Kohli starring in a thrilling seven-run victory over South Africa in a classic final at Kensington Oval on Saturday.

Kohli, who later announced his retirement from T20 internationals, steadied the India innings with his fine 76 taking them to a strong 176-7.

When Heinrich Klaasen blasted a superb 52 from 27 balls, it looked as though South Africa, appearing in first final, were closing in on victory but they were halted by some outstanding Indian bowling and catching at the end.

South Africa ended on 169-8 with Hardik Pandya taking 3-20 for India to the delight of the huge Indian following at the stadium.

The win is the second T20 World Cup title for India following their triumph in the first edition in 2007 and it also ends their 11-year wait for a major title going back to the 2013 Champions Trophy.

Veteran Kohli had struggled in the tournament, coming into the final with an average of just 10.7, but he delivered his best innings at the perfect moment with his balanced batting ensuring India won the title after an unbeaten tournament.

"I am so proud to get the runs for the team the day it mattered most," said Kohli.

"The occasion prompted that change for me, I felt like it was now or never. We have wanted to lift a trophy for a long time.

"The occasion made me put my head down, respect the situation and play the innings that the team needed from me.

"I wasn't feeling myself before today. I wasn't confident. So I am very grateful and humble right now. It has been difficult, so there are a lot of emotions," he added,

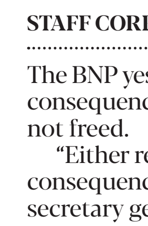
Get organised, avoid excess

Quader asks AL leaders, activists at rally

STAFF CORRESPONDENT



Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader yesterday instructed his colleagues to get organised and avoid taking things too far.

"I am telling all [party men] not to flaunt muscle power. No one will be spared. Sheikh Hasina has a strict "zero-tolerance" policy against corruption."

Quader made the remarks at a discussion organised by AL's Dhaka City (South) unit in front of the party headquarters in the capital's Gulistan, marking its 75th founding anniversary.

The AL second-in-command said that corrupt people are the ones who are most vocal against corruption. "If you look around, you will find many such people."

Free Khaleda or face consequences

Fakhrul tells govt; urges all opposition parties to unite

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The BNP yesterday warned the government of facing consequences if party Chairperson Khaleda Zia was not freed.

"Either release Khaleda Zia or be ready to face any consequences," said Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir, secretary general of the BNP.

He was addressing a rally in front of the party headquarters in the capital's Nayapaltan. The BNP organised the programme demanding unconditional release of Khaleda.

Fakhrul said people will not accept the sentencing of Khaleda in graft cases and the government must keep it in mind.

"Khaleda Zia is the symbol of democracy, symbol of movement. She needs to be saved and protected. All the opposition political parties must unite to save her," he said, urging the parties to get united to intensify the movement to defeat the government.

Talking about the agreements signed between Bangladesh and India during Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's recent visit to the neighbouring country, the BNP leader said those are against the interest of Bangladesh.

"We want water [from transboundary rivers]. We want fair share of water. We don't want to see any killing at the border. We want to resolve the pending issues. But the government gave everything to them [India] without having anything," he said.

HSC exams begin today

UNB, Dhaka

The Higher Secondary Certificate (HSC) and its equivalent exams begin across the country today.

A total of 14,50,790 students from 9,463 educational institutions are expected to sit for the exams at 2,275 centres.

Of the total examinees, 11,28,281 students are from the nine general education boards, 88,076 from the madrasah board, and 2,34,433 from the technical education board. Additionally, 281 students will take the exams from eight overseas centres.

This year's number of candidates has increased from last year's 13,59,342 examinees.

Earlier on June 20, the government deferred the HSC and equivalent exams scheduled up until July 8 under the Sylhet division due to the ongoing floods. The exams on July 9 and subsequent exams will be held as per schedule. The schedule for the deferred exams was to be announced later.

According to the original routine, HSC written exams will continue till August 11, and practical exams will be held from August 12 to August 21.

Besides, the exams under the technical board will continue till July 18 and their practical exams will begin on July 19 and will continue till August 4.

All examinees have been asked to enter the exam centres 30 minutes before the examinations start.

Mobile phones are strictly prohibited inside the exam centres, except for the in-charges, who are allowed to carry a mobile phone.

Besides, no one except examinees, centre invigilators, teams of the ministry, teams of boards, local administration and upazila administration teams, and security personnel will be allowed in the exam centres.

To ensure smooth conduct, a Quick Response Team (QRT) from the Dhaka Metropolitan Police (DMP) will be on standby to assist examinees.

Ukraine drone attack kills 5 in Russian village

Moscow claims east Ukrainian village in offensive on Toretsk

AFP, Moscow

A Ukrainian drone attack on a house in a Russian border village killed five people, including two children, the regional governor said yesterday.

The drone hit a house in the village of Gorodishche, a tiny village in Russia's Kursk region, just a few metres from the border with Ukraine.

"To our great grief, five people were killed ... including two small children. Another two members of the family are in a serious condition," Kursk governor Alexei Smirnov said in a post on Telegram.

The attack was with a "copter"-style drone, he added, a small device that can be fitted to carry grenades or other explosives that are dropped over targets.

Both sides have used drones, including larger self-detonating craft with ranges of up to hundreds of kilometres, extensively throughout the conflict which began in February 2022.

Meanwhile, Russia yesterday claimed another village in eastern Ukraine as it pushes towards the city of Toretsk in a fresh local offensive in the embattled Donetsk region.

Toretsk lies north-west of the city of Gorlivka, which has been under separatist control since 2014.

Ukraine has stepped up its attacks on Russian territory this year, targeting both energy sites that it says fuel Russia's military, as well as towns and villages just across the border.

Russian President Vladimir Putin launched a major new land offensive on Ukraine's northeastern Kharkiv region last month in what he said was an operation to create a "buffer zone" and push Ukrainian forces back to protect Russia's border Belgorod region from shelling.

The Kursk region, where yesterday's attack occurred, lies further north, across from Ukraine's Sumy region, which Kyiv controls.

Transwoman found dead in Jashore

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Benapole

Police recovered the body of a transwoman who was murdered at her home in Jashore's Manirampur upazila on Friday night.

The deceased, identified as Poly, 30, of Khanpur village, had her throat slit, said police.

According to locals, Poly bought land and built a house in Khanpur. On Friday evening, she had come home and had not left the house for a while. When neighbours knocked on her door, they got no response, so they informed the police.

Police then broke into her house and found her dead around 11:00pm.

Her body was later sent to Jashore General Hospital for an autopsy.

ABM Mehdi Masud, officer-in-charge of Manirampur Police Station, said, "The victim was killed sometime between 8:00pm and 11:00pm. We suspect the killer was someone close to her. An investigation is underway."

Three drown in Sylhet, Habiganj

STAR REPORT

A teenager and two children died by drowning in Sylhet and Habiganj yesterday.

In Sylhet, the body of a 17-year-old was recovered from the Motorgate area of Ratargul swamp forest around 7:00am.

The deceased is Shamim Ahmed, son of Shahjahan Ali, of Sylhet city's Baghbari area. On Friday. he along with three of his friends cycled from the city to the entrance of Motorgate in the forest. They then went to bathe in the Chengerkhal river, where Shamim was swept away by the strong currents.

Nunu Mia, officer-in-charge of Sylhet Airport Police Station, confirmed the matter, reports UNB.

In Habiganj, two children drowned in a pond in Mahmudpur village in Ajmeriganj upazila in the afternoon.

The deceased are Pralay Das, 7, son of Gobinda Das, and Surya Das, 6, son of Rubel Das, reports our Moulvibazar correspondent.

Ajmeriganj Police Station OC Dalim Ahmed said Pralay and Surya and other children went to bathe in the pond next to a local field after playing football there. Pralay and Surya slipped from the steps of the pond and drowned.

Family members and locals took them to the Upazila Health Complex, where the doctor on duty declared them dead, he added.

Referring to power outages, Hasina said she asked the authorities to ensure that the villages do not suffer.

She said outages should be in the wealthy neighbourhoods of Gulshan, Banani and Baridhara so that the well-off are reminded that the comfort of air conditioning, cars, elevators, come at a cost

Regarding quick rental power plants, Hasina said, "I am also hearing criticism about the special law that we enacted. My question is, what if we did not have this special law? If you had not built power plants, would there be electricity today?"

Referring to the economy, she said, "Some so-called intellectuals criticise everything. There is a lot of talk about loan defaults, a lot of talk about bad debts."

The GDP in 2009 was $102 billion, she said. The loan was only Tk 22,000 crore then, while bad loans were 10.5 percent, she informed.

"GDP size in 2023 is $460 billion. The loan amount is Tk 1 lakh and 55 thousand crore. The bad debt ratio is 9.9 percent. That means it has decreased."

She urged the "so-called intellectuals" not to mislead people.

If the construction of MRT Line-1, Line-2, Line-4 and Line-5 is done by 2030, there will be no traffic congestion in Dhaka city and people will be able to commute easily.

There are plans for metro rails in all divisional cities.

Speaking on the universal pension scheme, she said from July 1, 2025, new government officials and employees will be included under the scheme.

The PM said there will be an opportunity for all citizens to participate in the scheme and secure their future financially.

The Leader of the House said some termed the budget as highly ambitious, and a while ago, the opposition leader said this budget is not feasible.

"Taking challenges is our job... I do not think the budget is highly ambitious at all. We set goals. A target is never reached 100 percent. It's not possible. Yet, we have specific goals that we will achieve."

Referring to rising prices, Hasina said, "The results of the steps we have taken to control inflation will be in the market soon. We will be able to lower [inflation] according to our expectation."

Free Khaleda or face consequences

Though the rally was scheduled to begin at 3:00pm, BNP leaders and activists from different parts of Dhaka and adjacent districts started thronging the venue since noon braving heavy rain.

Carrying placards and posters, they came to Nayapaltan in small processions from different wards. They chanted anti-government slogans.

This was the first major demonstration organised by the BNP in nearly eight months.

Addressing the rally, BNP standing committee member Mirza Abbas said, "We are talking about Khaleda Zia after a long time. This voice will not fall silent. We will not compromise on her release. We will free her. We will not tolerate any obstacles, come what may."

He said the BNP continued its movement for the last 15 years but could not achieve success for the failure to "act at the right time".

"If we could have stayed on the streets on October 28 last year with a counter procession, we might have succeeded. But we were afraid of death," he said.

He said that more programmes will be declared in future to force the government to free Khaleda.

"We are tired of demanding proper treatment for her. There is no alternative to Khaleda Zia's leadership to protect the country's independence and sovereignty. We will realise our demands through waging movement without being disheartened," said Abbas, also the chair of the meeting.

Another BNP standing committee member Gayeshwar Chandra Roy said, "We had to fight a war to achieve the country's independence. We will not be able to free Khaleda Zia only by delivering speeches."

"Each of the agreements signed with India will spell doom for Bangladesh. We are not anti-India. We are in favour of our country's independence and democracy."

A large number of law enforcers were deployed in and around Nayapaltan to maintain law and order.

A total of 41 BNP leaders spoke at the event. They said that they were ready to make the party's upcoming demonstration programmes successful to ensure Khaleda's release.

On Wednesday, the BNP announced a three-day programme, including yesterday's rally, demanding release of the party chairperson.

The party will hold rallies at all metropolitan cities on July 1 and at district towns on July 3.

Khaleda was sentenced to 10 years in prison in the Zia Orphanage Trust corruption case. The government suspended her sentence on March 25, 2020 for six months on the conditions that she would stay in her house and not leave the country. Since then she stayed at her Gulshan house. She was moved to a Dhaka hospital several times for treatment.

The government later extended the suspension order several times.

Kohli, Rohit lead India confirming that the game was his last T20 for India.

"This was an open secret. It's time for the next generation to take over."

Kohli's assured display was just what was needed for India who had slipped to 34 for three after their captain Rohit Sharma won the toss and opted to bat.

In what has been a low scoring tournament, the total looked to be a daunting one for South Africa but then Quinton de Kock (39) and Tristan Stubbs (31) set the Proteas on their way before Klaasen turned the game in their direction in the 15th over, smashing Axar Patel for 24 including two fours and two sixes.

When Klaasen was finally removed, caught behind off Hardik Pandya, the Proteas needed just 26 off the last 23 balls.

Knowing they had to take the initiative, Rohit turned early for Jasprit Bumrah's final over and he answered the skipper's call perfectly, bowling Marco Jansen and conceding just two runs in the 18th over.

That meant South Africa needed 20 from the final two overs and Arshdeep Singh bowled a superb length to allow just four.

With 16 to win off the last over, Pandya bowled a full-toss at Miller who smashed it high straight down the ground but Suryakumar Yadav produced a breath-taking catch on the boundary, throwing the ball back into play before he crossed the ropes and then returning to complete the catch.

Kagiso Rabada edged a four and Pandya showed some nerves with a wide but the seamer kept his cool to ensure silverware for India after they lost in last year's 50 Over World Cup on home soil.

For the 35-year-old Kohli it was the perfect way to bow out in the format.

"This was my last T20 World Cup and this is exactly what we wanted to achieve," he said.

"It was an amazing game. One day you feel like you can't get a run but one day, things just click. It hasn't quite sunk in for me yet."

It was a bitter end for South Africa who had reached their first World Cup final after ending a streak of seven defeats in semi-finals in both World Cup formats.

"Gutted for the time being, it'll take some time to reflect on a really good campaign, hurts quite a bit but incredibly proud," said captain Aiden Markram.

"We bowled well, not a lot to work with, it was a chaseable total, batted well, came down to the wire, gutted not to get over the line.

"Things happen quickly at the back end, but got into a great position to prove we were worthy finalists.

"South Africans are competitive, respectful and will go down with a fight. It's still a proud moment for us."

work, as it would require the boiler to cool off," he said.

The other unit of the plant went into regular maintenance during the Eid holidays. That unit is expected to start operation by the first week of July.

"We are getting less electricity from the coal-based power plants. One of the two units of Payra Power Plant is also under maintenance. But with other options, the load-shedding situation is still stable at less than 1,000MW," he said.

But Guterres said Friday that "the world is getting a failing grade."

Man sued for raping neighbour's child about corruption as they are the most corrupt party.

"The main leader of your party [Tarique Rahman] is leading a lavish life by laundering thousands of crores. He is now plotting against a legally elected government. He must be returned to Bangladesh and brought to book."

Criticising the media for terming the AL's programme a counter to the BNP's, Quader said, "We announced earlier that we will hold programmes around the year. But some [media] reported that we were holding counter programmes. We held a cycle rally yesterday [Friday]. Was there any BNP programme on that day?"

He further added that different party units will continue to hold various forms of programmes throughout the year as part of the platinum jubilee celebration of AL's founding anniversary.

Activists of various ward and thana units of Dhaka City South AL attended the discussion programme that began a little after 3:00pm.

Awami League presidium members Abdur Razzaque, Mofazzal Hossain Chowdhury (Maya), and Kamrul Islam; joint general secretaries Mahbub Ul Alam Hanif and AFM Bahauddin Nasim, among others, were also present.

Calls for Biden

The New York Times editorial board, which endorsed Biden in 2020, called on him to drop out of the race to give the Democratic Party a better chance of beating Trump by picking another candidate. "The greatest public service Mr Biden can now perform is to announce that he will not continue to run for re-election," the editorial said.

Democratic campaign spokesperson Michael Tyler said there were no conversations taking place about that possibility. "We'd rather have one bad night than a candidate with a bad vision for where he wants to take the country," he told reporters aboard Air Force One.

Biden, however, said on Friday evening he intended to defeat Trump in the November presidential election, giving no sign he would consider dropping out of the race.

"I know I'm not a young man, to state the obvious," an ebullient Biden said at a rally. "I don't walk as easy as I used to, I don't speak as smoothly as I used to, I don't debate as well as I used to," he said, as the crowd chanted "four more years."

"I would not be running again if I didn't believe with all my heart and soul that I could do this job. The stakes are too high," Biden said.

The campaign held an "all hands on deck" meeting on Friday afternoon to reassure staffers that Biden was not dropping out of the race, according to two people familiar with the meeting.

Though Trump, 78, put forward a series of falsehoods throughout the debate, the focus afterward was squarely on Biden, especially among Democrats.

Hakeem Jeffries, the Democratic Party leader in the US House of Representatives, avoided answering directly when asked whether he still had faith in Biden's candidacy, reports Reuters.

Some other Democrats likewise demurred when asked if Biden should stay in the race. "That's the president's decision," Democratic Senator Jack Reed told a local TV station in Rhode Island.

But several of the party's most senior figures, including former presidents Bill Clinton and Barack Obama, said they were sticking with Biden.

"Bad debate nights happen. Trust me, I know. But this election is still a choice between someone who has fought for ordinary folks his entire life and somebody who only cares about himself," former Democratic President Barack Obama wrote on X.

Corruption main threat to economy

Says GM Quader

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Opposition Leader and Jatiya Party Chairman GM Quader lambasted the government's handling of the economic crisis during a parliamentary session yesterday on the proposed budget for 2024-25 fiscal year.

He said it won't be possible to resolve the economic downturn due to widespread corruption and criminalisation.

The Jatiyo Party chairman accused the government of facilitating corruption and encouraging tax evasion and money laundering.

He said a wealthy circle has emerged comprising corrupt individuals, bank defaulters, and money launderers.

GM Quader argued that the lack of accountability and governance failures, rather than external factors like the Covid-19 pandemic or the Ukraine conflict, pose greatest threat to Bangladesh's economic stability.

He criticised the mismanagement in the banking sector, pointing at the mounting bad debts.

GM Quader opposed the budget proposals to whiten

Colonial legacy lives on among the wealthy

Says Serajul Islam Choudhury at autobiographical lecture marking his 89th birthday

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Much like during the colonial era, a segment of wealthy individuals in independent and sovereign Bangladesh continues to exhibit the same exploitative characteristics while ruling the country, said Prof Serajul Islam Choudhury yesterday.

He said many people accumulate wealth not through labour but through acts of plundering, such as bank scam, and grabbing. They smuggle the plundered wealth abroad, mirroring the colonial-style exploitation.

Prof Serajul Islam made these remarks while addressing an autobiographical lecture titled "Looking Back", held at Bangladesh Shishu Academy on the occasion of his 89th birthday.

Many people accumulate wealth not through labour but through acts of plundering, such as bank scam, and grabbing. They smuggle the plundered wealth abroad, mirroring the colonial-style exploitation.

In the presence of several hundred attendees, the emeritus professor said, "During the British era, we were a colony. Even within Pakistan, a form of colonialism was emerging. Later, we established an independent and sovereign Bangladesh, but colonialism still persisted."

"The wealthy in Bangladesh are influenced by capitalist ideologies," he added.

Prof Serajul Islam said, "We thought that becoming part of Pakistan would bring about a renaissance, but it didn't happen. When Bangladesh was established, we hoped for social change, but that didn't happen either."

"But still, I remain hopeful. The reason for my hope is that people

Legal recourse for cybercrimes still a far cry

59pc victims women, 87.5pc dissatisfied with existing justice system, says survey

NILIMA JAHAN

Imagine one day, you wake up and realise fraudsters have gotten information about your NID numbers, purchased SIM cards in your name, and have committed crimes by impersonating you.

Scary, isn't it?

Such cybercrimes have become increasingly common these days, with personal information of many citizens being openly sold at different online platforms. The Daily Star has published multiple reports in the recent past on this topic.

Tania, a 27-year-old doctor, is one such victim.

In November 2023, she discovered 15 SIM cards had been registered using her National Identity Card and fingerprint.

These SIMs were linked to three different mobile operators and were used to take small loans.

After she contacted BTRC, the SIMs were deregistered later, but a subsequent investigation by the regulatory body failed to track the culprit (or culprits) as of May 25, 2024.

Falguni, another victim, fell prey to a similar scam. The fraudster called her brother Javed before his university admission test and claimed he had won a prize.

Javed, convinced by the caller who knew his exact personal details, directed him to Falguni.

Falguni, trusting the caller, revealed her bank card number and OTPs, leading to a loss of Tk 60,000. Despite filing a complaint, Falguni received no resolution and gave up due to concerns about legal complexities.

These are just two cases highlighted in a recent

PADMA BRIDGE PROJECT

Corrupt yet let off the hook too easily

Forced into retirement for graft, land surveyor gets his job back with lower salary

SAJJAD HOSSAIN

A government employee has been reinstated to his job after being dismissed for being involved in a fraudulent compensation scheme in the Padma Bridge project.

Mainul Hasan, a former land surveyor of Madaripur, was sent into forced retirement in November last year after the district administration and land ministry's investigation found him guilty of facilitating a scam, for which the government lost Tk 1.64 crore.

However, land ministry Secretary Khalilur Rahman reinstated him on June 9 this year, reducing his punishment from forced retirement by lowering his salary grade for five years.

Earlier in September 2022, a divisional case was filed against him over misconduct and corruption.

During Mainul's posting in Madaripur deputy commissioner's office in 2020, he was responsible for overseeing land acquisition for the Padma Bridge in Shibchar upazila.

Mainul Hasan

He granted Tk 1.64 crore to two individuals for supposedly using 3.37 acres of their land for the project in Sujanagar mouza.

However, the land never belonged to the two in the first place, in fact, those were government land.

The compensation was provided based on forged documents.

Following allegations against Mainul, a three-member investigation committee was formed, led by the deputy director of local government.

The committee confirmed that Mainul issued compensation cheques on September 9 and September 20 of 2020. The land ministry also formed a separate probe committee.

"Allegations of negligence in the misconduct of duties are found true," the probe body concluded.

On November 8, 2022, the ministry issued a notification stating that Mainul would be forced into retirement for his involvement in corruption.

"This type of dishonest activity harms the interests of the government and tarnishes the image of the office. It shows a lack of honesty, impartiality, responsibility, and efficiency in his work," said the notification. It also stated that Mainul "personally benefited from the scheme".

Mainul's response to a show-cause letter was deemed unsatisfactory, according to the notification. However, on March 11, 2023, Mainul appealed to the land ministry.

After the appeal hearing, led by the secretary, the ministry backtracked from its original decision. Although the committee, which heard the appeal, was convinced that Mainul failed to provide satisfactory response in his defense, the forced retirement was suddenly deemed as "excessive punishment".

On June 9, 2024, a new notification was issued, reducing Mainul's punishment to a lower salary grade for five years.

Many senior government officials at the land ministry were baffled by the decision.

Requesting anonymity, an officer of the ministry, said the reduction in punishment does not set a good precedent for junior officers.

Mainul could not be reached for comments.

Contacted, Transparency International Bangladesh Executive Director Iftekharuzzaman said, "Specific allegations against the accused employee [Mainul] were proven and undeniable. The ministry officials, including the secretary who protected this employee, are guilty of supporting corruption."

Despite repeated attempts through texts and phone, the land secretary could not be contacted for comments.

Corruption, capital flight key concerns

Speakers tell event

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Corruption and capital flight are the two main concerns of the country, said speakers at a press conference yesterday.

Capital flight, in economics, occurs when assets or money rapidly flow out of a country.

EquityBD and other civil society organisations arranged the event at the Economic Reporters' Forum auditorium.

They demanded the formation of a public expenditure review commission to stop graft.

They also said yearly income tax evasion is nearly $25 billion, which is four times the per capita health allocation.

Md Ahsanul Karim, director of COAST Foundation, called for a review commission to combat corruption, an inter-country bank transparency agreement to halt capital flight and black money, mandatory annual asset and bank statement submissions for dual nationals, and cessation of unnecessary public

1971 WAR CRIMES

Extradite Mueen, Ashrafuzzaman

Freedom fighters urge govt, protests UK court verdict

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Efforts are underway to challenge the verdicts issued by the International Crimes Tribunal regarding genocide, war crimes, and crimes against humanity during the 1971 Liberation War, said Sector Commanders' Forum-Liberation War '71.

The group in a statement yesterday called on the government to take decisive legal and diplomatic actions against a recent British Supreme Court ruling concerning Chowdhury Mueen Uddin, a convicted war criminal living in the UK.

In 2019, Chowdhury Mueen Uddin sued then British Home Secretary Priti Patel for £60,000 in libel charges after she shared a report on Twitter linking him to war crimes during Bangladesh's Liberation War in 1971.

Later, the British High Court dismissed the case.

However, on June 20 this year, British Supreme Court took cognizance of the complaint and gave Mueen the opportunity to continue the case.

The forum expressed concerns that such rulings could undermine Bangladesh's sovereignty and the integrity of International Crimes Tribunal.

They reiterated demands for the extradition of Mueen and Ashrafuzzaman Khan, both convicted of war crimes. The two have been living abroad evading justice.

Abdul Mabud, joint secretary general of the forum, said Khan resides in the US, while Mueen became a British citizen in 1984.

Collapsed bridge affects 300 families

KONGKON KARMAKER, Dinajpur

Residents of Purba Nazirdah in Haragachh union of Rangpur's Kaunia upazila are facing severe hardship after a 140-foot bamboo bridge over the Manas river collapsed due to heavy rainfall and flooding.

The bridge, which served as the sole connection for locals to cross the river, deteriorated over time and collapsed recently amid rising water levels from the Teesta river.

Local Rumel Mia said the bamboo bridge, initially built by the union parishad to facilitate commuting, became unsafe and collapsed multiple times in the past.

Efforts to replace it with a new wooden bridge stalled despite repeated pleas from locals.

Visiting the area recently, this correspondent saw a part of the broken bamboo bridge lying in the middle of the river, while locals were crossing the river either treading the water or using the broken bridge amid risks.

"Around 300 families live on the river bank areas in the village. The collapsed bridge has caused much inconvenience to the people. Children are scared to go to schools using the broken bridge. No one has even come to inspect or take any steps to address the issue yet," said Abdul Momin of the village.

Hamida Begum of the village echoed him.

Aziz, a local farmer, said, "My crop fields lie on both sides of the river. As the bridge has collapsed, I have a hard time transporting my produce from crop-fields. Also, it has become arduous to travel an additional five kilometres on the alternative route to reach upazila headquarters and other areas."

Chairman Raju Ahmed of Haragachh union parishad urged the authorities to build a concrete bridge.

Asked, upazila engineer Asaduzzaman Jemi said a wooden bridge would be constructed soon.

15 houses gutted in Kurigram fire

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Lalmonirhat

At least 15 houses of nine families were burnt to ashes in a fire in the Puratan Post Office area of Kurigram town on Friday night.

The fire might have originated from an electric short circuit around 11:30pm, said the fire service.

No casualties were reported as the residents managed to escape.

The firefighters brought the blaze under control in two hours.

The affected families told The Daily Star that they lost everything to the fire and are now staying under the open sky.

Shariful Islam, senior station officer of Kurigram Fire Service, said they rushed to the spot upon receiving information. They had to struggle to douse the fire as there was no water source nearby, he added.

Illegal sand lifting puts school at risk

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Bagerhat

Illegal sand lifting near Dobariya Government Primary School in Kachua upazila of Bagerhat has sparked an outcry among locals.

The activity threatens to weaken the school building's foundation, thereby putting it at risk of collapse or damage.

The sand is being extracted for the construction of a road in Dobariya area, said locals.

"The illegal activity has endangered the lives of the students besides disrupting the school's academic activities," said a parent fearing safety of his children.

While visiting the area to report on the situation yesterday, this correspondent encountered threats from unidentified individuals, highlighting the risks faced by those attempting to bring the issue to light.

Contacted, Rakhi Banerjee, UNO of Kachua upazila, said she informed the upazila engineer of the Local Government Engineering Department in this regard.

Md Sharifuzzaman, executive engineer of LGED in the upazila, said, "We are looking into the matter urgently. Steps will be taken to stop the illegal sand lifting and damage caused to the school's foundation will be assessed."

Contacted, Bagerhat's Deputy Commissioner Mohammad Khalid Hossain said a mobile court has one accused Tk 50,000 in this regard under the Balumahal and Soil Management Act, 2010.

A dredger machine was also removed from the spot during a drive, he added.

Legal recourse for cybercrimes still a far cry survey titled "CCAF Cyber Crime Research Report 2024", conducted by the Cyber Crime Awareness Foundation.

The survey interviewed 132 victims of cybercrime from April 2023 to April 2024.

According to the report, nearly 59 percent of the victims are women.

Social media and online account hacking is the most common crime, making up 21.65 percent of cases, followed by online threats at 8.6 percent.

The report also found that 78.78 percent of the victims were aged 18 to 30, which is an increase from 75 percent a year ago.

The survey highlights the dissatisfaction of victims with legal resources available at their disposal. Many, like Falguni, thought they wouldn't get justice from the existing system.

The study found that cybercrimes make up 11.85 percent of total crimes, including personal information spreading, job scams, and online gambling.

Pornography-related crimes increased in 2023, affecting 11.35 percent of victims, with 50 percent of them experiencing cyber bullying.

Nearly 48 percent of victims face social disgrace, 40 percent suffer financial losses, and almost all endure mental anguish.

Only 12 percent sought legal recourse in 23-24, which was 21 percent in a similar CCAF study in 22-23.

CCAF attributed this decline to the lack of trust among victims in legal resources.

Among those who chose the legal path, 87.50 percent said they did not achieve satisfactory results.

The study mentioned that 70 percent of the victims were unaware of the cybercrime act.

The study recommended not clicking or sharing anything without verification, being cautious with digital transactions, and checking security measures before sharing personal information.

It also urged the government to coordinate public-private partnerships for public awareness, protect personal data, enhance law enforcement training, inform citizens about laws, and decentralise the Cyber Police Center for grassroots service.

The study was conducted by Obydullah Al Marjuk, a senior lecturer in the Social Science and Humanities Department at Independent University, Bangladesh, with research assistants from CCAF.

Ishtiaq Ahmed, additional deputy commissioner of Police at the CTTC Unit of Dhaka Metropolitan Police, said most sections of the Cyber Security Act 2013 are bailable, making it difficult to bring offenders to justice.

He also mentioned that delayed complaints from victims hinder legal protection and that child pornography is increasing through social media.

CCAF President Brig Gen Kazi Mustafizur Rahman said increasing individual awareness can reduce cyber crime and the responsibility for awareness must be shared collectively.

black money with minimal taxes, suggesting higher tax rates to deter tax evasion effectively.

He also slammed the power sector for its excess generation capacity. Despite increased production capacity, about 15,000 MW of power remains unused, leading private owners to incur substantial rental or capacity charges in foreign currency.

He questioned the accuracy of the country's reserve figures, expressing skepticism towards official statements from the Bangladesh Bank.

GM Quader concluded by saying the budget fails to address fundamental economic issues.

expenditures instead of subsidy reductions.

Rezaul Karim Chowdhury, chief moderator of EquityBD, suggested that stopping the $25 billion income tax evasion could double the social safety net for the poor or quadruple per capita health spending.

He advocated for reinstating annual wealth statements for civil servants and imposing capital punishment for corruption.

Farmer killed over land dispute in Sherpur

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Mymensingh

A farmer was killed in an attack allegedly by his neighbours following a dispute over land in Sadar upazila of Sherpur yesterday.

The deceased is Samedul Haque Kena, 65, from Joginimura Namapara village in the upazila.

Quoting family members and locals, Md Emdadul Haque, officer-in-charge of Sherpur Sadar Police Station, said there has been a longstanding dispute over a piece of land between Samedul and his neighbours Md Harun and Siddique Khalifa.

When Harun and Siddique went to the disputed land to plant banana saplings in the morning, Samedul and his men locked in an altercation with them.

At one stage, the rivals attacked Samedul with sticks, leaving him injured. He was taken to Sherpur General Hospital where the doctors declared him dead.

Indian national held at Kurigram border

The OC said a case has been filed against him under the Passport Act.

CTG FOOD TESTING LAB

Sitting idle for a bureaucratic tangle

ARUN BIKASH DEY, Ctg

Chattogram's Modern Food Testing Laboratory, a Tk 34.4 crore project funded by the Asian Development Bank, remains inoperable despite construction being completed in December 2015.

The project, initiated in 2013, aimed to ensure food safety in Chattogram by providing a facility to test a wide range of food items including milk, meat, vegetables, and edible oil. While testing began on a trial basis in January 2016, a crucial hurdle has rendered the results useless: the absence of a signing authority.

Though the Ministry of Food granted approval for the lab's operation in November 2016, it mandated maintaining quality, employing trained manpower, and upholding equipment standards. However, without signing authority, the lab cannot declare food items as safe or unsafe.

The project's initial tenure saw food inspectors collect samples for testing. However, the lack of a signing authority meant no official action could be taken based on the results.

Further crippling the lab's potential, project personnel, including microbiologist Priya Saha, haven't been regularised despite being appointed eight years ago. This lack of job security led to many leaving their positions, hindering the lab's ability to function effectively.

Adding to the troubles, the Chattogram City Corporation (CCC) has not yet assumed control of the lab's operations from the private firm Star Link, despite being scheduled to do so after 2021.

Visiting the laboratory in Bibirhat area of port city recently, this correspondent saw no test being done there.

In fact, an eerie silence prevailed in the entire three-storey laboratory building with 31 rooms across an 8,000 sq feet area.

আধুনিক খাদ্য পরীক্ষাগার

The laboratory has two sections -- chemistry lab and microbiological lab. Each section has three labs with equipment. The laboratory also has a power sub-station.

"The project began with 24 officials including a director, a senior microbiologist and a senior chemist. The officials were supposed to be regularised as government officials later but it has not been done yet," Priya said.

"As a result, 17 left their job one after another," she added.

Shaheda Akter, another microbiologist, echoed her.

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina laid the facility's foundation stone on October 12, 2013. The construction work to set up six modern labs with food testing facilities including 83 machines was completed in December 2015.

Contacted, Sheikh Mohammad Tauhidul Islam, chief executive officer of CCC, said the contractor company of the project was yet to hand over the laboratory to CCC.

"We had three meetings with them to this end, but they are dilly dallying in handing over the laboratory to us, although the project ended in June 2021," he said.

"They are demanding a huge sum of money from us citing their expenditure for maintenance of the lab for the past three years," the CCC CEO also said.

"However, we will take over the laboratory in a few weeks. We have appointed four staffers including a microbiologist, a cleaner and two security guards to run the laboratory for the time being. We have also been paying Tk 35,000 for the monthly electricity bill. Once we take over the lab, we will appoint adequate manpower to run it," he added.

The authority of Star Link, the contractor company, could not be reached for comments.

People suffer for frequent power cuts

One unit shut down for maintenance, Patuakhali gets half the required power

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Patuakhali

Residents across Patuakhali district have been suffering due to frequent power outages after one of Payra Thermal Power Plant's two units was shut down on June 26 for maintenance.

Jitendranath Roy, a resident of Baufal upazila, said, "The frequent power cuts have left us amid much suffering and discomfort. Also, the HSC and equivalent examinations are going to start from June 30. The students are facing difficulty to study due to load-shedding."

"The 1,320 MW plant is now able to produce only 660 MW power with one operational unit since June 26. As such, load-shedding has become unavoidable as the power generation is much lower compared to the demand," said Shah Mani Ziko, assistant manager (investigation) of the plant.

An assistant engineer of Patuakhali grid, wishing anonymity, said, "Total demand for electricity is 100 MW in Patuakhali district, but it is getting only 50 MW since Wednesday.

The power generated at Payra plant is also supplied to Barishal, Khulna and Dhaka divisions through the Power Development Board."

"A total 14 MW electricity is required for 32,000 consumers in Patuakhali Municipality, but the supply has been around 10-12 MW since Wednesday. As a result, load-shedding has become unavoidable," said Dean Mohammad Muhim, executive engineer of Patuakhali's West Zone Power Distribution Company Limited.

Shah Mani Ziko added, "The Payra power plant needs at least 45-50 days of maintenance annually to generate power without interruption for the rest of the year. The maintenance works will continue for another four or five days. After that, power generation will resume to full capacity."

Cop closed for beating auto-rickshaw driver

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Natore

A police official was closed for allegedly assaulting an auto-rickshaw driver in Singra upazila of Natore yesterday.

Salim Reza, sub-inspector of Singra Police Station, was attached to Natore Police Lines after a video in this regard went viral on social media, said Abul Kalam, officer-in-charge of the police station.

Tariqul Islam, superintendent of Natore police, signed the order, said the OC.

Locals said auto-rickshaw driver Harun Ali was returning to his Baisha village home from Damdama around 11:00pm on Thursday.

When he reached in front of Desh Furniture Shop in Upazila Parishad Road area, SI Salim Reza and two others got into the rickshaw and asked him to take them to the Singra bus stand.

As Harun said he wanted to go home rather than take a passenger, Salim got angry and started beating him. OC Kalam also said departmental action will be taken after investigation.

This correspondent could not reach Salim for comments.

Siltation clogs 18 sluice gates

Vast areas in Jashore at risk of flooding, waterlogging

MOHSIN MILON, Benapole

Siltation has clogged 18 sluice gates on three rivers -- the Harihar, Aparbhadra and Buribhadra -- along a stretch of 30 kilometres in Keshabpur upazila of Jashore.

As such, the areas are at risk of flooding and waterlogging in the monsoon if the sluice gates cannot drain away rainwater, said officials of Bangladesh Water Development Board in Jashore.

Earlier, around 18km stretch of Aparbhadra river completely dried up due to a lack of water flow caused by siltation.

A proposal to excavate the three rivers has been included in the amendment project for the Kapotaksha river and submitted to the ministry concerned as well as BWDB. However, it has not been approved yet and no funding has yet been received, said officials.

As a result, the situation is only worsening over time.

In the 1980s, the BWDB built dams on a number of rivers in the region in the name of polder construction under coastal embankment projects, thereby separating the rivers from the tidal floodplains and canals connected to those.

As a result, siltation started accumulating in the riverbeds as the dams prevented tidal water from entering the rivers and washing away silt. Kapotaksha, Harihar, Aparbhadra and Srihari became the most affected rivers.

Consequently, in 2017, severe floods inundated Keshabpur upazila town and adjoining areas along the rivers.

Later in 2019, BWDB took a Tk 50 crore project to dig Harihar, Buribhadra and Aparbhadra rivers to prevent floods.

The rivers were dug, but their width reduced. Besides, the water levels did not return to expected level, and the flow did not restore to normalcy. As a result, the waterlogging problems returned within two years after the excavation while siltation remained a persistent problem.

At present, the rivers resemble narrow canals on their deathbed.

"We are likely to suffer due to flooding and waterlogging this monsoon and the problems will only worsen in future unless the rivers are excavated promptly, and properly," said Azizur Rahman, a resident of Mangalkot village in the upazila.

Abubakar Siddique, convenor of Keshabpur upazila unit of Bhabadah Water Drainage Committee, said, "The rivers must be dug before the onset of next monsoon to prevent flooding across a vast area in Keshabpur and neighbouring upazilas."

"The existing situation has already affected the region's agriculture adversely," he added.

Contacted, Suman Sikdar, sub-divisional engineer of BWDB in Jashore, said if the project proposal for dredging the rivers is accepted, the work will begin promptly upon receiving funding.

THE FUTURE OF MONEY

Central Bank's Digital Currency

Policy Research Institute (PRI) in collaboration with The Daily Star organized a roundtable titled 'Future of Money' on March 31, 2024. Here we publish a summary of the discussion.

The Daily Star ROUNDTABLE DISCUSSION ON Future of Money
Central Bank's Digital Currency
Date: March 31, 2024
The Daily Star Centre, Dhaka

Dr Ahsan H Mansur,
Executive Director, PRI

Over the past decade and a half, extensive research has been conducted on the topic across the globe by different central banks and researchers. Some countries have even embarked on trial runs. There's a palpable sense of cautiousness, with major central banks and governments waiting to see who will take the lead in launching digital currency at retail level. Several smaller countries have made strides, albeit with mixed success. It's clear that before making any decisions, we must closely examine the experiences of others.

Infrastructure development, particularly in terms of technology upgradation, is imperative. This includes internet-based systems, networking, and cybersecurity. Bangladesh Bank must also strategize for potential future scenarios. The Reserve Bank of India has made significant progress in their research on digital currency, though implementation still remains far off. The silence from the Chinese government adds to the intrigue, especially considering their successful city-level trials.

Inevitably, the digital currency will become global in future. However, the pros and cons are myriad. While its introduction can combat corruption, it also poses political economy risks towards its effective introduction, particularly if corruption is ingrained within bureaucratic structures and political system. Privacy concerns also persist as financial data becomes more accessible. In balancing efficiency with state mechanisms and regulatory hurdles, we must foster innovation while safeguarding individual rights to privacy.

Dr M A Razzaque, Director, PRI

The study has been led by PRI in association with The Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, with primary missions of enhancing financial literacy and fostering financial inclusion. In this journey, PRI actively engage in policy research and contribute in advocacy. The feasibility assessment of digital currency by central bank mentioned in budget of fiscal year 2022-23 worked as a drive behind commencing of this paper.

Undoubtedly, CBDC (Central Bank's Digital Currency) marks a pivotal innovation, shifting from physical currency to digital wallets. Understanding its dynamics and implications is paramount in today's monetary landscape. Cost savings are significant compared to traditional printing, as digital security measures complicate counterfeiting. Tracking transactions becomes easier, reducing the cost of combating forgery.

CBDC paves the way for a cashless society, enhancing transparency and combating corruption. However, our paper advocates for a balanced approach, promoting coexistence of digital currency and physical cash to capitalize on benefits while gradually transitioning towards a cashless economy.

CBDC differs from cryptocurrencies. While cryptocurrencies such as Bitcoin and Ethereum operate privately and face varying legal statuses depending on the country, however CBDC functions similarly to traditional money, holding solid legal backing. Bangladesh, for instance, has explicitly stated its disavowal of Bitcoin and prohibited Bitcoin transactions within its jurisdiction. Cryptocurrency's speculative trading nature leads to high volatility, whereas CBDC, not intended for trading, remains stable. Though subject to periodic fluctuations, akin to monetary policy effects like inflation, CBDC maintains overall stability.

Digital currency manifests in two main forms: Wholesale CBDC, facilitating bank-to-bank transactions with distinct regulations, and Retail CBDC, providing digital currency directly to individuals.

it's important to note that cryptocurrency operates on blockchain technology, which can also serve as the foundation for CBDC. Ensuring a reliable storage system including cloud-based storage or physical storage systems, is crucial for recording every transaction and maintaining data integrity. An accessible interface can be established through web-based platforms, mobile applications, or computer interfaces.

Transactions can be easily traceable in CBDC making the approach transparent albeit at a potential cost of privacy. In contrast, cryptocurrencies like Bitcoin, uses complex technology to give a maximum protection to privacy with one of its adverse impacts being facilitating transactions that may be deemed illegal or inappropriate.

There are two principal sources of information on CBDC research and adoption. The Atlantic Council, which is an American think tank in the field of international affairs, reports that three countries have already launched their digital currencies and 36 countries are in the pilot stage, whereas according to CBDC Tracker—a collaborative initiative of Boston Consulting Group, Ernst & Young, Digital Euro Assocation—four central bank digital currencies are already in operation with 46 countries are in the pilot and proof of concept stages. Despite the differences between specific details, both the sources show that there are more than 100 central banks globally that are either researching or in the process of piloting CBDCs.

Notable CBDCs that are in operation include Jamaica's JamDex, Nigeria's eNaira, and the Bahamas' Sand Dollar. On the other hand, Ecuador and the Philippines are examples of countries that have either canceled or backtracked their digital currency projects. The world's largest CBDC pilot is being conducted by China. Its digital yuan (e-CNY), reached 260 million wallets in 26 cities in 17 provinces. In recent years, digital yuan has been experimented in various sectors, from transportation and healthcare to purchasing crude oil. India is also seriously pursuing its CBDC project with the Reserve Bank of India (RBI) planning to introduce the ability to conduct offline transactions using its digital rupee (e-Rupee) as part of its CBDC pilot. This functionality aims to enable transactions in areas with limited or no internet connectivity, expanding the digital rupee's accessibility and practicality. The United States appears to have a cautious approach to CBDC.

Some countries are also exploring options for using CBDCs for cross-border transactions. For instance, Project Jura is a collaboration between the central banks of France and Switzerland, along with the Bank of International Settlements (BIS), for the settlement between two wholesale CBDCs. Similarly, the mBridge Project involves the BIS and the central banks of China, Hong Kong, Thailand, and the UAE, aiming to establish a multi-CBDC platform that improves cross-border payments and foreign exchange transactions by using distributed ledger technology for more efficient transactions.

RECOMMENDATIONS

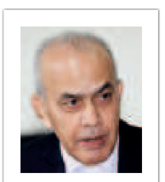
- The costs of combating counterfeiting in traditional money can be drastically reduced with the introduction of digital currency equipped with utmost security.
- Increasing adoptability and knowledge among the public is vital.
- Conduct a meta-analysis before launching CBDC pilot programs to avoid blindly replicating other countries' pilots.
- Increased investment in local manpower, digital literacy, and understanding financial behavior is essential.
- Assess how digital currency can benefit us, aiming for transparency in a cashless society, while considering our social and political context.
- Promote collaboration between civil society and the Bangladesh Bank to address challenges and opportunities in digital currency adoption, fostering informed decision-making and public awareness.
- Using digital currencies for cross-border transactions to address challenges like currency dominance and sanctions, enhancing financial flexibility and resilience for developing countries.
- The importance of public sector involvement in infrastructure development to foster financial inclusion is paramount.
- Bureaucratic barriers in analog practices hinder Bangladesh's transition to digital currency, necessitating comprehensive reforms.
- Navigating a gradual transition rather than a sudden leap towards a cashless society is imperative.

From the experiences of the countries that have adopted CBDCs, it seems that there has been an uptick in digital wallet registrations and usage although the progress towards a cashless economy remains an objective for the future.

CBDCs hold significant promise, particularly for financial inclusion, through instant money transfers to remote regions; faster, cheaper and simplified transactions; strengthened central bank's influence over monetary policy. However, several challenges remain. Digital infrastructure, especially internet access, cybersecurity deficiencies, and digital literacy gaps continue to impede progress. Updating digital infrastructure and policies on data storage and privacy concerns are essential steps. Pilot programmes, such as paying government workers with digital currency, can offer valuable insights for future implementation.There are important lessons for Bangladesh in CBDCs. Firstly, given the widespread global interest in digital currency, it's essential for us not to remain on the sidelines. Secondly, the pace of CBDC adaptation appears to be slow and thus achieving quick gains by introducing a CBDC is not to be expected. Thirdly, transitioning to CBDC doesn't necessitate an immediate shift to a cashless society; instead, gradual progress is more realistic and effective.

Bangladesh Bank must intensify research and exploration into CBDC technology. Identifying innovation opportunities and conducting small-scale experiments can enhance understanding of digital currency potential.

Lastly, the utmost priority lies in strengthening our national capacity. Without advancements in institutions, infrastructure, and regulatory frameworks, digital currency initiatives will falter, and other service systems like DFS and MFS will also struggle to thrive. Focusing on improving overall infrastructure and literacy is imperative for progress and avoiding digital gap led inequality.



Dr Jamaluddin Ahmed,
Board Member, bKash

Transitioning to digital currency mandates a skilled workforce, yet our bureaucratic structures, deeply entrenched in analog practices, pose formidable barriers to this transformation. Unlike many countries actively researching and piloting digital initiatives, Bangladesh has lagged due to its adherence to traditional systems. However, it's essential to recognize that such evolution will take time but should not be unduly prolonged.

While our existing payment systems, including MFS, have served us adequately, their limitations are evident. It's evident that both the operators of such platforms and our regulatory bodies lack sufficient expertise in this domain. Therefore, our primary focus should be on providing comprehensive training to empower them for optimal performance in this evolving landscape.

Sweden, a cashless pioneer, faces central bank digital currency dilemmas. Despite global prominence, it cautiously navigates decisions, offering valuable insights. In democratic settings, safeguarding rights and privacy is paramount.

Seminars needed to clarify confusion on cryptocurrency, digital currency, and MFS distinctions, essential for better understanding and dissemination of knowledge. Regulators, including NBR overseers, need trainings to initiate appropriate approaches. Additionally, urgent modernization required for transitioning NBR to digital system.

Given the printing cost of physical currency, for every BDT 100, it costs BDT 3, with the remaining constituting profit. Thus, if the central bank were to adopt digital currency, what potential issues might arise?

M Sabbir Hossain, DMD and Chief Operating Officer, Brac Bank

The emergence of Bitcoin and Facebook's Libra, coupled with Mark Zuckerberg's ambitious plans for Libra, spurred active engagement from central banks and relevant bodies worldwide. While Bitcoin presented promising aspects, concerns about its adverse effects became apparent. It's crucial to maintain a safe distance from potentially harmful cryptocurrencies like Bitcoin, making CBDCs a viable solution to effectively address and mitigate such risks.

The lack of infrastructure for conducting pilot projects for CBDCs poses a significant obstacle. Despite this, there's acknowledgment that a completely regimented approach to CBDC implementation may not be suitable for Bangladesh. As mentioned by our deputy governor in Barishal, transitioning to a cashless system could potentially enrich the economy by more than 1.27 percent in GDP growth. However, achieving 100 percent cashlessness remains unrealistic.

Today, we're inaugurating the Astha App, facilitating monthly transactions worth 10,000 crore through 20 lakh transactions. This achievement is remarkable, considering we've transitioned from zero to such substantial digital transactions in just three years. It's imperative to highlight the substantial volume of transactions through MFS, underscoring our progress towards a cashless society.

Aminul Haq, Director, Chief Executive Officer (Acting) & CFO, Nagad

Before introducing CBDC in Bangladesh, it's crucial to address the significant reliance on cash transactions. Currently, the prevalence of cash-in and cash-out transactions exceeding 1000 crore in our MFS indicates that we haven't fully transitioned this substantial volume into digital transactions. Establishing an ecosystem based on cashless transactions is imperative before implementing CBDC in Bangladesh. While countries like China and others have embraced cashless transactions, the Philippines' lack of a centralized KYC system presents challenges due to its geographic division. However, Cambodia's successful pilot of CBDC could serve as an example for Bangladesh.

Collaboration between Thailand and Hong Kong on cross-country settlement offers another avenue to address our remittance challenges, especially with a significant number of Bangladeshi workers in Malaysia. Notably, Nagad has received a digital banking license, positioning itself to lead in this sector. However, reliance on foreign companies due to a shortage of skilled manpower in Bangladesh underscores the need for investment in local talent to navigate the complexities of the financial system effectively.

Arif Rahman, Manager, MicroSave Consulting

The concept of CBDC and cryptocurrency is relatively new in the context of Bangladesh. While digital money was introduced around 10 to 12 years ago, the idea of digital currency dates back to 1983 and has been rapidly gaining traction. My focus has been on studying human behavior and adaptation, particularly in relation to digital money and financial services. If these cryptocurrencies are backed by the central bank, they could find utility in various sectors such as companies, remittances, and international transactions. However, the level of adoption among the general population is a crucial consideration. Despite the significant presence of MFS, many individuals still prefer traditional cash-in and cash-out transactions, valuing the tangibility of physical currency.

Issues such as network reliability and infrastructure pose challenges to the widespread adoption of digital money. Therefore, any proposed system or policy ultimately hinges on how well it is embraced by users. There is immense potential to raise awareness among the public about the evolving nature of financial systems. However, it's equally important to understand and address the behavioral factors that influence users' attitudes and preferences towards digital transactions.

Dr Ashikur Rahman,
Senior Economist, PRI

Like every technological innovation, CBDC can cut both ways. In developing countries, commercial banks are primarily responsible for processing savings into investments. Therefore, if CBDC aims to directly connect individuals with the central bank – who will process savings into investments? The commercial banks are not only instrumental in screening potential investors who can effectively use the deposited savings, but it has been the only dominant mechanism of supporting large private sector investments in Bangladesh. Therefore, it is not clear how we can open such a technological window without hurting commercial banks, which complicates how CBDC will actually influence economic growth.

Furthermore, we have to be careful about the political economy concerns. If misused, CBDC can be used to violate economic freedom of individuals, which can empower authoritarian polities.

OPEN DISCUSSION

Dr Jamaluddin Ahmed, Board Member, bKash

After the central bank's transition to digital currency, the roles of MFS and the overall banking system will remain distinct. There is no need for confusion in this matter. The central bank will not engage in lending activities; its function is to support the government in managing the economy as needed. This fundamental role will not change. Commercial banks will continue their operations and will likely become more digitalized, leading to a reduction in transaction costs.

MFS won't become obsolete; their relevance persists. Debit and credit card services may face challenges with service charges compared to MFS. Platforms like bkash, Nagad, and Roket are poised to expand in this evolving landscape.

Dr Ahsan H Mansur, Executive Director, PRI

Regardless of whether we shift towards digital currency or not, digitized transactions are inevitable and unquestionably necessary. We must develop our digital infrastructure and strive for 100% digital outreach and a cashless society.

Even with digital currency, many safeguards should be incorporated to ensure the principles and values of democracy. We must address these issues thoughtfully.

Finally, we need to assess how beneficial the digital currency will be for Bangladesh. If we can achieve a cashless society, we go a long way toward the efficiency gains out of digital currency. We must consider our social and political context when evaluating its potential contributions. I believe the civil society and Bangladesh Bank should collaborate to advance these safeguards and, the efficiency of digital infrastructure further.

If the infrastructure is ready, digital currency can be compatible with any technological advancements. Currently, central banks are at innovation stages, indicating that they would initially implement CBDC within the commercial bank structures. They do not intend to replace commercial banks at this stage. For instance, if Bangladesh Bank plans to disburse 5,000 crore Taka in digital currency, it will do so through the commercial banks.

Arun Dev Nath, Deputy Editor, The Daily Star

The possibility of cross-border transactions using digital currency is crucial to notice. The way the dollar has dominated against other developing countries' currencies raises hope. This could be a compelling argument for us to present to the government and the central bank, as it seems like an area where they may see the need for action.

For instance, consider a recent example where Bangladesh struggled to pay Russia at least 400 US dollars due to sanctions. In such cases, exploring options like using yuan or digital currencies from specific digital banks for transactions could be promising. However, this is just speculation, and there's still a long way to go.

Tanjim Ferdous, In-charge of NGO and Foreign Missions, Business Development Team, The Daily Star & Moderator of the session

As we stand on the brink of a digital revolution, the inevitability of digital currency becoming a global phenomenon is undeniable. This shift promises to combat corruption and streamline transactions, yet it also introduces a complex array of challenges. Today, we have delved into a comprehensive discussion of both the positive and negative aspects of this issue. It is crucial that we continue this dialogue, as we can no longer ignore the reality of the digital transformation within our currency system. Together, we must navigate this new landscape, addressing both its opportunities and its risks.

LEBANON BORDER

Iran warns Israel of 'obliterating' war

AFP, Tehran

Iran yesterday warned that "all Resistance Fronts", a grouping of Iran and its regional allies, would confront Israel if it attacks Lebanon.

The comment from Iran's mission to New York comes with fears of a wider regional war involving Israel and Lebanon's Iran-backed Hezbollah movement. The two sides have engaged in near-daily exchanges of fire since the offensive on Gaza began.

In a post on social media platform X, the Iranian mission said it "deems as psychological warfare the Zionist regime's propaganda about intending to attack Lebanon".

But, it added, "should it embark on full-scale military aggression, an obliterating war will ensue. All options, incl. the full involvement of all Resistance Fronts, are on the table."

US military destroys seven drones, vehicle in Yemen

AFP, Washington

American forces destroyed seven drones and a control station vehicle in Houthi-controlled areas of Yemen over 24 hours, the US military said Friday.

The strikes were carried out because the drones and the vehicle "presented an imminent threat to US coalition forces, and merchant vessels in the region," the US Central Command said in a statement on social media platform X.

The Iran-backed Houthis have been targeting vessels in the Red Sea and Gulf of Aden since November 2023.

On Friday, Houthi military spokesperson Yahya Saree claimed responsibility for attacks on four vessels, including a "direct hit" on the Delonix tanker in the Red Sea after an operation involving a number of ballistic missiles.

Thousands displaced as Israel pummels north Gaza

AFP, Palestinian Territories

Explosions, air strikes and gunfire rattled northern Gaza yesterday, the third day of an Israeli military operation that has uprooted tens of thousands of Palestinians and compounded what the UN called "unbearable" living conditions in the territory.

An AFP correspondent reported ongoing explosions from the Shujaiya area near Gaza City, with a resident saying bodies were visible on the streets.

Israel's military yesterday said its operations were continuing in Shujaiya where fighting "above and below the ground" left a "large number" of Hamas fighters dead.

A resurgence of fighting in the area comes months after Israel had declared the command structure of Hamas dismantled in northern Gaza.

Last Sunday Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said the "intense phase" of the offensive was winding down after almost nine months, but experts see a potentially prolonged next phase.

Israel's offensive has killed at least 37,834 people, also mostly civilians, according to data from the health ministry in Hamas-run Gaza. It reported at least 69 deaths over the previous 48 hours.

- Israeli forces continue pounding Shujaiya area
- Death toll in enclave rises to 37,834

Mohammed Harara, 30, said he and his family, young and old, felt as though they would become part of that toll.

He said they fled from their home in Shujaiya with nothing, "due to the bombardment by Israeli planes, tanks and drones" that they barely survived.

"We couldn't carry anything from the house. We left the food, flour, canned goods, mattresses, and blankets," Harara said.

Israel's military on Friday said it was conducting "targeted raids" backed by air strikes against Hamas in the Shujaiya area.

The United Nations humanitarian agency OCHA estimated that "about 60,000 to 80,000 people were displaced" from the area this week.

AFPTV images yesterday showed men moving belongings on a donkey cart. Some people were pushed in wheelchairs. Children walked with backpacks past piles of dusty debris.

"I saw a tank in front of the Shuhada mosque firing" at targets, said Abdelkareem al-Mamluk. "There were martyrs in the street."

Elsewhere in the coastal territory, the civil defence agency yesterday said four bodies were pulled from an apartment after an Israeli strike in the central region.

Further south, in the Rafah area, witnesses reported dead and wounded after a new incursion by Israeli troops.

Far right scents power as France braces for polls

AFP, Paris

A divided France braced for high-stakes parliamentary elections that could see the anti-immigrant and eurosceptic party of Marine Le Pen sweep to power in a historic first.

The candidates ended their frantic three-week campaigns at midnight Friday, with political activity banned until the first round of voting today.

Yesterday, voting began in France's overseas territories that span the globe, with residents of the tiny archipelago of Saint Pierre and Miquelon, located off the coast of Canada, casting their ballots from 1000 GMT.

They will be followed by voters in France's islands in the Caribbean and the South American territory of French Guiana. Voting will later start in territories in the Pacific and then in the Indian Ocean before it gets underway on the mainland today.

Most polls show that Le Pen's far-right National Rally (RN) is on course to win the largest number of seats in the 577-member National Assembly, parliament's lower house, although it remains unclear if the party will secure an outright majority.

UK GENERAL ELECTION

Sunak slams racist slur by Farage party campaigner

REUTERS, Stockton-on-Tees

British Prime Minister Rishi Sunak said on Friday evening he was hurt and angry that a supporter of Nigel Farage's right-wing Reform UK party had been recorded making a racial slur about him, saying it was too important for him not to speak out.

Britain's first ethnic-minority prime minister, Sunak was responding to comments broadcast by Channel 4 News, by a man named as Andrew Parker calling Sunak a "king Paki" - a British racial slur for people of South Asian descent.

Sunak, currently campaigning for a July 4 national election that his Conservative Party is tipped to lose after 14 years in power, was born in the southern English port city of Southampton to Hindu parents of Punjabi Indian descent.

"My two daughters have to see and hear Reform people who campaign for Nigel Farage calling me an effing Paki. It hurts and it makes me angry, and I think he has some questions to answer," Sunak told reporters. "I don't repeat those words lightly, I do so deliberately because this is too important not to call out clearly for what it is," he added.

ACC probe into Benazir

apply to the court for an executive magistrate to inspect Benazir's four flats in Gulshan. The unit intends to compile an inventory of the contents inside these flats, which are reportedly part of Benazir's vast wealth. The ACC will then seek the court's guidance on managing these assets.

The former IGP's family resided in these four flats, which are currently locked as the family is believed to be abroad.

As part of the investigation, the ACC summoned Benazir on June 6, and his wife and daughters on June 9 for questioning, but they did not appear. However, no travel bans have been issued against them by the ACC.

They were again summoned on June 23 and 24. Instead of appearing, they submitted the written statement through their lawyer on June 20. According to various sources, the family remains abroad.

Along with allegations of corruption and substantial illegal wealth accumulation, Benazir is also accused of concealing his police identity in his passport. Despite holding high positions within the police force, he obtained a passport as a private employee, violating government employment and passport regulations.

This was discovered during a renewal attempt, which led the passport office to halt the process. At the time, Benazir was the director general of the Rapid Action Battalion, and managed to resolve the issue using his influence.

The ACC has found seven passports belonging to Benazir and his family members.

On June 25, the commission interrogated eight officials from the passport office regarding Benazir's passport forgery.

On March 31, allegations of illegal wealth acquisition by Benazir and his family published in a national daily prompted the ACC to launch an investigation after verifying the claims.

It began the probe, led by Deputy Director Hafizul Islam, on April 22. The team also includes a three-member special investigation team from the ACC headquarters.

post of assistant tax commissioner, first bought a savings certificate worth Tk 30 lakh in his name on November 12, 2020.

Four days later, a savings certificate worth Tk 5 lakh was bought in his wife Afsana Jesmin's name.

On January 10, 2021, two savings certificates worth Tk 10 lakh and Tk 20 lakh respectively were brought in his father-in-law Ahmed Ali's name.

Three weeks later, another savings certificate worth Tk 30 lakh was purchased in the name of Faisal's relative, Khondaker Hafizur Rahman. Ten days later, he bought another saving certificate worth Tk 10 lakh in Rahman's name.

On February 2, 2021, Faisal bought another savings certificate worth Tk 30 lakh in the name of his brother Quazi Khalid Hasan.

On December 26, he bought another savings certificate worth Tk 29 lakh in his brother-in-law Aftab Ali's name.

The Dhaka court directed the authorities concerned to freeze 87 bank accounts of Faisal, his wife and relatives.

It also asked them to ensure that the properties cannot be transferred to another part by Faisal and his family and that the money cannot be laundered.

The ACC informed the court that Faisal opened many bank accounts in his relatives' names to hide his illicit earnings. Among these, the ACC found specific transaction details for 87 bank accounts.

According to ACC documents, Faisal and his 11 relatives conducted transactions worth crores through 87 accounts across 19 banks and 1 non-bank financial institution.

The largest volume of transactions amounting to Tk 11.57 crore was found in the account of his father-in-law, a retired bank officer. Ali has eight bank accounts.

Faisal's mother-in-law Momtaz Begum, a housewife, has ten bank accounts and transactions amounting to Tk 7 crore were spotted in these accounts.

Faisal has six accounts, which had transactions amounting to Tk 5.21 crore. His wife, who is also a housewife, has five bank accounts where transactions worth Tk 2.25 crore took place.

The ACC also found Faisal and his wife had bought a five-katha plot from the Jolshiri Housing Project in Khilgaon, while his wife bought another five-katha plot for Tk 75 lakh from East-West Development. His father-in-law purchased a flat for Tk 1 crore from Rupayan Housing Estate in the city's Ramna area.

camps to landfill sites.

Now, appeals to the Israeli authorities for access to the landfill sites were frequently denied, she said. And lacking fuel meant even when access was granted, trucks could not go in to clear out the mess.

Wateridge said food insecurity in the territory was having a visible effect on the population. "When I see my colleagues, my friends here, they're visibly unrecognisable because having such unsustained access to food for so long, you start to age, you look unhealthy, your skin changes colour," she said.

Thursday saw the first medical evacuations from Gaza into neighbouring Egypt since the Rafah border crossing was closed in early May, when Israeli forces took over the Palestinian side.

The World Health Organization says 10,000 patients need evacuating from Gaza for treatment.

Wateridge said one of her own UNRWA colleagues, Abdullah, had to wait for two months before being evacuated in April. He was injured in a strike and had his legs amputated in late February.

Since then, he had spent weeks in the devastated Al Shifa hospital -- once Gaza's largest medical complex -- when it was under siege.

7 held after woman raped

9:30pm, a group of six people, led by a man named Abul Kashem Suman, abducted them.

They took the two to a secluded area and demanded a ransom of Tk 70,000 from the husband. When he left to fetch the money, he contacted the National Emergency Service "999".

AC Muttajul said police immediately went to the area after receiving the information. The kidnappers kept changing their location, realising the police were after them.

Police finally rescued the victim around 4:00am but the kidnappers fled.

After talking to the woman, the police learned that she had been raped.

Quoting the woman, the AC said four of the accused raped her.

Law enforcers conducted raids at various locations and arrested seven individuals yesterday, including the main accused, Suman.

During primary interrogation, Suman claimed that the woman was previously known to him.

The AC said the arrestees would be produced before a Dhaka court today with a remand petition.

Vinicius comes alive for Brazil

LaLiga-Champions League double.

"Today I played a game that is compatible to the level of the player I am," Vinicius told reporters.

"I always say that I never play for myself, I play for the team, for Brazil, for my country. I always try to do the best things, but it's not always possible.

"Today I played a great match, I know I can improve a lot and I will do to help Brazil. We want to put Brazil in the place we deserve," he said.

After their disappointing opener, Brazil were initially struggling against another defensive opponent and almost lost their composure when Lucas Paqueta badly missed a penalty halfway through the first half.

But instead, they were rescued by Vinicius, who took charge and was all over the field, striking twice and creating another chance that allowed Savinho to score, helping Brazil to go to the break with a comfortable 3-0 lead.

That was more than enough for a Brazil that were playing under huge pressure with the hopes of 215 million compatriots on their shoulders.

Dorival was pleased with Vinicius's exploits and said the best of Brazil is yet to come.

"Today he played a very important role," Dorival told reporters, speaking with the help of a translator.

"He played an almost perfect match, he created very good situations and opportunities. He was dynamic, very effective and straightforward and direct.

"He played well with other players and teamed up nicely, he has great capacity.

"These are different teams that are undergoing different moments but I have no doubts that Brazil will perform at the highest level, and I expect that it will be better than these two first matches."

Panama court acquits 28 in 'Panama Papers' trial

AFP, Panama City

A Panamanian court on Friday acquitted 28 people charged with money laundering in connection with the now-defunct law firm Mossack Fonseca, the epicenter of the "Panama Papers" international tax evasion scandal.

Among those acquitted were the firm's founders, Jurgen Mossack and Ramon Fonseca, the latter of whom died in May in a Panamanian hospital.

During the trial, which was held in Panama City in April, the prosecution asked for 12 years in prison for the duo, the maximum sentence for money laundering.

However, Judge Baloisa Marquinez acquitted the pair and 26 others after finding that evidence taken from the law firm's servers had not been gathered in line with due process, raising doubts about its "authenticity and integrity," a court statement said.

The judge also ruled that "the rest of the evidence was not sufficient and conclusive to determine the criminal responsibility of the defendants," the court statement said.

Leaked documents from Mossack Fonseca in 2016 revealed how many of the world's wealthy stashed assets in offshore companies, triggering scores of investigations around the globe.

Those implicated included former British premier David Cameron, Russian President Vladimir Putin, football star Lionel Messi, Argentina's then-president Mauricio Macri and Spanish filmmaker Pedro Almodovar, to name but a few.

Panamanian prosecutors had alleged that Mossack and Fonseca helped create opaque companies in which executives of the German multinational Siemens deposited millions of euros outside the company's official accounts.

They were also charged with helping divert money from a massive fraud in Argentina.

"Justice has been done, we are extremely satisfied with the ruling handed down by the judge," Guillermina McDonald, lawyer for Mossack and other defendants, told AFP.

Zero tolerance, but plenty of clearance?

The corrupt should have no place in public service

It is frustrating that the government's "zero tolerance" policy against corruption continues to be a slogan without substance even as it plagues the whole nation. The recent disclosures of alleged corruption involving two top officials of the National Board of Revenue (NBR), following high-profile cases involving a former IGP and an army chief, have once again underscored how widespread corruption has become. The government claims there are stringent anti-corruption measures in place, and that actions are taken whenever an incident is reported. The truth couldn't be more different, however. While we have laws criminalising bribery, money laundering, or use of public resources for private gain, in reality, those are seldom used. If anything, anti-graft laws and regulations targeting government employees have been rather relaxed, lightening penalties for corruption.

A report by The Daily Star tracks some of the changes made in relevant laws over the years. For example, in 2018, an amendment to the Government Servants (Discipline and Appeal) Rules (1985) introduced "reprimand" as a penalty for proven corruption. Other penalties include forced retirement, removal from the job, suspension, and demotion. But when public officials abuse their authority to commit crimes including corruption, they lose their moral right to be in service. In any other sector other than public, the punishment for that would be termination. So, penalties like a reprimand, or salary reduction, or "closing", or even demotion do feel like a slap on the wrist, and this is what has been happening in the public sector.

In April, for instance, Promatha Ranjan Ghatak, now an assistant secretary, was found guilty of embezzling Tk 7.35 crore while he served as a land acquisition officer in Madaripur, but was only demoted rather than dismissed. Around the same time, Bir Amir Hamza, an assistant commissioner (land) of Bogura Sadar Upazila, was sentenced to a reduced salary for a year after being found guilty of forgery. The leniency shown in their cases has understandably raised eyebrows. Experts believe the government provided impunity to public servants by enacting the Government Services Act, 2018, which replaced the Public Servants (Dismissal on Conviction) Ordinance, 1985. That ordinance had harsher provisions including dismissal for any employee punished for criminal offences. As per the 2018 act, however, an official can be in service even after being sentenced to up to 12 months in prison. The act also requires the ACC to seek permission before arresting any official.

All such lenient, protective and even discriminatory provisions send a dangerous message: that corruption by public officials, even when proven, will be met with minimal consequences. Against this backdrop, when ruling party MPs decry it, as some of them did in parliament recently, but stop short of using their mandate to toughen up related laws, it comes across as hollow and insincere. To really check corruption, the government must not only get rid of all questionable provisions but also ensure strict compliance with existing rules and regulations.

Painful struggles of coastal women

Govt must address the crisis of drinkable water in southwest

It is disheartening that at a time when Bangladesh is boasting massive infrastructural development, women in remote areas in southwest still have to bear the burden of walking for miles and carrying back heavy pitchers of water for their families. People in these villages lack access to clean drinking water, and are often forced to drink salty water leading to serious health problems. A report by our Khulna correspondent describes the harsh reality of women who have been hit particularly hard by climate change and the proliferation of shrimp business that has resulted in the salinity of all nearby water sources.

According to the report, over 40 lakh people across the southern coast are facing a freshwater crisis with the women being the biggest sufferers, as they are the ones who must take the backbreaking walk to collect clean water for their families. Climate change has also led to lower rainfall, so harvesting rainwater is becoming difficult. Often people are forced to drink saline water and end up having hypertension and kidney diseases. Again, women are more affected by this, many developing reproductive health problems.

Salinity due to overzealous shrimp cultivation has wreaked havoc on the environment for decades. More and more land is being affected by salinity, making them barren and unfit for food cultivation. Yet precious little has been done to reduce the number of shrimp enclosures. The interests of local influentials have always taken precedence over those of the poor people in these areas. Climate change, meanwhile, has forced many paddy-field workers to seek employment in urban areas, leaving their female family members to take on all the responsibilities of the households, making their lives even more burdensome.

Urgent action is needed to address this situation. The government must immediately invest in building proper water infrastructure so that people can access clean water within the villages. It must also reduce salinity of the soil and water by drastically reducing the number of shrimp enclosures. Shrimp traders who have built unauthorised sluice gates in Khulna, thereby weakening river embankments, should be punished. The authorities must also support the women in these areas and end their daily misery of walking for miles under the scorching sun to bring back heavy pitchers of water.

THIS DAY IN HISTORY

Santal Rebellion

On this day in 1885, the Santal leaders Sidhu and Kanhu Murmu organised thousands of Santals to rebel against the East India Company. They protested against the oppressive colonial rule, and specifically the exploitative revenue system, as imposed by the zamindars, police, and the legal apparatus set by the British East India Company.

How healthy is the health budget?

UHC Forum is a coalition of professionals who aim to strategically push for universal health coverage (UHC)—an SDG4 priority. It recently organised a webinar on how well this year's budget relates to key health sector challenges. Five experts share their views on the matter with The Daily Star.

VISUAL: STAR

Dr Rumana Huque is professor, Department of Economics, University of Dhaka.

The proposed health sector budget of 2024-25 emphasises on achieving the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) by 2030 and the goals of the Perspective Plan by 2041. The proposed allocation for health is Tk 41,407 crore, which was Tk 38,051 crore in FY2023-24. Though this represents an increase of 8.8 percent in absolute terms, in real terms it is a decrease if inflation is considered. With small variations over the past decade, the health sector budget has remained stagnant at around five percent of the national budget. This is far below the international standard, which suggests allocating 15 percent of the government budget to health. Experts suggest that every government should commit to spending at least five percent of their GDP on health and move progressively towards this target. The 8FYP (eighth five year plan) committed to allocate two percent of the GDP towards the health sector by 2025. In contrast, the health budget has remained around 0.7 percent of GDP. India's current public healthcare spending is around 1.6-1.8 percent of GDP, and they are aiming to increase the public healthcare spending to 2.5 percent by 2025.

It is also suggested that the government should ensure health expenditure of at least $88 per person per year. The World Bank data suggests that the per capita health expenditure is $74 in India and $65 in Nepal, but only $58 in Bangladesh. Furthermore, a large portion of this health expenditure is paid by the people themselves: out-of-pocket (OOP) health expenditure as a proportion of current health expenditure is 73 percent in Bangladesh compared to 50 percent in India and 51.26 percent in Nepal and 17.05 percent globally.

The allocation of Tk 100 crore for "Integrated Health-Science Research and Development Fund" is a good initiative, but the key issue here is its efficient utilisation. The import duty on dialysis filters and dialysis circuits has been reduced from 10 percent to one percent on import, but 10 percent customs duty on import of medical equipment and supplies by referral hospitals has been imposed. We need to avoid creating additional burdens on people seeking health care.

Dr Syed Abdul Hamid is professor, Institute of Health Economics, University of Dhaka.*

There are two important lenses through which to assess this year's budget. The first is an equity lens. Two of the health sector programmes explicitly addressed to poorer citizens—the Shasthyo Shurokhsha Karmasuchi (SSK) and the maternal voucher scheme—have seen no horizontal or vertical expansion in allocation.

The second lens to assess the budget through is an efficiency lens. The proposed budget does not provide any noteworthy plan to enhance the functionality and efficiency of public health facilities. It does not propose measures to fill the current workforce vacancies, to create new positions necessary for dealing with emerging and re-emerging diseases, or enhance the supply chain of essential medicines.

There is a clear need for dedicated modern storage facilities, an updated dispensing mechanism, and improved diagnostic facilities, all of which are not addressed in the current budget. There is a notable absence of initiatives to strengthen primary healthcare in both rural and urban areas. Furthermore, there is no indication of optimising the existing budget by addressing the well-known governance constraints, whether at ministry/directorate level or at facility-level. Genuine political and administrative support is required from the ministry and directorate levels to ensure efficient use of the allocated funds.

AMM Nasiruddin is former Secretary, Ministry of Health and Family Welfare.*

An important concern with the health sector budget is incomplete utilisation of allocated funds. Due to this, a substantial amount must be surrendered to the Ministry of Finance at the end of the fiscal year despite the glaring needs of the sector.

There are several reasons for the low utilisation of the health budget. One is the gap in training of health facility managers on government financial management and rules relating to government procurement. Such shortcomings in many cases hinder and cause delays in timely budget utilisation.

A second reason is the over-centralisation of decision-making related to budget utilisation. Implementing authorities have little or no authority for adjustment of line items even when warranted by circumstances. Such adjustments require approval of higher authorities, and the process is both complex and time consuming. Delay in fund release, rigid spending rules, over-spending without appropriation, payment of arrear bills causing budget shortfall, excessive financial management requirements, fear of audit objections, absence of a robust monitoring, and accountability mechanism, etc. contribute to low rate of budget utilisation in the health sector. During the budget finalisation at the end of the month, an explicit recognition of this entrenched problem of low utilisation of the health budget and its well-known underlying reasons will be a very welcome first step.

Despite a nominal increase, this year's budget, as indeed the budgets of previous years too, remain glaringly inadequate given the population size and healthcare demands. The priority health sector requirements are in primary healthcare, maternal and child health (MCH), and non-communicable diseases (NCDs).

The most glaring gap in primary healthcare is in the urban areas which lack meaningful budgetary attention. MCH has seen some increase in allocation, but this too is glaringly inadequate to meet the needs of antenatal and postnatal care, immunisation programmes, and nutrition support, especially in rural areas. NCDs, the growing health sector challenge, is yet to get the budgetary attention it deserves. Minimal allocation for this growing problem is leading to inadequate screening, diagnosis, and treatment facilities, with many patients unable to afford necessary treatments. Preventive measures, patient education, and chronic disease management suffer due to resource scarcity. Strengthening primary healthcare requires investment in infrastructure and capacity building. Enhancing maternal and child health services involves developing comprehensive programmes and community engagement. Addressing NCDs necessitates prioritising preventive health and promoting integrated care models.

Hossain Zillur Rahman is executive chairman, Power and and Participation Research Centre (PPRC), and convener, UHC Forum.*

This year's budget has a block allocation of Tk 2,000 crore for health emergencies. This is a welcome step, but how confident should we feel that this allocation will be efficiently utilised? For example, the dengue menace this year is projected to be a possible health emergency. Meaningfully dealing with the problem requires close coordination between the ministries of health and local government. Unfortunately, coordination between these two critical ministries is the exception rather than the norm.

Without such coordination, funds will remain under-utilised and the results will be poor. UHC Forum intends to identify and work on meaningful areas and spaces in which this necessary coordination can be fostered. Health literacy among the general population is also a highly under-appreciated agenda that requires both budgetary and programmatic attention. Neither our attitudes nor our health system is geared towards early identification of health problems. Early screening for birth defects and provision of correctible surgery can reverse the destinies of many unfortunate children who grow up with disabilities.

Outreach programmes which work as reverse referral, taking specialist care to the grassroots, can benefit immensely from budgetary attention. This year's budget is most likely a closed chapter. The conversation must start in earnest so that next year's health budget sits more meaningfully nearer to people's expectations and needs.

Who benefits from the white elephants in the power sector?

Ghulam Muhammed Quader
is an MP and leader of the opposition, Bangladesh Parliament.

GHULAM MUHAMMED QUADER

Load shedding or power cuts are escalating across the country. Rural areas are facing more frequent outages than urban centres. Industrial areas are also suffering due to shortage of power supply.

The daily electricity requirement in Bangladesh ranges from 13,000 megawatts (MW) to a maximum of 17,000MW. Generally, the country produces between 13,000MW-15,000MW based on the need. Presently, the total power generation capacity of the country, as per government report, is 27,515MW.

Interestingly, on April 29, the country suffered a power shortage of over 3,000MW when the demand reached 17,000MW. Throughout the last week of April, escalating temperatures led to a gradual increase in demand for electricity. The supply could have been adjusted to meet this demand. But we saw a continuous rise in load shedding due to supply shortage between April 23 to April 29.

To address the electricity and gas crisis, the "Quick Enhancement of Electricity and Energy Supply (Special Provisions) Act, 2010" was enacted for an initial period of two years. The tenure was subsequently extended in 2012 by two years, in 2014 by four years, in 2018 by three years, and most recently in 2021 by five years. With four extensions, the validity of the law has been extended up to 2026.

This legislation effectively shields almost all aspects of the energy sector from legal scrutiny. The law allows purchase of rental power plants, importation of Liquefied Natural Gas (LNG), and construction or procurement of all sorts of infrastructure in connection with the operation and distribution of gas-electricity without following the usual procedures. Government officials involved in any sort of activities in connection with enhancement of electricity—purchase, production, transmission, distribution, and electricity related fuel transactions—have been allowed legal impunity under the provisions of this law.

The aim and objective of this law was to ensure uninterrupted electricity supply nationwide at reasonable prices. But what the impunity law has done is empower the authorities with limitless laterality.

Despite the existence of power plants capable of producing at least 10,000MW more than the existing maximum demand, load shedding is being imposed if there is a slight rise in demand from what is normal. This additional production capacity is either not being utilised or is for some reason not usable.

Research shows that a significant portion of such privately-owned plants has never produced electricity or has produced minimal amounts, such as one or two percent of their capacity, in some cases.

During 2018-22, some plants did not produce any electricity, but the government bore all their operational expenses.

Until the fiscal year 2021-22, the country had 151 power plants. Among these, 42 government-owned and 26 private power plants operated at 10 percent or less of their production capacity over the past five fiscal years. Despite this low production, they have charged the government capacity fees based on their full capacity production.

> In short, power generation capacity is being increased despite insufficient demand. As a result, many of these plants remain idle without producing electricity. Since there is no production, there is no opportunity to earn revenue by selling electricity produced by these plants. However, according to the contracts, large amounts of money still need to be paid on account of capacity charges.

Presently, Bangladesh Power Development Board (BPDB) is incurring huge financial losses as it is selling electricity at a much lower cost than the cost of production.

To cover the deficit, a provision for subsidy is kept in the national budget. An amount of Tk 39,406 crore was earmarked from the public exchequer for the fiscal year 2023-24 on that account.

However, it has been observed that during this period, an estimated Tk 32,000 crore was paid as capacity charges for unused power stations. This amount constitutes approximately 81 percent of the total subsidy.

In other words, a major portion (81 percent) of the amount provided as subsidy to mitigate BPDB's losses goes to pay capacity charges or rentals of private power plants. This indicates that almost the entire amount of BPDB's losses stem from payments made to privately rented power plants against capacity charges.

From 2009 to the fiscal year 2023-24, Tk 1,37,000 crore has been paid for capacity charges or rentals without utilising the production capacity.

Two large gas-powered power plants have recently begun production in Meghnaghat. These plants, operated by Summit and Unique Group, have a combined capacity of 1,167MW. Additionally, a 718MW power plant by Reliance in the same area is ready for production.

With the inclusion of these plants, BPDB's total production capacity will significantly increase. Due to the lack of demand, these plants or some other plants in lieu of them will remain unused, leading to additional capacity charge payments. Consequently, the total expense for capacity charges will rise further.

In short, power generation capacity is being increased despite insufficient demand. As a result, many of these plants remain idle without producing electricity. Since there is no production, there is no opportunity to earn revenue by selling electricity produced by these plants. However, according to the contracts, large amounts of money still need to be paid on account of capacity charges.

Although the burden of subsidies is now being shifted onto the customers through accrued electricity prices, most of the additional revenue is being used to pay rent to these privately-owned power plants.

So, the capacity charge is the main reason for the increase in electricity prices. If such power plants were absent or fewer in number, electricity prices would not have to be increased, or increased so much.

Since 2010, the electricity price has been raised 13 times, rising from an average of Tk 3.73 per unit to Tk 8.70. According to the conditions set by the IMF, this trend of increase is expected to chronically continue. Consequently, it is difficult to assert that electricity is or will be supplied at a reasonable price.

It may be mentioned here that renting private power plants, having provision for payment of rent or capacity charge are not the problems. The main problem lies in creating excess production capacity in relation to demand, and then keeping them idle and paying capacity charges or rent. Any money paid to such power plants enriches the deficit unilaterally. In short, these power plants have now become white elephants.

And it is difficult to understand why a power generation capacity exceeding 27,000MW was created at a time when our electricity demand typically ranges from 13,000MW to a maximum of 17,000MW.

Moreover, it appears that this capacity expansion trend persists, incurring significant costs and escalating both domestic and foreign debt. Notably, 19.46 percent of foreign loans are allocated to the power sector. Yet, the anticipated economic growth necessary to justify the increase in electricity usage remains elusive.

Private power plants are domestically owned, but they are being paid in foreign currency. According to our banking law, no bank can lend to any company more than 25 percent of its capital. This limit is not enforced in the power sector for the private power plant owners. It is difficult to find any logic for these extraordinary facilities to be provided to them.

Despite giving various types of benefits across the board in the power sector, uninterrupted electricity supply is not being ensured. Far from getting electricity at a fair price, white elephant-like power plants have been created and the ever-increasing high cost of maintaining them has been thrust upon the shoulders of the people.

Fallout from Starmer's controversial comment about Bangladesh is an independent researcher based in the UK.

Mahadev Ghosh

MAHADEV GHOSH

UK's Labour Party leader Sir Keir Starmer has faced significant backlash after his recent comment where he singled out Bangladesh as a country from where people coming in should be sent back. He made the comment during an interview with The Sun when he was asked about small boat crossings in the English Channel and how a Labour government would address the issue. When pressed by Harry Cole, The Sun's political editor, as to which countries the migrants could be returned to, Starmer responded, "At the moment people coming from countries like Bangladesh are not being removed, because they're not being processed." This statement was alarming for several reasons—including because it was contextually incorrect.

In regards to small boat crossings across the English Channel, Bangladesh's contribution is far from significant. According to the University of Oxford's Migration Observatory, Bangladesh did not even rank in the top 10. Furthermore, the UK government's Home Office data shows that only 13 Bangladeshis applied for asylum after crossing the Channel using small boats between 2018 and 2024, compared to a total of 126,609 crossings. This means that Bangladesh accounted for a negligible number of crossings—eight out of 31,079 so far this year. Labour has already marginalised voters, especially those of Bangladeshi heritage, due to its stance on Israel's war in Gaza. And his comments have even led to backlash from within his own party.

Labour MP for Poplar and Limehouse, Apsana Begum, accused Starmer of "dog whistle racism against Bangladeshis." Moreover, Councillor Sabina Akhtar resigned over Starmer's comments, adding that she felt Labour had taken the Bangladeshi community's vote "for granted to please a small group of people." This reflected the wider effects of his comments, as it seemed to downplay the Bangladeshi community's contribution to the UK's culture and economy. Over half a million British-Bangladeshis live in the UK and operate 10,000 restaurants, forming a vital part of the £4.5 billion British curry sector. Additionally, British-Bangladeshis work in the NHS and in the armed forces—contributions the community felt were being undervalued, especially given their history of being victims of racist attacks.

However, this is not to say that Bangladesh is in no way contributing to the UK's immigration and asylum woes. Last year, a large number of Bangladeshis were accused of abusing the visa system. Nearly 11,000 Bangladeshi nationals entered the UK on visas and then applied for asylum within 12 months, using student, worker, and visitor visas. This led to Bangladesh and the UK signing an agreement last month to expedite the removal of Bangladeshi migrants who have no right to stay in the country. Nevertheless, even in terms of asylum seekers, both India and Pakistan were ahead of Bangladesh, with Afghanistan and Iran at the top. This makes Starmer's singling out Bangladesh inappropriate, even if the question extended beyond small boat Channel crossings.

Labour has often been accused of not having any real plans to solve the issue of small boat crossings, and Starmer's comment does not help counter such accusations. This criticism extends beyond immigration, as Starmer has lacked cohesive plans on foreign policy, climate, or the economy. He has largely relied on platitudes, with Labour expected to win due to anti-Tory sentiments rather than pro-Labour ones. With immigration expected to be a major issue this election, every party has more or less agreed on the need to control the flow of immigrants, although each party has proposed different approaches to solving the crisis.

The Conservatives have stood firmly behind their Rwanda plan, with the right-wing party Reform UK pledging a complete freeze on immigration, in addition to deportation of people crossing the Channel in small boats. Labour plans to dismantle the Rwanda scheme and establish a "Border Security Command," relying on bilateral agreements to deport illegal immigrants. This reflects a wider consensus amongst voters that immigration numbers must come down, with 52 percent of the public saying it must be reduced. This means that Starmer's Labour will have to depart from the empathetic approach and defence of migration characteristic of the party during the Corbyn-era. However, political expediency should never justify scapegoating a historically marginalised community that is not only an integral part of your voter base but also of the country as a whole.

To Starmer's credit, he has apologised for his "clumsy" comments and acknowledged the "massive contribution" made by Bangladeshis to the UK. He further emphasised that mutual cooperation between the UK and the Bangladeshi community could lead to "great benefit" for both, which was the main reason for his remark.

CRITICAL WARNING

The dangerous link between obesity and dengue hospitalisation in children

Dengue, a mosquito-borne viral infection, can range from mild flu-like symptoms to severe, life-threatening conditions. While obesity is already known to worsen the severity of dengue in hospitalised patients, its role in increasing the likelihood of hospitalisation has not been thoroughly explored. With the global rise in obesity rates, understanding this potential link is vital for effective disease control and prevention strategies.

A team of researchers set out to investigate whether obesity is associated with an increased risk of hospitalisation for dengue in children. The study focused on a large cohort of Sri Lankan children, forming part of an island-wide dengue sero-surveillance project and was published in the PLOS Neglected Tropical Diseases journal.

The study involved 4,782 children aged 10 to 18, selected from nine districts in Sri Lanka. The results showed that, while dengue infection rates were similar across different BMI percentiles, there was a significant difference in hospitalisation rates. Among children with a BMI percentile over 97 (considered obese), 18.2% who were seropositive for dengue had been hospitalized. In comparison, only 9.48% of seropositive children with a lower BMI percentile (less than 97) had been hospitalised. Children with a BMI percentile over 97 had more than twice the risk of hospitalisation compared to their peers with lower BMI percentiles.

Obesity is known to increase the risk of severe disease from many infections. If rising obesity rates lead to higher dengue hospitalisation rates, obesity could significantly contribute to the increasing hospitalisations seen in many dengue-endemic countries. Additionally, understanding how obesity and diabetes worsen dengue could lead to the development of specific biomarkers and treatments for at-risk populations.

GLOBAL HEALTH ALERT

1.8 billion adults risk disease from physical inactivity

STAR HEALTH DESK

New data show that nearly one-third (31%) of adults worldwide, approximately 1.8 billion people, did not meet the recommended levels of physical activity in 2022. The findings point to a worrying trend of physical inactivity among adults, which has increased by about 5 percentage points between 2010 and 2022.

If the trend continues, levels of inactivity are projected to further rise to 35% by 2030, and the world is currently off track from meeting the global target to reduce physical inactivity by 2030. The World Health Organisation (WHO) recommends that adults have 150 minutes of moderate-intensity or 75 minutes of vigorous-intensity physical activity, or equivalent, per week. Physical inactivity puts adults at greater risk of cardiovascular diseases such as heart attacks and strokes, type 2 diabetes, dementia, and cancers such as breast and colon.

The study was undertaken by researchers from WHO together with academic colleagues and published in the Lancet Global Health journal.

"These new findings highlight a lost opportunity to reduce cancer and heart disease and improve mental health and well-being through increased physical activity," said Dr Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus, WHO Director-General. "We must renew our commitment to increasing levels of physical activity and prioritising bold action, including strengthened policies and increased funding, to reverse this worrying trend."

The highest rates of physical inactivity were observed in the high-income Asia Pacific region (48%) and South Asia (45%), with levels of inactivity in other regions ranging from 28% in high-income Western countries to 14% in Oceania.

Of concern, disparities remain between gender and age. Physical inactivity is still more common among women globally compared with men, with inactivity rates of 34% compared to 29%. In some countries, this difference is as much as 20 percentage points. Additionally, people over 60 are less active than other adults, underscoring the importance of promoting physical activity for older adults.

Despite the worrying results, there are some signs of improvement in some countries. The study showed that almost half of the world's countries have made some improvements over the past decade, and 22 countries were identified as likely to reach the global target of reducing inactivity by 15% by 2030 if their trend continues at the same pace.

In light of these findings, WHO is calling on countries to strengthen their policy implementation to promote and enable physical activity through grassroots and community sport and active recreation and transport (walking, cycling, and use of public transport), among other measures.

"These new findings highlight a lost opportunity to reduce cancer and heart disease and improve mental health and well-being through increased physical activity," said Dr Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus, WHO Director-General. "We must renew our commitment to increasing levels of physical activity and prioritising bold action, including strengthened policies and increased funding, to reverse this worrying trend."

"Promoting physical activity goes beyond promoting individual lifestyle choices; it will require a whole-of-society approach and creating environments that make it easier and safer for everyone to be more active in ways they enjoy to reap the many health benefits of regular physical activity," said Dr Fiona Bull, Head of the WHO Unit for Physical Activity.

Collective efforts based on partnerships between government and nongovernmental stakeholders and increased investments in innovative approaches will be needed to reach the least active people and reduce inequalities in access to measures promoting and improving physical activity.

Embracing Meliorism: Hope amidst uncertainty

DR RUBAIUL MURSHED

In the late nineteenth century, George Eliot believed she had coined the term 'meliorist' when she wrote, "I do not know that I ever heard anybody use the word 'meliorist' except myself." Her contemporaries credited her with coining both 'meliorist' and 'meliorism,' and one of her letters contains an early documented use of 'meliorism.' George Eliot is the pen name of Mary Ann Evans, a writer praised for the realism of her work and her accurate depiction of lower and rural-class England.

Meliorism describes positions in moral philosophy that favour improving or making more tolerable the conditions that cause suffering, even if those conditions have long existed. This could involve advocating for cures for common diseases or supporting the development of serious anti-aging therapies. The term is also used by ethicists, who specialise in the study of right and wrong actions in human decisions.

Meliorism simply means 'better.' It opposes pessimism, which generally means 'worst,' and optimism, which means 'best.' Meliorism is the idea that progress is real and that humans can intervene in natural processes to improve the world. Social meliorism posits that education can improve society by increasing individual intelligence, regardless of background.

Today, in an age of internet-educated researchers and policymakers, can studies of human psychology help with choosing the right precautionary methods on an individual or national level? Beyond war, conflicts, and economic dimensions, this unpredictable chaos also has a mental and spiritual dimension. People are afraid, frustrated, and distressed in the face of this unprecedented wave of international political events. Here, scholars can offer some guidance with their research on the concepts of meliorism and 'moralogy' (kindness, forgiveness, and other moral values) and how to approach life more meaningfully.

Accessible education for children with special needs

RABEYA FERDOUS

Education is one of the most crucial basic rights for all children. Children with special needs also have an equal right to educate themselves. Education may impact their everyday lifestyle. It may also improve personal development and increase people's independence in their daily lives.

Education is most challenging for children with special needs. There are a number of disabled children who have physical and psychological problems. Some children with special needs get the chance to enroll in school. Severely disabled children have difficulty attending school.

According to Bangladesh Education Statistics Report 2018, there were approximately 46,000 children with disabilities enrolled in government primary schools.

There are numerous challenges faced by students with special needs. There are listed below:

1. Students with attention deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD) or cerebral palsy (CP) may write or read slower than other normal students. For that reason, they and their parents feel dissatisfied with their school performance. They need more time and extra care to cope with this situation.

2. Student with special needs feels distracted in a disorganised classroom. They are not attentive to the teachers. So, the classroom should be well decorated. This can help to increase their performance.

3. Some students with special needs face difficulty making friendships. Normal students do not want to make friends with students from special schools. They try to isolate and give different types of stigma. In this situation, their teacher may socialise with new peers and learn from one another's unique strengths and knowledge. This type of peer monitoring may help students develop social skills, independence, and problem-solving skills.

4. Inaccessible classrooms may hamper the education of students with special needs. The maximum classroom has stairs to enter the classroom. In this situation, we need to talk with the authorities about building a ramp. Additionally, accessible doors need to be ensured for wheelchair-user students.

5. Some teachers lack knowledge about the learning procedures of students with special needs. They need extra care, modification, and an individual education plan (IEP) as a course module. So, teachers should be trained to handle these challenging issues.

Education facilities and participation is one of the basic rights for children with special needs. To fulfill this basic right, the government focuses on accessibility in education. Accessibility means removing barriers that hamper a child's education. Disabled children need to make their environment accessible.

According to the National Education Policy 2010, the government follows the following strategies for physically challenged students:

1. The lavatory facilities and the scope of smooth movement will be adequately designed and created with special attention in order to fulfill the special needs of the physically challenged.

2. Special and preferential attention will be given to their needs.

3. At least one trainer will be recruited in each of the PTIs to meet the special teaching methods and needs of various types of challenged learners.

If proper education is achieved, then other rights such as job accessibility, participation at the economic and national level, or any other right granted by the government are likely to be easily obtained.

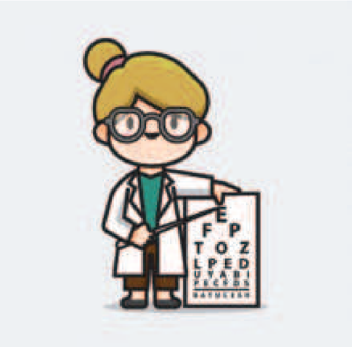
Lipid-lowering drug slows progression of diabetic retinopathy

Fenofibrate is an FDA-approved medication for treating severe high triglycerides. Although it has not been shown to provide extra heart health benefits when added to statins, some studies suggest it might help reduce the need for laser treatment in diabetic retinopathy (a diabetes-related eye condition).

To investigate this, researchers studied 1,150 Scottish patients with early diabetic retinopathy or maculopathy, giving them either fenofibrate or a placebo. People with severe kidney issues were excluded, and fenofibrate doses were adjusted based on kidney function. This research was published in The New England Journal of Medicine.



The main goal was to see if fenofibrate could slow down the progression of retinopathy or reduce the need for eye treatments like laser surgery. Over four years, fewer people taking fenofibrate needed these treatments compared to those on the placebo (23% vs. 29%). However, there was no difference in visual clarity or daily visual function between the two groups.

Fenofibrate was associated with a lower average kidney function (by 8 mL/minute/1.73 m²) during the trial, indicating a need for caution in patients with poor kidney health.

In summary, fenofibrate seems to slow diabetic retinopathy progression, with one in 15 patients benefiting over four years. However, its role in treating this condition is still uncertain, and it has not been FDA-approved for this purpose yet. Additionally, fenofibrate can temporarily increase serum creatinine, requiring careful use in those with very low kidney function.

INDIA END DECADE OF HEARTBREAK

SPORTS REPORTER

Rohit Sharma, the captain who led India from the front with his fearless batting, fell to the ground with a look of relief washing over his face, the confident but sometimes brash Hardik Pandya shed tears of joy while at the dressing room, coach Rahul Dravid, known for his calm demeanour, roared in triumph.

These were the scenes at the Kensington Oval in Barbados on Saturday after India overcame a decade of heartbreak with a win over South Africa in the final of the ICC T20 World Cup 2024.

The win, one they snatched from the jaws of defeat with Proteas at one point needing just 30 off 30 balls, made them the tournament's first-ever undefeated champions and also put them on par with England and West Indies as the only other two-time winners of the competition.

This T20 World Cup was about absolution for Rohit and his side after the heartbreak in the ODI World Cup final last year in Ahmedabad at the hands of Australia, which was their fifth defeat in a final of an ICC event since 2014.

Rohit revealed that many years of preparation went into this year's triumph and commended his team for coming through in such a grand manner under pressure.

"Hard to sum up what we've been through in last three-four years. A lot behind the scenes, not what we did today [yesterday], it's what we did before," Rohit said after the match.

"A lot of high-pressure games, and we have been on the wrong side of it. Guys understand when the pressure is on what needs to be done, today [yesterday] was perfect example, stuck together with backs to the wall," he added.

There were several heroes in India's win over the Proteas, but the man who stole the spotlight and was named the player of the final was the indomitable Virat Kohli, whose 76 off 59 balls took India to a total they could defend.

After the match, however, Kohli announced that this was his last T20I, "God is great, and I got the job done for the team on the day it mattered. Now or never, last T20 for India, wanted to make the most of it. Wanted to lift the cup."

With the win, Kohli, one of the greatest batters of this or any generation, will get to walk off into the sunset in the shortest format with the biggest prize in hand.

India great Virat Kohli said he had played his last T20I after starring in India's thrilling seven-run win over South Africa in the T20 World Cup final in Barbados on Saturday. The star batsman put a run of low scores behind him to make 76 as he was named player of the match, with the 35-year-old Kohli saying afterwards: "This was my last T20 World Cup, and this is what we wanted to achieve. One day you feel you can't get a run, then things happen. God is great, and I got the job done for the team on the day it mattered. Now or never (that was my) last T20 for India, wanted to make the most of it. Wanted to lift the cup, wanted to respect the situation rather than force it." The prolific right-hander retires from the format with 4,188 runs from 125 T20I with a strike rate of 137.

Holders Italy sent packing

AFP, Berlin

Switzerland dumped reigning champions Italy out of Euro 2024 with a stunning 2-0 victory on Saturday to reach the quarterfinals for the second time in their history.

Murat Yakin's supremely well-drilled side outplayed the flat two-time winners in the last 16 clash in Berlin and will face England or Slovakia in the next round.

Ruben Vargas teed up Remo Freuler for Switzerland's 37th-minute opener before curling home superbly himself right at the start of the second half to deservedly double their lead.

A new-look Italy, short on star power and without many of the key figures that led them to Euro 2020 glory, offered little in response to Switzerland's energetic display.

"It hurts, it really hurts," said Italy's captain and goalkeeper Gianluigi Donnarumma.

Former Arsenal midfielder Granit Xhaka, arriving at the Euros after a stunning season with German champions Bayer Leverkusen, pulled the strings as the Swiss rarely looked like letting the lead slip away.

Italy coach Luciano Spalletti dropped Jorginho after his worrying group stage performances, bringing in Nicolo Fagioli in defensive midfield among a hefty six changes which failed to bring the Azzurri to life.

Italy scraped through the first phase thanks to Mattia Zaccagni's last-gasp strike in the 1-1 draw with Croatia and Spalletti said his team had no alternative but to improve in the knock-out rounds.

However, it was Switzerland who grew in confidence and pulled off their best display yet, making a bright start at the Olympiastadion in a sweltering Berlin, where a far more impressive Italy won the 2006 World Cup.

Spalletti hooked Stephan El Shaarawy at half-time for Zaccagni, but Italy gave the ball away from the kick-off and Switzerland doubled their lead just 27 seconds into the second period.

Augsburg midfielder Vargas, who started in place of the suspended Silvan Widmer but on the left of the attack, broke into the area and arced a superb curling shot over Gianluigi Donnarumma.

The closest Italy came to scoring in the first hour was when Swiss defender Fabian Schar misjudged a header and hit the frame of his own goal.

Substitute Mateo Retegui produced Italy's first shot on target as the clock ticked down and the near-invisible Gianluca Scamacca hit the post from close range, but the defending champions could never really threaten their opponent as they saw their run end rather meekly.

Non-conformist blockbuster conserves charm

KHALID HOSSAIN

Bob Woolmer, the late South African coach renowned for his cricketing insights and innovation, once said, "Football is a game of space, whereas cricket is a game of time," in his book 'The Art and Science of Cricket', shedding light on the trials and tribulations a cricketer goes through on the battlefield.

Woolmer's book, a decade in the making and published in 2009, emerged at a time when the shortest format of the game -- Twenty20, designed to draw a wider range of audiences for the sake of making cricket a global sport -- had already found its footing and threatened the status quo of its elder siblings -- Tests and the 50-over format -- in terms of mass appeal.

Much like how fast food has surpassed fine dining in popularity in this millennium, the intimidating T20 cricket proved to be an unstoppable force as the cash-rich franchise leagues reshaped the sports' landscape, leading the game's global governing body ICC to hold the T20 World Cup in every two years.

Eventually, when it came to the 20-over format, cricket matches became less and less about the element of time and more about the initial conditions: the nature of surfaces, playing conditions, which had become predominantly batting-friendly, and about the number of power-hitters a team possess.

However, the ninth edition of the T20 World Cup, an expanded version featuring 20 teams from the last edition's 16, disproved the existing consensus and went on to preserve the timeless charm of the game.

At the same time, the 2024 instalment churned out almost everything that makes it an undeniable blockbuster, meeting the ever-increasing demands of modern times.

From even contests between the leather and willow, negating extrapolations made from recent performances in major franchise leagues, to perennial underachievers and minnows having their moment in the sun, the marquee event held in West Indies and the USA has ticked all the boxes for a truly memorable global tournament.

The associate teams disproved the notion of being pushovers, as former champions Pakistan and England found out.

Pakistan fell prey to the USA in one of the greatest upsets in the history of the tournament, setting the ominous tone of the last edition's finalists' eventual exit. On the other hand, England were forced to edge past a driven Scotland in the group stage based on net run rate.

And even Nepal, devoid of any expectation, almost pulled off the highly improbable, losing to South Africa and Bangladesh by a whisker, whereas teams like Namibia and Oman made their mark by locking horns in a Super Over thriller, one of the seven final-over nail-biters witnessed in the group stage.

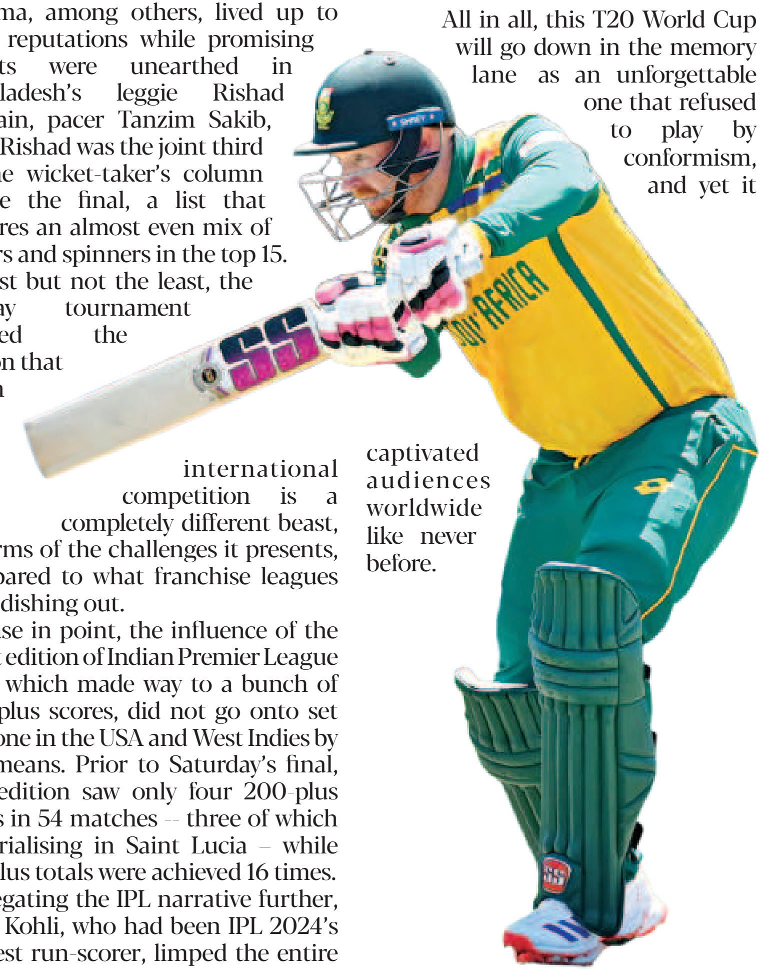
USA, meanwhile, en route to amping up cricket's fan-following in the country, remained hungry for more as they cemented further history by entering the second round -- the Super Eights -- in their maiden appearance, setting the narrative for one of the fairytale triumphs of the mega event.

Even though fellow hosts West Indies could not make the cut to the semifinals, they would be pleased to give their fans the impression that the two-time champions are on the right track, especially following a string of debacles in the preceding white-ball World Cups.

The team that accompanied the West Indies in the Super Eights were Afghanistan, who created their own fairytale chapter. Defying odds, Afghans first scripted New Zealand's exit and then set the Super Eights alight by taking down the mighty Australia before holding their nerves against Bangladesh in two World Cup classics.

Afghanistan's triumphant run was eventually cut short by South Africa, who shrugged off the tag of 'Chokers' to land a coveted place in the final -- a first for the Proteas after being on the receiving end of seven excruciating exits in the last-four stage.

As far as individual glories are concerned, elite superstars like Australia's swashbuckling opener Travis Head, India's pace spearhead Jasprit Bumrah and opener Rohit Sharma, among others, lived up to their reputations while promising talents were unearthed in Bangladesh's leggie Rishad Hossain, pacer Tanzim Sakib, et al. Rishad was the joint third in the wicket-taker's column before the final, a list that features an almost even mix of pacers and spinners in the top 15.



Last but not the least, the 29-day tournament verified the notion that an international competition is a completely different beast, in terms of the challenges it presents, compared to what franchise leagues keep dishing out.

Case in point, the influence of the latest edition of Indian Premier League (IPL), which made way to a bunch of 200-plus scores, did not go onto set the tone in the USA and West Indies by any means. Prior to Saturday's final, this edition saw only four 200-plus totals in 54 matches -- three of which materialising in Saint Lucia -- while 175-plus totals were achieved 16 times.

Negating the IPL narrative further, Virat Kohli, who had been IPL 2024's highest run-scorer, limped the entire tournament up until he got his bearings right in the final, while a struggling Hardik Pandya rekindled his form in every department. Like Pandya, his IPL teammates in Suryakumar Yadav, Rohit and Bumrah from bottom dwellers Mumbai Indians, who ended the campaign at rock bottom, were unfazed in national colours.

All in all, this T20 World Cup will go down in the memory lane as an unforgettable one that refused to play by conformism, and yet it captivated audiences worldwide like never before.

- Expanded World Cup lives up to billing
- Minnows and hosts get boost
- Perennial underachievers flip script
- Thrillers in abundance
- Superstars shine, promising talents leave trace
- Pacers and spinners grab spotlight in tandem
- IPL expectations did not match

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A woman was raped in the capital's Khilkhet area on Friday night while she was visiting the area with her husband, said police.

The victim, 37, filed a case against six people under the Women and Children Repression Prevention Act with Khilkhet Police Station yesterday, Dhaka Metropolitan Police Assistant Commissioner (Cantonment Zone) Sheikh Muttajul Islam told The Daily Star.

Khilkhet police have arrested seven people, including three juveniles, over the incident.

The arrestees include Abul Kashem Suman, 39, Mehedi Hasan Hridoy, 22, Mir Azizul Islam Tutul, 23, and Robin Hossain Dewan, 28.

Citing the case statement, the AC said the woman and her husband went to a relative's house in the Kawla Bazar area. From there, she went walking with her husband towards Khilkhet around 8:30pm. When they reached Bonorupa area around

Faisal bought savings certificate worth Tk 2.55cr

DIPAN NANDY

Controversial taxman Quazi Abu Mahmud Faisal had purchased family savings certificates worth Tk 1.45 crore for himself and his relatives in three months, according to the Anti-Corruption Commission.

On June 27, a Dhaka court ordered the authorities concerned to confiscate all moveable and immovable properties of Faisal, a first secretary (taxes legal & enforcement) of the National Board of Revenue.

Faisal has accumulated about Tk 1,000 crore by taking bribes for transferring income tax officials, intimidating taxpayers and resorting to other irregularities, according to documents submitted by the ACC to the court on Thursday after its preliminary investigation.

ACC decided to investigate Faisal last year after allegations of misuse of power and accumulating significant wealth through bribery.

Among the documents were proof of Faisal's purchase of savings certificates worth Tk 2.55 crore between June 2019 and November 2023 in his and his family's names. Of them, family savings certificates (Paribarik Sanchayapatra) worth Tk 1.45 crore were bought between November 12, 2020 and February 10, 2021.

Black money holders get amnesty

Criticism of think-tanks, lawmakers ignored

MAHMUDUL HASAN

Parliament yesterday approved a provision that will allow black money holders to legalise their undisclosed wealth without any scrutiny by paying a 15 percent tax, disregarding widespread condemnation from various quarters.

The provision will take effect in the upcoming fiscal year that begins on July 1.

Think-tanks, watchdogs, chambers and several lawmakers criticised the provision, terming it unethical, unjust and unacceptable.

"This represents sheer insensitiveness of the members of parliament to growing public concerns about widening floodgates for corruption, illegality and corruption, which this provision facilitates," said Iftekharuzzaman, executive director of Transparency International Bangladesh.

The move also undermines Article 20(2) of the constitution that makes black money clearly illegal, he said.

It is also discriminatory against honest income earners, who have to pay up to 30 percent tax while black money holders are being rewarded instead of being subjected to accountability and getting the provision to pay only 15 percent, he said.

"In effect, the government is inviting people at large to be corrupt, immoral and dishonest to earn black money throughout the year with the guarantee that they will be rewarded and given impunity for earning any amount of income disproportionate to the legal source. Unfortunately, the state is being pushed further down the

Gaza civilians living in unbearable conditions

Warns UNRWA as huge mounds of rotting trash pile up across the Palestinian enclave

AFP, Geneva

Gazan civilians are forced to live in bombed-out buildings or camp next to giant piles of trash, a United Nations spokeswoman said Friday, denouncing the "unbearable" conditions in the besieged territory.

Louise Wateridge from UNRWA, the UN agency supporting Palestinian refugees, described the "extremely dire" living conditions in the Gaza Strip.

"It's really unbearable," she told reporters in Geneva, via video-link from central Gaza.

Wateridge, who returned Wednesday after four weeks outside the territory, said that even in that time the situation had "significantly deteriorated".

"Today, it has to be the worst it's ever been. I don't doubt that tomorrow again will be the worst it's ever been," she said.

Nearly nine months into the offensive, Wateridge said the Gaza Strip had been "destroyed". She said she had been "shocked" on returning to Khan Yunis in central Gaza.

"The buildings are skeletons, if at all. Everything is rubble," she said. "And yet people are living there again.

"There's no water there, there's no sanitation, there's no food. And now, people are living back in these buildings that are empty shells," with sheets covering the gaps left by blown-out walls.

With no bathrooms, "people are relieving themselves anywhere they can".

Wateridge said the struggle to bring fuel into Gaza and distribute it safely was having a knock-on impact on the ability to deliver aid.

"Without the fuel, the humanitarian response really grinds to a halt," she said.

Wateridge was speaking from a guesthouse as there was no fuel to go out and undertake missions.

About 150 metres away, she said, a pile of around 100,000 tonnes of waste was building up, with makeshift tents pitched all around it.

"The population is living among it," she said. "With the temperatures rising, it's really adding misery to the living conditions."

Wateridge said that before the offensive, sanitation units would clear all the trash from refugee

ACC probe into Benazir, family's wealth at final stage

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Anti-Corruption Commission has completed a thorough analysis of documents and field-level investigations regarding former inspector general of police Benazir Ahmed, as its two-month-long inquiry reaches its final stages.

The anti-graft body did not accept Benazir's written claims that his assets were acquired legally.

The ACC team is now preparing a comprehensive report to submit to the commission. The report may recommend filing charges against Benazir Ahmed, his wife Jissan Mirza, and his two daughters, Farheen Rishta Binte Benazir and Tahsin Raisa Binte Benazir.

There is, however, some uncertainty within the commission regarding whether to request a detailed wealth statement from Benazir. Depending on the directives received, the ACC team might either issue a notice for asset details or directly recommend filing charges.

An ACC high official, seeking anonymity, told The Daily Star, "Benazir and his family have claimed in written statements that their wealth was legally acquired. But their explanations don't add up and thus unacceptable. The ACC team will soon submit their report to the commission based on the analysis of the collected data."

Benazir and his family's written statement was submitted to the ACC chairman on June 20,said ACC Secretary Khorsheda Yasmin.

"Hopefully, we will be able to file the report with the court as per our schedule."

However, ACC's asset management unit plans to

Vinicius comes alive for Brazil

REUTERS

Vinicius Jr unleashed his inner beast in a little over 45 minutes of pure Brazilian football mayhem to guide the five-time World Cup champions to their first 2024 Copa America win against Paraguay on Friday.

The 23-year-old electric winger scored twice and delivered a much-needed statement performance that Brazilian fans have long been waiting for. The Real Madrid rising star may be one of the best players in the world but until now that fiery spark has not been seen in his national team performances.

Even in Brazil's Copa America opener this year - a goalless draw against Costa Rica - Vinicius ended up being substituted halfway through the second half after not managing a single scoring attempt. After that, Brazil manager Dorival Jr changed tack and that decision paid back in a major way.

Instead of being deployed as more of an orthodox winger wide on the left against Costa Rica, Dorival gave Vinicius the freedom to roam across the front line on Friday against Paraguay and fans were shown why he is a strong contender to win the Ballon d'Or after guiding Real to a

Radioactive rhino horns to curb poaching in S Africa

AFP, Mokopane

South African scientists have injected radioactive material into live rhino horns to make them easier to detect at border posts in a pioneering project aimed at curbing poaching.

The country is home to a large majority of the world's rhinos and as such is a hotspot for poaching driven by demand from Asia, where horns are used in traditional medicine for their supposed therapeutic effect.

At the Limpopo rhino orphanage in the Waterberg area, in the country's northeast, a few of the thick-skinned herbivores grazed in the low savannah.

James Larkin, director of the University of the Witwatersrand's radiation and health physics unit who spearheaded the initiative, told AFP on Tuesday he had put "two tiny little radioactive chips in the horn" as he administered the radioisotopes on one of the large animals' horns.

The radioactive material would "render the horn useless... essentially poisonous for human consumption" added Nithaya Chetty, professor and dean of science at the same university.
